He died in the eighty-second year of his age, possessed (as appears by his will) of the manors of Chevening, Chepsted, Apuldefield, Northsted, Wickhurst, and Bracksted, with other lands and tenements in the parish of Sundrich, Sevenoak, Heaver, Shoram, Chalsfield, Down, and Coudham, in Kent; and of the manors of Little-Carlton, Colbille-Weston, Moines-Weston, Leverers, and Gatewards, with other lands and tenements in the parishes of Carlton-Weston, Colbille, Willingham, Wickham, Brinkley, Borough, Baborougham, Balsbam, and Pannesworth, in the county of Cambridge; and of the manor of Horton, in Yorkshire; the manor of Broadmarston, in Somersetshire, and Staunton-Gunton, in Wiltshire: all which he bequeathed to his eldest son; and besides this, five hundred marks per annum to his younger son, Samuel Lennard.

He lies buried under a fine tomb in Chevening church, on which are the effigies, in full proportion, of himself and his wife: and underneath, the following inscription:

Huc secessit Johannes Lennard armiger una cum Elizabetha uxore sua; hac mortem obiit 26. Octobris, 1583; ille quatuor regum diplomatibus ad varia reipublice munera designatus quum in illis exequendis summam diligentiam paremque prudentiam fidemque prastiteret, tandem octogesimo secundo ætatis, anno incunte moritur: custos brevium de Banco, relictis duobus filiis et quinque filiabus 12mo Martii, 1596.

SAMPSON LENNARD, his eldest son, married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, and sister and heir of Gregory Fynes, lord Dacre, who brought to him a very ample fortune; for by the death of the said Gregory, lord Dacre, who died at Chelsea, September 25, 36 Elizabeth, without issue, she inherited from him, as appears by the inquisition taken after his decease at Sevenoak, in Kent, (the said Margaret being then of the age of forty years, and lady and baroness Dacre) the manors of Horfmonceaux, alias Herfmonceaux, the manor of Old Court, the manors of Gotham, Ingrams, Buckshoulte, Ewehurst, and Hailesham, all in Suffex; and the manors of Horsforde, and Hawtboyes, in Norfolk; the manor of Holbeeche, in Lincolnshire; the manors of Stravelly, Scorton, Thyrne, Mapleton, and Nether Calcots, in Yorkshire; the hundred of Burham, and manor of Burham; and manor of Cowdham, in Kent; also the manor of Nasehall, in Essex. Besides which, she had the reversion of divers manors in Cumberland, &c. in case of failure of issue male in the family of the lords Dacre of the North: which happening in the time of king Charles I. Francis Lennard, lord Dacre, her great-grandson, hereby recovered the manors of Dacre, Kirkoswold, and other lands.

The which lady, by Sampson Lennard, esquire, her husband, had issue four sons;

1. Henry Lennard,
2. Gregory Lennard,
3. Thomas Lennard,
4. John Lennard,

who died without issue.

Also five daughters,

1. Anne, wife of Herbert Morley, of Glynde, in Suffex.

2. Mary, married to Sir Ralph Bosville, of Sevenoaks, in Kent.

3. Margaret, married to Sir Thomas Waller, of Groombridge, in Suffex, by whom she had Sir William Waller, the parliament's general, in the time of king Charles I.

4. Elizabeth, married to Sir Francis Barnham.

5. Frances, married to Sir Robert More, son and heir of Sir George More, of Lothesley, in Surry.

Margaret, lady Dacre, died in the year 1611; but had she lived a little longer, Sampson, her husband, would have been called up to the house of lords, as baron Dacre, in right of his wife, as appears from the king's own testimony in the following patent; whereby he granted him, during his life, the place and precedence of a baron's son, which Henry, then lord Dacre, had held during the life of Margaret, lady Dacre.

"James, by the grace of God, &c.

"Whereas our trusty and well-beloved subject and servant, Sampson Lennard, formerly married Margaret, sister and sole heir to Gregory, late lord Dacre, by whose death without issue, the said Margaret, and her heirs, &c. And whereas the said Sampson Lennard, pretending title to the same barony, in right of his said wife, as having issue by her, by his petition unto us, humbly desired, that we would be pleased graciously to refer the consideration of his said right to the lords in commission for marshal causes, whereunto we are pleased to condescend: and for that the said lords, upon due and mature examination of his said title, did find baronies upon the like right conferred upon the husband in several families; and in this particular barony of Dacre, three several precedents; whereby it plainly appeareth, the husbands in like cases were dignified with the title of baron; and for that, upon relation thereof by the said lords, we were purposed to have granted him the same measure of justice, that others in like cases have formerly received from our noble progenitors. Which our gracious determination being, by the death of the said lady Dacre, and by the immediate descent of the said barony upon her son, made frustrate; and our meaning in that behalf prevented: we, out of our gracious consideration of his said former right, as also of his affectionate and dutiful desire in all things, from time to time, to advance our services, do by these presents, out of our certain knowledge and meer motion, give, grant, and confirm to him the said Sampson, for the term of his life, the like place and precedence, that the eldest son of the late lord Dacre of the South hath formerly had and enjoyed: and our will and pleasure is, that in all places and assemblies he shall be ranked and marshalled above the eldest son of all barons, except of such barons, as, by reason of their antiquity have place and precedence above the lord Dacre Dacre of the South; and that he shall have precedence accordingly as aforesaid, and above all other of inferior degree and quality whatsoever; and that he shall, after his death, be buried at the eldest son of a baron. And further our will and pleasure is, that this our grant, or any thing therein contained, shall not be taken for precedent by any, to make suit for the like grace hereafter, this being grounded upon the particular reasons aforesaid. In witness whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patents. Witness ourself at Westminster, April the second, in the tenth year of our reign."

This Sampson Leonard was Sheriff of Kent, in the thirty-third of queen Elizabeth, also a member in most of the parliaments in that reign, and is mentioned with much regard by Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, as a person of great worth and politeness. He died aged seventy-one, A. D. 1615; and is buried in Chevening church, with the lady Dacre, his wife, under a fair monument, on which are both their effigies in full proportion, with their children kneeling round; and underneath, the following inscriptions:

Gloriosum Domini nostri Jesu Christi adventum expectans hic requiescit Sampson Leonard armiger, una cum charissima uxora Margareta Baronissa Dacre (Sorore et proximo herede Gregorij Fienes Militis Baronis Dacre de le South) cui 47 annos 4 menses et supernumerarios aliquot dies conjugali vinculo ligatus suaviter et beate vixit: Suscepitque ex eadem 7 filios, Henricum Baronem Dacre, Gregorium et Thomam superstites, reliquis quatuor in infantia extinctis, et 6 filias, quarum una perijt Infantula, quinque supersunt; Pietatis, Comitatus, Hospitalitatis, Laude celebris et in commune bonus, præpropera nobilissimæ uxoris morte ampliorem Regis gratiam anticipante, honore primogeniti filij Baronis Dacre de le South, diplomate illustrissimi Regis Jacobi decoratus, anno ætatis 71, ineunte Salutis 1615, Sept. 20. ex hac Vita migravit.

On the other side the inscription sets forth her descent, &c.

Amoris et Honoris ergo posuit Charissimus idemque moestissimus Conjux, quem cum felici prole beasser, exemplarque pietatis in Deum, obsequij in maritum, charitatis in pauperes, humanitatis in omnes, supra Sexum exhibuisset; tandem die Martij 10 anno salutis 1611, ætatis 70, cum summo bonorum omnium desiderio, supremum Spiritum libens lubensque Patri Spiritum exhalavit.

HENRY LENNARD, their son and heir, on the death of his mother in 1611, was lord Dacre, who in the year 1596 had been with the earl of Essex in Spain at the taking of Cales, and there knighted. In 13 Jac. I. he was one of those lords that sat on the trial of Robert Carr, earl of Somerset, king James's favourite.

He married Chryfogona, daughter of Sir Richard Baker, of Sissingherst in Kent, son and heir of Sir John Baker, of the same place, privy-counsellor to king Henry VIII. by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and heir to Thomas Dinely, and widow of George Barrett of Bellhouse, esquire. By this lady he had three sons,

1. Richard Lennard.
2. Edward Lennard,
3. Fynes Lennard.

And four daughters;

1. Margaret, married to Sir Annesly Wildgoos, of Eridge-Court in Suffex.
2. Penelope, married to Sir William Brooke, knight of the Bath.
3. Philadelphia, married to Sir Thomas Parker, of Ratton in Suffex.
4. Barbara, married to Sir Philip Stapleton, knight.

This Henry died August 10, 1616, and was succeeded by Richard, his eldest son. Which

RICHARD LENNARD, lord Dacre, married first Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Sir Arthur Throckmorton, of Pauler's Perry, in Northamptonshire (son of Sir Nicholas Throckmorton, a very considerable person in the reign of queen Elizabeth, being much in her favour, and several times by her sent ambassador to foreign courts) by Anne, daughter and coheir of Sir Nicholas Carew, knight of the Garter, and master of the horse to Henry VIII. By this wife he had issue four sons;

1. Francis Lennard, his successor.
2. Richard Lennard,
3. Thomas Lennard,
4. Henry Lennard,

His second wife was Dorothy, daughter of Dudley, lord North (who married afterwards Chaloner Chute, of the Vine, Hants, speaker of the protector Richard Cromwell's parliament, to whom she bore no issue) and by her he had a son, named Richard, who afterwards took the sir-name of Barret, of whom I shall treat hereafter.

And a daughter,

Catharine, wife of Chaloner Chute, of the Vine, in Hampshire, son of the above mentioned Chaloner Chute, by Anne his first wife, daughter and heir of Sir John Skory, knight, and had issue as follows, 1st Edward Chute, who married Catharine, daughter and coheir of Sir Anthony Keck, knight, one of the commissioners of the great seal to William III. of whom the only remaining issue in 1765, was John Chute, of the Vine, esquire: 2d Thomas Chute, who married Elizabeth, daughter of ——— Revit, esquire, from whom by his mother's side, Thomas Chute, esquire, of Peckham, in Norfolk, is descended.

* The peers were not then tried as now, by their whole body, but by a certain number appointed by the lord high-steward.

This Richard, lord Dacre, rebuilt his seat at Chevening, on a plan of Inigo Jones's; and died 18th of August, 1630, at Herstmonceaux, and was buried in the parish church there. His last will and testament is remarkable for the spirit, good sense, and religion, in a few words expressed there. He was succeeded by Francis, his eldest son, then a minor: which FRANCIS LENNARD, lord Dacre, when those unhappy misunderstandings arose between king Charles I. and the parliament, sided with the latter, and was a person much considered by that party; as may be gathered from the weighty businesses he had an especial share in, and the matters of consequence he was thought fit to be entrusted with: being in particular one of those that the parliament in 1641 chose out, and recommended to the king, to be lords lieutenants and curators of the several counties in England; Herefordshire being allotted to him: but in the end, finding that the power was (by various accidents) transferred into hands who were running every thing into confusion and anarchy, he would by no means be brought to act with them, but opposed their measures; and at length, when he found it was impossible to do any good there, he absented himself from the house of lords (as did several others of the peers) till the ordinance for trying the king was brought in, when he again appeared there, in order to give his publick testimony against it; being one of those few peers, who, (as the author of the parliamentary history expresses it) had the courage in that dangerous time to meet and make the said resolution.

He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Paul, viscount Bayning, of Sudbury, by whom he had issue three sons, and three daughters;

1. Philadelphia, married to Daniel O'Brien, viscount Clare.
2. Elizabeth, married to John Brabazon, earl of Meath.
3. Margaret, who died unmarried.

His three sons were,

1. Thomas Lennard, his successor.
2. Francis Lennard, who died a bachelor.
3. Henry Lennard, who left issue three daughters.

This Francis, lord Dacre, died in 1662, and was buried at Chevening, in Kent; Elizabeth his wife surviving him, who was afterwards created countess of Sheppey during her life, by letters patent, dated September 6, 1680.

THOMAS LENNARD, lord Dacre, the eldest son, married Anne Palmer, alias Fitzroy, daughter of Barbara, duchess of Cleveland, and born before the said Barbara and Roger Palmer, earl of Castlemain, her husband, were separated; but acknowledged or adopted by king Charles II. as his natural daughter, to whom he assigned the royal arms with a baton sinister. This Thomas, lord Dacre, was, by letters patent, bearing date October 5, 26 Charles II. created earl of Sussex. But coming very young to court, and being lord of the bedchamber to his majesty, he fell (as it was natural to do at his age) into the expensive way of living he found then in fashion there; and through this, and by great losses at play, he was at length so much entangled in his affairs, that he was obliged to sell several of his estates; and, some years before he died, his seat at Herstmonceaux, and lands in Sussex, by which he much diminished his fortune, tho' he had still a good one left. As the first part of his life was spent in the bustle of a court, the latter part of it was dedicated to retirement, living almost entirely at his house at Chevening, in Kent, in which parts he always preserved a great interest and influence, and was much beloved on account of that sweetness of temper and affability, for which he was ever remarkable.

He died in 1715 at Chevening, and was buried in the parish church there, leaving Anne, his countess, surviving, by whom he had issue two sons;

1. Charles Lennard,
2. Henry Lennard,

who died in their infancy.

And two daughters, Barbara and Anne, who were his heirs.

Barbara was married to Charles Skelton, lieutenant-general in the French service, and grand croix of St. Louis; but dying at Paris without issue in 1741,

ANNE, her sister, became at length sole heir to her father, and as such, baroness Dacre (the barony being till then in abeyance between the two sisters.) She was first married to Richard, son of Dacre Barret Lennard, esquire, secondly to Henry Roper, lord Teynham, (being his third wife) by whom she had two sons and a daughter. (See the account of lord Teynham's family.)

She was thirdly married to the Hon. Robert More, esquire, a younger son of Henry, earl of Drogheda, by whom she had one son, Henry; and died June 26, 1755, in the seventy-second year of her age.

This lady Anne, joining with her sister, sold Chevening and Dacre-castle, with other estates in Kent and Cumberland, soon after the death of her first husband Richard Barrett-Lennard: which, had he lived longer (by his father's concurrence) he could have preserved in the family; but through some misunderstandings after his decease, his plan was not pursued. Which

Richard was grandson of Richard Lennard, son of Richard, lord Dacre, by his second wife Dorothy, daughter of Dudley, lord North; of which branch of the family I now come to give an account. This

RICHARD LENNARD had for his patrimony the manor of Horsford, in Norfolk, settled on him by the lord Dacre his father, and afterwards took the name of Barrett, in consideration of the manor of Belhouse, in the parish of Aveley, and other lands in Essex, bequeathed to him by Sir Edward Barrett, lord Newburgh, and chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, a man, (according to the testimony of all writers who speak of him) of a most respectable and amiable character, who dying in 1644 without issue (and being the last of his name) left it to him, being his kinsman, upon condition that he used the name and arms of Barrett, viz. party per pale, barry of four, counter-changed, argent and gules.

This family of Barrett had been seated at Belhouse aforesaid, ever since the reign of king Henry IV. when John Barrett, of Hawkherst, esquire, transplanting himself out of Kent, married Alice, daughter of Sir Thomas, and sister and heir of John Belhouse, of Belhouse aforesaid; their descendants in the male line matching with the Pointz's of Northenden, the Knolles's, Braytofts; and with the Dineleys (descended by heirs female from the old barons Fitz-Herbert, and from Milo, earl of Hereford) with the family of the Somersets, earls of Worcester, and with the Mildmays and Careys.

The said Richard Lennard, alias Barrett, was sheriff of Essex in 1697, and married Anne, daughter and heir of Sir Robert Loftus, knight, eldest son of Adam, viscount Loftus, of Ely, in the kingdom of Ireland, and lord chancellor of that realm; who brought him a considerable estate at Clones, in the county of Monaghan, in the same kingdom; which she inherited from her mother, who was eldest daughter and coheir of Sir Francis Rushe, knight, and one of the privy council there. He died in 1696 at Belhouse, and was buried at Aveley, the parish-church there; having had issue by his wife aforesaid,

1. Dacre Barrett-Lennard, his son and heir.

2. Richard Barrett-Lennard, who was killed by a fall from his horse in the park at Belhouse, and died a bachelor.

And two daughters,

1. Anne, married to Carew Mildmay, of Marks in Essex, esquire.

2. Dorothy, who died unmarried.

Dacre Barrett-Lennard, succeeding his father, took to wife first Jane, eldest daughter of Arthur Chichester, the second earl of Donegal, by whom he had a son named Richard Barrett-Lennard.

And three daughters,

1. Jane, who in 1730 was married to John Ranby, esquire, who is serjeant-surgeon to his majesty. She died 1762 without issue.

2. Dorothy, married to Hugh Smith, of Wealdhall, in Essex, esquire, by whom he left two daughters, his heirs; Dorothy, the wife of the honourable John Barry, a younger son of James, earl of Barrymore; and Lucy, wife of James, lord Strange, eldest son of Edward, earl of Derby.

3. Henrietta, the third daughter, died unmarried.

His second wife was Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Thomas Moore, of the county of Louth, in Ireland, esquire, by whom he had issue a son, who died an infant; and a daughter, Elizabeth, married to William Sloane, esquire, nephew of the late Sir Hans Sloane, but died without issue.

His third wife was Sarah, daughter of Sir Capel Lucking, of Messinghall, in Essex, baronet, and widow of Richard Saltonstall, esquire, by whom he had a daughter,

Catharine, wife of Sir Philip Hall, of Upton, in Essex, by whom she had one son, Philip, and three daughters, who are unmarried.

In the year 1706 he was sheriff of Essex; and dying at Belhouse in 1723, was buried in the parish-church thereto belonging. He was a person of great understanding and universal learning, and much respected and esteemed in the county he lived in: a true and zealous friend of liberty, and of the protestant religion; for which he was an active and avowed advocate in the most dangerous and difficult times.

RICHARD BARRETT-LENNARD, his son, (by his first wife, the lady Jane Chichester) died before him, in 1716. He married his cousin, the lady Anne Lennard, baroness Dacre, youngest daughter of Thomas, earl of Suffex, as beforementioned; but died a few months after his marriage, leaving her with child of a son, named Thomas, who succeeded to his grandfather's estate: which

THOMAS BARRETT-LENNARD, is now, (by the death of his mother as aforesaid) lord Dacre, in her right. His lordship married Anna-Maria, daughter of Sir John Pratt, of Wilderness, in Kent, knight, lord chief justice of the king's bench, and sister to Charles Pratt, baron Camden, lord high chancellor of Great-Britain; by whom he had issue a daughter, Anna-Barbara, who died March 14, 1749, in the tenth year of her age, and was buried in the church at Aveley.

(CREATION.) Originally by tenure; and by writ of summons in the reign of Edward I. again declared the 27th of Henry VI. and 13th of Edward IV. also the 2d of James I.

COMPTON-TOWNSHEND Barones FERRERS.

THE first of this family who settled in England were,

GUALCHELINE OF WALKELINE DE FERRERS OF FERRARIIS and his son Henry, two Normans, who came over with William the Conqueror. The latter,

HENRY DE FERRARIIS was, in the 14th year of the reign of that king, a commissioner for a general survey of the kingdom, and possessed of one hundred and fourteen lordships in Staffordshire, twenty-five in Derbyshire, twenty in Berkshire, seven in Oxfordshire, three in Essex, three in Wilts, six in Lincoln, two in Bucks, two in Gloucestershire, and several in the county of Nottingham. By Bertha, his wife, he had issue three sons, Egenulph and William, who died before him, and

ROBERT DE FERRERS, his heir, who commanded the Derbyshire men in the famous battle near Northallerton, called Bellum de Standardo, and was, for his great services, advanced to the earldom of Derby the same year, 3d king Stephen. He died A. D. 1139. By his wife, Hawise de Vitry, he had three sons;

1. William Ferrers.

2. Robert Ferrers, who succeeded him.

3. Walcheline de Ferrers, lord of Okeham in the county of Rutland, which castle he built, and was ancestor to those of his name seated at that place.

Also three daughters.

1. Jfolda, married to Stephen de Beauchamp.

2. Matilda, married to Bertram de Verdon.

And the third, married to Wakelin Mamigmot.

WILLIAM FERRERS, earl Ferrers and Derby, was slain in his lodgings in Lombard-street, London, and his brother

ROBERT FERRERS, succeeded to the honours. He was styled comes junior de Ferrariis & comes junior de Nottingham, lord of Tutbury, &c. and lived in the year 1141. His son,

WILLIAM DE FERRERS, earl Ferrers, &c. was succeeded by his son,

ROBERT FERRERS, earl Ferrers, earl of Derby and Nottingham, who founded the priory of Woodham Ferrers in Essex, and was living 19 Hen. II. (His brother, Walcheline de Ferrers, was seated at Egginton in Derbyshire, and was ancestor of those of that name in that place.) He had two daughters; Agatha, concubine to king John, by whom she had a daughter, Joan, married to Lewillin, prince of Wales, and Miliant, married to Roger, lord Mortimer, of Wigmore. And a son and successor,

WILLIAM FERRERS, earl Ferrers. On king Richard's first arrival in England, after the death of king Henry, the said king bestowed his earldom of Derby on John, earl of Morton, his brother. However, the earl Ferrers attended that king in his voyage to the Holy Land, and died at the siege of Acon, 2 Richard I. He married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Peverell, of Nottingham, with whom he had the lordship of Higham, now called Higham Ferrers, in the county of Northampton. He had issue two daughters, Petronel, married to Henry, lord Stafford, and Elizabeth, married to William Marshal, baron of Rye. Also WILLIAM FERRERS, his heir, who on the 8th of June, in the first year of the reign of King John, was solemnly created earl of Derby by a special charter dated at Northampton, and was girt with a sword by the king's own hands, as expressed in the charter, the first precedent of that kind. He was one of the witnesses to that king's resignation of his kingdom to the pope, and was one of the sureties for a thousand marks he was to pay the apostolical see. He married Agnes, sister and coheir to Ranulph, earl of Chester, by whom the honour of Chartley came into this family, and was succeeded by his son and heir,

WILLIAM FERRERS, earl Ferrers and Derby, who, doing homage 23 Hen. III. had livery of Chartley Castle, and other lands of his mother's inheritance, and sat in the parliament held at London. He was, by reason of his being sorely afflicted with the gout, drawn from place to place in a chariot, and, through the heedlessness of the driver, overthrown from the bridge of St. Neot's in Huntingdonshire, whereby his limbs were so broken, that he died in April, A. D. 1254. He married first Sibyl, daughter and coheir of William Mareschal, earl of Pembroke, and sister and coheir to her brother; by this lady he had seven daughters, all married as follows:

1. Agnes, to William de Vesey.

2. Isabel, married first to Gilbert Basset, of Wycombe, in the county of Bucks; secondly, to Reginald Mohun, earl of Somerset.

3. Maud, married first to William, lord Kyme; secondly, to William de Vivon; thirdly, to Emmeric de Rupe Canardi.

4. Sybill, married to Francis Bohun, of Medhurst.

5. Joan, married first, to William Aquillon; secondly to John de Mohun, of Dunster.

6. Agatha, married to Hugh Mortimer, of Chilmerish.

7. Eleonor, married first to William de Vallibus; secondly, to Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester; thirdly to Roger de Leybourne.

His

His second wife was Margaret, daughter and coheir of Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester, and baron of Groby, by whom he had two sons.

1. Robert Ferrers, his heir in the earldom of Derby.

2. William Ferrers, who had his mother's inheritance of Groby, in the county of Leicester.

WILLIAM FERRERS, his heir, who in the 25th of Edward I. was summoned to parliament as Lord Ferrers of Groby. He dying 1325, left issue by Margaret, daughter of John, lord Segrave,

HENRY FERRERS, his heir, who married Isabel, daughter and coheir of Theobald de Verdon, and dying 1347, had issue,

WILLIAM FERRERS, his heir, who died 1370; and by Margaret, daughter of William Ufford, earl of Suffolk, had

HENRY FERRERS, his heir; and he marrying Joan, daughter of Luke, lord Poynings, had issue

WILLIAM FERRERS, who died May 18, A. D. 1445, leaving by Philippa, daughter of Roger, lord Clifford, two sons, Henry and Thomas. Henry, the eldest, died in the life-time of his father; and by Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, left issue Elizabeth, his sole daughter and heir, wife of Sir Edward Grey, knight, eldest son of Reginald, lord Grey, of Ruthin, by his second wife, Joan, daughter and heir of William, lord Astley; which Sir Edward was summoned to parliament as lord Ferrers of Groby; from whom is descended the present earl of Stamford.

Sir THOMAS FERRERS, the second son of William, the sixth lord Ferrers, of Groby, of this family, married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Sir Baldwin Freville, who brought the manor of Tamworth into the family in the person of Sir Humphrey Ferrers, her fourth descendant in the male line. His son,

Sir THOMAS FERRERS, died in 1499, and by his wife Ann, sister to William, lord Hastings, had issue

Sir JOHN FERRERS, who, dying in the life-time of his father, left by his wife Maud, daughter and heir of Sir John Stanley, of Elford, a son of his own name,

Sir JOHN FERRERS, who died 1513, and left issue by Dorothy, daughter of William Harper, of Rushall, esquire, the

Sir HUMPHREY FERRERS already mentioned, as successor to the manor of Tamworth in right of his female ancestor. He died A. D. 1554, and having married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Pigott, Esq; had issue

Sir JOHN FERRERS, who died 1576; and by Barbara, daughter of Sir Francis Cockain, had a son,

Sir HUMPHREY FERRERS, who died A. D. 1608, and left issue by Jane, daughter of Sir Humphrey Bradborn, knight,

Sir JOHN FERRERS, who died A. D. 1633; and by Dorothy, daughter of Sir John Pickering, knight, had a son,

Sir HUMPHREY FERRERS, who also died A. D. 1633; and by Ann, daughter of Sir John Packington, had issue

Sir JOHN FERRERS, who married Ann, daughter and coheir of Sir Dudley Carlton; and dying A. D. 1680, was succeeded by his son,

Sir HUMPHREY FERRERS, whose only daughter and heir Anne, (by Elizabeth, daughter of Gervase Pigot, of Thrumpton, in Nottinghamshire) married Robert Shirley, eldest son of Robert, first earl Ferrers, and grandfather of the present baroness Ferrers. We have only ran this branch down to shew that her ladyship is heiress here as well as to the elder branch, to whom we must now return.

ROBERT FERRERS, earl of Derby, &c. eldest son to William, earl of Derby, by his last wife, had two whole sisters, Joan, married to Thomas, lord Berkeley, and Ann, married to William, lord Musgrove, joining with the rebellious barons, was taken prisoner the 50th of Henry III. and brought to London, where he was confined three years, and disinherited by the parliament; and Edmund, the king's son, had a grant of his lands, as well as his earldom, to hold during pleasure, which he never could recover. He died the 7th of Edward I. having married first, Mary, daughter to Humphrey de Bohun, earl of Hereford, and had issue a daughter, Elizabeth, married to William Marshal, baron of Hingham; also his son

JOHN FERRERS, his heir, who in the 27th of Edward I. was summoned to parliament, among the barons, as lord Ferrers of Chartley. He married Hawyse, daughter and heir of Sir Robert Musgrove, knight, and died the 18th of Edward II. leaving two sons, the eldest of which,

JOHN FERRERS, lord Ferrers of Chartley, who dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother,

ROBERT FERRERS, lord Ferrers, who, in the reign of king Edward III. had a considerable command, particularly at the battle of Cressy. He had issue, John, his heir, and Robert, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of William le Boteler, second son of William, baron of Wemm and Overley. He was summoned to parliament as baron Ferrers of Wemm and Overley, in right of his wife, December 28, A. D. 1375, and dying 1381, left issue Robert Ferrers, his son and heir, who by Joan, daughter of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, had two daughters and coheirs, Margaret, (married first to Ralph Nevill; secondly, to Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmoreland) and Elizabeth (married to John, lord Greystock.)

JOHN FERRERS, born 1331, who succeeded as lord Ferrers, was, in the 33d of Edward III. in the expedition into Gascoigne; and having married Elizabeth, daughter of Ralph, earl of Stafford, and widow of L'Esrange, died April 22, A. D. 1367, and was succeeded by his son,

ROBERT FERRERS, lord Ferrers, then seven years old, who was in the expedition to France, the 2d of Richard II. and died in 1413, leaving issue by Margaret, (daughter of Edward lord Spencer) who died A. D. 1435,

EDMUND FERRERS, his heir, who was with king Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt, and died in 1436. He married Eleanor, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas de la Roche, knight; and by her, who married secondly Sir Philip Chetwynd, knight, ancestor of the lord Chetwynd, had two sons, William and Edmund; of which the eldest, and died June 9, A. D. 1450, leaving an only daughter,

ANNE, his heir, at that time but eleven years old, but then married to Sir Walter Devereux, knight, who was summoned to parliament as lord Ferrers of Chartley, and whose grandson was created viscount Hereford, as may be seen in the account of that family, Vol. II. p. 260. From that family the barony descended to Dorothy, daughter of Robert Devereux, earl of Essex, the great favourite of queen Elizabeth, who married Sir Henry Shirley, as may be seen in the account of the family of earl Ferrers; See Vol. II. p. 44. and that Elizabeth, daughter of Robert, by courtesy, viscount Tamworth, (by his second wife, Ann, daughter of Sir Humphrey Ferrers, of Tamworth-castle, in Warwickshire) succeeded to the barony. She married James Compton, late earl of Northampton, and, dying in 1740,

(Present Baroness) CHARLOTTE, her only surviving daughter, at length, became baroness Ferrers of Chartley, and in December A. D. 1751, married George Townshend, now viscount Townshend, by whom she has issue as may be seen by inspecting the account of his lordship's family; as also another son, born in Ireland and baptized (since that part of the work was printed off) at the castle of Dublin, by the name of Frederick, February 1, A. D. 1768. His Majesty (represented by the lord chancellor of that kingdom) and his grace the duke of Leinster, being godfathers, and the countess of Moyra godmother.

PERCY, Baroness PERCY.

HER grace Elizabeth, duchess of Northumberland (of whom we are now to treat as baroness Percy) claims descent from a long train of illustrious ancestors, such as have not only since the conquest of England, by William I. stood almost unrivalled in this island as men of eminence, both in the field and cabinet, but also before that period, were the chief personages in Europe: emperors, kings of France, dukes of Brabant, &c. &c.

All the antiquity which we have ascribed to the illustrious house of Brunswic, is enjoyed in common with this equally ancient family; for they are descended through BEALDEAGUS, the sixth son of BODO, from a race of Saxon kings, of which HARDERIC, who lived ninety years before Christ, was the first *, and also thro' JUDITH, daughter to WELPHO I. count of Altorf, in Suabia, from (the Welfish or Guelphish line) PHARAMOND †, king of the West Franks, A. D. 419.

To attend therefore strictly to the genealogy or history of the remote ancestors of her grace, would be to enroll the families and actions of almost every ancient court in Europe, matter more than sufficient for two volumes equal in size to this work.

We shall therefore begin our account of this family with the first of the name of Percy, the (female line) in honour to whom, as we shall hereafter have occasion to notice, Josceline de Louvain assumed that surname, which has ever since continued with his descendants.

MAINFRED DE PERCY came out of Denmark into Normandy, before the adventure of the famous Rollo there, and had issue

GEFFERY DE PERCY, who in the year 1190, took part with the said Rollo in his expedition into that province, whereof he attained the sovereignty, being the first duke of that country, and lineal ancestor to William duke of Normandy, and king of England, and was baptized at Artois, 912.

The said Geffery had issue,

WILLIAM DE PERCY, lord Percy, and earl of Caux, who was governor of Normandy, and was slain by Hugh Capet, king of France, and had issue

GEFFERY DE PERCY, who had to wife Mary, daughter to the earl of Forest, by whom he was father of another,

WILLIAM DE PERCY, who was made earl of Poitiers by Richard II. duke of Normandy, and had issue

GEFFERY DE PERCY, who had issue two sons, William de Percy, and Serlo de Percy, who came into England with William the Conqueror, and was the second prior of Whitby.

WILLIAM DE PERCY, being much beloved by that king, and one of his barons, enjoyed, thro' his bounty, large possessions in this realm, as appears by the general survey; which sets forth, that he held Ambledune, in Hantsire; also 32 lordships in Lincolnshire, whereof Imlingcham, Lenisby, and Caborne, were part. Likewise in Yorkshire eighty-six, of which, Topeclive, in the North-Riding, and Spofford, in the West-Riding, became their chief seats in those parts. He left a great patrimony in France, to the lord Monpensier. And Madox, in his Baronia Anglicana, p. 91, asserts, that William the Conqueror granted to Monsieur Percy a barony of thirty knights fees.

This William de Percy, surnamed Le Gernons, or Algernon, also obtained from Hugh, earl of Chester (the first of that name) the lordship of Whitby, with the large territory adjacent thereto, lying in the East-Riding of the county of York, where he founded an abbey for Benedictine monks, in the time of king William Rufus.

He took to wife Emma de Port, lady of the honour of Semar, near Scarborough, by whom he had issue three sons, Alan, Geoffrey, and Richard; and had sepulture in the chapter-house at Whitby.

At Sion-hall, in an old roll, wrote in the reign of king Henry VIII. is a history of the family in verse, where it is said, that he was admiral of the navy that brought William the Conqueror to England, and that he died beyond the seas, and only his heart was brought into England, and buried at Whitby. His wife Emma surviving him, gave to those monks an house, situate in the street called Ufegate, at York; as also two carucates of land, one in Mysleham, and the other in Smelleswell; likewise two more in Hylaham; and was buried in the chapter-house at Whitby, near to the grave of her husband.

ALAN DE PERCY, the eldest son, ratified all those donations, made by William his father to the monks at Whitby, and added thereto, of his own gift, two carucates of land in Hylaham; as also two in Hedon and Oxneham. By Emma his wife, daughter of Gilbert de Gant, baron of Folkingham, in Lincolnshire, who was son of Baldwyn, earl of Flanders, and nephew to William the Conqueror, he had issue five sons, viz.

1. William de Percy.

2. Geoffrey de Percy.

3. Henry de Percy.

4. Walter de Percy, who was one of the witnesses to king Stephen's grant of Sutton to the church of Winchester, in the first year of his reign.

5. Alan de Percy, who was buried in the abbey of Whitby, near to his father.

WILLIAM DE PERCY, the eldest son of Alan, gave the church of Semar to the monks of Whitby, and two ox-gangs of land in Upper-Lythum; and by Alice, his wife, daughter of Everard de Ross, left issue three sons,

1. Alan de Percy.

2. William de Percy.

3. Richard de Percy, married Jane, daughter of William Bruers, and had issue.

Alan de Percy departing this life without issue was buried on the south-side of the chapter-house at Whitby, and William his brother succeeded.

WILLIAM DE PERCY founded the abbey of Handell, for Cistercian monks, in 1133.

34 Henry I. as also that of Sallay, in Craven, in 1147, 12 Stephen, by the consent of Adelidis de Tunbrigge, his wife, and Alan his son and heir.

The said William was one of those northern barons, who fought so successfully against the Scots, in 3 Stephen, in that memorable battle near North Alverton, in Yorkshire, called Bellum de Standardo: Thurstan, then archbishop of York, having caused a famous standard to be erected, and thereon the banners of St. Peter, St. John of Beverley, and St. Wilfrid of Rippon, adding thereto the sacred host, for all to come to it, for their encouragement. In 12 Henry II. on levying the aid for marrying the king's daughter, he certified his knights fees to be twenty eight, De Veteri Feoffamento; and eight, a third, and sixth part, De Novo Feoffamento; and taking a journey to Jerusalem, departed this life at Mountjoy, in the Holy-land. Before his going on that dangerous expedition, he granted and confirmed, whatsoever himself, or his uncle Alan had granted to the monastery at Whitby, in Yorkshire; which contained large possessions.

By Adelidis de Tunbrigge, his wife, he had issue four sons,

1. Walter de Percy.

2. Alan de Percy.

3. Richard de Percy.

4. William de Percy.

And two daughters,

1. Maud, married to William, earl of Warwick.

2. Agnes, the wife of Josceline de Lovaine, son to Godfrey, duke of Brabant, and brother to Adelidis, queen of England, wife of king Henry I.

All which sons (whereof William was a monk, and abbot of Whitby) departing this life issueless, the inheritance came to be divided betwixt their two sisters, Maud and Agnes.

Maud surviving her husband, and taking into her pious consideration the mean estate of the monks at Sallay, by reason the air in Craven, where her father had founded that abbey, was so moist and cloudy, as their corn seldom arrived to perfect ripeness, did, for the health of the souls of William de Percy her father, Adelidis de Tunbrigge her mother, and the soul of William, earl of Warwick, her late husband; as also for the soul of Alan her brother, and Agnes her sister, give unto them the church of our lady at Tadcaster, with the chapel of Haselwood, and a yearly pension from the church of Neuthon; as also one carucate of land, lying in Catthor, where she was born; of which monastery she was reputed patroness. This great lady died without issue, in 6 John; and constituted Henry de Percy, her nephew, viz. son of Josceline de Lovaine, (hereafter mentioned) and the abbot of Fountains, her executors. And the same year, the king sent his precept to the sheriff of Yorkshire, to take order, that they should forthwith, according to the custom of the kingdom, discharge those debts which were due to his exchequer.

On the death of this countess of Warwick,

AGNES, her sister, became sole heir to the large possessions of her ancestors; and being of as ancient and high descent, as any family in the kingdom, queen Adeliza, the wife of Henry I. recommended her brother, Josceline de Lovaine, to her for a husband. (He was a younger son of Godfrey, duke of Brabant, descended from the emperor Charlemain. The said Josceline came into England in 1221, on the marriage of his sister with with king Henry, who settled on her, in dower, the castle of Arundel, and county of Suffex); but before she accepted him for a husband, covenanted with him, that he should bear the arms of the lords Percy, and omit his own; or continue his own arms, and take the name of Percy, to him and his posterity by her. And under her picture in the pedigree at Sion, are these lines.

Lord Percy's heir I was, whose noble name,
By me survives unto his lasting fame,
Brabant's duke's son I wed, and for my sake
Retain'd his arms, and Percy's name did take.

He was stiled, before his marriage, Joscelinus de Lovanio, Frater Reginæ, Castellanus de Arundel, in all publick instruments; that office having been confirmed to him by king Henry II. in the 14th year of his reign; as also the honour of Petworth, which he had of her gift. When he died does not appear; but he confirmed to the monks of Lewes, in Suffex, for the health of his soul, as also of the soul of queen Adeliza his sister, and all his ancestors, the church of Budinkaton, which they had of the gift of William Fitz-Ralph. He had issue by the said Agnes his wife, two daughters, Eleanor and Alice:

And four sons,

1. Richard de Percy.
2. Henry de Percy.
3. Robert de Percy, lord of Sutton, upon Derwent.
4. Josceline de Percy, who in right of his wife was called of Sutton.

In the beforementioned roll at Sion, are these lines,

And at Petworth is beryed this noble lord,
Lady Agnes his wyfe at Whitby, bookes record.

She survived her husband * and was buried in the Chapter-house at Whitby, with this epitaph,

Agnes, Agnetis, Feflo tumulatur; & istis
Idem fexus idem, nomen & vita dies.

RICHARD PERCY, eldest son of Agnes, and the said Josceline de Louvain, entered into the purparty of the inheritance of Maud, countess of Warwick, his mother's sister, by the advice of the king; and in the 6th of king John, had, on the death of his mother (who died in that year) livery of all those lands in the county of York, whereof she died seized; as also of those which Maud, countess of Warwick (his aunt) held of the earl of Chester's fee.

In 17 John, he was one of the chief of those barons then in arms against the king; also one of the twenty-five, who took an oath to compel the king, to observe the articles granted by the great charter, and charter of the forests, in case he should recede therefrom. And being thus a principal actor in that insurrection of the great men then in arms, "calling themselves the army of God," pope Innocent thereupon, at Lateran, 17 Kal. of Jan. 1251, 17 John, excommunicated him, and other barons, and their adherents, reciting the cause, that they would dethrone the king, for acknowledging the crown to belong to the see of Rome.

In 18 John, when those high-spirited barons had called over Lewis, son to the king of France, with purpose to raise him to the royal throne, he, with Robert de Ros, and Peter de Brus (two eminent barons of the North) subdued all Yorkshire to the obedience of Lewis.

However, in 1 Hen. III. having letters of safe-conduct, dated 19 September, 1217, 1 Hen. III. to hold till the feast of St. Simon and Jude following, he had a treaty with William, earl of Pembroke, then governor of the kingdom, and made his peace. In 2 Hen. III. he was in arms for the king; and in 7 Hen. III. he was, among other of the barons, witnesses to that agreement of Luelin, prince of Wales; whereby he promised to make such satisfaction to the king for damages done, as the archbishop of Canterbury should think expedient. After which we find no further mention of him, but that he granted the nunnery at Handale, in the county of York, to Richard Malebise, and his heirs, and died without issue. Mr. Edmondson gives him issue two sons, Henry and Alexander, who died without issue: if so, they must have died in their father's life-time, for, upon his death, his nephew, William de Percy, as is hereafter observed, had livery of his lands as heir.

Of his younger brothers, Robert is said to give

* It may not be improper to recite the descent of the said Josceline de Louvain. He was son of Godfrey Barbatas, so called from his beard, first duke of Lorrain and Brabant, and earl of Louvain, &c. (who died A. D. 1140, 5 Stephen). The said Godfrey Barbatas was son of Henry II. earl of Louvain, who died in 1068, 2d of William the Conqueror. And he of Lambert the 2d, called Baldric, who was slain in 1054, and was son of Lambert Conte de Mont, and earl of Louvain, in right of his wife Gerberga, daughter and coheir of Charles, duke of Lorrain, by Agnes his wife, daughter of Herbert Trecurum comitis. And the said Charles, who died in prison at Orleans in 991, was son of Lewis IV. king of France, surnamed Outremer, (beyond the sea) and of Gerberga, sister of Henry, king of Germany.

Lewis before-mentioned died in 954, and was son of Charles Posthumus, surnamed the Simple, king of France, (who died in 929) by Edgine his queen, third daughter to Edward the elder, king of England. And the said Charles was the son of Lewis the Stutterer, king of France, and emperor of the Romans (who died in 879) by Adelard his second wife. He was son of Charles, surnamed the Bald, king of all France, and emperor of the Romans. He died in 877.

Which Charles the Bald was son of Lewis, surnamed the Pious, king of all France and Aquitain, and at length emperor, by Judith, his second consort, (daughter of Welf I.

count of Altorf) who died in 843, and the said Lewis in 840. He was third son of Charles the Great, king of France and Germany, and emperor of the Romans. Hildegard, daughter of the duke of Sweedland, was his consort, and died in 732. The said emperor Charles was surnamed Magnus & Christianissimus, from his piety, virtue, and valour. He was crowned emperor of the Romans in 801. He reduced the greatest part of Europe into one monarchy, after the invasions and depopulations made by the Goths, Vandals, and other barbarous nations. He died in 814, and was son of Pipin III. king of France, who died in 768, and was brother to Charlemain, son of Charles Martel, (who died in 741) by Suana-childa, his wife. And he was the son of Pipin II. surnamed Herstal, (who died in 714) and of Alpaide his wife, sister of Dodo, who killed St. Lambert, bishop of Leedes. And he of St. Begga, one of the daughters of Pipin I. called de Landen (who died 647) and was buried in Brabant, by Lita his wife, who came out of Aquitain.

Which Pipin was the son of Charlemain, son of a most valiant prince among the Medes, of whom there is no other account. The learned Camden in his Britannia in the county of Northumberland, says, the Percies by Josceline, de Louvain, were the true issue of the emperor Charles the Great, by Gerberga, the daughter of Charles, and youngest brother to Lothar, the last king of France, of the line of Charles.

to the monks of Whitby, the advowson of the church of Sutton upon Derwent, and also to have died without issue, as did Josceline; but HENRY DE PERCY, his brother, continued the line, who in the pedigree of the family, now at Sion-house, is said to be the eldest son; but that is a mistake.

In 6 Rich. I. Brien, son of Ralph, gave a fine to the king, of a hundred marks, that he might try his right to the barony of Petteward, (now wrote Petworth) and of fifteen knights fees belonging to the said barony, against the said Henry de Percy. He took to wife Isabel, daughter of Adam, and sister of Peter de Brus, of Skelton, with whom he had in marriage, by gift of the same Peter, the manor of Levington, near Beverley, in Yorkshire, for which, he and his heirs were to repair to Skelton-castle every Christmas-day, and lead the lady of that castle from her chamber to the chapel, at mass; and thence to her chamber again; and after dinner with her to depart. He was buried at Whitby, and left issue by her two sons:

1. William de Percy.
2. Henry de Percy, who, in 15 Hen. III. giving his brother William the manor of Hefset, in Suffex, in fee-tail, had thereupon a release from him of all his title in the manors of Settil and Litton, in the county of York.

The said

WILLIAM DE PERCY, after the death of Agnes his grandmother, and Henry his father, succeeded to a great part of their inheritance. And on collecting of the scutage of Montgomery, in 8 Hen. III. he was by a special writ acquitted for fifteen knights fees, (viz. for his lands in Yorkshire) having no less than twenty-one knights fees more, which appertained to the honour of Petworth in Suffex.

In 26 Hen. III. he paid one hundred marks fine, to be exempted from attendance on the king into Gascoigne; being then summoned to prepare himself with horse and arms for that voyage. And in 28 Hen. III. doing his homage, had livery of all the lands of Richard de Percy, whose nephew and heir he was, excepting the manor of Topclive, which was the dowry of Agnes, wife of the said Richard, she being then alive.

By the account of Robert de Creeping, (shortly after given up into the exchequer) it appears, that he had thirty knights fees, de veteri Feoffamento, in Yorkshire, and two knights fees in Lincolnshire. Madox recites, that in 30 Hen. III. the barony of Percy was rated at thirty knights fees of the old feoffment.

He was large in his bequests to the monks of Salley, and the priory of Silebrede, in Suffex, also to the hospital at Sandon in Surry. He departed this life in 29 Hen. III. and was buried in the abbey of Salley, having married two wives; first, Ellen, daughter of William, lord Bardolph; and secondly, Joan, fourth daughter of William de Brewer, a great baron, and sister and heir of William de Brewer, junior, (widow of Ralph Fitz-Ranulph, lord of Middleham) by her had issue four daughters.

1. Anastasia, married to Ralph Fitz-Ralph, lord of Middleham.
2. Joane, married to Henry Ferlington.
3. Alice, married to Ralph de Haringwood.

4. Agnes, married to Eustace de Baliol.

By his first wife, Ellen, he had issue seven sons.

1. Henry de Percy.
2. Walter de Percy, lord of Kildale, ancestor to the Percies of Kildale and Crmsby.
3. Richard de Percy, lord of Dunsley, Upton, Newham, &c. ancestor to the Percies of Dunsley.
4. Geffery de Percy, lord of Semar, near Scarborough, who died without issue.
5. Ingelram de Percy, who had the lordship of Dalton, by the gift of Ellen his mother.
6. Allan de Percy, who died without issue.
7. Josceline de Percy, lord of Levington, by gift from his father.

We now return to Henry Percy, the eldest son. In 33 Hen. III. he gave a fine of nine hundred pounds, for livery of his lands, and that he might marry whom he pleased.

In 44 Hen. III. (August 1, A. D. 1260) the king advertised him, that Llewelin, son of Griffin, and other rebels, had invaded Wales, and thereupon commands him to be at Chester, on the day of the nativity of the Virgin Mary, with horse and arms, according to the service he owed, to oppose him and his accomplices. In 47 Hen. III. he was in commission, for preserving the peace in the northern parts, and to garrison Pontefract-castle, then esteemed the key of Yorkshire; and in the same year, having taken part with the rebellious barons, his lands were seized, but afterwards coming in, and submitting himself, he had restitution of them again. Also the same year, was with the king at Oxford, with the barons that adhered to him; and marching from thence to Northampton, assisted in the storming of that town, which was taken, with divers barons therein, that opposed the king. After which they marched towards Nottingham, wasting the lands of the barons; and the year following, fighting stoutly on the king's part in the battle of Lewis, shared in the hard fortune of that day, being taken prisoner there, with many others: but was soon after released.

In 50 Hen. III. this Henry, lord Percy, and other barons, on the king's part, at Windsor, on Sunday after St. Lucy's day, agreed to the compromise made by the king, according to the statutes, orders, and obligations made at Oxford; and to abide by the determination of the King of France therein: as did the barons at London, on the part of Simon Montfort, earl of Leicester. After which we find no further mention of him, but that he married Eleanor, daughter of John, earl of Warren and Surry, by Alice, his wife, daughter of Hugh le Brien, earl of March, by his wife Isabel, widow and relict of John, king of England. And by his said lady Eleanor, had issue three sons, William, John, and Henry, and was buried at Salley, near his father. Eleanor, his wife surviving, had assignation of her dower in 56 Hen. III. out of all his lands, except the manors of Petworth, in Suffex, and Topclive, in Yorkshire, whereof she had been enfeoffed.

The said William and John died without issue; so that the inheritance devolved on Henry, the youngest; as heir to his brother John, whose wardship in 22 Ed. I. was granted to Edmund the king's brother.

This HENRY DE PERCY, in 24 Edw. I. was knighted by the king before Berwick; and afterwards wards was in the battle of Dunbar, where the English then obtained a memorable victory. Whereupon being constituted governor of all Galloway, and Ayr, in Scotland, the king, at Morpeth, September 29, A. D. 1296, 24 Edw. I. commanded the sheriffs of Cumberland and Westmorland, and others, of the said counties to be obedient to him.

In 27 Edw. I. he obtained, in consideration of his great and faithful services, a grant of all the lands, as well in England, as in Scotland, which were the inheritance of Ingelram de Baliol, deceased, and which did, by inheritance, belong to Ingelram de Umfravill, then in rebellion.

In 28 Edw. I. he was again in the wars of Scotland; and the year after, on the pope's interposing in the affairs of that kingdom, he was one of the great barons, who signed that memorable letter to pope Boniface, "That their king was not to answer in judgment, for any rights of the crown of England, before any tribunal under heaven, &c. and that, by the help of God, they would resolutely, and with all their force, maintain against all men."

In 3 Edw. II. November 19, A. D. 1309, Anthony Beke, bishop of Durham, granted and sold to him the barony of Alnewyk, in the county of Northumberland, which he had by grant from William de Vesey; and all those lands and tenements, which Isabel, wife of John de Vesey, senior, and Isabel, wife of William de Vesey, held in dower of the said barony, to hold to him and his heirs for ever. He also purchased of the said bishop, the manor of Querindon upon Teise. And the king at Shene, January 23, A. D. 1310, 3 Edw. II. confirms the bishop of Durham's grant of the barony of Alnewyk, to him and his heirs.

In 4 Edw. II. being appointed, with other barons, to go to the general council, he received the king's command to be at London, three weeks after the feast of St. John Baptist, to consult with Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester and Hertford, the regent, the bishop of Worcester, chancellor, and others of the council; and in the summons, he is styled the king's kinsman.

He had been in 2 Edw. II. constable of the castle at York, and in 5 Edw. II. he was made governor of the castle of Scarborough, in the county of York; also governor of the castle of Baumburgh, in the county of Northumberland.

The earl of Cornwall being taken in Scarborough, this Henry de Percy was one whom the king principally confided in to protect him, as appears by two special mandates; one dated the 30th of July, A. D. 1312, 6 Edw. II. and the other the day after, sent to John de Moubay, sheriff of the county and city of York; reciting, That Henry de Percy had, by an indenture, on pain of forfeiting his life, and all he was worth, signed in his (the king's) presence, and undertook that Piers de Gaveston, earl of Cornwall, should be kept safe, and free from harm, to a certain time; and on certain conditions, agreed on between the said Piers, and Henry, when he surrendered himself to him and others. And the said Henry afterwards having slain the said Piers, before he could come to the king, contrary to the said agreement, and came not to the king, but absconded from him, which shewed him suspicious; he therefore commands him, viz. the said John Moubay, to seize the said Henry, and to conduct him safe to him, wheresoever he shall be. He also signified to the said John Moubay, that he had ordered Robert de Wodehous, his escheator on this side Trent, to seize all the lands, tenements, goods, and chattels of the said Henry de Percy, in his bailiwick; and commands him, the said John de Moubay, if any resistance should be made, to interpose, that the said order be fully executed. However, the same year, on the second of November, the king grants to Henry de Percy, his kinsman, and his domestics, letters of safe-conduct, from the 28th day of September, till Candlemas-day, to come to A. Cardinal of St. Prisca, Lewis, Conte Deureux, and the archbishop of Poictou, the pope's chamberlain, to treat with them on urgent affairs, relating to the king and peers, occasioned by the death of Piers de Gaveston, which they were to compromise: and thereupon a treaty was concluded by them.

And in the parliament held at Westminster, the 15th of October, 1313, 7 Edw. II. it being enacted, that none should be called to account for the death of Piers de Gaveston, the king pardoned him and others, the murder of the said Piers; and also any other misdeed whatsoever. He had likewise, on the 5th of November following, a confirmation of the release from the king, of all jewels, horses, &c. taken at Newcastle, from Piers de Gaveston. After which he marched with the king into Scotland, and was in the battle of Bannockburn, where the English received an overthrow, through their immoderate rioting and drunkenness.

In 8 Edw. II. (on the death of Robert, lord Clifford) he was constituted one of the commissioners, with Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, and Bartholomew de Badlesmere, for the custody of the castles of Skipton, in Craven, Appleby, Bruham, and Pendragon; and likewise of two parts of the profits of the county of Westmorland, by reason of the minority of Roger de Clifford, son and heir to the said Robert.

And having, as said before, acquired the honour of Alnewyk, he repaired the castle there; and the better to secure his title therein, obtained a release from Sir Gilbert de Aton, knight, cousin and heir to William de Vesey, of all his right thereto: he likewise purchased the lordship of Corbrigg, in the county of Northumberland. And did so well deserve of king Edward, that he obtained the earldom of Carrick at his hands, with all the castles, manors, and lands, whereof Robert de Bruce was possessed, at the time when he was slain by John Comyng. He purchased also from Henry de Fishburne, son and heir to Constance, daughter and heir of Henry de Baliol, the manor of Vere, in Galloway; as also Red-Castle, in Anegos. He died the same year, having been summoned to parliament from December 29, A. D. 1299, to the time of his death, 8 Edw. II. and was buried in the abbey of Fountains before the high altar.

By Eleanor his wife, daughter of George Fitz-Allan, lord of Arundel, who died A. D. 1328, he had issue two sons, viz. Henry, lord Percy, and William, who was made a knight of the Bath in 20 Edw. II.

The eldest son,

HENRY DE PERCY, was sixteen years of age on the decease of his father, in 8 Edw. II. and in 15 Edw. II. he was constituted governor of the castle of Pickering, in Yorkshire, by the forfeiture of Thomas, earl of Lancaster, then in the crown; as also of Scarborough town and castle. On September 10, 16 Edw. II. he was made a knight at York, and had his apparel, on that occasion, out of the king's wardrobe.

And in 18 Edw. II. on the landing of queen Isabel, and prince Edward, in England, he was one of the nobles that joined with them, for reforming those abuses in the government, occasioned through the power of the Spencers; and the access of those forces he brought to Gloucester (where she then was) much increased her army. In which year, he was made one of the guardians of the truce with the Scotch in Northumberland; and guardian of the portre castles in that county, on the King's going abroad.

Being therefore thus instrumental in the great change, he obtained in 1 Edw. III. the custody of the castle of Skipton, in Craven; and was one of the twelve lords, by whom it was decreed to be of council to the young king Edward; and the principal person in commission, for the treaty of peace betwixt the kingdoms of England and Scotland; also constituted warden of the marches: but on conclusion of the peace, betwixt the English and Scots, in the parliament at York, he would not assent, that the English should quit those lands, which they had in Scotland by inheritance.

In 2 Edw. III. on the death of Eleanor his mother, he was made constable of Scarborough-castle, the custody whereof was committed to her charge in 19 Edw. II. and in 1 Edw. III. In the same year, he attended the king to Amiens, when he went to do homage to Philip, king of France, for the dutchy of Aquitain, and the lands of Ponthieu, and Morestroile: being also retained by indenture, to serve the king with a certain number of men at arms, as well in times of peace as war, during the term of his life, and to receive five hundred marks per annum salary; and in consideration of that annuity, obtained a grant of the inheritance of the castle of Warkworth, in the county of Northumberland, which after the death of Sir John de Clavering, without issue male of his body, was to devolve to the king, and his heirs; but on condition that when the possession of the said castle should so come to his hands, then the payment of those five hundred marks to cease. He was a person of such note, that Sir Ralph Nevill, the same year, did by indenture, bearing date at Clifton, near York, upon the fifth of August, covenant to serve him, both in peace and war, as long as they both should live, with twenty men at arms, whereof five to be knights, upon such wages and other terms, as therein is more fully expressed.

In 3 Edw. III. he attended on the king, who, on the 26th of May, A. D. 1329, in the afternoon, embarked at Dover on board the Winchelsea, in order to settle his affairs in Aquitain, and returned with the king the 11th of June following.

In 4 Edw. III. he was sent ambassador, with others, to the king of France, to settle preliminaries, in order to a peace.

In 5 Edw. III. he was constituted one of the jus-ticiaries and conservators of the peace, for the counties of Cumberland and Northumberland. And the king taking notice in what sort he had retained him, as well in time of peace as war, (as before expressed) and that by act of parliament after the agreement so made, all retainers, in time of peace, were to be void, did thereupon grant to him, and his heirs, in recompence thereof, the castle and manor of Warkworth, and manor of Roubiry, which after the death of Sir John de Clavering, without issue male, were to devolve to the crown; as also the manors of Corbrigg, and Newburn, and all other the lands of the said John de Clavering, so intailed as aforelaid, excepting only the dowry of Hawise, then the wife of him the said John de Clavering.

In 6 Edw. III. he was again constituted warden of the marches of Scotland, and conservator of the peace in the counties of Northumberland, York, Lancaster, Cumberland, and Westmorland. And in 7 Edw. III. he was with king Edward at the siege of Berwick; also in the memorable battle of Halidowne Hill, on the north of Berwick, the 20th of July that year, wherein the Scots were defeated with great slaughter; and king Edward, the next day, having the town of Berwick delivered to him, he placed therein as governor, this lord Henry Percy. Afterwards on a cessation of arms being agreed on between England and Scotland, he was one of those who signed that agreement, on the part of England. Also in the same year, being governor of the castle of Berwick, he was one of the commissioners sent to the parliament of Scotland, to approve and ratify such agreements, as had been made betwixt king Edward, and Edward de Baliol, king of Scotland. In that year likewise he had a grant from Edward de Baliol, king of Scotland, of the inheritance of the pale of Loughmaban; as also of Anandale, and Moffetdale; with all the knights fees, and advowsons of churches, within those valleys, in as full and ample manner, as Thomas Randolph, some time earl of Murray, ever had them; and of divers lands in that realm, which belonged to other men of the Brucean party: whereupon he, with others, came to the parliament held by king Baliol, as peers of Scotland, and as owing homage for their respective lands held of him. All which castles, lands, &c. then valued at a thousand marks per annum, he did, the year following, surrender to king Edward the Third, and his heirs, in exchange for the castle and constabulary of Jeddeworth, and towns of Jeddeworth, Benjeddeworth, Hassinden, and the forest of Jeddeworth; together with five hundred marks per annum, to be received out of the customs of Berwick; as also the custody of the castle at Berwick, with the fee of one hundred marks for that service, in time of peace, and two hundred pounds per annum in time of war. And the same year, 8 Edw. III. * was joined in commission with Ralph de Nevil, in guarding of the marches throughout the counties of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmorland.

He marched again into Scotland, upon the king's service,

* In this year likewise, he intailed most of his lordships and lands upon the heirs male of his body, as by a special feoffment, bearing date September 24, appeareth, viz. the castles of Alawike, and Warkworth, the manors of Alawike,

Toghal, Swinhow, Denwike, and Alnham, in the county of Northumberland; Spoford, Topeliff, Semer, Naffertan, Lekingfield, Carten and Cletop, with the hamlets of Lethelley, Arlethorp, Gristwoit, Aysby, Wanesford, and Argham, in service, in the 9th of Edw. III. in that party commanded by Edward Balliol.

In 10 Edward III. he attended the king in another expedition made into Scotland; and there continued the following year.

In 12 Edward III. the king going abroad, and having appointed Edward, the Black Prince, regent, this Henry was constituted one of his council.

In 13 Edward III. he had the title of steward of the king's house.

In 14 Edward III. he was constituted one of the commissioners of array for soldiers, in the counties of Westmorland and Cumberland: and this year was to take care, that one thousand nine hundred and eighty-nine pounds five shillings, due to the lord John Mowbray, was paid; and with others, was appointed to set forth the arrays of Yorkshire, Nottinghamshire, Derbyshire, and Northumberland; and to punish all rebels, and determine all trespasses, done in Northumberland, and the king's lands in Scotland; and to receive any person to the king's peace, or pardon; and to grant a truce. Also was in that great sea fight, betwixt the English and French, before Sluce in Flanders; and had, in consideration of his large expences in the king's service, an assignation of five hundred pounds, to be paid by the collector of the nones and fifteens, in the counties of Northumberland and Westmorland. He was the same year, at the siege of the castle of Dunbar, which had revolted from king Edward, since it was rebuilt, and fortified by E. Patriek, who also had revolted. And in regard that the castle and constabulary of Jeddworth, with those other lands granted to him, in lieu of the castle and pale of Laughmaban, with Anandale, in Scotland, were not an equitable exchange, he had, in 16 Edward III. a grant of five hundred marks per annum, out of the old customs of Berwick upon Tweed, to make it good. In the said year he was also impowered to treat with the Scots, about a truce, cessation of arms, or peace. And the king declaring, that by the advice of parliament, he was going beyond the seas, he had appointed Edward, duke of Cornwall, his son, regent of his kingdom during his absence; he therefore commands this Henry de Percy, and others, to attend him wherever he goes, and to be aiding and counselling of him.

In 15 Edward III. the parliament debating upon the point, that the nobles of England should not be put to answer, but before their peers in open parliament, in the case of John Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury, he was appointed one of the four barons, named with four bishops, and four earls, to enquire into the crimes laid against the archbishop; and they then determined, that the lord chancellor, lord treasurer, and other high officers of state, should be included under the name of peers.

In 17 Edward III. he was one of the witnesses to the king's creating Edward his son (called the Black Prince) prince of Wales, by patent, dated May 12, that year; and on the 20th following, was appointed warden of the marches in Northumberland, and other parts of Scotland, to the east. Also August 18, was commissioned to treat and agree with William de Douglas, about an alliance between the king and him, and to transact all matters relating thereto. After which he embarked with the king, on the 4th of October, for Bretagne, and landing near Vannes, laid siege thereto with one part of his army, and himself, with the rest, laid siege to Nantes; but after giving several assaults, without any great advantage, he (the king) again divided his army, resolving himself to go before Dinant, and left the siege of Nantes to the earl of Oxford, and this lord Henry Percy, who lay before it, till the duke of Normandy approached them with an army of forty thousand men; whereupon the king ordered them to quit the siege, and join his army. He continued in France till the conclusion of a truce, the year after; and then returning to England, went to his command in the North, to the assistance of Edward de Balliol, who had taken the title of king of Scotland. And the king having appointed the said Edward de Balliol general of his forces, sent his mandate, dated at Westminster, August 25, 1344, 18 Edward III. to this Henry, lord Percy, to be obedient to him.

In 19 Edward III. he was again constituted one of the commissioners to treat of peace, with such as were in arms in the marches of Scotland, and the king's good subjects in those parts.

In 20 Edward III. by the instigation of the French king, the Scots invaded England again, whilst king Edward was at the siege of Calais. Henry, lord Percy, who was the chief in command of the northern barons, gave them battle, upon a moor near Durham; and having vanquished the whole army, took David their king prisoner. In consideration of which laudable service, (the king being then absent) he had an assignation of two hundred marks out of those aids, then granted for the support of those wars. And the king, by his guardian at the Tower of London, October 20, 1346, 20 Edward III. signified to him, "That after his thanks to God for the many benefits bestowed on him, and his subjects, in the deepest sense of gratitude, he acknowledges himself, and subjects, bound to him, for his approved loyalty and valour, for the honour of his name, and defence of the kingdom of England against the Scots, his enemies: beseeching him to be vigilant in those parts, that no damage may happen to his subjects, by his said enemies." Also on the 30th of October following, he was in commission to admit such of the Scotch, as were willing to return to their allegiance. And on the 10th of December, 1446, in the county of York. Two parts of the manors of Warkworth, Corbrigg, Aklington, and Roubiry, with the hamlets of Smitir, Birling, Thorpeton, and Newton, with their appurtenances, in the county of Northumberland. As also the advowsons of the churches of Spoford, Lekingfield, Scorburch, Arncliffe, Catton, and Donygton, in the county of York. Likewise the moiety of the village of Traffreston, which Robert de Ogle then held for term of life; the borough of Almoneth, with the manors of Houghton, and Lefcebury, in the county of Northumberland, which Isabel de Vesey held for term of life; as also the manor of Chatton, with one toft, and five ox-gangs of land, in Wolloure, which the same Isabel likewise held for term of life. Also the manor of Newburne which Ralph de Nevil held for term of life; and the third part of the manors of Warkworth, Corbrigg, Arlington, and Roubiry, and hamlets of Sniker, Berling, Thropton, and Newton, which Hawise, the widow of John de Clavering, then also held in dower; and for want of such issue, to his right heirs.

20 Edward III. he had summons to attend the parliament, appointed to meet at Westminster on the morrow of the Epiphany, to consult about means to put an end to the war.

By the French rolls, it appears, the lord Percy was of prince Edward's retinue in the wars of France, in 21 Edward III.

We find no mention of him in the two subsequent years, whereby it is probable he was with the prince in France; and in 24 Edward III. he was joined in commission with the bishop of Durham, Ralph, lord Stafford, and Ralph de Nevill, to treat of peace with the lord Robert Stewart, prince of Scotland, and other nobles of that nation, at York. Which treaty continued till the next year, 25 Edward III. when he was again commissioned to meet them at Hexham, where it was agreed, that on the coming into England of the lord John, eldest son and heir of the said Robert, prince of Scotland, and several other young noblemen, as hostages for David, king of Scotland, then prisoner in England, he should be permitted to return into Scotland, on taking an oath for his faithful return; which oath, this lord Percy was empowered to administer to him. He was also empowered to keep the truce in the marches towards Northumberland and Westmorland.

On January 27, 1352, 26 Edward III. he was commissioned to see that the Scotch (according to the treaty made with them) do use, and be governed by the same laws, as they were in the time of Alexander, king of Scotland. Also the same year, on the danger of an invasion then threatened from the French, he was constituted one of the commissioners for arraying of men in the county of Northumberland, for the safeguard of the realm. And departing this life February 26 following, was buried in the priory of Alnwick*, leaving issue, by Idonea his wife, daughter of Robert, lord Clifford, who died 1365, four sons, viz.

1. Henry de Percy, his son and heir, at that time thirty years of age.

2. Thomas de Percy, who was consecrated bishop of Norwich, Jan. 3, 29 Edward III. and died at Blofeld, August 8, 44 Edward III. and was buried in his own cathedral, which he repaired, being, in his time, greatly defaced with a tempest. He contributed 400 marks himself, and obtained the rest of his clergy. And by his will bequeathed to the church of Norwich, a house and certain lands lying within the lordships of Chimerele, Carelien, Fowrdow, Granthorp, and Wychelwood.

3. William de Percy, who had the manor of Kirk-Levington, by the grant of his father.

4. Roger de Percy, who had the manor of Starnbot, and Dalton-Percy.

Also four daughters,

1. Maud, the wife of John, lord Nevill, of Raby, and father by her of Ralph, first earl of Westmorland.

2. Eleanor, married to John, lord Fitz-Walter.

3. Isabel, married to William, the son of Gilbert de Aton, but died before consummation.

4. Margaret, married first to Robert de Umfranville, son and heir to Gilbert de Umfranville, earl of Anegos, and afterwards to William, lord Ferrers, of Groby.

HENRY PERCY, his son and heir, doing his homage the same year his father died, had livery of his lands, saving to Idonea his mother, (then living) her reasonable dower.

In 20 Edward III. (his father then living) he was in that great expedition then made into France, in which year ensued the famous battle of Cressley.

On March 28, 1352, 26 Edward III. he was commissioned, with the bishop of Durham, to receive David de Bruce, king of Scotland, into their custody, on his return out of that kingdom, according to the oath he had taken.

In 27 Edward III. (15 October) he was commissioned to treat with David de Bruce, and the nobles of Scotland, at Newcastle upon Tyne, about the discharge of the said David de Bruce; likewise on the 14th of June following, on the same account, at the said place.

On October 5, 1354, 28 Edward III. he was commissioned to receive from Sir John de Coupland, sheriff of Northumberland, the body of David de Bruce, king of Scotland, and to set him at liberty, according to agreement made between him and others, on the part of the king of England, for ninety thousand marks, payable in nine years, executed that day. And was also empowered to compleat the treaty with the Scotch.

In 1356, 30 Edward III. he received command to reside on his lands in the marches of Scotland, for the better defence of those parts; being with Ralph, lord Nevill, constituted warden of those marches towards Northumberland.

On a truce between the king of England and the Scotch, concluded at London, May 8, 1357, 31 Edward III. he was one of the guarantees thereof, for the east part of the marches between England and Scotland.

In 33 Edw. III. he was made constable of the castle of Berwick upon Tweed. Likewise in this thirty third year, he attended king Edward into France; and in 34 Edw. III. continued still in those parts, till the conclusion of the peace signed at Chartres, in Brittany, May 8, 1360.

In 35 Edw. III. he was again constituted one of the wardens of the marches; and in 36 Edw. III. a commissioner to treat about a truce with David, king of Scotland.

In 38 Edw. III. he, and his son Henry, with others, were joined in commission, to inspect the condition of the marches between England and Scotland, and to agree with David, king of Scotland, about the damages done since the truce made at Berwick, A. D. 1357.

* Hedied seized of the manors of Petworth, Sutton, Doncketon, and Heyfreet, with the advowson of the church of Petworth, in the county of Sussex. Of a tenement and shop, within Aldersgate-street, London. Of the manors of Spofford, Topcliffe, Semar, Nafferton, Lekingfield, Cleyhope, Catton, and Kirk-Levington, in the county of York. Of the castle and manor of Alnwick, with the towns and villages thereto anciently belonging, viz. Denwick, Lesebury, Great Haughton, Tughall, Swinhow, Chatton, Alnham, Swindescheles, Benley, South-Middleton, and Wollor, in the county of Northumberland. As also of the castle and manor of Warkworth, with the hamlets of Over, Bothillston, and Tuggesden, Gilling, Aclington, Rothbury, Newton, Thropton, Snitre, and Corbrigg, in the same county.

In 39 Edw. III. on the death of Idonea, his mother, he had livery of all those lands which she held in dower; and the same year received command to repair unto his lands, near the marches, in regard of some danger at that time impending from the Scots. And the same year, he was again constituted one of the commissioners for guarding of the marches, and conserving the peace made with the Scots.

In 41 Edw. III. by indenture, dated at Rokeburgh, he was appointed with Henry his son, warden of the east marches; also to supervise the state of the marches; and to treat with the king of Scots, and his people, in order to some reparation of the damages done to the English, by the subjects of that realm.

This Henry, first married Mary Plantagenet, daughter to Henry, earl of Lancaster, son of Edmund, earl of Lancaster, Leicester, Derby, &c. (second son of king Henry the third) who had to wife Blanch, daughter of Robert, earl of Artois, (brother of St. Lewis, king of France) and widow of Henry de Champagne, king of Navarre. And the said Mary was sister to Henry Plantagenet, who was created duke of Lancaster in 27 Hen. III. whose daughter and heir Blanch, was wife of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, father, by her, of king Henry IV. By which marriage, the said Henry, lord Percy, had issue two sons,

1. Henry Percy.

2. Thomas Percy.

And by his second wife, Joan, daughter and sole heir of John de Oreby, a baron in the reign of Edward III. had a daughter,

Mary, two years old at the death of her mother, in 43 Edward III. and was the wife of John, lord

Ross, who died without issue by her, in 16 Richard II.

The said Henry, lord Percy, departed this life on Thursday, being Ascension-day, in 42 Edward III.

His two sons became very famous and eminent, and were both made earls of the kingdom: Henry, the eldest, earl of Northumberland, and Thomas, the youngest, earl of Worcester.

HENRY PERCY, the eldest son, was created earl of Northumberland. In 33 Edward III. (his father then living) he was in that expedition then made into France; likewise in 37 Edward III. And on his father's decease, in 42 Edward III. doing his homage, had livery of his lands; also within the compass of that year, he was at Calais with king Edward, when he made peace with the French; likewise sent, with three hundred men, and a thousand archers, into Poitou, to the relief of the marches there: and was constituted one of the wardens of the marches towards Scotland. In 43 Edward III. he was again in the wars of France; having then in his retinue sixty men at arms, (whereof himself, and twelve knights, were part of the number) forty seven esquires, and a hundred archers on horseback; and was sent, with others, to take care of the town of Abbeville. In 45 Edward III. he was again constituted one of the commissioners for guarding the marches towards Scotland; yet in the said year he was in France, and marched with the duke of Lancaster, out of Bourdeaux, to Mountpaon, which they invested. In 46 Edward III. he was constituted one of the commissioners for guarding the marches. Also embarked with the king in his purposed expedition into France, for rescuing of Thouars; but being crossed with contrary

* In 44 Edward III. bearing the title of Sir Thomas Percy, he was with the Black Prince at Bergerath, to defend the frontiers against the French; and shortly after marched with the duke of Lancaster to Mountpaon, which was then rendered to him.

In 46 Edward III. he was seneschal of Lymosin; and the same year was taken prisoner by the French; but the year after had his enlargement, the castle of Lymosin being given up for his redemption. In 50 Edward III. in consideration of his good services, he had an annuity of one hundred marks per annum given to him out of the exchequer, during his life. Also for his services to the Black Prince, had a grant from him of an hundred marks per annum, out of his exchequer at Carnarvon.

In 1 Richard II. he was at the coronation of that king. And in 2 Richard II. was made admiral of the northern seas, with Sir Hugh Calvely, knight, (then recalled from Calais) and had of their retinue seven hundred and twenty men at arms, seven hundred and seventy-five archers, and one hundred and forty balisters, (id est, cross-bow men.) And meeting with seven ships, and one man of war, laden with wine, brought them all into Bristol.

In that year also he was sent into France, in aid of the duke of Brittany; but in that expedition, having a great loss by shipwreck, and other misfortunes, most of that fleet were lost, and the rest dispersed, himself hardly escaping, being assailed by a Spanish vessel; but quitted himself so valiantly, that after a sharp fight of three hours, he boarded the Spaniard, and brought the ship safe to shore. And having pawned it for a hundred pounds, set out to sea again, towards the castle of Brest, whereof himself, and Sir Hugh Calvely, were governors: in which adventure he sped so well, as that though others suffered great loss, yet both himself, with all his soldiers and horses, returned safe.

In 2 Richard II. he was joined in commission with the bishop of Hereford, and others, for reforming of all things done contrary to the articles of peace, formerly established betwixt king Edward III. and David de Bruce of Scotland. He was also that year, with others, commissioned to guard the town of Scarborough against the French, who had infested it for two years, and upwards, and done great damages. Being likewise commissioned to treat with John, duke of Brittany, and the nobles and commonalty of that place, about an alliance.

In 3 Richard II. being commissioned, with others, to command in an intended expedition into France, and Brittany, he was one of the chief commanders in that army, whereof Thomas of Woodstock, earl of Buckingham, was general; who landing at Calais, marched through all France into Brittany, without damage.

In 4 Richard II. he was employed with the same earl of Buckingham, to suppress that insurrection made by the commons in Essex, (which were the remnant of them that rose with Jack Straw.) And was after sent with the earl of Warwick, to execute justice upon that rabble, which had committed great outrages at St. Albans. In that year also, he again accompanied the earl of Buckingham to Calais, where he rode with his banner displayed; and was with him at the siege of Nantes, in Brittany; but the duke of Brittany not coming to their aid, he went with that earl from thence to Vannes, to refresh their army.

In 5 Richard II. he was made captain of the castle at Brest for three years, and had a grant of all profits belonging thereto; likewise in 6 Richard II. was made governor of the town.

In 7 Richard II. being one of the knights of the Garter, he had the robes of that most noble order given to him out of the royal wardrobe, to attend at the feast of St. George; and was joined in commission with John, duke of Lancaster, and others, to treat with those from Flanders, for the appeasing of certain differences betwixt the English and them; likewise with other commissioners from the king of France, touching peace betwixt both realms; also to treat with Scotland about a truce. And the same year was constituted one of the commissioners for guarding the east marches; likewise for receiving twenty-four thousand marks, which were to be paid, in full satisfaction of the hundred thousand marks for the ransom of David de Bruce, king of Scotland. And on the

In 47 Edward III. he gave the king seven hundred and sixty pounds, to have the custody of the castle of Mitford, and all the lands in the county of Northumberland, and liberty of Tivedale, which did belong to David de Stralbogi, earl of Athol, deceased, during the minority of Elizabeth and Philippa, the daughters and heirs to that earl: and the same year, he embarked with the dukes of Lancaster, and Bretagne, who with a great army landed at Calais, about the beginning of July, and marching through the greatest part of France, made great havock, hoping thereby to force the French to engage them; but the king of France sent express orders to the duke of Burgundy, his general, only to watch the English, and not to fight; so that nothing worth relating happened that year. The lord Percy continued abroad with the duke of Lancaster, who having agreed on a truce, in 48 Edward III. he, with the duke, and others of the peers, went on board the 8th of July, at Bourdeaux, and set sail for England. The duke of Lancaster, and this Henry, favoured Wickliff, by extolling his learning and integrity of life, which emboldened him much; In 50 Edward III. he granted the hospital of St. Leonard at Alnwick, (which was of his ancestor's foundation) to the abbot and convent of Alnwick, to hold for ever in pure alms. And in that year, being marshal of England, he was assigned to make inspection into the castle and town of Calais; as also into all the castles and forts in the marches of Calais, and to cause such repairs to be made in them, as need should require; and to see them well victualled and manned: and likewise constituted one of the commissioners for guarding the east-marches of Scotland; and, at the request of the commons in parliament, had power to appoint able persons for the defence of the same.

departure of Sir William de Beauchamp, and those of the English who besieged Ipres, he came to them from Spruce.

In 8 Richard II. he was constituted one of the conservators of the truce made with Scotland; also admiral of the king's fleet from the river Thames northwards; likewise retained by indenture, to be governor of the castle of Bress, from Candlemas-day, for one whole year; receiving for that service, over and above the profits thence arising, by redemptions, rents, customs, &c. four thousand marks; as also two hundred and fifty marks every quarter, for the costs and charges incident to that castle; but in case of truce, no more than three thousand marks, and two hundred and fifty marks a quarter. And for the better security of what was in arrears to him, for those former years that he had been governor thereof, and payment of those sums thus covenanted, he was to receive five shillings for every sack of wool out of those parts, whence his payment was assigned. He was also appointed, with others, receiver of the arrears due to Johanna, late duchess of Richmond, deceased, out of the county of Richmond, of which county she had a grant during her abode in England.

In 9 Richard II. going into Spain in the king's service, under the command of John, king of Castile, a protection was granted him for one year, dated at Westminster the 5th of May. He also had a grant of the king's general letters of attorney.

In 10 Richard II. he was made admiral of the fleet, which conveyed that great army of twenty thousand (whereof two thousand were horse, and eight thousand archers) into Spain with John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, called king of Castile and Leon, in right of Constance his wife; and then going to recover her inheritance.

In 13 Richard II. he was constituted justice of South Wales; and the same year, being then vice-chamberlain to the king, had a grant of the castle of Emelin, in South-Wales. And that year he was one of the peers, who signed and sent a letter to the pope, about the exorbitances and incroachments of the apostolical see. The year following he obtained another grant of Hunkirk, in the county of Carnarvon, with the common there.

In 15 Richard II. he was made one of the commissioners for treating of peace betwixt the English and French: which treaty was held at Amiens: likewise justice of South-Wales. And in 16 Richard II. being then steward of the king's household, was sent ambassador into France. In 18 Richard II. he was sent again into France; also the same year retained by indenture to serve the king in Ireland, with twenty men at arms, and forty archers on horseback, and ten archers on foot.

In 20 Richard II. surrendering his patent of an hundred marks per annum, formerly given to him by Edward the Black Prince, he had another grant of the like sum, to be paid, during his life, out of the king's exchequer at Kaermerdin.

In 21 Richard II. bearing the title of steward of the king's household, he was with John, duke of Aquitaine and Lancaster, and Edmond, duke of York, the king's uncles, a witness to that monarch's grant of the county, castle, town, and honour of Richmond, to Joan, sister of John, duke of Brittany and earl of Richmond.

And meriting further favours, on Saturday, the feast of St. Michael, in 21 Richard II. he was advanced to the title of earl of Worcester; and in January following, made captain of the town and castle of Calais, as also of the marches belonging thereto. In which year he was likewise retained to serve the king with forty men at arms, and an hundred archers, in Ireland. He was also commissioned to reform all things done contrary to the truce with Scotland and France.

In 22 Richard II. he was again retained to serve the king with thirty-five men at arms, knights, and esquires, and one hundred archers on horseback, (every twenty archers having one carpenter, and one mason) and likewise constituted admiral of the king's fleet for the realm of Ireland. And having been admiral, as also vice-chamberlain, and steward of the king's household, and employed in sundry warlike expeditions, and embassies, he obtained a release of all debts, accompts, arrearages of accompts, rents, arrearages of rents, wherewith he then stood charged.

But when Henry, duke of Lancaster landed, and king Richard saw his own ruin approaching; he thereupon dismissed his family, and bade this Thomas, earl of Worcester farewell, and reserve himself for better times. So that upon his depofal, he stood fair with the duke of Lancaster, then assuming the rule, by the name of Henry IV. For that king, soon after he had attained the crown, resolving to let the pope, and divers christian princes, know, by what right and title he had done so, sent this earl, with the bishop of Durham, his ambassadors into France, to represent the same to that king; and also made him one of the commissioners, to treat with the ambassadors of the said king of France, touching the sending back of Isabel, his daughter, (second wife to the deposed king) with her jewels, whom he had required to be returned to him. Likewise king Henry being advertised of the French attempts, and their covert designs, sent this earl of Worcester, with a goodly company of soldiers, into Aquitaine, to aid Sir Robert Knolles, his lieutenant there; and to exhort and persuade the people to continue in their ancient liberty, and due allegiance: "and this earl, as Hall saith, so wisely entreated the noblemen, and behaved so gently and familiarly to the common people, that he not only appeased their fury and malice, but brought them to a loving submission, receiving of them oaths of obedience, and legal fealty." Whereby, on his return into England, he was received by the king honourably, and with great thanks. But the French king finding his purpose on Aquitaine defeated, determined to send a solemn embassy into England, to king Henry, on whose arrival, he told them he would send his commissioners to Calais, to conclude there, not only what they desired, but divers other matters of great moment. The commissioners being sent over, met at several times and places. The duke of Bourbon strenuously insisted on the princess Isabel's return; and on the other hand, the English would have her stay in England, to be married to Henry, prince of Wales, who was both in blood and age equal to her. This the French king refused, saying, he would never join affinity with England, the success being so unfortunate. At

In 51 Edward III. he was made general of all those forces which were sent to Calais, Ardes, Guisnes, and other places, within the realm of France, then in the king's possession; having then of his own retinue one hundred men at arms, and one hundred archers; and a ready supply of two hundred men at arms, and two hundred archers, all mounted on horseback.

This lord Percy being present as marshal of England, at the coronation of king Richard II. July 16, 1377, he did his homage thereupon, and was then advanced to the dignity, and title of earl of Northumberland. And had a special grant, that the lands of which he then stood seized, or did afterwards purchase, should be held sub honore comitatus, and as parcel of his earldom.

Shortly after resigning his marshal's rod, he retired to his command in Northumberland; and the earl of Dunbar committing great disorders, and slaying the inhabitants of Roxborough, in Scotland (then under the power of the English) he raised an army of ten thousand men, and therewith marched into that kingdom; and for three days together, wasted the lands of the earl of Dunbar, with fire and sword, and then returned home. The same year, being joined with the bishop of Hereford, and Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, to treat of peace between both nations; on the conclusion thereof, he was again constituted one of the commissioners for guarding of the marches.

In 2 Richard II. he entered Scotland, and won the town of Berwick (which had been surprized by the Scots) on the ninth day after, recovering it by storm, putting those who had surprized it to the sword. And a truce being soon after made, he was constituted one of the commissioners to see redress of all injuries done in the marches, contrary to the tenor thereof. In 3 Richard II. he was again in commission for guarding of those marches towards Northumberland. In 4 Richard II. on that invasion made by the Scots into Cumberland and Westmorland, he prepared himself to go against them; but was prohibited by the king's letters.

In 5 Richard II. he was again constituted one of the commissioners for guarding of the west marches. About which time, having received command to take special care of the castles and garrisons in those parts, transmitted the same charge to Sir Mathew Redman, knight, his lieutenant at Berwick. Sir Mathew was so strict in observation of the commands then laid on him, that, at the return of John, duke of Lancaster, aforesaid, out of Scotland (where he had, during the time of Tyler's insurrection, before mentioned, quieted all differences between the two kingdoms by a treaty) he refused him entrance; which caused so great an animosity from the duke towards this earl, that upon a meeting of most of the nobles at Berkhamsted, in Hertfordshire, very sharp words passed betwixt them in the king's presence. Thereupon the earl of Northumberland was arrested; but the earls of Warwick and Suffolk (William Beauchamp, and William D'Ufford) undertaking for his appearance at the next parliament, he had liberty to depart. There had been much friendship between John Plantagenet, (of Gaunt) duke of Lancaster, titular king of Castile, &c. aforesaid, and this Henry, earl of Northumberland; which, on king Richard's coming to the throne, grew cold; and, as Speed writes, turned into hatred. Stow gives an account, that the parliament, which began about the feast length they concluded, that the truce made with king Richard for thirty years be renewed, and confirmed, during the lives of both kings. Soon after, the lady Isabel was sent over by the king, under the earl of Worcester's conduct, accompanied with many honourable and noble men and women. He was the same year (1 Henry IV.) one of the commissioners for ratifying that truce, which had been made betwixt both realms in king Richard's time; and the king constituted him steward of his household, as he had been to king Richard.

In 3 Henry IV. he was made the king's lieutenant throughout all North-Wales, and South-Wales, for resistance of the rebels there. But the next year, notwithstanding all this trust and favour from king Henry, he in his heart commiserated the unfortunate state of his old master; and considering the many benefits, and high esteem he had from king Richard, he deserted the prince's household (which the king had specially committed to his trust) fled to his brother, the earl of Northumberland; and combining with him, joined with his nephew, Hotspur, then in arms; by whom being sent to the king, upon his offer of pardon, in case they would submit, he misrepresented what he had graciously expressed, exasperating his nephew to battle; which forthwith ensuing, concluded in their total rout; and slaughter of many; amongst which, Hotspur their general was the chief; and this earl being then taken prisoner, was soon after beheaded at Shrewsbury. Whereupon the king sent a precept to the sheriff of London, to receive his head, from such person as shall bring it to him, and to fix it upon London-bridge.

When he was in such favour with king Richard II. he purchased the manor of Wresil, in Yorkshire, and built the castle there. Dugdale, in his pedigree of this family, says he married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of David Strabolgi, earl of Athol, and had issue Sir Henry Percy, knight, who died before him, leaving two daughters; but this is a mistake, for he died unmarried.

very disagreeable to the clergy of that age, as, "That the pope had no more power to excommunicate any man, than another priest, &c. That the temporal power might, and ought to take away from the clergy, what the piety of former times had bestowed upon them, if they should be found to abuse the said goods, or to approve themselves unworthy thereof." He also asserted, "the regal supremacy against papal usurpation;" and wrote against the "mass, transubstantiation, adoration of the host, indulgencies, images, relics, &c." Upon which being cited before the spiritual court, the duke of Lancaster, king of Castile, &c. who had the chief government, (during the king's illness) fearing that Wickliff being single, he might be overcome by the number of his adversaries, helped him to four bachelors of divinity of good learning, to join with him for his surer support.

On the day appointed, February 19, he came to the church of St. Paul, London; and for the countenance of his cause, the duke of Lancaster, and the lord Henry Percy, lord marshal of England, went with him. And there being great numbers of people, the lord marshal, with his officers, could hardly pass through the church, or make way for the duke to pass. So that William Courtney, bishop of London, seeing the stir his officers made in the church, said to the lord Percy, "That if he had known before, how he would have played the master in his church, he would have hindered him from coming thither." At which words the duke made answer, "That the marshal should play the master there as he had begun; even although he said nay." At length with some difficulty they came into our Lady's chapel, where the duke, and the lords with him, sat with the archbishop, and other bishops; and John Wickliff standing before them, ready to answer what should be objected. The lord Percy first broke silence, desiring Mr. Wickliff to sit down, alledging, "That he had many things to answer to, and therefore he had need of some repose." On which the bishop of London said, "He should not sit down there, it being neither according to law nor reason, that he, who was cited to appear before his ordinary, should sit during the time of his answer." These words of All Saints, endured long, to small purpose, by reason of the contention among the lords, concerning the duke of Lancaster, and the earl of Northumberland, whose quarrel, in the end, was taken up by the king, and then the lords proceeded to treat of the business of the realm.

In 7 Rich. II. he was elected one of the knights of the most noble order of the Garter; and the same year, observing that the Scots had done much mischief in Northumberland, by their frequent incursions, he marched into that realm, and at first checked their fury; but before the end of that year, by corrupting the deputy-governor of the castle of Berwick, they possessed themselves thereof. Of that misfortune, the duke of Lancaster (who had then a grudge towards him) made such advantage, that upon complaint of it in parliament, he so far prevailed, as that judgment of death, and loss of estate, was pronounced against this earl; in regard the trust thereof stood committed to him: but the king, more favourable to him, remitted the execution of this severe sentence. Thereupon, without delay, he prepared for the siege thereof; and after he had surrounded it with his forces, the enemy, in consideration of 2000 marks, as also that they might march away with bag and baggage, rendered it to him.

He was afterwards, in that year, joined in commission with John Fordham, bishop of Durham, to treat of peace with the Scots; and to require satisfaction for injuries done to the English; also constituted one of the commissioners for guarding the east marches; and a commissioner for receiving 24,000 marks, from Robert Stuart, king of Scotland, in full satisfaction of an 100,000 marks, agreed for the ransom of David Bruce, their late king. In 8 Rich. II. he was summoned to be at Newcastle upon Tyne, on July 14, with horse and arms, and his whole service, or more, if possible, which the king promised to acknowledge. Likewise he was constituted sole general warden of both the east and west marches; and this year he had the sheriffalty of Northumberland, and custody of the castle of Newcastle upon Tyne, committed to his trust; being also retained by indenture to serve the king in his Scottish wars for forty days.

In 9 Rich. II. he was again constituted sheriff of Northumberland; and in 10 Rich. II. was appointed admiral of England, upon the resignation of Richard Fitz-Allan, earl of Arundel. He was, in that year, one of the ambassadors to treat of peace with Robert II. king of Scotland; likewise in another commission of the same tenor, in 11 Rich. II. In 12 Rich. II. he was one of the commissioners for the custody of Carlisle, and guarding the west marches. In 13 Rich. II. he was a commissioner (with Thomas Hatfield, bishop of Durham, and others) to treat of peace with the French; and likewise with the Flemings.

In 1391, 14 Richard II. being then governor of Calais, he was commissioned to treat with the earl of Dostrevant, and other French deputies, about a peace and alliance: after which being recalled from Calais, he was again constituted governor of the marches towards Scotland, and Robert de Mowbray was sent to Calais.

In 15 Richard II. he was commissioned to prolong the truce with Robert III. king of Scotland, and to be one of the conservators of the same. He was also in the like commission in 17 Richard II. and in 18 Richard II. a commissioner to treat of peace with the Scots. In October, 1396, 20 Richard II. he was at the interview betwixt king Richard, and Charles VI. king of France, near Guisnes, previous to king Richard's marriage with Isabella, Charles's daughter, and was one of the English lords that conducted the French monarch to his pavilion†.

In the beginning of 1398, 21 Richard II. he was one of the twelve peers, whom, in conjunction with six commoners, the parliament invested with the power of both houses, for the more speedy dispatch of business. But about the end of April, A. D. 1399, the king having suspicions instilled words brought forth more, and the duke of Lancaster taking the marshal's part, there was in both much warmth in their speeches; which induced the duke to whisper one that sat next him, "He had rather drag the bishop out of the church by the hair of his head, than take this at his hands." Which being overheard, many of the Londoners cried out, "They would never see their bishop so abused, &c." On this contention the court broke up, and the duke, with the lord Percy, returned to the parliament, then sitting at Westminster, and Wickliff was easily dismissed.

The next day, the Londoners assembled in council, to consider how far the power of the marshal extended, and of the affronts put on their bishop; and the commons hearing one of their body was prisoner in the lord Percy's house, they went immediately thither, and breaking open the gates, took him out by force, and searched every where in the house to find the lord Percy, tearing his beds and hangings in pieces, with their bills and javelins. He was happily out of the way, being, with the duke of Lancaster, invited to dinner, by John of Ipres, at his house called Ipres-Inn, in Knight-Rider's street. And being informed of this madness of the people, and that they were making to them, the duke, with the lord Percy, went hastily out at a back-gate, and crossing the Thames, went to the princess of Wales, at Kennington, who had with her there prince Richard; and on her intercession, matters were accommodated.

About that time, having married his second wife Maud, sister and heir to Anthony, lord Lucy, and widow of Gilbert de Umfraville, earl of Angus (or Angus) he joined with her in settling the castle and honour of Cocker-mouth, with a large proportion besides of her great inheritance, by a fine levied in the octaves of St. John Baptist, and recorded in the octaves of St. Michael next following, upon himself and her, and the heirs males of their two bodies; and for want of such issue, to the heirs of her body; and in case she should die without issue, then to Henry, lord Percy, his son and heir, (begotten on his first wife) and to the heirs males of his body; upon condition, that he the said Henry, and the heirs males of his body, should bear the arms of Percy, viz. Or, a lion rampant, azure, quarterly, with the arms of Lucy, viz. gules, three lucies, argent, in all shields, banners, ensigns, and coats of arms, whatsoever, where and whensoever there should be occasion of bearing, and shewing forth their own paternal arms. It was further stipulated, in case the said Henry, lord Percy, should depart this life without issue male, that then Sir Thomas Percy, Knt. (brother to the earl, and uncle to the said Henry) and the heirs males of his body, should enjoy the same castle, honour, &c. upon the like condition; and in default of such issue, Sir Thomas Percy, Knt. second son to the said earl, and the heirs males of his body; with remainder to Sir Ralph Percy, Knt. third son to the said earl, and the heirs male of his body: but in case these conditions should not be performed, then to remain to the right heirs of the said Maud. The agreement was made in the presence of the king, and by his special command, as the record shews.

† In that year he founded a chantry in the chapel of All-Saints at Cocker-mouth, for one priest to celebrate divine service there daily, for the good estate of himself, and Maud his wife, and for their souls, after their departure hence; also for the souls of their ancestors, and all the faithful deceased; giving the said priest for his support one messuage, lying in the city of Carlisle.

into him in prejudice of the earl of Northumberland, and being told that his lordship, and his son Henry (commonly called Hotspur) had spoken some words in derogation of his majesty, he sent for the earl out of the North; and he neglecting to come, was proclaimed a traitor, and banished the realm.

This precipitated step in the king, upon bare suspicion, naturally provoked the earl of Northumberland, and his friends, to join the discontented courtiers, then ripe for a revolt. The king's absence (at that time in Ireland) favoured the designs of the insurgents, who with the earl at their head, declared in favour of Henry Plantagenet, duke of Lancaster and Hereford, son of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, fourth son of Edward III. then in France under banishment. The duke, with a small guard, landed July 4, A. D. 1399, at Ravenspur in Holderness, Yorkshire, where he was received by the earl of Northumberland, and his son, Sir Henry Percy (called Hotspur) Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmorland, and many other persons of distinction, with a considerable body of men; and in a few days their army was increased to near 60,000. Every thing succeeded according to their wishes; for Richard was deposed, and the duke of Lancaster seated upon the throne, by the name of Henry IV.

In acknowledgement of the extraordinary merits and services of this earl, the king advanced him to the great office of constable of England, to hold for term of life, and to exercise the same by himself, or such his sufficient deputy, as he would answer for. Next he gave him and his heirs the Isle of Man, to hold by carrying the sword (which he wore at his landing in Holderness) called Lancaster-sword, by themselves, or a sufficient and honourable deputy, at the coronation of him (the said king Henry) and the succeeding kings of England, on their left hands. Then he made him justice of Chester; and, after that, constable of the castles of Chester, Conway, Flint, and Caernarvon; and moreover, general-warden of the west-marches toward Scotland; as also governor of the town and castle of Carlisle. In 1400, and 1402, he gained two signal victories over the Scots. In the former, Sir Patrick Hepburn was slain; in the latter, Archibald, fourth earl of Douglas was taken prisoner.* At the latter end of 4 Henry IV. having been at no small charge in the king's service, and requiring such monies as were then due to him, for the wardenship of the marches, he received no satisfactory answer; which, with other injuries, inflamed him with so much discontent, as at length wrought his own ruin.

King Henry, not satisfied with the state of tranquillity which he enjoyed on the part of Scotland, after the earl of Northumberland's conquests at Homildon-hill, was eager and desirous to share in the private gains of that victory; and therefore not only forbade him to ransom his prisoners, but demanded of his lordship such of them whose redemptions would raise great sums. The earl in his answer observed, "That as it was most just, that they, who had undergone the danger of battle, should have all the advantages of prey and prisoners; so it had been the custom of the kings of England, to allow the lords of the North, all advantage of the Scotch wars, to encourage them in defending his dominions, and make up the damages of the continual depredations of that faithless people." The king, however, not only took the prisoners he had demanded, but was so displeased with his lordship, as not to suffer him to come into his presence. The earl of Northumberland, having been signally instrumental in raising Henry to the throne, resented this severity to him, not only as great injustice, but great ingratitude; and therefore resolved to revenge his wrong upon the king himself; whom, as he had set up, so he thought he had power enough to pull down; commanding in his country like a petty king, as several authors write. Thereupon he joined with Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, who as he claimed the crown, and having concerted terms with the renowned Owen Glendourwy, he found it no hard matter to unite the Welsh in his purpose of dethroning King Henry. His lordship having laid this train, to render his future actions more plausible, and his party stronger, he by the advice of his brother, Thomas Percy, earl of Worcester, demanded of the king the redemption of the said Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, his kinsman, who had long lain in foul and miserable imprisonment, among the king's enemies. The king answered, "That he had no reason to redeem the earl of March, because he was not taken for his cause, nor in his service; but had suffered himself to fall into the hands of Owen Glendourwy, and the Welsh, being unwilling to resist them." At this reply, the earl blazed abroad the king's cruelty, who would not redeem so near a relation. And his son, Henry (Hotspur) said openly, "Behold the heir of the realm is robbed of his right, and the robber will not redeem him with a part of his own." Whereupon the earl, with his said son Henry, the earl of March, and Owen Glendourwy, obliged themselves, by indenture tripartite, to depose king Henry; and after his deposition, it was agreed, that Owen Glendourwy should have Wales, and the lands beyond Severn, to rule over them as king; that the earl of Northumberland should have the government of all the countries on the north-side of Trent; and the earl of March should enjoy all the residue of England, as supreme lord. This agreement being made, they endeavoured to raise an army sufficient for their design. The earl of Northumberland procured an augmentation of his forces out of Scotland, by releasing the aforesaid Archibald, earl of Douglas, and others of his captives, and levies of men out of several lordships adjoining to those

* In 4 Henry IV. the king granted to him, and his heirs, for his good services in time past, and especially for his laudable conduct in the late expedition against the Scots (who were invading the kingdom of England) the whole county of Douglas; the vales of Eftedale, Lyde-dale, and Lawderdale; the lordship of Selkeryk, and forest of Eteryk, late the possessions of William, James, and Archibald Douglas; and all the lordships, and lands, which Archibald (aforesaid) earl of Douglas, and Joan his mother, held in Scotland, at the time of taking the said earl prisoner at Homildon-hill; except the lordship of Galloway, the town of Anhan, the whole county and lordship of Teviotdale, the castle and town of Roxburgh, the town of Old Roxburgh, the barony of Sprawston; and those baronies, lands, tenements, and lordships, which belong to Ralph Nevil, late lord Raby, John his son, or Ralph (son of the said John) then earl of Westmorland, in the said county of Teviotdale.

parts; by which means, they raised a numerous and well appointed body of troops. They declared, "That king Henry, giving encouragement to calumniators, and flatterers, their enemies, had entertained such an aversion to them, that they dared not come in his presence, but by the mediation of the bishops. That though he was raised to the throne, for the good of the nation, yet he had played the tyrant, and abused his trust, converting the money, given by the parliament for the public defence, to his own private interest. Therefore, for their own security, and to reform the government, they had raised those forces, to reduce things into better course, both for themselves and the nation."

The king, having no suspicion of their contrivances, and having no visible enemy, but the Welsh, had raised a powerful army to reduce them; which gave him opportunity, when the earl of Northumberland's forces appeared, to be in a good condition to oppose them. But considering a civil war would endanger his possession of the crown, he chose to allay discontents, by replying, "That he never had denied access to the earl of Northumberland, the lord Percy, his son, or any of the lords of their party: that the monies given by parliament were paid to the earl of Northumberland; so that their complaints were groundless." The king was inclined to wait their answer; but George Dunbar, earl of March and Dunbar, before mentioned, telling him delays were dangerous, put him upon hastening to them, to give them battle, which proved of great advantage to Henry; for the earl of Northumberland, being unfortunately indisposed, was not in a condition to come to his son at Shrewsbury. The king, however, for the consideration aforesaid, offered them pardon, upon their own terms; and Lord Percy was so far wrought on, that he was willing to submit to the king, and sent his uncle, Thomas, earl of Worcester, to represent their grievances; who having procured a conference, the king condescended to heal the breach; but the earl of Worcester, having no faith in king Henry's promises, represented things so ill, at his return to lord Percy, that he was more incensed than before, and forthwith blew the trumpet for battle. The king was ready to receive him, and the fight being begun, the Scots with great resolution fiercely fell upon the king's van-guard, and forced them to give ground, and had almost broke in upon the main body; and being seconded by the Welsh, the king, who had his horse killed under him, and was put to his last refuge, called in his corps de reserve, to reinforce his army, by which he recovered his ground: and after a fresh encounter, got the better. The lord Percy, and the earl of Douglas, general of the Scots, boldly attempted to slay the king; and forcing their way through the king's party, got to his standard, which they overthrew, killing Sir Walter Blount, the standard-bearer, Edmund, earl of Stafford, and many others, that guarded it. The king was retreated from the standard, being warned of the danger by the said earl of March and Dunbar; and watching the opportunity, made such an onset on his enemies, in the absence of their chief commanders, that he broke their order, and obtained a complete victory, on the 22d of July, 1403. Lord Percy was among the slain.

The earl of Northumberland, who by indisposition had been kept from joining his brother and son, was marching towards Shrewsbury with a reinforcement; but being met by Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmorland, with a strong detachment from the king, retreated to Warwick-castle. The king afterwards went to York, whence he sent his commands to the earl of Northumberland to disband his forces, and come to him, giving him assurances of mercy. The earl obeyed his summons, and dismissing his forces, attended at York, on August 21, the morrow after St. Laurence's day, when the king pardoned him his life, but deprived him of his estate and honours, for the present, and kept him in prison, till the ferment was over; yet afterwards restored him to his honours and lands, except the Isle of Man, which having been forfeited by the attainder of William Scrope, earl of Wiltshire, he had given him in the beginning of his reign, and afterwards, on October 3, 1405, conferred upon Sir John Stanley, ancestor to the earl of Derby.

But the earl was so affected with the death of his gallant son, and enraged at finding himself much slighted by the king, and probably more moved with remorse in having been accessory to the raising of Henry to the throne, that in 1405, 6 Henry IV. he took advantage of the discontents of Thomas Mowbray, earl marshal, and Richard Scrope, archbishop of York, in their conspiracy. The lords Bardolph, Hastings, and Falconbridge, with several other persons of eminence, united in the confederacy, the ultimate view of which was to depose Henry, and place the before-mentioned earl of March, the true heir, upon the throne. They raised a formidable body of troops, which they conducted to York, the place of rendezvous. The earl of Westmorland was then in the neighbourhood of that city, at the head of an army levied to march against the Scots; but not thinking his numbers sufficient to contend with the insurgents, he resolved to effect by policy what he could not by force. He proposed a conference with the archbishop, and the earl marshal; and they believing that he secretly favoured their cause, readily agreed to a conference. Both parties met accordingly in an open plain, with their guards at an equal distance. Westmorland conducted himself with such address, that he entirely gained their confidence, and all three drank together. In order to deceive them still further, he ordered his guards to withdraw; and the archbishop and the earl marshal, to shew that they likewise had no distrust, sent theirs also away: but the latter were scarce out of sight, when Westmorland's returned upon the gallop, and seized the archbishop and the earl marshal, and carried them off to Westmorland's camp. This disaster threw the confederates at York into such consternation, that the earl of Northumberland could not keep the troops from dispersing, and he found himself under the necessity of retiring to Berwick, with the lord Bardolph.

King Henry having come some time after to Pontefract, the archbishop and the earl marshal suffered decapitation there. Henry then advanced northwards, to reduce Berwick, and in his march took the lords Hastings and Falconbridge, who were also beheaded. Upon his approach, the earl of Northumberland finding that he could not support port Berwick, of which he was governor, he and lord Bardolf took refuge in Scotland; and Henry, in the mean time became master of Warkworth, Alnwick, and Berwick, with other castles belonging to the earl.

The king upon his return to London, having called a parliament to meet at Westminster, on March, next year (1406) told them how turbulent the earl of Northumberland had been; that he had been the instrument of two rebellions; that he could never hope for any security, so long as he was alive; for though he was in Scotland, he was near his friends in the North, and among his enemies, the Scots; who, if not out of love to the earl, yet, out of hatred to him and the English, would take an opportunity to disturb his peace. These thoughts gave Henry such uneasiness, that he proposed, by his emissaries, to some Scotch lords, whose friends and relations were then prisoners in England, to set them at liberty without ransom, if they would procure the earl of Northumberland, and the lord Bardolf, to be delivered into his hands. The said lords, in compassion to the distressed situation of their friends, readily listened to king Henry's proposal; but David Malcolm, lord Fleming, who had entertained the noble exiles at his own house, hearing of the design gave them notice of it, and assisted them to retire into Wales, to their friend Owen Glendourdy. After some stay there, the earl went into France and Flanders, to collect aid against king Henry; but meeting with no success, he returned again into Scotland, and by the assistance of that nation, entering England, recovered many of his own castles and lordships, before the king could get his army together. These prosperous beginnings encouraged the earl to go on to Thirsk, where he published a proclamation, "That he came to relieve the English nation from their many and just oppressions; and required all persons, that loved the liberty of their country, to resort to him immediately, with their weapons and armour to assist him." When the king was certified thereof, he hastened towards the earl with a great army. But Sir Thomas Rokeby, high sheriff of Yorkshire, having raised the posse comitatus to stop their progress, resolutely encountered the earl, and his party, at Bramham moor, near Haselwood, on the 2d calends of March, (i. e. Feb. 29) 1407-8, 9 Hen. IV. and after a sharp fight, the earl being slain, they cut off his head, then white with age, and sent it to London, with that of lord Bardolf, who died of his wounds, after being prisoner. It was there set upon the bridge on a pole, his body was divided into four parts, whereof one was placed upon a gate in London, another at Lincoln, a third at Berwick upon Tweed, and the fourth at Newcastle upon Tyne: but in May following they were all taken down, and by the king's special precept delivered to his friends, to be solemnly buried in consecrated ground.

The children, which this great earl had, were all by Margaret, his first wife, daughter to Ralph, lord Nevill, of Raby, (sister to Ralph, first earl of Westmorland, and relict of William, lord Roos, of Hamlake) viz. three sons,

1. Henry Percy, lord Percy.
2. Sir Thomas Percy, who took to wife Elizabeth, the eldest of the two daughters and coheirs of David Strabogie, earl of Athol, and relict of Sir John Scrope, brother of Henry, lord Scrope of Masham, and in 1 Rich. II. had livery of that purparty of the inheritance, which Mary de St. Paul, countess of Pembroke, held in dower, during her life, after the death of Aymer (or Adomare) de Valence, earl of Pembroke, her husband. This Sir Thomas, was styled earl of Athol, in right of his said wife Elizabeth, and died 1386; by her he was father of two sons, 1. Sir Henry; and, 2. Thomas, who died young. Sir Henry, the eldest son of Sir Thomas, was also styled earl of Athol; and departed this life on October 25, A. D. 1433. By Elizabeth his wife, daughter to William, lord Bardolf, and relict of Robert, lord Scales, he left two daughters, coheirs, 1. Mary, (by some called Margaret) who was, 1st, married to Henry, lord Grey of Codnour (Codnor, or Codnour) and secondly, to Sir Richard Vere, Knt. son of Richard, the eleventh earl of Oxford, of his family: and, second, Elizabeth, successively wedded to Sir Thomas Burgh (ancestor of the lord Burgh) and to Sir William Lucy, Knt.

3. Sir Ralph Percy, who upon that invasion of the Scots, in 12 Rich. II. being with his elder brother, Henry, (surnamed Hotspur) at Newcastle upon Tyne, boldly issued out against them, and they eminently distinguished themselves by their conduct and courage in the battle at Otterburn, where James, second earl of Douglas, the Scotch general, lost his life, and this Ralph was wounded and taken prisoner. Also, in 14 Rich. II. he was constituted one of the commissioners, to treat with those from France and Scotland, for observance of the truce formerly made betwixt England and those two realms; and lastly, in 18 Rich. II. he had a grant of the custody of Berwick upon Tweed, to himself and the heirs male of his body. He had to wife Philippa, the youngest of the two daughters and coheirs of David de Strathbogie, earl of Athol; but died without issue in 1 Hen. IV. being slain by the Saracens in the Holy Land, seized of the manor of Dronsfelde, in the county of Derby, which he had of the grant of Ralph, lord Cromwell, of Tateshal, to him, and the heirs of his body; remainder to the said Ralph, lord Cromwell. His widow married Sir John Hellsam, of Hellsam, in Sussex.

Also two daughters, 1. Alan, 2. Margaret, } who died in their infancy.

His second lady was Maud, already taken notice of, sister and heir to Anthony, lord Lucy, and widow of Gilbert de Umfraville, earl of Angus.

HENRY PERCY, lord Percy, already so frequently mentioned, the eldest son of Henry, earl of Northumberland, shewed from his youth an early disposition to serve his country; being in 1367, 41 Edw. III. with his father in commission, for guarding the east marches of Wales; as also for inspecting into the condition of the marches, and treating with David Bruce, king of Scotland, concerning damages done since the truce made at Berwick, in 32 Edw. III. but such inundations happened, as prevented their meeting; and the king, on January 26 ensuing, ordered them to defer all matters they were to treat on, till further instructions.

At the coronation of king Richard II. on July 16, A. D. 1377, when his father previously ously thereto was advanced to the title of earl, he, with others, were dignified with the order of knighthood.

He was with his father, the earl of Northumberland, in 2 Rich. II. at the before-mentioned siege and recovery of Berwick, and was leader of a detachment which fell into an ambuscade, but he saved himself by his activity and bravery from being carried off captive, (as one hundred and forty of his party were) and signalized himself so much by proofs of extraordinary courage and conduct, both on that occasion and at the said siege, that he acquired the appellation of Hotspur.

In 11 Rich. II. he was elected knight of the Garter. But that year there being those at court, who envied the fame he had gained by his valour against the Scots, caused the king to send him to sea, there to repel the French, who threatened an invasion: which service he readily undertook, and returned with much honour.

In 1338, 12 Rich. II. a party of Scots, under James, the second earl of Douglas, invaded the east marches of England, and continued their depredations almost without resistance, until they were attacked by this gallant lord Percy, at Otterbourne (or according to some writers, Zolstone) in Northumberland.

Henry lord Percy's captivity in Scotland was but of short continuance; for he paid such a ransom to Sir John (commonly called lord) Montgomery, that the latter (according to Douglas's Peerage of Scotland) built therewith his castle at Punnoun. Lord Percy, after his redemption, was again constituted warden of the east marches, in 12 Rich. II. and signed, among other great men, that letter, dated May 26, sent to pope Urban VI. concerning the exorbitances and incroachments of the apostolical see. Being again at Calais, he made several excursions towards Boulogne; and from thence went to Brest in Britanny, where he first raised the siege of that place, and after won two bastiles there; one of timber, which he demolished, and another of stone, which he better fortified. Also the same year, A. D. 1389, he was made general warden of the west marches, and soon after of the east marches; and governor of Carlisle. He was likewise, that year, retained to serve the king, both in times of peace and war, from January 2, during his whole life; for which he had a grant of one hundred pounds per annum out of the exchequer.

In 16 Rich. II. he was constituted governor of Bourdeaux; and being recalled from Calais, was again made warden of the east marches; as also governor of Berwick.

In 1396, 20 Rich. II. he went with the king into France.

* Of this encounter (which according to some historians happened on July 31, or in August according to others) Sir John Froissart in part writeth thus: I did understand

The Scots having invaded England, and being come into the bishoprick of Durham, the earl of Northumberland sent his two sons, viz. Sir Henry, and Sir Ralph, to Newcastle; to which place, the country were appointed to come: whereupon ensued several slight skirmishes, betwixt the English and them, and many proper feats of arms done. Amongst others (saith he) there fought, hand to hand, the earl Douglas, and Sir Henry Percy; and by force of arms, the earl won Sir Henry's person. Whereupon Sir Henry, and all the

In July 1399, 23 Rich. II. being general warden of the east marches, he met the duke of Lancaster (whom he had invited from his banishment into England) at his landing in Holderness; and was assisting in the deposal of king Richard, and placing the crown on the duke of Lancaster, by the stile of king Henry IV.

This Henry, lord Percy, having with his father (the earl of Northumberland) been the chief that settled the crown on that prince, he was, in the first year of his reign, constituted warden of the west marches, sheriff of Northumberland, governor of the town of Berwick, and castle of Rokesburgh, justice of Chester, North-Wales, and Flintshire. He also had a grant of the castle and lordship of Baumburgh, with the fee-farm of that town, for term of life. He was likewise made constable of the castles of Chester, Flint, Conway, and Caernarvon; and sheriff of Flintshire for life; and obtained a grant of the whole county and dominion of Anglesey: as also of the castle of Beaumarys, with the manors, lands, fee-farms, and rents there-to belonging; to hold also for term of his life.

In 3 Henry IV. he was with his father in those memorable battles with the Scots at Nesbit and Homildon-hill, where the English obtained the victory, ascribed by our historians to the courage of this lord Percy, and his archers.

But soon after the scene was turned; for this stout and high-spirited lord, through the solicitation of his uncle, Thomas Percy, earl of Worcester, conspiring against king Henry, came to a fatal end, as before recited.

This courageous nobleman Henry, lord Percy, (surnamed Hotspur) married Elizabeth, eldest daughter to Edmund Mortimer, earl of March, by Philippa, his wife, only daughter and heir of Lionel Plantagenet, duke of Clarence, second surviving son of king Edward III. and by her left an only son, Henry Percy. And one daughter, Elizabeth, first married to John, lord Clifford, and afterwards to Ralph Nevill, second earl of Westmorland, of that family.

On October 8, 1403, 5 Henry IV. the king ordered the said Elizabeth, wife of Sir Henry Percy, deceased, to be arrested, and brought before him, to answer such questions as shall be demanded of her by the said king.

The said HENRY PERCY, the only son (who became second earl of Northumberland) was, when a youth, made knight of the Bath, on October 12, the day before the coronation of king Henry IV. with three of that king's sons, and others of the nobility. Being young when his father was slain, and carried English, were sore displeased; the earl saying to him, "Sir, I shall bear this token of your prowess into Scotland, and shall set it on high, on my castle of Alquest, that it may be seen afar off." Which so provoked the Percys, that after divers bold adventures against the Scotch forces, at length they obtained the victory, and slew the earl, James Douglas; but Sir Ralph Percy was therein wounded, and taken prisoner by a Scotch knight. And after this, in another encounter, this Sir Henry Percy, fighting valiantly with the lord Mountcumber (a stout knight of Scotland) was by him taken prisoner.

into Scotland by the earl his grandfather; he was accidentally brought into England, in 8 Henry IV. Robert III. king of Scotland, intending to send his son, James, out of the kingdom, for fear of his coming to an untimely end, by the means of Walter Stuart, duke of Albany, his uncle, this Henry was sent with him. After leaving Bafs castle (or the isle of Bafs) in the Firth of Forth, they were by stormy weather drove on Flamborough Head; where going on shore to refresh themselves, being known, they were taken prisoners, and conveyed to the king at Windsor; whereby he after came into favour with that victorious king, Henry V. who, as Walsingham recites, shewed him much compassion, purposing to restore him to the title and dignity of his grandfather: and by the parliament rolls it appears, that in 1414, the second year of his reign, he did accordingly restore him to that honour.

In 3 Henry V. the king sent the lord Grey of Codnove, and Sir John Nevill, to bring him out of Scotland into England. And in the parliament holden at Westminster, March 16, in that year, he did his homage to the king, sitting in his chair of estate, before the bishops, lords, and commons, in such wise as other peers do.

In 1416, 4 Henry V. he sat in the parliament holden at Westminster, on October 19, as earl of Northumberland; and the same year was constituted general warden of the marches towards Scotland; and was also retained to serve the king in his expedition that year into France. Likewise before the end of the year, he was, on December 8, 1416, 4 Henry V. commissioned to receive sufficient security for the return of James I. king of Scotland, into England; or on failure thereof, for the payment of 100,000 marks, according to certain indentures, made between the king, and the said king James. He was also impowered to grant letters of safe-conduct to such persons as should come to the same king James, who (in the commission to this earl of Northumberland) is stiled James Stuart, who called himself king of Scotland.

In 1417, 5 Henry V. he was again in the wars of France with the king; who, about the end of July took ship at Portsmouth, and landing in Normandy, conquered the greatest part of that province.

In 1418, 6 Henry V. he continued in the wars of France. Likewise, in that year, he was warden of the east marches, and constituted governor of Berwick.

In 7 Henry V. the king being abroad in the wars of France, his lordship was especially confided in, for the defence of the northern parts of the realm: and two years after, in consideration of his special services, he had by privy-seal, dated June 3, 1421, 9 Henry V. a grant of the government of the town of Berwick upon Tweed, as also of the wardenship of the east marches towards Scotland, for two years, from the 11th of April last past; with an annual stipend of five thousand pounds in time of war, and two thousand five hundred pounds in time of peace. But before the expiration of that term, the king died at Bois le Vincennes, on August 31, 1422.

In 1423, he was again constituted general warden of the east marches towards Scotland; and one of the commissioners, to treat with those of Scotland, about the ransom, and setting at liberty, James I. their king, and a final peace between both realms.

On February 14, 1423-4, he was commissioned to treat with the same James, king of Scotland, or his commissioners, about a truce; which was concluded at Durham (to hold for seven years, from March 28, 1424, 2 Henry VI.) and the earl of Northumberland was one of the conservators thereof, and by commission, dated the same day, March 28, he was impowered to conduct the king of Scotland from Durham into his own kingdom.

In 3 Henry VI. he, for the better confirmation of the dignity of earl of Northumberland, obtained a charter of creation thereunto, with the yearly fee of twenty pounds, nomine comitis, out of the profits of that county.

In 1426, 4 Henry VI. he was summoned, with his son Henry, lord Percy, among other great peers, to receive the order of knighthood. Also the same year he was in commission to rectify all matters done contrary to the truce with Scotland.

In 5 Henry VI. he was constituted with his son, Sir Henry Percy, and others, commissioners for arraying soldiers in the North and East Ridings of Yorkshire, to be sent into France.

In 8 Henry VI. he was commissioned to receive of James I. king of Scotland, such sums of money as were due, and agreed to be paid for his ransom; and impowered to prorogue the truce.

In 9 Henry VI. a truce was concluded with the Scots to hold from May 1, 1431, to May 1, 1436, of which this noble peer was one of the conservators.

In 14 Henry VI. on information given to the king, that the Scots intended to besiege Berwick, he had special summons to prepare himself for the defence of that place. And in 16 Henry VI. by reason of his good service done, and to be done, he had a grant of one hundred pounds per annum during his life, to be paid out of the lordship of Bradwell, in Essex. Also the same year, he concluded with the commissioners of James II. king of Scotland, at London, a truce, to hold to May 1, 1447; and was appointed one of the conservators thereof. He was likewise commissioned to settle the bounds of the two kingdoms, betwixt the castles of Berwick, and Rokeburgh, for the feeding of cattle, making hay, carrying firewood, &c.

In 28 Henry VI. in consideration of his good and acceptable services, he was constituted constable of England; to execute that office by himself, or his sufficient deputy, in such manner as John, viscount Beaumont, held it.

In 29 Henry VI. he was one of the conservators of the truce with Scotland, concluded on, to last till August 15, 1454. In 30 Henry VI. he was again assigned one of the commissioners to treat with others from Scotland, upon the articles signed by James I. king of that realm.

This earl gratefully remembering the good offices, and favours, conferred on him by king Henry V. continued loyal to his son, king Henry VI. and was a stout assertor of the Lancastrian interest, and fell gloriously at the battle of St. Albans, on the

The said Henry, second earl of Northumberland, had to wife Eleanor, (or, according to others, Elizabeth) daughter to Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmorland, and widow of Richard, lord Spencer, son and heir of Thomas Spencer, earl of Gloucester: and by her (whom he wedded after October 7, 1414) he had issue, besides three daughters, nine sons.

1. Henry Percy, his successor.

2. John Percy,

4. John Percy,

5. Sir Thomas, who, in consideration of his services in the wars of France and Scotland, was created lord Egremont, on December 20, 1649, 28 Henry VI. In 30 Henry VI. he was constituted one of the commissioners to treat with James, ninth earl of Douglas, about certain matters contained in articles signed by him, and sent to the king. In 32 Henry VI. Garter-king of Arms was sent to the lord Egremont, and Richard Percy, his brother, who had assembled people with the king's letters, to appear at his palace of Westminster, on July 3, to answer such things as should be declared to him at their coming. In 36 Henry VI. he obtained a grant of the castle and lordship of Wresil, in the county of York, to hold for term of life; and valiantly fighting for king Henry VI. in the battle of Northampton, on July 9, 1460, was slain in the tent of king Henry VI. who was then taken prisoner. He died unmarried, so that the title of lord Egremont was extinct in him.

6. George Percy, who was a prebendary in the collegiate church of Beverly, in Yorkshire.

7. Sir Ralph Percy, who was also an assertor of the Lancastrian interest, and on April 25, 1463, 3 Edward IV. lost his life in the battle at Hedgeley-moore, or Heggelamore, in Northumberland, saying, as he was dying, "I have saved the bird in my bosom," meaning, that he had kept both his promise and oath to king Henry VI. He was afterwards attainted in parliament, in 4 Edward IV. "For rendering the king's castles of Bambourgh, and Dunstamburgh, unto Henry VI. and for rearing the war against the king at Higgelamore, in Northumberland, on the feast-day of St. Mark." He died unmarried.

8. William Percy, who was chancellor of the university of Cambridge, in 1451, 30 Henry VI.

also, the year after, was consecrated bishop of Carlisle, and had the temporalities of his bishopric, October 24, 1452. He died in 1463, 3 Edward IV.

9. Sir Richard Percy is generally said to have died a bachelor; but, according to Thoresby in his Antiquities of Leeds, he married Catherine, daughter of Sir Henry Nevill, of Thornton-bridge, in Yorkshire, knight, and widow of William Fairfax, of Walton, esquire, who died in 31 Henry VI. but it does not appear that he had issue by her.

The three daughters of Henry, second earl of Northumberland aforesaid, were,

1. Joan, who was a nun at Whitby.

2. Anne, who had three husbands, 1st, Sir Thomas Hungerford, lord Hungerford, Botreux, Moulins, and Moels, to whom she bore an only daughter and heir, Mary, who was wedded to Edward, lord Hastings (father by her of George Hastings, first earl of Huntingdon) and carried a great estate to his family: 2dly, Sir Laurence Rainford, knight: 3dly, Sir Hugh Vaughan, knight. She died on July 5, 1522, 14 Henry VIII. and was buried in St. Michael's chapel, in St. Margaret's church, Westminster.

3. Catherine, was married to Edmund Grey, of Ruthyn, first earl of Kent.

We now return to

HENRY PERCY, the eldest son, third earl of Northumberland, who was thirty years of age, and upwards, when he succeeded to the title, and was then a knight, as has been observed.

In 20 Henry VI. he was by indenture, dated March 6, retained to serve the king, as governor of the town and castle of Berwick; as also of the whole east marches towards Scotland, for the term of ten years, then next ensuing; taking, in the time of war, five thousand pounds per annum, and in times of peace, two thousand five hundred pounds: and for the custody of the castle, five hundred pounds per annum, in time of war; and in time of peace or truce, one hundred marks. In 1445, 24 Henry VI. by another indenture, dated December 5, he was again retained for seven years longer, for the like wages: and in 31 Henry VI. the king came to an agreement with him, thenceforth to take two thousand five hundred and sixty-six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence sterling, per annum, as well in times of war as peace.

He had to wife (before 25 Henry VI.) Eleanor, daughter and sole heir of Richard Poynings, who bury, Houghton, Chatton, Alnham, &c. in the county of Northumberland; as also of the castle and manor of Prudhow, and Birkley, with their members; of the castle of Werkworth, and manors of Werkworth, Corbrige, and Newburne, in the same county. Likewise of a certain house, called Percy's Inn, situate in the parish of St. Dennis, within the city of York: and of the manors of Topcliffe, and Spofford, with the advowson of the church of Donnington; the manors of Lethlay, Shothorpe, Giggleswike, Scarnbton, alias Langstrother, Tadcaster, Catton, with the advowson of the church, Pecklington, Nafferton, Humandby, Semar, and Kirk-Levington, in the county of York: the manors of Dagenham, and Cokeral, in the county of Essex: of the manors of Swaby, Brinkell, Laughton, Saucethorp, Hughe, Ulfaby, Fulmerby, Horfington, Herningby, Oxcombe, Farforth, Witherne, Gayton, Haveringham, Lasseby, Claythorp, Malberthorp, Fedelthorp, Truithorp, Sutton, Hotoft, Anderby, Assaby, Louthford, Cobbenham, Thorpe, juxta Louthe, Imingham, Wickerby, Tofte, Neuton, Snellesland, Rerishy, Dykering, Carleton, Preston, Legburne, Welton, juxta Thwayte, Urby, Athenby, Hotby, Hamore, Lowhoworby, Saxelby, Somerby, Thornton, Kathorpe, Staineton, Thorpe, juxta Lathford, Garnethorpe, Louthney, Horkelaw, Riggesby, Willingham, West Langby, Fanthorpe, Renemond, Covenham, and Worldby, in the county of Lincoln: of the manor of Foston, in the county of Leicester: of the castle and honour of Coker-mouth, the manors of Papcastle, Asparike, Wigton, Braith-wait, Camefwater, Dene, Caldbeck, Ulmedale, and moiety of the manor of Kirkbrigg; the advowsons of the churches of Dene, Kirkbrigg, and Ulmdale, and chapel of St. Leonard, at Wigton, in the county of Cumberland: Likewise of the fourth part of the barony of Egremont, with its appurtenances, in the same county: the advowson of the church of Wadwinch, and Allerdale, parcel of the manor of Wigton, in the same county.

died in the life-time of his father, Robert, lord Poynings, Bryen, and Fitz-Payne, whose heir she also was. And at the decease of the said Robert (who had summons to parliament among the barons, from 5 Henry IV. to 24 Henry VI. and was slain at the siege of Orleans, on October 2, 1446, 25 Henry VI.) she was twenty-five years of age, and then the wife of Sir Henry Percy. The said Robert, lord Poynings, was son of Richard, lord Poynings, and Isabel his wife, daughter and heir of Robert, lord Fitz-Payne, as also heir to Elizabeth, her mother, daughter and heir of Sir Guy de Bryen, the younger, knight, son and heir of Guy, baron Bryen, who bore for his arms, or, three piles azure.

Sir Henry Percy thereupon, in 25 Henry VI. had a special livery of all the castles, manors, and lands, which were of the inheritance of the Poynings, Fitz-Payne, and Bryen.

On December 14, 1446, he had summons to parliament as baron Poynings, Bryen, and Fitz-Payne, being stiled, in the writ, Henrico Percy de Poynings, chevalier: and was summoned, as such, to all other parliaments, till he succeeded his father as third earl of Northumberland, in the year 1455.

In 29 Henry VI. by the title of Sir Henry Percy, knight, lord Poynings, he was constituted one of the commissioners to treat with the ambassadors of James II. king of Scotland; and also appointed one of the conservators of the truce made that year, to last from August 15, 1451, to August 15, 1454.

In 31 Henry VI. he was constituted governor of the town and castle of Berwick, and warden of the east marches, with an allowance of one thousand and twenty-six pounds nine shillings per annum.

In 1455, 33 Henry VI. his father being slain, he succeeded him as earl of Northumberland: and in consideration of his many good services, viz. "In the custody of the town of Berwick, and wardenship of the east marches; as also in repelling the Scots upon their siege of that town and castle, to his great expences;" he, in 35 Henry VI. had further livery of all his lands, without any inquisition taken for proof of his age, and was discharged of his relief.

In 38 Henry VI. he was constituted justice of all the forests beyond Trent: also he was present in the parliament held at Coventry, November 28, 1459, 38 Henry VI. in which Richard Plantagenet, duke of York, and all his confederates, were attainted of high treason, and their lands, &c. confiscated.

But whilst the king and queen continued at Coventry, the said duke of York, Edward Plantagenet, his son, with Richard Nevill, earl of Warwick, his son, the earls of March and Salisbury, landing in England, there ensued, on July 2, 1460, a bloody battle, between Towcester and Northampton, wherein king Henry was taken prisoner; and the duke taking on him the government of the king, the earl of Northumberland remained with the queen in the North, where by his interest he had got together eighteen thousand men. The duke of York sent messengers, inviting the queen to London, where the king was; but being encouraged by this earl, and the lords with her, to engage her adversaries, and restore the king, she refused to go. Whereupon the duke, on December 21, left London, to repress the queen and her northern adherents; and on Christmas eve arrived at his castle of Sandal, near Wakefield, in Yorkshire, and there mustered five thousand men. But finding by his scouts, that the queen's forces much exceeded his, he kept himself within the castle; and the queen's forces braving him to come out, and fight them, he, contrary to the advice of his friends, marched out on December 31, and joining battle, was, with his men, encompassed so on every side, that within half an hour he himself was slain, with others of note with him, to the number of two thousand eight hundred. The queen, after this victory, was encouraged to march to London with her northern army, and coming to the town of St. Alban's, there ensued, at Barnard's heath, another battle on Shrove-Tuesday, February 17, between her forces, and those of John Mowbray, duke of Norfolk, the aforesaid earl of Warwick, and others, whom the duke of York had left to govern the king in his absence. In this battle the queen again prevailed, and about two thousand three hundred men were slain, but no nobleman, except Sir John Grey, of Groby. The earl of Northumberland, in this battle, displayed the talents of an expert commander, and gallant soldier.

By this victory king Henry was again set free; but our historians have remarked, that where the king was, the enterprizes proved unfortunate. Whilst the queen was at St. Alban's, the earl of March, being joined by the vanquished forces, had formed so great an army, that she judged it necessary to retreat again into the North, the Londoners being in the interest of her adversaries. Thereupon departing from St. Alban's, with the king her husband, and prince Edward her son, the earl of March entered London, and was by his party proclaimed king, by the name of Edward the Fourth.

Queen Margaret, when she came into the North, found the lords of her side were daring and vigilant; and the earl of Northumberland's interest so strong there, that she soon formed an army of sixty thousand men, as some write. Of this army, Henry Beaufort, duke of Somerset, and the earl of Northumberland, had the chief command. King Edward having also assembled a body of about forty thousand troops, left London, on March 12, and by easy journies came to Pomfret, where he rested, detaching the lord Fitz-Walter to secure the pass at Ferrybridge, upon the river Aire. The earl of Northumberland, desirous of revenging the death of his father and brothers, was well prepared to receive his enemies; and leaving king Henry, his queen, and son, prince Edward, in the city of York, for their better safety, it was resolved, that Ferrybridge was, at any hazard, to be recovered; and the enterprize was committed to John, lord Clifford; who, with a competent number of light horsemen, departing early from the army, on Saturday before Palm-Sunday, made such expedition, that he gained the bridge, and slew the guard. The lord Fitz-Walter, hearing the noise, rose out of his bed, as did the bastard of Salisbury, brother to Richard Nevill, earl of Warwick, suspecting a mutiny among their soldiers, and were encountered, and slain.

Thereupon

Thereupon king Edward encouraging his men, and thinking loss of time might endanger the rest of his forces, resolved to bring his fortune immediately to the trial of a battle; judging the passage of Ferrybridge impossible to be speedily regained, he ordered William Nevil, lord Fauconburg, to pass the river with the vanguard, three miles above it, at Castleford; and that nobleman near Towton, attacking the lord Clifford (who was marching to king Henry's main army) encompassed him and his men, who defended themselves with great bravery, till lord Clifford was slain, being shot with an arrow through the throat.

Next day being Palm Sunday, March 29, A. D. 1461, both armies were in sight of each other, between Saxton and Towton; king Henry's forces being computed at 60,000 men, and king Edward's at 48,660. Our historians have given a particular account of this battle (that lasted three days) in which were slain on both sides, 36,776, all of the English nation, whereof the chiefs were this earl of Northumberland, and Ralph Nevil, earl of Westmorland, &c. The earl of Northumberland led the vanguard, and there being a snow in the northern men's faces, whereby he perceived they could not discern how they shot, he led his forces on to charge sword in hand, and a bloody conflict continued for ten hours, in doubtful victory; in which it may be reckoned the earl was killed, though how he was slain, is not mentioned. Hall says of him, "That he was of lusty youth, and of frank courage." In the parliament, held on November 4 following, he was attainted, with king Henry VI. Margaret, his queen, Edward, called prince of Wales, and Henry Beaufort, duke of Somerset, for the death of Richard, duke of York, &c. and the king conferred the earldom of Northumberland on John Nevil, lord Montagu, brother to Richard Nevil, earl of Warwick and Salisbury, by letters patent, dated at York, May 28, 1461, 3 Edw. IV.

The said Henry, third earl of Northumberland, had issue by Eleanor, his wife, before-mentioned, daughter and heir of Richard, son of Robert, lord Poynings, &c. Henry, his son and heir, fourth earl of Northumberland, and three daughters.

1. Elizabeth, married to Henry, lord Scrope, of Bolton.

2. Eleanor, married to Reginald West, lord de la Warr.

3. Margaret, married to Sir William Gascoigne, of Gauthorpe, in Yorkshire, Knt. of the Bath, who had issue by her Sir William Gascoigne, with other children, besides a daughter Anne, married to Sir Thomas Fairfax, of Walton, in Yorkshire, ancestor, by her, to those of his name, viscounts Fairfax, of Emely, in Ireland.

HENRY PERCY, the only son and heir, aforesaid, fourth earl of Northumberland of his family, being in his minority, when his father was slain, A. D. 1461, the king ordered him to be kept in the Tower of London, till October 27, A. D. 1469, 9 Edw. IV. when he came before him in his palace at Westminster personally, and took the following oath:

"Sovereigne Lorde,

"I Henry Percy becom youre subgette and liegeman.

"And promyt to God and you, that hereafter I feyth and trowth shall bere to you, as my soveraigne liege lorde, and to youre heires, kynges of England, of lyfe and lynne, and of embely worthepe, for to lyve and dye, ayenst all embely people.

"And to youe, and to youre commandementes, I shall be obelisant, as God me held, and his hole evangelistes."

Whereupon, the king, by word of mouth, in the presence of the aforesaid lords, discharged John, lord Duddley, constable of the Tower, from the further custody of the said Henry Percy.

And, as Leland writes, the king suspecting the fidelity of John, lord Montagu, whom he had created earl of Northumberland, privately incited the people of the North to desire the restoration of this young Henry Percy, knowing his interest there, whereby he might be a competitor against him. But that the lord Montagu might not fly out, he created him (on resigning his patent of earl of Northumberland) marquis of Montagu, or Montacute, by letters patent, dated March 25, A. D. 1740, 10 Edw. IV.

King Edward, as aforesaid, having restored the said Henry Percy to the earldom of Northumberland; he, the same year (10 Edw. IV.) was constituted warden of the east and middle marches towards Scotland; also, by the title of earl of Northumberland, appointed one of the commissioners, to treat with others sent from James III. king of Scotland, for redressing of all wrongs done to the subjects of both kingdoms, contrary to the articles of truce that had been formerly concluded on.

In 11 Edw. IV. he was constituted justice of all the forests beyond Trent, as also constable of Bamburgh-castle. Likewise he was sent into the North, there to reside, for the better preserving the government of those parts in peace.

In 12 Edw. IV. in the parliament held at Westminster, on October 6, the king sitting in the chair of state in the Painted Chamber, he was present; and by the king's commandment he was restored in blood to the earldom of Northumberland, and to all such hereditaments of Henry Percy, late earl of Northumberland, as came to the king's hands; and the attainder made against the said earl, 1 Edw. IV. tit. 17. was made void. The same year he was retained, as warden of the east and west marches, for the term of five years, to begin at Midsummer the same year; and to receive 2,000 marks per annum, in time of peace, and in time of war, 6,000 marks.

In 14 Edw. IV. being in that expedition made into France, he was paid for the first quarter's wages, for himself and forces he had raised, 1249l. 14s. 8d. Also that year he was in commission for guarding of the east and west marches. On August 18, 14 Edw. VI. he was elected knight of the Garter.

In 1482, 22 Edw. IV. he had the chief command, under Richard Plantagenet, duke of Gloucester, in that army which began to march in May, and came to Alnwick, in Northumberland, about the beginning of July, where they drew up in battle array. The van was led by the earl of Northumberland, who had under his standard the lord Scrope, of Bolton, Sir John Middleton, Sir John Ditchfield, and other knights and soldiers, to the number of 6,700; and passing suddenly the river Tweed, entered the town of Berwick; but the castle, under the command of earl Bothwell, refusing refusing to surrender, they laid siege to it, which being left to Thomas, lord Stanley, with a sufficient number of men, they marched towards Edinburgh; and entering therein, saved the town and inhabitants from fire and sword, at the earnest desire of Alexander Stuart, duke of Albany, then with them. After that, the castle of Berwick, was delivered to the English, which has been ever since in their possession: and the duke of Gloucester, in honour thereof, made several knights bannerets, and knights, in Hoton field, near Berwick, on August 22. Also, the earl of Northumberland being impowered to confer the honour of knighthood, his lordship, on the plain of Sefford, at the same time, made knights, Sir Marmaduke Constable, Sir Christopher Ward, Sir Thomas Grey, Sir Ralph Widrington, and Sir Thomas Tempest. His lordship's presence with the knights of the Garter, on May 20, at Windsor, was dispensed with by the king's letters, as he was then with the army marching to Scotland.

In 1 Rich. III. he was constituted lord high-chamberlain of England.

In 1485, 3 Rich. III. on the landing of Henry Tudor, earl of Richmond, king Richard sending for the earl of Northumberland, he repaired to him with all the strength he could raise, and being with him on August 22, at Bosworth field (where the king was slain) was there taken prisoner. In the life of Richard III. wrote by George Buck, Esq; he recites, "The king had information, that the earl of Northumberland intended to forsake him: and although, in the battle, he stood but as neutral, yet the suddenness and example of it, drew many from the king, even at the instant, when he was ready to arm himself; for which he was immediately taken into the earl of Richmond's favour, and sworn of his privy-council." Also Hall writes, "That Henry, the fourth earl of Northumberland, was suspected; which, whether it was by the commandment of king Richard's putting diffidence in him, or he did it for the love and favour that he bore unto the earl of Richmond, he stood still with a great company, and intermeddled not in the battle. Whereupon he was incontinently received into favour, and made one of the council to king Henry." When that prince, after his coronation, journeyed towards the North, he was met by this earl of Northumberland, in Bernsdale, in Yorkshire, attended by thirty-three knights, besides esquires; and proceeding to York, the sheriffs, and a great company, met the king and the earl there.

In the first year of Henry VII's reign, he was constituted warden of the west and middle marches, in the North; by which title, he was the first of the conservators of the truce with Scotland, agreed, at London, to commence from July 3, 1486, and to continue for three years. Likewise in 4 Hen. VII. he was lieutenant of Yorkshire, and commanded by the king to levy the aid, then taxed, to carry on the war in Brittany; but the country people, unjustly conceiving his lordship to be the cause of that tax, rose tumultuously and murdered him, at Cocklodge, near Thirsk (eighteen miles north of York) on the day of St. Vitalis, the Martyr, viz. April 28, 1489. His lordship was buried at Beverley, where a stately monument was erected to his memory, but now defaced. The lord Verulam, in his Life of Henry VII. gives this account, "That the commissioners for gathering the subsidy, finding the people mutinous, complained to the earl of Northumberland, who was the chief ruler of the Northern parts. The earl immediately wrote to the king, signifying in what state he found the people, and praying his direction. The king wrote back peremptorily, that he would not have one penny abated of that which had been granted to him by parliament. On receiving this dispatch, the earl assembled the principal justices, &c. of the country, and telling them the king's message to him, the people conceived, by the stoutness and haughtiness of delivery of the king's errand, that himself was the author, or principal persuader of that council, whereupon, suddenly assailing the earl in his house, slew him, and divers of his household servants."

He had to wife Maud, daughter to William Herbert, the first earl of Pembroke of that surname, and by her left issue four sons, and three daughters.

The latter were,

1. Eleanor, married to Edward Stafford, earl of Buckingham.
2. Anne, married to William Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel.
3. Elizabeth, who died young.

His four sons were,

1. Henry Algernon Percy, his successor.
2. Sir William Percy, second son, of whom we find no further mention, than that, in 13 Hen. VII. when the Scots invaded England, he brought forces to the earl of Surry, and raised the siege of Norham-castle.
3. Alan Percy, a clerk, was made master of St. John's college, Cambridge, July 29, 1516; but resigning two years afterwards, became warden of the Holy Trinity College, at Arundel, in Sussex, and, with his brethren, surrendered it to the king, 1536.
4. Josceline Percy, died in 28 Hen. VIII. and by his wife Margaret, daughter and coheir of Walter Frost, of Featherston, in the county of York, Esq; was ancestor to the Percies of Beverley.

Their mother Maud, countess of Northumberland, was buried at Beverley; and upon September 15, 1678, the grave wherein she was interred, in Beverley minister, near unto the before-mentioned monument of the lord her husband, being opened, her body was found in a fair coffin of stone embalmed, and covered with cloth of gold, and on her feet slippers embroidered with silk and gold; and therewith a wax-lamp, and a plate candlestick with a candle.

We now return to

HENRY ALGERNON PERCY, the eldest son, who was the fifth earl of Northumberland. On November 21, 1488, 5 Hen. VII. he was the first created knight of the Bath, with Arthur, prince of Wales; the king honouring the solemnity with his presence.

In 1497, 12 Hen. VII. he was one of the chief commanders of the king's forces in the battle of Blackheath, on June 22, against James Touchet, fourth lord Audley, and his adherents; and the year after, had a special livery of his lands.

In 18 Hen. VII. this nobleman had the honour of delivering princess Margaret to James IV. king of Scotland, her husband, at Lamberton, in that kingdom. According to Hall, "this nobleman exceeded every one upon this occasion in the richness nefs of his coat, being goldsmith's work, garnished with pearl and stones; and for the costly apparel of his hennman, and gallant trappers of their horses, besides 400 tall men, well horfed, and apparelled in his collars, he was esteemed, both of the Scots and Englishmen, more like a prince than a subject." He had also with him his officer of arms, named Northumberland, arrayed in his livery of velvet, bearing his coat of arms.

King Henry VII. also honoured him, in promoting him to be elected one of the knights companions of the most noble order of the Garter; and his plate is yet remaining the 5th, in the sixteenth stall, in St. George's chapel at Windsor. But the exact time of election does not appear, the register being imperfect from the eighth year to the fourteenth year of that king.

At the accession of king Henry VIII. he was employed again, as warden of the marches towards Scotland.

In 5 Hen. VIII. his lordship attended the earl of Shrewsbury and lord Herbert to Calais; and was present at the siege of Therovene, and the battle of Spurs, &c.

In June, 1520, 12 Henry VIII. he attended the king at the magnificent interview with Francis I. King of France, betwixt Guisnes and Ardres, and was one of the noblemen appointed to go with the king, when their majesties embraced. In the year 1522, his lordship also attended the king at Canterbury, on the 27th of May, at the arrival of the emperor, Charles V.

In 14 Henry VIII. on a suspicion of an invasion from Scotland, the king sent for this earl, and made him warden of the whole marches, which he thankfully accepted, and so departed lord warden. But, however it happened, he soon after made suit to the king, and his council, and never desisted till he was discharged of that trust; and then the earl of Surry was made general-warden.

He departed this life in 1527, 18 Henry VIII. and was buried at Beverley, in Yorkshire, where a monument is erected to his memory. He married Catharine, daughter and coheir of Sir Robert Spencer, of Spencercombe, in Devonshire, knt. and of Eleanor his wife, daughter, and at length coheir of Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset (being sister and coheir to Henry, and Edmund, dukes of Somerset) by Eleanor his wife, daughter and heir of Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick; and the said Edmund Beaufort was great grandson of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster. By the said Catharine, he had three sons.

1. Henry Percy, his successor.

* His lordship was an exact economist, yet lived with great magnificence and hospitality, as is evident from an account of the whole expences of his household, in the third of Henry VIII. wherein are set down, directions, and orders, for keeping of his house, and in what place; and where every of his servants were to act. The title thereto is,

"This is the assignment made by me, and my council, at Wresle, to Richard Gowge, comptroller of my house, and Thomas Percy, clerk of the kitchen of my said house; standing charged for the whole expences and keeping of my said house for one year, beginning on Monday the 29th of September last past, in the third year of our sovereign lord, king Henry the eighth, and ending at Michaelmas next coming, which shall be, by the grace of God, in the fourth year of my said sovereign lord. The names of the parcels they shall have paid, by the hands of my cofferers for the time being, with the names of the sums that they shall pay, are as hereafter followeth."

There are particular directions for all provisions, wines, &c. and the price at that time, very curious, but too long to recite; therefore we shall only insert a few articles, by which the whole may be judged of.

"Item, To be paid to the said Richard Gowge, and Thomas Percy, for to make provision for 180 salt salmon, for the expences of my house, from Shrovetide to Whitsontide next; which is to serve all the Lent season, and to Whitsontide next following, after 6d. each salmon, by estimation. Sum, 100 shillings; which is appointed to be paid to the said Richard Gowge, and Thomas Percy, at St. Andrew's day next coming, because it must be purveyed all at once."

In like manner, for the same time, 30s. to be paid for three firkins of salt sturgeon; and 20s. for five cags of salt eels; 556 pounds of hops, for brewing of beer, 73s. and 4d. and 33s. for a barrel and half of honey; and every article, relating to his house-keeping, is particularly set down.

There are two other articles (among many others) which we shall insert, as they shew his lordship's great prudence and judgment; and the observation thereof may be useful to every one.

"Item, That the clerks of the kitchen shall, afore they make any bargain for provision of any manner of grofs emption, for keeping of my lord's house, make my lord privy thereto, before the bargain is concluded. To the intent, that they may know whether his lordship will agree to the said prices, or not, if my said lord be at home. And if his lordship be absent, then to make such of his lordship's council, or servants, that my lord leaves in trust to see, which he hath appointed, privy to the said emption, afore the bargain be concluded. To the intent that it may be seen, whether they have made their bargains in due time, or not."

The other article is, "That all his lordship's clerks, in his house shall be charged yearly, at Michaelmas, with what charges every of them shall take for the year, and what books of reckonings they shall be charged with; as well the books of the household, as the books of my lord's foreign expences, and reparations; as well those that shall yearly make the books, as those that shall correct the books yearly under my lord, as those that shall engross yearly the said correcting books."

His lordship was very bountiful, and charitable, as appears by his accustomed yearly gifts. And as the number of his servants, that were in ordinary waiting throughout the week, shew the grandeur of those times, it may be satisfactory to the curious to mention them.

Gentlemen, who wait before noon, six; yeomen, and grooms of the chamber, who wait before noon, ten; yeomen officers, four; and groom officers, four; servants to wait in the great chamber, in the morning daily throughout the week, from six to ten of the clock, twenty; gentlemen to wait in the afternoon, seven; yeomen of the chamber, yeomen waiters, and grooms of the chamber, to wait in the afternoon daily, seven; yeomen officers, and groom officers of household, to wait in the afternoon, four; gentlemen to wait after supper, thirteen; yeomen of the chamber, yeomen waiters, and grooms of the chamber, to wait after supper, seventeen; yeomen of household, and groom officers of household, which shall not attend after supper, eight; chaplains, and priests in household, eleven; gentlemen, and children of my lord's chapel, attending in exercising of God's service in the chapel daily, at matins, lady mass, high mass, and even song, seventeen; yeomen officers, groom officers, and grooms in household, not appointed to attend, because of other their business, which they attend daily in their offices, in my lord's house, twenty-seven; an armourer; a groom of the chamber to the lord Percy, to wait hourly in his chamber; a second groom, for brushing and dressing his cloaths; a groom of the chamber to his lordship's two youngest sons; a groom of the stirrup; a groom sumpter-man, to dress the sumpter horses, and my lady's palfreys; a groom to dress my lord's hobbys and nags; a groom of the stable; a groom, who keeps my lord's hounds; a groom miller, for grinding of corn for baking and brewing; a groom porter for keeping the gates; a groom for driving his lordship's chariot; and a keeper of the said chariot-horses; clerks in my lord's house, not appointed daily to attend, because of making their books, which they are charged with to write hourly upon, seven; servants belonging to gentlemen in his lordship's house, ten; servants, and gentlemen servants, not appointed to wait, because of other their business, which they attend on daily for his lordship, forty-four. In the whole, 229.

2. Sir

2. Sir Thomas Percy, of whom hereafter.
3. Sir Ingelram Percy, knt. who died without lawful issue; but left a natural daughter, married to Henry Tempest, of Broughton.

The said Henry, fifth earl of Northumberland, had also two daughters.

1. Margaret, wife of Henry, lord Clifford, the first earl of Cumberland, of that name.

2. Maud, married to John, lord Conyers, who had by her three daughters, his heirs; and two of them leaving no issue, Elizabeth the second became his sole heir, and married Thomas Darcy, Esq; ancestor to the present earl of Holderness, who in her right is lord Conyers.

The said Catherine his countess, by her testament, bearing date October 14, A. D. 1542, 34 Henry VIII. bequeathed her body to be buried at Beverley, in the tomb of the late earl her husband; and likewise gave unto Sir Robert Gell, her chaplain, her lease at Wilberfoss, to sing mass yearly for her soul, and her husband's soul.

HENRY PERCY, the succeeding and 6th earl, being in his youthful days an attendant upon the great cardinal Wolsey, took an affection to Anne Boleyn (daughter of Sir Thomas Boleyn, knight) then one of the maids of honour to queen Catherine. Lord Herbert thereupon observes, "That in what kind soever the king's affection might manifest itself, she was not so satisfied with it, as to relinquish so advantageous an offer, as the lord Percy, nor that lord aware, that he was opposed by so puissant a rival." But their courtship coming to the ears of the king, who found himself in danger of losing a beauty whom he had contemplated so long, that she was become his dearest object, the cardinal was ordered to dissuade the lord Percy from any further thoughts of marrying that lady; and thereupon Wolsey, both violently deborts the lord Percy from the lady, and used all arts to insinuate himself into her favour. But Mrs. Boleyn (or Bullen, as she is generally called) whether she were ignorant, as yet, how much the king loved her, or howsoever had rather be that lord's wife, than a king's mistress, took very ill, of the cardinal his unseasonable interruption of her marriage. The cardinal, also fearing the revenges of that sex, and being unwilling to come to sharper terms with the lord Percy, than he had already used, desires the king to write to the earl of Northumberland to come up; alledging there was no such way to preserve the gentleman for himself, and together to conceal his love, as to use a cunning dissuasion of the marriage; whereby, also, he might be induced to interpose his fatherly authority for dissolving of the match. Hereupon the earl repairing to the court, the cardinal first, and afterwards the king, discovered the cause of his sending for him, in very kind, but withal, in such covert and ambiguous terms, that betwixt unwillingness to disparage the gentleman, and the enforcing divers reasons, why the lord Percy should not marry her, the earl was not without some hazard of misapplying the king's affection to himself. "Howsoever, he so checked his son, that fear of displeasing his father became his predominant passion; the apprehension of the king's displeasure having wrought that apprehension in the earl, that he would take no denial, or excuse, on his son's part, till he had made him renounce all pretences to her; which also he urged so far, as at length his son consented to marry the earl of Shrewsbury's daughter."

In 19 Henry VIII. he had livery of all the lands, descended to him as heir to his father; and in the 21st of Henry VIII. was present in the parliament then held.

On November 4, 1530, the earl of Northumberland, warden of the marches, with Sir Walter Walshe, gentleman of the king's privy chamber, went by his majesty's command to Cawood-castle, near York, and arrested cardinal Wolsey. And on St. George's day, in the following year, at a chapter held at Greenwich, the sovereign present, he was elected a knight of the Garter.

In 1532, 24 Henry VIII. he was one of the privy council to the king.

On the divorce of queen Anne Boleyn, by act of parliament, in 28 Henry VIII. being sent to, he denied any precontract with her, and wrote to secretary Cromwell the following letter.

"Master-secretary, this shall be to signify unto you, that I perceive, by Sir Raynold Carnaby, that there is supposed a precontract to be between the queen and me. Whereupon I was not only heretofore examined, upon my oath, before the archbishops of Canterbury and York; but also received the blessed sacrament upon the same, before the duke of Norfolk, and other, the king's highness council, learned in the spiritual law; assuring you, Mr. Secretary, by the said oath and blessed body, which afore I received, and hereafter intend to receive, that the same may be my damnation, if ever there were any contract, or promise of marriage, between her and me.

"At Newington-green, the 13th day of May, in the 28th year of the reign of our sovereign lord, king Henry VIII. your assured, H. NORTHUMBERLAND."

He married Mary, fifth daughter to George Talbot, fourth earl of Shrewsbury, but died without issue by her, at his house in Hackney, on June 29, 1537, 29 Henry VIII. and was buried in the choir of the church there. His lordship gave away a great part of his lands to the king, and others.

We must now return to

SIR THOMAS PERCY, knight, second son of the fifth earl of Northumberland, who was concerned in Ask's conspiracy, and being arraigned at Westminster, before the marquis of Exeter, high-steward of England, received sentence of death, in 29 Henry VIII. and was executed at Tyburn, with others.

He took to wife Eleanor, one of the daughters and heirs of Sir Guischaud Harbottle, knight, and was ancestor to the succeeding earls of Northumberland, having issue, by the said Eleanor, three sons:

1. Thomas Percy, seventh earl of Northumberland.
2. Guischaud Percy, who died young.
3. Henry Percy, eighth earl of Northumberland.

Also three daughters:

1. Mary, wife to Sir Francis Slisby, of Screven, in Yorkshire.
2. Catherine, married to Ralph Rivers.
3. Joan, married to Arthur Harris, of Prittlewell, esquire.

By

By the death of the last earl without heirs of his own body, and the attainder of this Sir Thomas, the peerage of the noble house of Percy became extinct. They had the mortification to see the title of duke of Northumberland conferred upon John Dudley, earl of Warwick, by king Edward VI. in 1551, the 5th year of his reign. But that nobleman having forfeited his titles and life by treason, against queen Mary, in 1553; that princess, by letters patent, dated April 30, 1557, 3 and 4 Philip and Mary, in consideration of his noble descent, constancy, virtue, and valour, in deeds of arms, and other shining qualifications (as the words of the patent import) was pleased to advance

THOMAS PERCY, (son of the said Sir Thomas Percy, attainted) to the degree of a baron, by the titles of baron Percy, of Cockermouth and Petworth, baron Poynings, Lucy, Bryan, and Fitz-Payne, with entail of those honours, to the heirs male of his body, and in default thereof, to Henry, brother to him the said Thomas, in tail male. Also, on the day following, she promoted him to the dignity of earl of Northumberland, with limitation likewise of that honour to the heirs male of his body; and for default of such issue, to Henry, his brother, and to the heirs male of his body. She also gave him all the lands that had been his ancestors, remaining at that time in her hands. His creation was at Whitehall, with great ceremony, eight heralds, and twelve trumpeters, going through the chamber, and through the hall. Before him went the earl of Pembroke, and the lord Montagu, then the earls of Arundel and Rutland, himself walking in the middle, in crimson velvet, and wearing a hat of velvet, and a coronet of gold on his head.

This Thomas, seventh earl of Northumberland, on August 2, 1557, 4 and 5 Philip and Mary, was constituted, with Thomas, lord Wharton, jointly or severally, warden or wardens general, of the marches of England towards Scotland, viz. in the east march; and also captain, or captains, of the town of Berwick upon Tweed; with the same powers and authorities, as had before been granted by Richard II. Henry IV. Henry V. Henry VI. Edward IV. Richard III. Henry VII. Henry VIII. and Edward VI. In the same year, he obtained a victory over the Scots, and many were taken prisoners; whereof he advertised the queen, on November 18.

In the first year of queen Elizabeth, he was constituted general warden of the east and middle marches towards Scotland; and soon after, one of the commissioners for treating of peace between England and Scotland; and concluded certain articles, wherein the boundaries of both kingdoms were settled, &c.

In the fifth year of queen Elizabeth, he was elected one of the knights of the most noble order of the Garter; and we do not find any further mention of him, till 1568, 10 queen Elizabeth, when he was suspected of being concerned with the earl of Westmorland and others in a conspiracy, and sent for up to London, by the queen, who designed thereby, either to awe them out of any rebellious pursuits, or else drive them to that extreme before they had forces ready for such a design. In the latter, she succeeded, for an insurrection immediately ensued, fatal to the interests of the leading noblemen, who expended their incomes in hospitality, and were much beloved on that account, but were masters of little ready money when they took the field. The earl of Northumberland had only brought with him 8000 crowns, and the earl of Westmorland scarce any money at all, for the support of their forces; so that they were not able to advance to London, as they had at first proposed. In these circumstances, Westmorland began so visibly to despond, that many of his men slunk away; but the earl of Northumberland still kept up his resolution, and remained master of the field till December 13, when the earl of Sussex marched out of York with his army, which was followed by a greater number under Ambrose Dudley, earl of Warwick. Northumberland and Westmorland retreated northwards to the borders, and their followers dispersing there, they continued their route to Scotland, from whence the earl of Westmorland found means to convey himself to the Netherlands, where he died about the year 1584, and being attainted for this insurrection, was the last of his surname who bore the title of earl of Westmorland.

The earl of Northumberland had the misfortune to be plundered and otherwise ill treated by the thievish borderers, in his way to Scotland. However, at length he reached the house of Hector Armstrong, of Harlaw, who, having been under great obligations to his lordship, engaged his honour to be true to him; but, like a faithless wretch, for a sum of money betrayed his noble guest, in January, 1570, to James Stewart, earl of Murray, who then acted as regent of Scotland, since the dethronement of queen Mary, whom he accused of the murder of her husband, Henry Stuart, lord Darnley, of which she was entirely innocent, but he himself an accessory. The said Hector Armstrong, who, before that act of perfidy, was rich, fell soon after into poverty, and became so infamous, that to take Hector's cloak, was a common proverb to express a man who betrays his friend. The earl of Northumberland was sent to the castle of Lochleven, by the earl of Murray, who was shot at Linlithgow, on the 23d of the aforesaid month of January, by James Hamilton of Bothwellhaugh, in revenge of the cruelties committed by Murray on his wife. Northumberland continued prisoner in that fortress, under the custody of Sir William Douglas, uterine brother to the said earl of Murray, until July, 1572, when, for a large bribe, he was delivered to Henry Carey, lord Hunsdon, governor of Berwick, by James Douglas, earl of Morton, who, when a fugitive in England, for rebellion about six years before, had been much indebted to his lordship's bounty and friendship, was one of the most virulent persecutors of his injured sovereign, queen Mary, and at last, on June 2, 1581, suffered death for being concerned in the murder of the before-mentioned lord Darnley.

This unfortunate earl of Northumberland was, after the miscarriage of his scheme, attainted of high treason and outlawed, together with his countess; and after his being given up to lord Hunsdon, was conveyed to York, and beheaded there on August 22, 1572; avowing the pope's supremacy, affirming the realm to be in a state of schism, and those obedient to Elizabeth no better than heretics.

His

His countess beforementioned was Anne, third daughter to Henry Somerset, second earl of Worcester, ancestor to the duke of Beaufort. His lordship, by that lady, was father of an only son, Thomas, who died young, A. D. 1560, and was buried at Leckingsfield, in Yorkshire: and also of five daughters,

1. Elizabeth, married to Richard Woodroffe, of Wolley, in the county of York.
2. Mary, married to Sir Thomas Grey, of Werk, in the county of Northumberland, knight.
3. Lucy, married to Sir Edward Stanley, of Eynsham, in the county of Oxford, and of Tonge-castle, in Shropshire, knight of the Bath, son and heir of Sir Thomas Stanley, of Winwick, in the county of Lancaster, knight, second son of Edward, third earl of Derby.
4. Jane, espoused to lord Henry Seymour, second son of Edward, first duke of Somerset, by his second wife Anne, daughter to Sir Edward Stanhope.
5. Another Mary, who was prioress of the English nunnery at Brussels, in Brabant.

By the attainder of this Thomas Percy, seventh earl of Northumberland, his peerage would have become extinct, had it not been for the before-mentioned entails of April 30, and May 1, 1557, 3 and 4 Philip and Mary; but in consequence thereof his brother, Sir HENRY PERCY, knight, was summoned to parliament in 1576, 18 Elizabeth, as baron Percy, Poynings, Bryan, and Fitz-Payne, and likewise as eighth earl of Northumberland. During his elder brother's life-time, he had eminently distinguished himself against the Scots, in the reign of queen Mary.

In the second year of queen Elizabeth, he was employed, by her, to sift the intentions of the protestants in Scotland, who stiled themselves Congregationers, and the measures they intended to take; and, on condition that succours should be sent them, upon what terms a good correspondence might be set on foot between the two kingdoms. Also the same year, siege being laid to Leith, this Sir Henry Percy commanded the light horse, betwixt the camp and the sea, eastwards, till peace ensued, on July 7.

In the third year of Elizabeth, he, with Thomas Young, archbishop of York, Henry Manners, earl of Rutland, president of the council in the North, and others, in confidence of their approved piety, wisdom, prudence, and care, were commissioned, for the province of York, to administer the oath appointed to be taken (according to act of parliament, of January 25, in the first year of her reign) by all ecclesiastics throughout the kingdom. It is thereby evident, he had conformed to the protestant religion; which the earl his brother had not, being left out of this, and other commissions.

In 12 Elizabeth, on his brother's defection, he stood loyal to the queen, and with all the forces he could raise, accompanied Sir John Forster, warden of the middle march, against the earl of Westmorland; and on December 7, routed his forces in the bishopric of Durham; pursuing afterwards the scattered remains, till an end was put to the rebellion.

He succeeded his brother, as eighth earl of Northumberland, on August 22, 1572, by virtue of the entail; and in 18 Elizabeth, as already mentioned, was summoned to parliament, as earl of Northumberland, baron Percy, &c. His lordship was also knight of the Garter.

In 27 Elizabeth (as Camden writes) many being friends to Mary queen of Scots, and some attempting her delivery, subtle ways were taken to try how men stood affected. "Counterfeit letters were privately sent in the name of the queen of Scots: spies were sent up and down the country, to take notice of the people's discourse, and lay hold of their words: reports of vain and idle stories were countenanced and credited. Hereupon many were brought into suspicion, and among the rest, Henry, earl of Northumberland, and his son, Philip, earl of Arundel, was confined to his own house." The earl of Northumberland was suspected to have plotted secretly with Francis Throckmorton, Thomas, lord Paget, and the Guises, for invading of England, and setting the queen of Scots at liberty, whom he always highly favoured. Whereupon, being soon committed to the Tower, and there kept prisoner, he on Monday, June 21, 1585, 27 Elizabeth, as appeared by inquisition, was found dead in his bed, shot with three bullets near his left pap, his chamber-door being barred on the inside. The coroner's inquest having viewed the body, considered the place, found the pistol, with gunpowder, in the chamber; and examining his man who bought the pistol, and him that had sold it, gave their verdict, that he had killed himself*.

He married Catharine, eldest daughter and co-heir of John Nevill, lord Latimer, and of Lucy

* By the inquisition taken at Topcliffe, on October 2, after the decease of the said Henry, the eighth earl of Northumberland, the jury found that he was possessed of the following manors, with lands, &c. thereunto belonging, viz. the manor of Spofforth, with the park; the manors of Linton, Whitwell, Tadcaster, and Chatton, with the park; the castle and manor of Wresell, with the park; the manor of Newsham, with the park; the manors of Thornton, Brinde, Grebthorp, and Loftsome, the castles, lordship, and manor of Leaconsfield, with the park; the manors of Topcliffe, Astenby, Christhay'e, Kildale, Batterby, and Thurstenby; Percy's fee, with the appurtenances; Gaunt's fee, with the appurtenances; and the offices of feodary of Spofforth, and Topcliffe, with the rights thereunto belonging; the advowsons and vicarages of the churches of Tadcaster, Wresell, Scarborough, Hunmanby, Nafferton, Gisborne, Linton, and Kildale: all which the said earl's lands came to him by descent, and were held in capite; as appears by the letters patents of the fourth and fifth of Philip and Mary; and of restitution in 36 Henry VIII. And the said earl was seized in fee, and by special reversion, of an annual rent of one hundred and seventy-two pounds two shillings and four pence, issuing out of the manors and lands in Ribblesdale, Langstrothdale, Littoldale, Gisborne, and Preston. He was also seized of the manors and lands of Perelington, Hundemanby, Wandsford, Eymlin, alias Gemlin, and Nafferton; the castle, manor, and lordship of Whorlton, with the appurtenances; which, by letters patent of July 12, 1544, 36 Henry VIII. were granted to Matthew Stuart, earl of Lennox, and Margaret, his wife. All the said manors, &c. were in the county of York. And in the county of Northumberland he was seized of the castle, barony, lordship, and manor of Alnewyke, with the appurtenance; and park, called Cawledge Park, West-Park, and Hulme-Park; the lordships and manor of Denwyke, Tesbury, Aylemouth, Houghton, and many others. And in Suffex, of the honour and manor of Petworth; with divers other manors and lands in the said county. To all which Henry, his son, was found heir thereto, and of the age of twenty-one years, and two months.

his wife, daughter of Edward Somerset, earl of Worcester. The said lord Latimer was son and heir of John Nevill, lord Latimer, by Dorothy his wife, daughter and coheir of Sir George Vere, father of John Vere, the fourteenth earl of Oxford; and was also grandson and heir of Sir Henry Nevill, son and heir of George, lord Latimer, fourth son of Ralph, earl of Westmorland, by Joan Plantagenet his wife, daughter of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, fourth son of king Edward III. By the said Catherine, who died October 28, 1596, he had issue eight sons, and three daughters.

1. Henry Percy, the eldest son, who succeeded him as ninth earl of Northumberland.

2. Thomas Percy, died an infant in 1587.

3. Sir William Percy lived till 1648, but never married.

4. Charles Percy was knighted in France, by Robert Devereux, second earl of Essex, 1591; and married Dorothy, daughter of Richard Cox, of Dumbleton, in the county of Gloucester, esquire, and widow of Edward Nutchins, esquire. This Sir Charles being concerned in the said earl of Essex's insurrection, had his pardon in 44 Elizabeth, and at the decease of that queen, on March 24, 1602-3, he was sent by the council, with their letters of notification thereof, to king James in Scotland. He died in 1628, and was buried at Dumbleton. His wife survived him till 1646, and was interred by him.

5. Sir Richard Percy, knight, died without issue, in 1648.

6. Sir Allan Percy was made knight of the Bath, in 1604, with Charles, duke of Albany, afterwards king Charles I. He married Mary*, daughter and heir of Sir John Fitz, of Fitzford, in Devonshire, but died without issue.

7. Sir Josceline Percy, being also concerned in the earl of Essex's insurrection, had, with Sir Charles his brother, his pardon in 44 Elizabeth, and died in 1631.

8. George Percy distinguished himself in the Low-Countries, wherein he had one of his fingers shot off, as his picture shews, in the possession of the duke of Northumberland; and was captain of a company in 1627. He died unmarried in 1632.

The three daughters were,

1. Anne, who died in her infancy.

2. Lucy, married first to Sir John Wotton, brother to Edward, lord Wotton; secondly to Sir Hugh Owen, of Anglesey.

3. Eleanor, married to Sir William Herbert, lord Powys, knight of the Bath, and nephew to William, earl of Pembroke.

The eldest son,

HENRY PERCY, succeeding his father in his estate, &c. was the ninth earl of Northumberland, &c. He took the first opportunity of signalizing his valour, by embarking on Dec. 8, 1585, with Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, for the Low Country wars. He was also one of those young noblemen, on the memorable threatened invasion of the Spaniards in 1588, that out of pure love to their country (as Camden writes) hiring ships at their own charge, joined the grand fleet of England, under Charles, lord Howard, lord high-admiral.

In 1593, 35 Eliz. his lordship was elected a knight companion of the most noble order of the Garter.

After this, the earl of Northumberland, being in 1601, at the siege of Ostend, and Sir Francis Vere, having been wanting in that respect, which he thought due to him, as well as having countenanced reports to his disadvantage, his lordship, on his arrival in England, in 1602, 44 Elizabeth, so far resented his treatment, that he sent Sir Francis a challenge, but the affair coming to the queen's ears, it pleased her majesty to lay an injunction on the earl, not to push his resentment into action.

In 2 James I. he was in commission with others of the council, to put the laws in execution against all jesuits, seminary priests, or other priests, made or ordained according to the order or rites of the Romish church, after the beginning of the reign of queen Elizabeth. About that time he was made captain of the band of gentlemen pensioners.

On Sunday May 5 following, on the christening of the princess Mary, at the court in Greenwich, which was performed with great solemnity, the earl of Northumberland bore the bason she was christened in; and the lady Arabella, and the countess of Northumberland, were godmothers.

But before the end of the year 1605, the gunpowder-treason plot was discovered, and Thomas Percy, a remote kinsman of the earls, being concerned therein (who was by him made one of the band of pensioners) and he being proved to be at Sion-House, the seat of the earl of Northumberland, the day before the terrible and inhuman tragedy was to be executed; that earl, only on suspicion, was commanded to keep his house, on November 7; "and after a while (as Stowe says) was committed to the custody of the lord archbishop of Canterbury [Richard Bancroft] at Lambeth; and on the 27th of the same month, was sent to the Tower."

On June 27 following, he was brought from the Tower into the Star-Chamber, before the lord-chancellor, the lords of his majesty's privy-council, and the judges of the realm: and there convicted of misprision, &c.

1. "For endeavouring to be the head of the papists, and to procure them toleration.

2. "For admitting Thomas Percy to be one of the king's gentlemen pensioners, without ministering to him the oath of supremacy, knowing the said Percy to be a recusant.

3. "Whereas the said earl, being and sitting in council, with the other lords, and saw apparent inducement, that the said Thomas Percy was a chief practiser and contriver of the most horrible treason new discovered; and the said earl being, by the good and just reason of the king and council, restrained and commanded to keep his house, yet the said earl wrote two letters into the north parts, unto his friends and servants, to have a care of his money and revenues; supposing the said

Granville, the king's general in the West, in the time of the rebellion.

Thomas Percy to be fled into those parts; negotiating them, to preserve the same from the hands of Thomas Percy, and to bring the said treasure up unto him; utterly neglecting to give any commandment for apprehending the said Thomas Percy, being known for so damnable and dangerous a traitor.

4. "In presuming to write, and send letters, after his restraint, without leave of his majesty, or his privy-council.

5. "That he being a privy-counsellor, sworn to preserve the king's majesty, and the state, to have more care of his treasure than of the king and state, without any endeavour to apprehend so dangerous a traitor, as he knew the said Percy was.

6. "Lastly, his letters into those parts, where Percy was fled, the said earl knowing, at the council-table, how the state of all things stood against him, was to give him a watch word, and intelligence, for his further flight and escape, &c.

"For the which, the said earl was adjudged to pay a fine, to the use of his majesty, of thirty thousand pounds, and to be displaced and removed from the place of a privy-counsellor, and from being captain of his majesty's pensioners, and from being lieutenant of any of his majesty's counties, and from all, and every other offices, which he held of his majesty's grace and favour; and hereafter to be disabled to take upon him, or exercise any of the said offices and places, and to return prisoner to the Tower of London, there to remain during his life."

A more severe sentence could hardly have been passed, without bereaving him of his life and all his estate; and without doubt, it much induced his son, Algernon, tenth earl of Northumberland, to espouse that party, which in the reign of Charles I. abolished the said tyrannical court of Star-chamber, the authority of which had subsisted by the ancient common laws of England, and was confirmed by statute in 1487, 3 Henry VII. from which time it continued in full force until 1641, when king Charles I. consented to its being entirely laid aside. It may justly be observed, as his lordship was at first only confined to his house, he would undoubtedly have made his escape, had he been conscious of the guilt he was charged with.

Although his fine was paid in 1614, yet it was not till the 18th of July, 1621, that he was discharged from the Tower; in which he had laid more than fifteen years together, as Camden observes; and that the great guns were discharged at his going out. Had not this imprisonment, in the prime of his life, been his cruel lot; in all probability he would have done his country the service, of preventing several invasions on the liberty of the subject. He was beneficent to all in distress; and so much an encourager of literature, arts, sciences, and the mathematics, that he allowed pensions to several learned men. Anthony Wood recites, "That the reverend Mr. Nathaniel Torporley, a noted mathematician, being known to the great earl of Northumberland, Henry Percy, the generous favourer of all good learning, was received into his patronage, and had a pension paid yearly unto him, several years, from his purse." The same author also gives this account; "Thomas Hariot went in 1584, with Sir Walter Raleigh, to Virginia, where he was employed in the discovery and surveying thereof &c. After his return into England, Sir Walter got him into the acquaintance of that noble and generous count, Henry, earl of Northumberland; who finding him a gentleman of an affable and peaceable nature, and well read in the obscure parts of learning, he did allow him a yearly pension of 120 l. About the same time, Robert Hues, and Walter Warner, two other mathematicians, who were known also to the said count, did receive from him yearly pensions also, but of less value; as did Torporley. So that when the said earl was committed prisoner to the Tower, in 1606, Hariot, Hues, and Warner, were his constant companions, and were usually called the earl of Northumberland's THREE MAGI. They had a table at the earl's charge; and the earl himself did constantly converse with them, and with Sir Walter Raleigh then in the Tower."

His lordship was created master of arts of the university of Oxford, on August 30, A. D. 1605, king James being then there; when the same degree was taken by Lodowick Stuart, duke of Richmond, Henry de Vere, earl of Oxford, and other noblemen. But in the list this mention is made of the earl: "Henry Percy, the most generous count of Northumberland, a great encourager of learning, and learned men, especially mathematicians, who, as well as others, have, in a high manner, celebrated his worth."

Wilson, in his life of king James I. relates, "That the lady Lucy Percy, the earl's youngest daughter, of incomparable beauty (solemnized in the poems of the most exquisite wits of her time) married the lord Haye (after earl of Carlisle) against her father's will (who aimed at a higher extraction) during his imprisonment; which the old earl's stubborn spirit not brooking, would never give her any thing; and Haye, whose affection was above money (setting only a valuation upon his much admired bride) strove to make himself meritorious, and prevailed so with the king, for his father-in-law, that he got his release." [They were married on November 6, A. D. 1617, and the king honoured the wedding with his presence at supper; and it was not till four years after that he was freed.] "But the old earl would hardly be drawn to take a release from his hand, so that when he had liberty, he restrained himself; and with importunity was wrought upon, by (such as knew the distemper of his body, might best qualify those of his mind) persuading him, for some indisposition, to make a journey to the Bath, which was one special motive to accept of his son-in-law's respects.

The stout old earl, when he was got loose, hearing that the great favourite, Buckingham, was drawn about with a coach and six horses (wondered at then, as a novelty, and imputed to him as a mastering pride) thought if Buckingham had six, he might very well have eight in his coach; with which he rode through the city of London to the Bath, to the vulgar talk, and admiration: and recovering his health there, he lived long after at Petworth, in Sussex." Thus far my author Wilson.

On his return from the Bath, he retired to his seat at Petworth, and was there visited by most of the first quality, and very rarely came to town. Towards the latter end of king James's reign, in August, A. D. 1620, there were, at one time, with him him at Petworth, the marquis of Buckingham (the great favourite of that king, and his son Charles I.) the earl of Suffolk, lord treasurer; William, earl of Pembroke, lord chamberlain; his brother, the earl of Montgomery; the lord Percy, his son; also his two sons-in-law, the lord viscount Lisle (afterwards earl of Leicester) and the viscount Doncaster (afterwards earl of Carlisle) Sir George Goring (afterwards earl of Norwich) Sir Henry Rich (afterwards earl of Holland) and several other knights and gentlemen.

In the fourth year of Charles I. he obtained a confirmation to himself, and the heirs male of his body, of the title and dignity of baron Percy, in such manner as any of his ancestors had enjoyed the same; and also as he did then (being earl of Northumberland) enjoy his place and precedence. And departing this life at Petworth, on November 5, A. D. 1632, 8 Car. I. was there buried.

His lordship married Dorothy, daughter of Walter Devereux, created earl of Essex (widow of Sir Thomas Perrot, Knt.) who was son of Richard, eldest son and heir of Walter, viscount Hereford, son and heir of John, viscount Hereford, by Cicely, sister and heir of Henry Bourchier, earl of Essex, son and heir of William, earl of Essex, by Anne, his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, sixth son of king Edward III. By which lady he had issue four sons, and two daughters.

Of the latter were,

1. Dorothy, born in 1598, married Robert Sidney, second earl of Leicester.

2. Lucy, married in the eighteenth year of her age, to James Haye, earl of Carlisle, by whom she had a daughter, Agnes, successively wedded to Sir George Preston, of Craigmillar, and James, earl of Glencairn. This lady Carlisle died November 5, 1660.

The sons were,

1. Henry Percy, } who died in their infancies.
2. Henry Percy, }
3. Algernon Percy, his successor.

4. Henry Percy, who on June 6, 1640, was constituted captain and governor of the isle of Guernsey, during life; and was created, at Oxford, lord Percy, of Alnwick, on June 28, 1643, 19 Car. I. He was a great favourite of Charles I's queen, as appears from the earl of Leicester's letter to him from Paris, on June 16, 1636; and from his letters to his lordship, during his embassy in France, which are printed in the letters and memorials of state of the Sidneys, published from the originals at Penshurst-Place, and from his majesty's office of papers and records of state.

This Henry, lord Percy, of Alnwick, was also much in favour with the king; and Whitlock relates, that on June 19, 1640, this lord (then a commoner) sitting with commissary Wilmot, and Ashburnham, in the house of commons, they murmured at the vote for taking 10,000*l.* off the 50,000*l.* appointed for the English army, and ordering it for the Scots; and that thereupon they put themselves into a junto of sworn secrecy to bring up the army. Lord Clarendon gives an account, that on Mr. Pym's mention for an address to the king, that he would permit none of his servants to go beyond the seas, some persons of near relation to his trust, immediately absented themselves; which were Mr. Percy, and Mr. Henry Jermyn (afterwards earl of St. Albans) who conveyed himself into France. But Mr. Percy delaying his journey on some occasion of his own, and concealing himself in some obscure place in Sussex, near to his brother the earl of Northumberland's house, was at last discovered; and when he endeavoured to have escaped, was set upon by the country people, and not without some hurt got from them, and was not heard of in some months. The author also recites, That it was generally believed, he found means to return to London, and put himself under his brother's protection, till his hurt was cured, and the strictness of the enquiry over. After that the earl of Northumberland produced a letter from him, which was delivered to the house; and thereupon, with the evidence of colonel Goring, "of a meeting at Mr. Percy's chamber; and of a discourse of the parliament's neglect of the king, and favouring the Scottish army; the taking an oath of secrecy;" and some envious dark glances, both in Mr. Goring's examination, and Mr. Percy's letter, as if they implied more than was expressed; so transported the hearers, that taking all was said to be proved, they quickly voted, "That there was a design to bring up the army to force the parliament;" and resolved to accuse Mr. Percy and Mr. Jermyn of high treason; and gave colonel Goring pulchick thanks, "for preserving the kingdom, and liberties of parliament."

"The truth is, (says the earl of Clarendon) that after his brother's being accused of high treason, and then upon his hurt in Sussex, coming directly to Northumberland-house, to shelter himself, the earl being in great trouble how to send him beyond the seas, after his wound was cured, advised with a confident friend, then in power, whose affection to him he doubted not, and who innocently brought Mr. Pym into the council, he (Mr. Pym) overwitted them both, by frankly consenting, "That Mr. Percy should escape into France," which was all the care the earl had; but then obliged him, "first to draw such a letter from him, as might by the party be applied as an evidence of the reality of the plot, after he was escaped;" and in this manner the letter was procured, which made a lasting quarrel between the two brothers; and made the earl more at the disposal of those persons whom he had trusted so far, than he had been before."

On the breaking out of the rebellion, lord Percy returned into England, and raised a regiment of horse for the king, and being constituted general of the ordnance, he attended his majesty through the whole course of the war.

He was made master of the horse to the prince of Wales; and when by the cruel martyrdom of his royal father, he became king, he made him lord chamberlain of his household; and being at Paris in 1652, when his majesty took leave of the queen, he was directed by the king, to introduce Sir Edward Hyde (afterwards earl of Clarendon) to her majesty, who had not, for some months, presumed to be in her presence; so that (as he says) he himself knew not how to make an advance towards it; and the lord Percy accordingly introduced him. He died at Paris 1658 unmarried.

We now return to his elder brother,

ALGERNON PERCY, tenth earl of Northumberland. He had his education in Christ-Church college, Oxford; and the famous Robert Hues, the mathematician, was his tutor. In 1616, he was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the creation of Charles prince of Wales, the second in precedence.

He

On the accession of king Charles I. he was called by writ to the house of peers, in his father's life-time, by the title of lord Percy.

In 1632, 8 Charles I. he succeeded his father in his honours and estate, being less than thirty years of age, as the earl of Clarendon writes, and that the king then took him "into his immediate and eminent care, and prosecuted him with all manner and demonstration of respect, and kindness; and (as he heard his majesty himself say) courted him as his mistress, and conversed with him as a friend, without the least interruption, or intermission of any possible favour and kindness."

In 1633, he attended Charles I. into Scotland, in order to his coronation; at which he was present, on June 18, that year, being one of the privy-council. On May 13, 1635, 11 Charles I. he was installed one of the knights of the most noble order of the Garter, with great magnificence; proceeding from Dorset-House, in Salisbury-Court, to Windsor, in great pomp and glory, as observed by Mr. Ashmole.

In 1636, he had the command of a royal fleet of sixty sail, and destroyed the Dutch buffes that were fishing on our coasts. He first required them to forbear, and, on their refusal, he took some, and sunk others. Thereupon the Dutch sued to him to mediate with the king, that they might by permission fish on our coast; and for that summer, agreed to give the king thirty-thousand pounds, which was paid accordingly. After this service at sea, he was, on March 30, 1637, 13 Charles I. constituted lord high-admiral of England; and, in 15 Charles I. captain-general of the army, then raised by the king, upon his expedition into Scotland; but being taken with a dangerous sickness, so that his physicians despaired of his recovery, he found no possibility to enter on his command; and the want of his service was very fatal to the king's affairs in the North. The earl of Clarendon relates, that then the "bulk and burden of state affairs, whereby the envy attending them likewise, lay principally on the archbishop of Canterbury, the earl of Strafford, and the lord Cottington, the earl of Northumberland for ornament, the lord bishop of London, by his place (being lord high-treasurer of England) and the two secretaries, Sir Henry Vane, and Sir Francis Windebank, for service and communication of intelligence. These were reproachfully called the Junto, and enviously at court, the Cabinet-Council." At the trial of the earl of Strafford, in 1641, when Sir Henry Vane asserted, that the king calling on his council, to know what course he should take, and that the earl should say, "You have an army in Ireland, with which you may reduce this kingdom;" the earl of Northumberland, on examination, said, he did not remember these words; only, "You have done your duty, and are now absolved from the rules of government."

It appears by this earl of Northumberland's letters, in the memorials of state of the Sidney family, that after his expedition at sea, in 1636, he had a command from the king, for the discovery of some abuses in the navy; in which, as he writes, on November 16, he was daily busied; and having undertaken the work, it concerned him to attend it diligently, till he had perfected it, being certain to meet with much opposition; and was appointed general of the army to act against the Scots, before February 13, that year; for then, in a letter of that date to the earl of Leicester at Paris, he acquaints him, "That his commission gives him power to appoint all the commanders of the army, without excepting any; and that no money will be taken for commissions, as was usual heretofore in Holland." He also acquaints the earl of Leicester, That he had raised two troops of horse-guards; one of a hundred cuirassiers, the other of sixty carabiniers, and that he had given out commissions for the present raising of two thousand horse. In the commissions which his lordship signed, his titles are as follow; "Algeron, earl of Northumberland, lord of the honours of Cockermouth and Petworth, lord Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Bryan, and Latimer, knight of the most noble order of the Garter, lord high-admiral of England, Ireland, and Wales, and of the dominions and isles of the same; of the town of Caes, and marches of the same; of Normandy, Gascoigne, and Aquitaine; lord general of the navy and seas of the said kingdoms of England and Ireland; one of the lords of his majesty's most honourable privy-council; lord lieutenant of Northumberland, Cumberland, and Westmoreland; and captain-general of the army to act against the Scots."

On the dissolution of the parliament that met on April 13, 1640, he writes to the earl of Leicester, May 7, "Notwithstanding this dissolution, the king intends vigorously to pursue his former design, and to levy the same army of thirty thousand foot, and three thousand horse. About three weeks hence, they are to be drawn together; but as yet I cannot learn by what means we are to get one shilling, towards defraying this expence. What will the world judge of us abroad, to see us enter into such an action as this, not knowing how to maintain it for one month! It grieves my soul to be involved in these councils; and the sense I have of the miseries that are like to ensue, is held by some a disaffection in me; but I regard little what those persons say." In another of July 10, he writes, "We are now almost in the middle of July, and yet have I no more certainty of the time, when I shall be going into the North, than I had at Christmas." Likewise on August 6, he informs his lordship, "Being commanded suddenly into the North; and now upon the disbanding my lord Hamilton's regiments, I am so extremely full of business; and am so tired, that I am scarce able to hold up my head."

He was immediately after taken dangerously ill; and the king took on himself to be generalissimo, as Whitlock writes; and that about August 20, he went out of London. The earl of Clarendon recites, That the earl's recovery was totally despaired of, or to be expected very slowly; whereupon he sent to the king, to desire he would make choice of another general.

On October 15, he writes from Sion, "It will be a hard matter in this cause, to persuade the parliament to supply the king, for maintaining of a war against these rebels; and then a peace must necessarily ensue, which I fear will be the most

dishonourable one to the king, that ever prince gave to his subjects. Never man hath been so used, as the king our master, in all the councils that have been given him this war, by those persons whose judgments he only trusted, for the governing of these affairs. But I hope he now finds it, and will, by his wisdom, prevent being drawn any more into the like mischiefs."

We have recited these passages from his lordship's letters, as they shew his integrity and disposition to serve his country; and Clarendon asserts, "That this earl of Northumberland was then arrived at a wonderful general estimation." His lordship was one of the commissioners who concluded, with the Dutch commissioners, the treaty of marriage between the princess Mary, daughter of Charles I. and William prince of Orange, which was solemnized at Whitehall, May 2, 1641.

At the latter end of the year 1641, both houses of parliament sent to the earl of Northumberland, high-admiral of England, "That they had received advertisement of extraordinary preparations made by the neighbouring princes, both by sea and land; by which they apprehended the publick honour and safety of his majesty, and his kingdom, could not be secured, unless a timely course was taken, for putting the kingdom into a condition of defence at sea, as well as at land. And therefore ordered him, to fit all the royal navy for the sea; and that his lordship would also make known to the masters, and owners of other ships, in any of the harbours of the kingdom, as might be of use for the publick defence, that it would be an acceptable service to the king and parliament, if they would do the like." To this the earl returned an answer of submission and obedience.

In the beginning of the spring, when the fleet was provided, the house of commons, after they had excepted against such persons to be captains of ships, as they thought not devoted to them, sent a formal message to the lords, "That the earl of Northumberland, lord admiral, might be moved to constitute the earl of Warwick his admiral of the fleet for that year's service." Thereupon the lords thought fit, that the king's approbation might be first desired, before it was recommended to the earl of Northumberland; but the commons thought it superfluous, since the officers of the fleet were absolutely in the earl's disposal; and therefore refused to send to the king, but of themselves sent to both the earls; and Robert Rich, earl of Warwick, without waiting the king's consent, declared, "He was ready to undertake the employment." This being publickly agitated, the king ordered secretary Nicholas to write to the earl of Northumberland, "That his majesty expected Sir John Pennington should command that fleet, as he had done two or three years before." This letter being communicated to both houses, by the lord admiral; the house of commons, rather out of kindness and respect to the earl, than of duty to the king (as the noble author writes) condescended to join with the lords, in a message to his majesty; which they sent to the lord-keeper Lyttleton, on March 28, recommending the earl of Warwick for that service. But the king not complying, and thereupon the earl of Northumberland receiving the order and desire of both lords and commons, to grant his commission to the earl of Warwick to be admiral of that fleet, thought himself excused towards the king; and did it accordingly; the two houses representing to the king the necessity and conveniency of their proceeding.

The king, though displeased with the earl of Northumberland, yet did not think it advisable to revoke his lord admiral's commission, as the noble author writes; and could not at that time, with conveniency or safety to his affairs, displace his lordship. However, the king expressed so much dislike to the earl of Warwick's commanding the fleet, that he was not willing any officers he valued should take employment under him. But soon after, one of the king's ships, in the execution of his commands, being chased by the said fleet as an enemy, "made such a noise in all places, even to his reproach and dishonour, that he could not longer defer the revoking of the earl of Northumberland's commission of high-admiral of England; and to send the revocation to him under the great seal of England." The earl of Clarendon writes: "His delivering the fleet into the hands and command of the earl of Warwick, after his majesty had expressly refused it to the parliament, the king could not easily forgive; however, he thought it not then seasonable to resent it, because he had nothing to object against him, but his compliance with the command of the parliament, who would have owned it as their own quarrel; and must have obliged the earl, to put his whole interest into their hands, and to have run their fortunes; to which he was naturally too much inclined."

The king sent his revocation to the earl, by one of his pages, who reached London the evening after the houses of parliament were risen; and delivering the king's letter, and the discharge of his commission, to his lordship, "he, with all shews of duty and submission (as the noble author asserts) expressed his resolution to obey his majesty; and a hearty sorrow, that he had, by any misfortune, incurred his displeasure." That being quickly known to those who were more concerned in it, they were exceedingly perplexed; and earnestly pressed the earl of Northumberland, "That notwithstanding such his majesty's revocation, he would still continue the execution of his office of lord high admiral; in which they would assist him with their utmost and full power, and authority." But his lordship alledging, "That it would ill become him, who had received that charge from the king, to continue the possession thereof against his express pleasure (there being a clause in his grant, that it should be only during such time as his majesty thought fit to use his service) utterly refused to meddle further in it." Thereupon the parliament passed an ordinance, "appointing the earl of Warwick admiral, with as full and ample authority, as he before had from the earl of Northumberland."

His lordship's conduct in those melancholly times, has been by different historians differently explained.

The character lord Clarendon has given of him is as follows:

"Of those who were of the king's council, and who stayed and acted with the parliament, the earl of Northumberland may well be reckoned the chief, in respect of the antiquity of his family, his great fortune and estate, and the general reputation he had amongst the greatest men, and his great interest,

by being high-admiral of England. Though he was of a family, that had lain under frequent blemishes of want of fidelity to the crown, and his father had been long a prisoner in the Tower, under suspicion of having some knowledge of the gun-powder treason; and after he was set at liberty, by the mediation and credit of the earl of Carlisle, who had, without and against his consent, married his daughter, he continued to his death under such a restraint, that he had not liberty to live and reside upon his northern estate. Yet this lord's father was no sooner dead, than the king poured out his favours upon him in a wonderful measure." He then gives an account of his preferments (which we have recited in order of time) wherein he has made some mistakes; as to his being elected knight of the Garter, before he was made of the privy-council, or lord-admiral. "Which, he says, was such a quick succession of bounties and favours, as had rarely befallen any man, who had not been attended with the envy of a favourite. He was, in all his deportment, a very great man, and that which looked like formality, was a punctuality in preserving his dignity, from the invasion and intrusion of bold men, which no man of that age so well preserved himself from. Though his notions were not large, or deep, yet his temper and reservedness in speaking, got him the reputation of an able, and wise man: which he made evident in the excellent government of his family, where no man was more absolutely obeyed; and no man had ever fewer idle words to answer for; and in debates of importance, he always expressed himself very pertinently. If he had thought the king as much above him, as he thought himself above other considerable men, he would have been a good subject; but the extreme undervaluing those, and not enough valuing the king, made him liable to the impressions, which they who approached him by those addresses of reverence, and esteem, that usually insinuate into such natures, made in him. So that after he was first prevailed on, not to do that, which in honour and gratitude he was obliged to, (which is a very pestilent corruption) he was, with the more facility, led to concur in what, in duty and fidelity, he ought not to have done; and so concurred in all the counsels, which produced the rebellion, and stayed with them to support it." To this last part, it should be remembered, that he complied with the revocation of his commission of lord high-admiral, with all submissive duty to the king; and absolutely refused to act in that commission, by order of parliament; as the said noble author had before recited.

In the design in 1643, called Waller's plot, for engaging the city of London to the king, the earl of Northumberland, and the earl of Portland, were apprized of it by Waller; who on his examination, being asked who were acquainted with it, he cleared Whitlock, and others; but said, the earl of Northumberland had expressed very good wishes to any attempt, that might give a stop to the violent proceedings of the houses, and produce a good understanding with the king: however, the accusation of the earl of Northumberland was proceeded tenderly in; for tho' the violent party was heartily incensed against him, as a man weary of them; yet his reputation was still very great, so that they did not presume to question him. After this the earl, with leave of the house, retired for his health (as then said) to his seat at Petworth, in Suffex, which was near enough to be infested from some of the king's quarters, if he had not some assurance of being safe there.

In 1644, he was the first named by the house of lords, with three other peers, as commissioners with eight commoners, for a treaty of peace with the king, to be negotiated at Uxbridge, with commissioners named by his majesty.

It is confessed by both parties, that the earl of Northumberland was sincere in his inclinations to the king, and hearty in promoting a pacification; but it was a great discouragement to his endeavours, as well as a hindrance to his designs, that the king would never consent to any one proposition made by the parliament.

On April 15, 1645, both houses agreed upon a committee of six lords, and twelve commoners, to manage the affairs of the admiralty; and among the lords, the earl of Northumberland was named; but that he acted therein, does not appear. On the 17th of May following, the lords sent an order for the earl of Northumberland, and his counsellors, to take care of the king's children, and for the funeral of the countess of Dorset, who had been their governess. To which the commons concurred, and ordered money for her funeral, and for arrears to the servants of the children. Also June 23, he had three thousand pounds per annum allowed him for them. The earl of Clarendon gives this account: "That the earl of Northumberland received and treated them, in all respects, as was suitable to their birth, and his own duty; but could give them no more liberty to go abroad, than he was, in his instructions from the parliament, permitted to do; and they absolutely refused to gratify the king, in seeing them."

On the debate about propositions for a treaty of peace, December 1, 1646, the house of commons voted, That the earl of Northumberland should be made a duke; and the king sending letters to both houses, that he desired a personal treaty with the houses of parliament at Westminster, and that he was willing to commit the trust of the militia for such time, and with such power, as expressed by his commissioners at Uxbridge; had therefore nominated several to that trust, which if not satisfactory, he offered to name one half, and the parliament to name the other half. And among those the king nominated, was the earl of Northumberland. But on debating this the 30th of December, they voted, that the militia should remain in the hands of both houses of parliament, as then it was; and that the propositions for peace should be sent to the king by bills. Yet this, like the other treaties, came to no conclusion.

On the surrender of Oxford to the parliament, on articles, June 20, 1646, it was stipulated, that the duke of York (the king's second son) should have an honourable convoy to London, where other of his majesty's children are; and accordingly was met by the earl of Northumberland, and conveyed in fitting state to St. James's. On August 27, 1646, the house agreed, that the earl of Northumberland might remove the king's children to Sion-House, by reason of the sickness in London; and ordered the earl to take care, and give give directions, that none of the king's party should be admitted to come to them, to give them ill council. On the 17th of December following, the lords desired the concurrence of the commons, that the earl of Northumberland be made lord lieutenant of Yorkshire, in the room of the earl of Essex, who died at Essex-house, in London, two days before. On October 17, the houses ordered that the marquis of Hertford, his lady, or others, who had seized money, or writings, in Essex-house, should restore them to the earl of Northumberland, the earl of Warwick, and Mr. Solicitor St. John, executors to the said earl of Essex. On November 17, the houses voted an allowance of seven thousand five hundred pounds per annum, for the maintenance of the duke of York; and that the earl of Northumberland should chuse his servants: but on the 22d of December ensuing, he informed the house of peers of a design he had discovered, of stealing the duke of York from him, and had apprehended two persons, that were concerned therein. On the 19th of January following, he had an order for ten thousand pounds, out of the compositions, in recompence of his losses in the North, by the king's troops, during the war.

The next mention we find of the earl, is, that July 15, 1647, he had an order to accompany the king's children to visit his majesty, who earnestly desired to see them, and that they might dine with him at Maidenhead the next day. His majesty was then in custody of the army, and was quartered only where they pleased.

The earl, on the 28th of October, 1647, desired leave that he might, when he thought proper, carry the king's children to his majesty, which the houses granted. And the earl of Clarendon recites, "They had liberty to attend his majesty, when he pleased; so that sometimes he sent for them to come to Hampton-Court, and sometimes he went to them at Sion, which gave him great satisfaction." The duke of York was then about fourteen years of age, the princess Elizabeth not above a year or two younger, and the duke of Gloucester about seven years old. His majesty's instructions to them are mentioned by the earl of Clarendon.

After the king had made his escape from Hampton-Court, the earl of Northumberland, with four other earls, were, December 14, 1647, sent to his majesty, as commissioners from the house of peers, to present four bills to the king, in the Isle of Wight.

On the first of September, 1648, the earl was one of the five commissioners, named by the lords, to treat with the king in the Isle of Wight, upon the propositions presented to him at Hampton-Court; and ten commissioners were nominated, on the part of the house of commons. These negotiated that memorable treaty in the Isle of Wight, wherein the earl of Northumberland laboured to bring matters to a successful end.

In 1649, the earl of Northumberland being desirous of surrendering his trust of the custody of the duke of Gloucester, and the princess Elizabeth, he procured his sister, the countess of Leicester, to have the government of them; and thereupon they were removed to Penshurst, a house of the earl of Leicester's in Kent; and on the 11th of June, that year, the earl of Northumberland moved, that she might have the allowance for their maintenance, which was referred to the committee of the revenue.

His lordship, from the murder of king Charles the First, lived retired, for the most part, at Perworth; expecting a favourable opportunity for the restoration of king Charles the Second. And when general Monk had marched from Scotland, and had taken his quarters at Whitehall, he invited him to Northumberland-House, to a conference with him.

On the meeting of the parliament, the lords, who during the usurpation had not met in their house, again resumed their seats there. On the 26th of April, 1660, the earl of Northumberland, the earl of Oxford, the earls of Rutland, Lincoln, and Dorset, the viscount Say and Sele, the lord Wharton, and the lord Gray of Wark, were appointed a committee to frame an ordinance, for the constituting a committee of safety of both houses, and report the same to the house. The day after, April 27, they ordered a conference with the house of commons, "to consider of some ways and means, to make up the breaches and distractions of the kingdom;" and also appointed a committee, "to consider of the privileges of their own house." The earl of Northumberland was in these, and other committees, in that critical time, when it is well known the lords influenced general Monk, and had a great share in the happy settlement of the kingdom.

On the 11th of August, 1660, he was constituted lord-lieutenant, and custos rotulorum of the county of Sussex; and on the 7th of September following, lord-lieutenant of the county of Northumberland.

He was likewise commissioned, with James duke of Ormond, lord-steward of the household, the earl of Lindsey, lord great chamberlain, the earl of Suffolk, earl-marshal, and Edward, earl of Manchester, lord-chamberlain of the household, for the making knights of the Bath at the king's coronation; on which day he performed the office of lord high-constable of England. And his lordship, with the earl of Berkshire, being (except the earl of Salisbury) the only two knights of the Garter that had been installed, and were living at the restoration of the king, they were commissioned to instal his royal highness James duke of York, at Windsor, on the first feast of St. George, held after the king's return.

His lordship sought for no employment in the state, chusing to retire, in the summer, to his seat at Perworth, delighting in his gardens and plantations there; but lived in town during the winter-season, and was constant in his attendance in parliament.

He took to wife, Anne, daughter of William Cecil, earl of Salisbury; which lady died on the 6th of December, 1637. He had issue by her five daughters:

1. Catharine, } who died young.
2. Dorothy, }
3. Anne, married to Philip Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield.
4. Elizabeth, wife to Arthur Capel, earl of Essex.
5. Lucy.

The earl of Northumberland, by his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter to Theophilus, earl of Suffolk, (who survived him many years, dying on the 11th of March, 1704-5, aged ninety-seven) had issue:

Josceline,

Josceline Percy, his only son and successor. As also a daughter, Elizabeth, who died in her childhood.

His lordship departed this life on the 13th of October, 1668, was buried at Petworth; and was succeeded in his honours and estate, by JOSCELINE PERCY, the eleventh earl of Northumberland, who married, in the life-time of his father, Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Thomas earl of Southampton, who was lord high-treasurer of England, and died May 16, 1667: whereupon, the same year, this Josceline, then lord Percy, was constituted in his place lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Southampton.

On the death of his father, in 1668, as aforesaid, he on the 9th of November, the same year, was constituted lord-lieutenant, and custos rotulorum of the county of Northumberland. But travelling, with his countess, into France and Italy, he departed this life at Turin, on the 21st of May, 1670, and was brought to England, and interred at Petworth. His lady was secondly married to Ralph, duke of Montagu. His lordship had issue, by the said Elizabeth his wife, an only son, Henry, who died an infant.

And two daughters:

1. Elizabeth, who was four years of age at his decease, of whom hereafter.

2. Henrietta, who died soon after her baptism.

Upon the death of this Josceline, earl of Northumberland, without issue male, that title became extinct: but one James Percy, who came out of Ireland, having petitioned the house of peers, setting forth his claim to the title of earl of Northumberland; their lordships, on the 28th of March, 1673, on his refusing to make appear any probability towards the said claim, notwithstanding a month's time had been given him, and above forty witnesses had been sworn at the bar; and heard the elder countess of Northumberland's counsel, who charged the said James Percy to be an impostor; the house resolved, that the petitions of the said Percy should be dismissed their house. When rejected by the lords, he carried on his pretensions at common law, but had no success, being generally reputed an impostor.

The titles of baroness Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Bryan, and Latimer, devolved on the before-mentioned

ELIZABETH, only daughter and heir of the said Josceline, earl of Northumberland. Her ladyship was married, at the latter end of 1679, to Henry Cavendish, earl of Ogle, only son and heir to Henry, duke of Newcastle: and by agreement before marriage, his lordship bore the name and arms of Percy; but he departed this life on the first of November, 1680, and was buried at Petworth. She was secondly claimed in marriage by Thomas Thynne, of Longleat in the county of Wilts, Esq; who was on that account murdered by the contrivance of count Conningmark, the 12th of February, 1681.

On the 30th of May, 1682, she was married to his grace, Charles Seymour, duke of Somerset, of whom we have already treated, but shall here observe, that he had issue by her grace, three sons, and four daughters. (See vol. I. p. 154.)

We must, however, treat of her grace's eldest son,

ALGERNON, duke of SOMERSET, who bore in his father's life time, the title of earl of Hertford; and before he came of age, was returned for Marlborough to the parliament summoned to meet June 14, 1705; and in every parliament after, was constantly chosen for the said place; as well as knight of the shire for the county of Northumberland, till he took his seat in the house of peers, by the title of lord Percy, in 1722; his noble mother dying, November 23, that year, who being sole daughter and heir of Josceline, the eleventh earl of Northumberland, was, in her own right, baroness Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Brian, and Latimer; which baronies, on her decease, devolved on him.

His grace, on the death of Charles, earl of Dorset, in 1705, was constituted lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Suffex.

In 1708, he made the campaign as a volunteer in Flanders, and was present at the glorious victory obtained over the French at Oudenard, and at the taking of Lisle; wherein he so far signalized himself, that the duke of Marlborough sent his lordship express, with the account of his success, as published in our Gazette, No. 4492, "St. James's, November 26. This afternoon the right hon. the earl of Hertford, arrived here express from his grace the duke of Marlborough to her majesty, with an account, that his grace had passed the Scheld, and relieved the town of Brussels, which was besieged by the late elector of Bavaria. His lordship was received by the queen with great distinction."

In 1709, he served again, as a volunteer, at the taking of Tournay; also in the famous battle of Blarennies, and the reduction of the strong city of Mons, the capital of Hainault, which concluded that glorious campaign. Whereupon, in consideration of his valour and merit, he was constituted, October 23, 1706, colonel of a regiment of foot; and afterwards served every campaign in the Netherlands, till the conclusion of the peace at Utrecht. And her majesty queen Anne, in regard of his signal services, constituted him governor of Tinmouth-Castle and Clifford-Fort.

In the first year of George I. he was constituted colonel and captain of the second troop of horse-guards, lord of the bed-chamber to his royal highness George prince of Wales, our late most gracious sovereign; and continued in his government of Tinmouth Castle, and Clifford-Fort, as lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county Suffex.

On the decease of the duke of Kingston, March 5, 1725-6, his lordship was appointed custos rotulorum for the county of Wilts.

On the 19th of March, 1726-7, he was promoted to the rank of a brigadier-general of his majesty's forces. And on the 11th of November, 1735, constituted major-general of the horse.

On the 26th of September, 1737, his grace was made governor of Minorca, and of the town and garrison of Port Mahon; also July 2, 1739, was declared lieutenant-general of the horse.

On the 6th of May, 1740, he was made colonel of his majesty's royal regiment of horse-guards; of which he was colonel to the time of his decease. And quitting his government of Minorca, he was, March 13, 1741-2, appointed governor of the island of Guernsey and Castle-cornet, and all other islands and forts thereunto belonging.

On the 24th of March, 1746-7, he was constituted general of the horse; and December 2, 1748, succeeded his father in the title of duke of Somerset, &c. And his majesty was pleased, by letters-patent, dated October 2, 1749, (23 George II.) to grant unto his Grace, the dignities of a baron and earl of the kingdom of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title, of baron Warkworth, of Warkworth-castle, in the county of Northumberland, and earl of Northumberland: to hold the same to him, and the heirs male of his body; and in default of such issue, to Sir Hugh Smithson, of Stanwick, in the county of York, bart. (son-in-law to his grace) and to the heirs male of his body, by the lady Elizabeth Smithson, his present wife, (daughter of the said duke of Somerset) and in default of such issue, the dignities of baroness of Warkworth, of Warkworth-castle, and countess of Northumberland, to her ladyship; and of baron Warkworth, and earl of Northumberland, to her heirs male.

His majesty was also pleased to grant unto his grace, by letters-patent, dated October 3, the same year, the dignities of a baron and earl, of the kingdom of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title of baron of Cockermouth, in the county of Cumberland, and earl of Egremont, in the said county: to hold the same to him, and the heirs male of his body; and in default of such issue, to his nephew Sir Charles Wyndham, of Orchard-Wyndham, in the county of Somerset, bart. and the heirs male of his body; and, in default of such issue, to Percy Wyndham Obrian, of Shortgrove, in the county of Essex, esquire, (brother to the said Sir Charles Wyndham, and nephew to the said duke of Somerset) and to the heirs male of his body.

His grace was many years president of the society of antiquaries; and having been long afflicted with the gout, departed this life at Percy-lodge, near Colnbrook, on the 7th of February, 1749-50, without heir male; and was buried in St. Nicholas's chapel, in Westminster-abbey.

His grace married Frances Thynne, eldest of the two daughters and coheirs of the honourable Henry Thynne, esquire, only son of Thomas, lord viscount Weymouth: by which lady (who was of the bedchamber to her late majesty, and served her in the same place when princess of Wales) he had an only daughter, Elizabeth, and an only son, George, lord viscount Beauchamp, born September 11, 1725, who had king George I. and Henry, earl of Thomond, for his godfathers, and her late majesty, (then princess of Wales) for his godmother. This young nobleman was so amiable in his person and address, and of so sweet a disposition, as endeared him to all that had the honour to know him; and, in the little time he lived, showed an excellent turn of thought, far above his years, and a behaviour, in all respects, that could not fail of rendering him an ornament to his country, and a shining example to posterity.

His lordship, after a most accomplished education, had an ardent desire to improve himself by travel, and his noble parents condescending to his request, he embarked at Dover, the 14th of October, 1742, and landing at Calais, went directly to Paris, and from thence to the south parts of France.

At Toulon, the marquis de Mirepoix, commandant in Provence, sent the town-major to shew him the city, with all their naval stores; and going on board the Spanish admiral, he was received with all honours due to his illustrious birth and merits. His lordship returned to Lyons in October, and after three weeks stay there, set out for Geneva. From thence he travelled through Switzerland, into Italy, visiting the most noted cities and towns. He arrived at Bologna, the 22d of July, N. S. 1744, and there (after four days illness of the small-pox) departed this life, on the 11th of September, being nineteen years old that day. The just and refined observations he made in his travels, which he constantly remitted to England, to his noble parents, are proofs of an uncommon genius, and a solid judgment, very rarely met with in a person of his age: so that it may truly be said, his death was a real loss to the public, and was extremely bewailed by his relations. The war preventing his conveyance through France, it was the year after before his corpse could be brought into England, in one of his majesty's ships; and was interred in Westminster-abbey, July 6, 1745.

Her grace surviving the duke, lived retired at Percy-Lodge, where she died on the 7th of July, 1754, and was buried near his grace, in St. Nicholas's chapel, in Westminster-abbey, the 20th of the same month. Their graces lived together in all harmony and conjugal affection; were affable to all their friends and acquaintance; and through the whole tenor of their lives, behaved with becoming spirit and dignity.

(Present Baroness.) ELIZABETH, was married July 16, 1740, to Sir Hugh Smithson, of Stanwick, in the county of York, baronet, who, on his grace's decease, succeeded him in his honours of baron Warkworth, of Warkworth-castle, in Northumberland, and earl of Northumberland: and her ladyship, by descent, is baroness Percy, &c. being lineally heiress to the baronies of Percy, Lucy, Poynings, Fitz-Payne, Bryan, and Latimer; by the intermarriages of her ancestors, with the several heirs of those baronies.

For what is further necessary to be said of this lady, and her issue, we refer the reader to the account of her noble consort, his grace, the duke of Northumberland. (See vol. ii. p. 181.)

For ARMS, CREST, MOTTO, SUPPORTERS, and CHIEF SEATS, see vol. ii. p. 181.

1. Walter, his ſon and heir.
2. Richard de Clifford, lord of Frampton, in the county of Glouceſter, from whom deſcended thoſe of that place.

Roger Clifford, a great baron, famous for his valour and experience in military affairs, who was at leaſt eighty-fix years old when he died, in 1286, and was buried in Dore-Abbey, in the county of Hereford.

He was governor of Marlborough and Ludgerſhall caſtles in Wiltſhire, 1268; governor of Erdeſley-Caſtle, in Herefordſhire, 1277; and juſticiar of all Wales, 1280. His ſon by his lady the counteſs of Lorrain, was alſo

ROGER DE CLIFFORD, renowned for his ſkill and magnanimity in the wars in Henry the Third, and Edward the Firſt's days; and being in the Welch wars, he was ſlain on St. Leonardy's day, 1283 (his father then alive) in the iſle of Angleſey, and was there interred.

He married Iſabel, eldeſt daughter and co-heir of Robert de Vipont, lord of Westmoreland, and, in her right, held Brougham-Caſtle in Westmoreland, part of which he built and repaired, cauſing this inſcription to be cut in ſtone over the door of the inward gate : THIS MADE ROGER.

By his wife aforeſaid he had iſſue,

(Firſt Lord) ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, his ſon and heir, born about Eaſter 1274, who was couſin and heir of Ralph de Gaugi, baron of Sheſemuth; as alſo of Richard Fitz-John, a great baron in Effex. He was ſheriff of Westmoreland, a juſtice of the forests north of Trent, 1297; governor of Nottingham-Caſtle, 1298; king's lieutenant and captain-general in Cumberland, Westmoreland, Lancaster, and the marches towards Scotland, 1299; was ſummoned to parliament December 29, 1300, 28 Edward I. and alſo from that time to 1314. He was earl-marſhal in England 1307.

He

He was a martial man, and, being often engaged against the Scots, at length was slain at the battle of Striveling, or Bannockburne, 25 June, 1314; and, as supposed, was buried at Shapp Abbey in Westmoreland.

He married Maud, daughter and coheir of Thomas de Clare (son of Richard de Clare) steward of Waltham-Forest, and left issue two sons: of which,

(Second Lord.) ROGER DE CLIFFORD, the eldest, was born February 2, 1299, succeeded his father in his lands and honours. He was sheriff of Westmoreland, and had summons to parliament in 1319, and 1320. He was beheaded at York with Thomas earl of Lancaster, 1327; and, leaving no issue, Robert de Clifford, his brother, succeeded him. Which,

(Third Lord.) ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, was born on All-Saints day 1305, and built some part of Skipton-Castle, which had suffered much by the Scots. He was once in the wars in Scotland, in company with the earl of Warwick and other lords. He was sheriff of Westmoreland, warden of the marches of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and heir to his great aunt, Idonea, one of the daughters and coheirs of Robert de Vipont.

He was married in Berkley-Castle, anno 2 Edward III. to Isabel, only daughter to Maurice lord Berkley, of Berkley-Castle, in the county of Gloucester; with whom he had a thousand pounds and fifty marks as her portion.

By her, who died July 25, 1362, he had issue four sons:

1. Robert de Clifford,
2. Roger de Clifford,
3. John de Clifford,
4. Sir Thomas de Clifford.

This nobleman departed this life on the 20th of May, 1340, and was succeeded by his eldest son, (Fourth Lord.) ROBERT DE CLIFFORD, who was sheriff of Westmoreland. He married Eufemia, daughter of Ralph lord Nevill; but by her, who died 1395, had no issue. Dying in France 1362, he was succeeded in the honours of the family by his brother, (Fifth Lord.) ROGER DE CLIFFORD, who is recorded to have been "one of the wisest and gallantest of the Cliffords," and was twenty-eight years of age at the time of the last Lord's death. He was often in the wars of Scotland, as well as in France; and went with the earl of Arundel to sea, at the time he was sent in aid of the duke of Brittany against the French.

He was sheriff of Westmoreland, joint-guardian of the west marches of Cumberland and Westmoreland in 1370; warden of the west marches, sheriff of Cumberland, and governor of Carlisle-Castle 1376. By his wife Maud (daughter of Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick) who died 1399, he had issue three daughters. Mary, married to Sir Philip Wentworth, of Wentworth-Woodhouse, knight; Margaret, married to Peter lord Mauley; and Catherine, the wife of Ralph baron Greystock. Also three sons,

1. Thomas de Clifford.
2. Sir William de Clifford, who was governor of Berwick. In 1413, he was constable of Bourdeaux. He married Anne, daughter and coheir of Thomas lord Bardolf, but died without issue 1419.

3. Sir Lewis Clifford, ancestor to the Cliffords barons Clifford, of Chudleigh. (See the account of the present lord Clifford, of Chudleigh.)

This nobleman departed this life on the 13th of July 1390, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

(Sixth Lord.) THOMAS DE CLIFFORD, who was appointed sheriff of Westmoreland, a knight of the king's chamber, and governor of Carlisle-Castle for life; also warden of the east marches. He was summoned to parliament, 1390, 1391, and 1392; in which last year he died on the 4th of October. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir to Thomas lord Roos, of Hamlake, by whom he left issue a daughter, Matilda, who married first Richard earl of Cambridge; secondly John Nevil lord Latimer. And,

(Seventh Lord.) JOHN DE CLIFFORD, his son, who succeeded in the third year of his age. He was sheriff of Westmoreland, and had summons to parliament from 13 Henry IV. to 8 Henry V. on the 3d of May, the ninth of Henry V. was created a knight of the Garter, and was slain at the siege of Meaux in France the 13th of March following, being about thirty-three years of age. He married Elizabeth, daughter to Henry Percy, commonly called Hotspur, (by his wife Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edmund Mortimer, third earl of March, by his wife Philippa Plantagenet, only daughter and heir to Lionel duke of Clarence, second son of king Edward III.) by her who married secondly Ralph Nevill, earl of Westmoreland, and died October 26, 1437, he had issue an only son and successor, (Eighth Lord.) THOMAS, lord Clifford, who was sheriff of Westmoreland 1422, joint-bailiff and escheator of Staincliffe in Yorkshire 1477. He had summons to parliament from 15 to 31 of Henry VI. and taking part with the king, was slain in the battle of St. Alban's, May 22, 1454, aged forty. He married Joan, daughter of Thomas lord Dacres, of Gilleland, and had issue by her four sons and five daughters. The latter were:

1. Maud, married first to Sir Thomas Harrington, secondly to Edmund lord Dudley.
2. Ann, married first Sir Richard Tempest, knight; secondly Sir Richard Conyers, knight.
3. Jane, married to Sir Simon Musgrave, of Hartley-Castle in Westmoreland, from whom the Musgraves of that place are descended.

4. Elizabeth, married to William Plumpton, of Plumpton-Castle, and died 1461.

5. Margaret, married to Sir Robert Car, of Sleaford, in Lincolnshire.

The sons were:

1. John de Clifford.
2. Sir Roger de Clifford, who married Joan, daughter and coheir of Thomas Courtenay, earl of Devon, and had issue Charles, Mary, (married to Sir Thomas Wingfield) and Barbara (married to ——— Drury.) Charles Clifford married Ann, daughter, of William Knevett, knight, and had issue two sons, Edward and William, and a daughter Jane, married to William Coe, of Suffolk, esquire. The eldest son, Edward, married Margery Layton, and had an only child, Dorothy; and the younger, William, died without issue.

3. Sir Robert de Clifford, was knight of the body to Henry VII. and married Ann, daughter of William Berkeley, and widow of Sir Ralph Josselyn, knight.

4. Thomas

4. Thomas de Clifford, died without issue.
 (Ninth Lord.) JOHN DE CLIFFORD succeeded his father as lord Clifford, and was also sheriff of Westmoreland in 1400, upon the rebellion of Richard, earl of Salisbury, had the custody of the castle of Penrith, in Cumberland; and in 39th of Henry VI. being in the battle of Wakefield, and siding with the king, who gained the victory, he is said to have made so great a slaughter, that he was from that time called the Butcher; but still remaining firm to the house of Lancaster, he was slain on Palm-Sunday, March 29, 1461, the first of Edward IV. at the battle of Towton, in Yorkshire; leaving by Margaret Bromfiere, (daughter and sole heir of Henry, lord Bromfiere, baron Vescy) who died April 12, 1493, three sons,

1. Henry de Clifford, his heir.
 2. Richard de Clifford, who died in the Netherlands, without issue.

3. Sir Thomas Clifford, who married Ellen, daughter and coheir of John Swarby, of Brackenburgh, in Lincolnshire.

And a daughter,
 Elizabeth, married to Robert Aike.

This lord and his father ever espoused the cause of the house of Lancaster, in which they both fell: he endeavouring to force a passage for king Henry VIth's army, was shot in the throat by an headless arrow, of which wound he instantly died, being in the twenty-sixth year of his age, three months after he had stabbed to the heart the young Edmund Plantagenet, earl of Rutland, fourth son of Richard duke of York. He was attainted in parliament November 4, following.

(Tenth Lord.) HENRY CLIFFORD, succeeded his father as lord Clifford; and his mother, being by birth baroness Vescy, brought the title of baron Vescy to the Cliffords, and also Lancelborough-house, and other estates; and the house of York prevailing, he was, when about seven years old, disguised in the mean habit of a shepherd's boy, to prevent his falling into their hands, who probably would have revenged themselves on the son of a man, who had rendered himself so odious to them by killing the young earl of Rutland. In that condition he lived, without any education, even so much as learning to write, lest it might make a discovery of him. He was restored in blood and honour, at thirty-two years of age, in the first parliament of Henry VII. and to all his baronies, &c.

In the reign of Henry VII. he was principal commander against the Scots, when they were defeated at Flodden, and their king slain. He married Anne, only daughter of Sir John St. John of Bletso, who, by the half-blood, was cousin-german to king Henry VII. her father being half-brother to that king's mother. He had issue by her three sons and four daughters.

1. Mabel, the wife of William Fitz-Williams, earl of Southampton.

2. Eleanor, the wife of Sir Ninian Markenfield, knight.

3. Anne, first of Robert Clifton, Esq; secondly, of Sir Robert Metcalf, knight.

4. Joan, of Sir Ralph Bowes, of Strettham, from whom the family of Bowes, in Yorkshire, are descended.

The sons were,

1. Henry Clifford, his successor.
 2. Sir Thomas Clifford, governor of Berwickcastle, who married Lucy, daughter of Sir Anthony Browne, knight, but died without issue.

3. Edward Clifford, who died without issue.
 He married secondly, Florence, daughter of Henry Pudsey, widow of Sir Thomas Talbot, of Basball, in Craven, knight, and by her had two sons, who died young, and one daughter, Dorothy, married to Sir Hugh Lowther, of Lowther, in Westmoreland.

(First Earl.) HENRY CLIFFORD, succeeded his father as lord Clifford in 1523, and on the 18th of June, the same year, was created earl of Cumberland: he married, first, Margaret, daughter of George, fourth earl of Shrewsbury, who died soon without issue; secondly, Margaret Percy, daughter of Henry, fifth earl of Northumberland, by Eleanor, daughter of Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset, so that she was lineally descended from John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster. This nobleman was, at different periods, governor of Carlisle, president of the council in the North, warden of the west marches towards Scotland, and lord-president of Wales. He was installed knight of the Garter, May 27, 1537, and was in great favour with Henry VIII. who recommended Henry, lord Clifford, the earl's eldest son, to the lady Eleanor, his cousin; which marriage was consummated in the 27th year of his reign, at the house of her father, Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, the king being present at their nuptials: her mother was Mary, the French queen, second daughter of King Henry VII. The earl died the 22d of April, 1542, having had issue four daughters.

1. Catharine, married first to John, lord Scrope, of Harley Bolton; and secondly, to Sir Richard Cholmondeley, of Thornton and Baxby, Knt.

2. Maud, married to John, lord Conyers, of Hornby.

3. Elizabeth, married to Sir Christopher Metcalf, knight.

4. Jane, married to Sir John Huddleston, of Millum-castle, knight.

Also three sons.

1. Henry Clifford.

2. Sir Ingelram Clifford, who married Anne, daughter and heir of Sir Henry Ratcliffe, Knt. but died without issue.

3. Thomas Clifford.

The eldest son,

(Second Earl.) HENRY CLIFFORD, five and twenty years old at the death of his father, succeeded to the honours of the family. He was made knight of the Bath at sixteen years of age, at the coronation of Anna Bullen; his lady (already mentioned) died in November, 1547; her issue male dying in their infancy, she left only one daughter, the lady Margaret, afterwards countess of Derby, from whom James, late earl of Derby, was descended: he married, secondly, Anne, daughter of William, lord Dacres, of Gillefland. By her, who died 1581, he had issue three daughters.

1. Frances, married to Philip, lord Wharton. She died 1592.

2. Eleanor, } died young.

3. Mary, }

Also two sons.

1. George Clifford, } successively earls of Cam-

2. Francis Clifford, } berland.

His lordship died January 8, 1569, and was buried at Skipton.

His eldest son,

(Third Earl.) GEORGE CLIFFORD succeeded. He was installed Knt. of the Garter, June 20, 1592, was of the privy-council to king James I. He married Margaret Russel, third and youngest daughter of Francis Russel, earl of Bedford, on the 24th of June, 1577, at St. Mary Overy's Church, Southwark. By this lady he had two sons, who both died very young, and a daughter, Anne, his sole heir to the baronies of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vescy; afterwards countess of Dorset and Pembroke, and dying October 30, 1605.

(Fourth Earl.) FRANCIS CLIFFORD, his brother, became the fourth earl of Cumberland: he married Grifold, daughter of Thomas Hughes, of Uxbridge, Esq; widow of Edward Nevil, lord Abergavenny, who died June 6, 1613, and left issue,

1. Margaret, who was married to Sir Thomas Wentworth, Knt. and Bart. afterwards earl of Strafford.

2. Frances, second wife to Sir Gervase Clifton, knight and baronet. And, (Fifth Earl.) HENRY CLIFFORD, his successor, earl of Cumberland.

He died December 11, 1641: to whom succeeded

(Sixth Earl.) HENRY CLIFFORD, his only son, who, in 1610, married Frances Cecil, only daughter to Robert, earl of Salisbury, by whom he left issue an only daughter, Elizabeth, his heir, born September 1613, married July 5, 1635, to Richard Boyle, lord viscount Dungarvon, son and heir to Richard, earl of Cork, in Ireland, who, succeeding his father in the dignity of earl of Cork, was, by letters-patent bearing date November 4, 20 Car I. created lord Clifford, of Laneshorough; from whom the late earl of Burlington was descended. The title of earl of Cumberland became extinct by the death of Henry above-mentioned; but the baronies of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vescy, were then in, (Fourteenth L.) ANNE, sole daughter and heir of George, earl of Cumberland, before-mentioned, as dignities which had their first rise by summons of her ancestors to parliament, and by virtue of the intail the inheritance of those castles and lands lineally descended to her.

This noble lady was born January 30, 1589, and married February 25, 1608-9, to Richard Sackvill, lord Buckhurst, son and heir of Robert, earl of Dorset; who succeeded to that title two days after, by the death of his father. He died March 28, 1624, and had issue three sons, who died infants, and two daughters.

1. Margaret, born July 2, 1614, married April 21, 1629, to John Tufton, earl of Thanet.

2. Isabella, born October 6, 1622, married July 5, 1647, to James Compton, earl of Northampton.

The countess of Dorset, in 1628, laid claim to the barony of Clifford; and the hearing of her petition was appointed for the following session; but there was no further proceedings on it.

Her ladyship married secondly, on the 3d of July, 1630, Philip Herbert, earl of Pembroke, who died January 23, 1649-50, without issue by her.

This lady, among many noble reversions, enjoyed the borough of Appleby. Sir Joseph Williamson, secretary of state to king Charles II. wrote to her to name a candidate for that borough, to which the countess returned this brave laconick answer: "I have been bullied by an usurper, I have been neglected by a court, but I will not be dictated to by a subject: your man shall stand." On her decease, the baronies of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vescy, devolved (no issue remaining from Isabella, her youngest sister) on her grandson,

And his majesty, on the 13th of August, 1734, was pleased to confirm, by patent, to, (Sixteenth L.) MARGARET, third daughter of the said earl, and wife of Thomas, late earl of Leicester, the barony of Clifford, with all privileges, &c. thereto belonging; and her ladyship had one only son, Edward, viscount, Coke, who died in 1753, and her husband, the earl of Leicester, died April 1759, upon which the title of earl of Leicester became extinct; and, upon the death of her ladyship without issue, the title of the barony of Clifford must go to the present earl of Thanet. For a more particular account of the latter part of this family, we refer the readers to vol. I. p. 549.

(Arms.) Cheque, topaz and sapphire; a fess, ruby.

BOTTEQUOT.

BERKELEY, Baron BOTETOURT.

OF this ancient barony we have the following account in Dugdale.

"In the sheriffs account of 2 Henry II. there is mention of Aufrid de Buteturt, and that he then paid five pounds and four-pence, into the king's exchequer, for the farm of Wendover and Houghton, in the county of Buckingham; from which time, till 19 Edward I. I have not seen any thing more of the name: but then John de Buteturt*, was made governor of St. Briadel's castle, in the county of Gloucester, and warden of the forest of Dene. And in 22 Edward I. had summons to attend the king at Portsmouth, upon the 1st of September, well fitted with horse and arms, thence to sail with him into Gascoigne, having the command, as admiral, of the king's fleet, which lay at Yarmouth, and the parts thereabouts.

"In 24 Edward I. this John was in that expedition then made into Gascoigne. So likewise in 25 Edward I. and in 26 Edward I. in that of Scotland: as also in 28 Edward I.

"And in 30 Edward I. having wedded Maud, the sister and heir to Otto, the son and heir of Beatrice de Beauchamp†, widow of William de Munchensi, of Edwardeston, doing his homage, had livery of the lands of her inheritance. In 32 Edward I. he obtained the king's charter for free warren in all his demesne lands, within his lordships of Dywike, Kaerdington, and Wouton, in the county of Bedford. And in 33 Edward I. covenanted with Robert Fitz-Walter, lord of Wodeham, in Essex, that Joan‡, his daughter, should marry Robert, the son and heir of him the said Robert.

"In 34 Edward I. he attended the king, in that expedition then made into Scotland; and in 1 Edward II. was again constituted governor of St. Briadel's castle. In which year being with the king at Bolein, that being the time when he married queen Isabel, he joined with the rest of the nobles, then there, in signing an instrument, dated ult. Jan. under their hands and seals; whereby they mutually obliged themselves, to serve him faithfully, and to support his honour. In 4 Edward II. he was again in the Scottish wars; and in 5

Edward II. was governor of Framlingham castle, in Suffolk. About which time, being confederate with Guy de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, in surprising of Piers de Gaveston, at Dedinton, in the county of Oxford, upon St. Barnabas-eve, he published a special writing under his hand and seal, in justification thereof, promising to live and die with the earl in that quarrel. And in 6 Edward II. was joined in commission with Humphry de Bohun, earl of Hereford, and some others, to continue the treaty with a cardinal, then sent from Rome, and Lewes earl of Edreux, the pope's chamberlain, which had been begun at Parkgate, touching certain matters, relating to the king himself, and divers of his nobles.

"In 8 Edward II. he was made admiral of the king's fleet, then bound towards Scotland. And in 12 Edward II. served again in those Scottish wars; and having been summoned to parliament, from 1 Edward II. till 18 of that king's reign inclusive, departed this life the same year, being then seized, in right of Maud his wife, of the manor of Dilewyke; as also of the moiety of the manor of Ronhall; and third part of the manor of Kerdynton, &c. Likewise of the manor of Mendlesham, in the county of Suffolk; leaving John, his grandson, (viz. son of Thomas, his son) and heir, who died in his life time his next heir, seven years of age.

"Which Thomas was with him in the wars of Scotland, in 11 Edward II. and married Joane, one of the sisters and co-heirs to John de Someri, baron of Dudley, whereby a great inheritance came to his posterity.

"This Joane in 1 Edward III. obtained licence for a fair at her manor of Newport-Painnell, in the county of Buckingham; and in 8 Edward III. procured a charter for free-warren, in all her demesne lands, within her lordships of Honisworth, and Bobinton, in the county of Stafford; Old-Swynford, and Cradeley, in the county of Worcester; Lynford, in the county of Buckingham; Enhale, in the county of Canterbury; and great Bradale, in the county of Suffolk. In 11 Edward III. residing at Weley castle, in the county

* Mr. Edmondson says, he was the son of William de Botetourt, seated at Mudham, in the time of king John; and he the son of Sir Geoffrey de Botetourt, seated at Weley, in Worcestershire.

† Daughter of William Beauchamp.

‡ He had also another daughter, Elizabeth, married first to William, baron Latimer; secondly to Robert Ufford.

|| Upon the admission of the present lord into the house it was proved, that the summons first was in 33 Edward I.

§ Besides this gentleman, who died before his father, Sir John had two other sons; Sir John de Botetourt, and Otto de Botetourt. The former seated at Beauchamp-Otes, died 1319, leaving issue by Margaret his wife, who died 1376, a son, John de Botetourt, who by Joan, daughter and heir of John Gernon, had issue a daughter and heir, Joan, who was married to Sir Robert Swinburn, knight. The latter seated at Mendlesham, died 1345, and by Sibilla his wife, had a son, John de Botetourt, who by Catherine, daughter of Sir William Weyland knight, had an only daughter and heir, Joan, married to John, son and heir of Sir John Knivet, knight.

of Worcester, (built by Roger de Someri, her grandfather, in the time of king Henry III.) she gave the manor of Werdeleye, in that county, to the canons of Hales-Owen, to found certain chantries, and perform alms-deeds, according to the tenor of an indenture, made betwixt the abbot of that house and her, but died soon after: for in 12 Edward III. John, her son and heir, performing his homage, had livery of his lands, through the king's special favour, though he had not made proof of his age.

"This John, in 14 Edward III. (residing also at Weley) gave the advowsons of the churches of Clent and Rouley, with the chapels thereunto belonging, unto the before specified canons of Hales-Owen. And in 16 Edward III. attended the king, in that great expedition then made into France; being of the retinue with Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick. So likewise in 21 Edward III. with William de Clinton, earl of Huntingdon. And in 26 Edward III. upon that danger of an invasion by the French, was joined in commission with the earl of Warwick, and some other eminent persons, for the arraying all knights, esquires, &c. within the counties of Warwick and Leicester, for the defence of the realm.

"In 29 Edward III. he was again in the wars of France, and in 33 Edward III. in those of Gascoigne, as also in 40 Edward III. And in 42 Edward III. accompanied Sir John Nevill, knight, thither. And having married Joyce, daughter of William, lord Zouche, of Haringworth, aunt and heir to Hugh le Zouche, of Ricard's-castle, had issue, John, (who took to wife Maud, the daughter to John, lord Grey, of Rotherfield) whom he survived: and by his testament, bearing date upon the festival of St. John Baptist, 7 Richard II. bequeathed his body to be buried in the abby of Hales, before the high altar. He likewise bequeathed to Maud, his daughter, at that time abbess of Polefworth, five pounds; and to his daughter Anneyne*, a nun, at Elstou, four pounds. And having been summoned to parliament, from 16 Edward III. until 9 Richard II. inclusive, departed this life the same year. Whereupon Joice, the wife of Sir Hugh Burnell, knight, was found to be his cousin and next heir, viz. daughter of John, son to the before specified John his son, who died in his lifetime, as before is observed.

"Which Sir Hugh doing his homage the same year, had livery of the lands of her inheritance. But this Joice died without issue, January 1, 7 Henry IV. Whereupon Maud and Agnes Botetourt, Maurice de Berkeley, Agnes, and Joice Wykes, became her cousins and heirs, (of which Maud and Agnes were nuns; the one at Polefworth, in the county of Warwick, and the other at Elstou, in the county of Bedford) viz. Maurice Berkeley, son of Maurice, son of Catherine, sister of John Botetourt, father to the said Joice; Agnes and Joice Wykes, being daughters of Joan, daughter of Alice, the other sister of the before specified John Botetourt.

STOURTON,

A COMPLETE ENGLISH PRIMER

Henry, Earl of Northampton, was born in 1562, and was educated at the University of Cambridge. He was a member of the Privy Council, and was appointed Lord Chamberlain of the Household in 1593. He was a prominent figure in the court of Elizabeth I, and was a close friend of William Shakespeare. He was executed by beheading in 1606, on charges of treason.

STOURTON, Baron STOURTON.

THIS noble family, whom we lineally, and without interruption, trace up to the time of the Conquest, descends from a warrior of eminence, called

BARTHOLOMEW DE STOURTON, or BOTOLPH (as Collins has it, who quotes Glover's manuscript pedigrees) because the lordship of Stourton, in Wiltshire, was his property, and place of residence. This gentleman, when William the Conqueror entered into the West, was among those who broke down the sea-walls of the Severn, and entered Glastonbury, guarding the pass by land, until the Conqueror granted what they required. By his wife Anne, daughter of Godwin, earl of Kent, he had issue,

ROBERT DE STOURTON, who built the mansion house at Stourton, and, by his wife Agnes, was father of

WILLIAM DE STOURTON, whose son,

Sir MICHAEL DE STOURTON, by Mary, daughter of lord Mandeville, had two sons, Eudo and Guy; the eldest,

Sir EUDO DE STOURTON, was, by Grace his wife, father of

Sir RALPH DE STOURTON, who was a knight of the Holy Sepulchre, and had issue by Alice his wife, daughter of lord Berkeley, two sons,

1. Sir Edward de Stourton, who died in his father's life time, without issue.

2. William de Stourton.

By a second wife, Laurentia, he had several children.

The eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM DE STOURTON, married Jane, daughter of Richard Vernon, of Horningham, in the county of Wilts, and had issue twenty-two children; of which Mary was a nun, at Shaftesbury.

Robert de Stourton, the second son, was canon and prior of Bruton, where his father was buried.

And the eldest son,

JOHN DE STOURTON, was lord of the manor of Preston, in Somersetshire; who, in 37 Edward III. was in the wars in Aquitain, and, on his death, was buried at Staverdale (he had been sheriff of Dorset and Somerset, in 1377) and left issue by his second wife Jane, daughter of Ralph, lord Bassett, an only son, John de Stourton, who married twice. By his last wife Alice Dennis, of Kent, he had no issue; but the produce of a former match with Catherine, daughter and coheir of Thomas Payne, of Speckington, was three daughters, all married: Jane, to John Sydenham, of Brympton, in Somersetshire; Alice, to William Danbury; and Cicely, to John Hill.

This John de Stourton, by his first wife Catherine, daughter of Henry, lord Beaumont, had issue one son and three daughters:

1. Edith, married to Sir John Beauchamp, of Bletsoe, in Bedfordshire, to whom she bore an only daughter, Margaret, who was married to Edmund, earl of Richmond, and thereby became mother to king Henry VII.

2. Margaret, } were nuns.

3. Anastasia, }

The son by this marriage was,

Sir WILLIAM DE STOURTON, who was steward of the principality of Wales in 1402, 3 Henry IV. and when some malicious persons in taverns and other publick places assembled, asserting that the king had forfeited his coronation-oath; this William was impowered, with others in the county of Dorset, to arrest and imprison all such persons as they shall find spreading such reports.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Moyne, of Estains, in Essex, and died on Monday, after the feast of St. Lambert, in 1 Henry V. and was buried with his wife in the church of the Carthusian monastery, in the parish of Witham, leaving issue a daughter, Margaret, wife of Sir William Carrant, of Tomber, in Somersetshire; and John de Stourton, their son and heir: which,

In 8 Henry VI. (being then a knight) he was retained by indenture to serve the king in his French wars.

In 12 and 16 of that king's reign, he was sheriff of Wilts; and in 14 Henry VI. again retained to serve in the wars of France and Normandy; also in 18 Henry VI. was sheriff of Gloucestershire.

In 19 Henry VI. he was appointed one of the plenipotentiaries to treat at Calais with those of France about a peace, and releasing the duke of Orleans, then a prisoner. And, the same year, had a grant for divers deer-leaps in Stourton-park, and of free warren in all his demesne lands and woods there; as likewise for a fair there yearly.

In 25 Henry VI. being then treasurer of the household, he had a grant of the castle of Old Sarum, then ruinous, to be held by fealty, and the rent of three shillings and four pence per annum.

In 26 Henry VI. May 13, in consideration of his faithful services to the king and his predecessor, he was created lord Stourton, of Stourton, in the county of Wilts, by patent.

In 28 Henry VI. he was in the commission with

James

James Butler, earl of Ormond and Wilts, and others, for defending of Calais; and the next year was appointed, with Ralph, lord Sudley, to conduct men at arms and archers thither.

In 31 Henry VI. he, with Richard, earl of Salisbury, John, earl of Shrewsbury, and James, earl of Wiltshire, were appointed by parliament to keep the seas, and to have, for three years, the tonnage and poundage granted in the last parliament. Also, April 15, in 32 Henry VI. it was agreed, that towards the furniture of the lords aforesaid, there shall be a loan on certain cities and towns there named, and to be answered out of the customs.

He married Margery, daughter of Sir John Wadham, of Merrifield, in the county of Somerset, knight, and, departing this life on St. Catherine's day, 1462, 2 Edward IV. left issue four sons and two daughters:

1. William de Stourton, lord Stourton.
2. Sir Reginald de Stourton, who was a knight (and had issue * by Margaret, his wife, widow of Alexander Hoddy, a daughter, wife of Oliver Carminow.)

He married Margaret, one of the daughters and coheirs of Sir John Chidiok, of the county of Wilts, knight, and died February 18, 17 Edward IV. He had issue six daughters, ton, on Friday next ensuing Corpus-Christi day, A. D. 1522, 14 Henry VIII. bequeathed his body to be buried in the chapel of the blessed Virgin, within the church of St. Peter at Stourton; and dying soon after, (as appears from the probate of his will) without issue, the title devolved on his brother and heir, (Fifth Lord) EDWARD STOURTON, who in 5 Henry VIII. was nominated, by act of parliament, as one of the most discreet persons, justices of the peace, (as the words of the act are) for assessing and collecting a subsidy of one thousand six hundred and three pounds, by a poll-tax, &c. In 21 Henry VIII. he had summons to parliament among the peers, by the title of Sir Edward Stourton, of Stourton, chivalier. In 22 Henry VIII. he subscribed that declaration sent to pope Clement VII. intimating, if he did not comply with king Henry's divorce from queen Catherine, his supremacy in England would be no longer owned. By his will, dated November 26, 1535, 27 Henry VIII. he ordered his body to be buried in the north isle of Stourton church, and died soon after; leaving issue by Agnes his wife, daughter of John Fauntleroy, of March, in the county of Dorset, four sons and one daughter, VERNEY, Baron WILLOUGHBY of BROKE.

WHETHER the founder of this ancient and noble family came from Normandy with the Conqueror, or was a native of this island, is a point that cannot be easily settled, at least without further lights than are at present held forth to us. Be this as it may, at that time lived

WILLIAM DE VERNAI, whose son,

WILLIAM DE VERNAI, is mentioned to be living, A.D. 1119, 19 Henry I. and A.D. 1148, 14 Stephen; whose son,

ROGER DE VERNAI, was living in the reign of king Henry II. and had issue,

ROGER DE VERNAI, or Verney, seated at Bromshulfe, in the county of Stafford, whose son,

SIMON DE VERNAI, was living in the reign of king Richard I. and in that reign gave to God and the monks, of Hilton-abbey, in the county of Stafford, lands in Normanchore. He married Agnes, daughter of William Bagot, of the Hide, in the county of Stafford, and sister of Hervey Bagot, of that place (progenitor of the barons of Stafford) and by her had issue,

HERVEY DE VERNEY, of Bromshulfe afore-said, living in the reign of king Edward I. who had issue his son and heir

RICHARD DE VERNEY, who lived at Madeley, in the county of Hereford, in 7 Edward II. and had issue

SIMON DE VERNEY, of Madeley, in 21 Edward II. and he had issue

WILLIAM DE VERNEY, mentioned in 14 and 27 Edward III. who married Alice, sister and co-heir to Thomas de Langley; after whose decease, she married to her second husband Gyles de Bassingburne; and to her third, John Hemington.

The said William had issue by her,

1. Simon de Verney, who died in 41 Edward III.

2. William de Verney; which

WILLIAM DE VERNEY born in 20 Edward III. was possessed of the lordship of Byfield with Trafford, in the county of Northampton, and was living in 51 Edward III. and by Elizabeth his wife had issue,

JOHN DE VERNEY, who lived in the reigns of Henry IV. and Henry V. and was escheator of the county of Worcester, in 17 Henry VI. and by Alice his wife had issue,

1. Richard de Verney.

2. John de Verney, rector of Breedon, in the county of Worcester, who was made dean of Litchfield, in 1432, 10 Henry VI. and was also supervisor and receiver general to Richard Beauchamp, earl of Warwick.

The elder brother,

SIR RICHARD DE VERNEY, in 20 Henry VI. was in possession of the manor of Compton-Murdock, and built a noble manor-house there; wherein, besides his own arms, with matches of his ancestors, he then set up, in a fair canton-window towards the upper end of the hall, the arms of king Henry VI. queen Margaret, Humphrey, earl of Stafford (afterwards created duke of Buckingham) Henry Beauchamp, duke of Warwick, and the lord Zouch, with some others; by which it appeareth, that he was one of those that adhered to the house of Lancaster. In 21 Henry VI. he was in commission for conservation of the peace, and continued therein till 14 Edward IV. (except for the first six years of king Edward's reign) being also in 38 Henry VI. a commissioner for arraying all men able to bear arms in the county of Warwick; and the next year received the honour of knighthood. He departed this world in 5 Henry VII. leaving by Eleanor, his wife, daughter and heir of John Loutham, of Northampton, a daughter Ann, married to Sir Richard Montfort, knight.

EDMUND DE VERNEY, his son and heir, forty-nine years of age: who had special letters of protection from Thomas, lord Stanley, steward of the household to king Edward IV. dated November 3, 8 Edward IV. exempting him from being subject to any seizure on his corn, beeves, muttons, or any thing else, for the king's household provision, without payment of ready money for the same; and in 21 Edward IV. bore the office of escheator of the counties of Warwick and Leicester.

In 2 Richard III. he was in commission for arraying of men in the county of Warwick; and by his last will, bearing date February 24, 1494, 10 Henry VII. bequeathed his body to be interred in the conventual church of the friars preachers at Warwick, betwixt the altar of our Lady and the altar of St. Dominick, on the north part; ordering that, by the care of his executors, a lamp should be continually maintained burning in the chancel of that church before the host; and died within two days after, leaving by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter to Sir William Fielding, knight, ancestor to the present earl of Denbigh, three sons,

1. Richard Verney.

2. Leonard Verney,

3. Michael Verney.

And a daughter,

Elizabeth, married to Thomas Grey, of Enville, in Staffordshire.

The eldest son,

RICHARD VERNEY, was in such esteem with king

king Henry VIII. that being informed of some infirmity in his head, he granted him a special licence, bearing date at Greenwich, January 2, in the eighth year of his reign, to wear his bonnet at all times and in all places, as well in the said king's presence, as elsewhere, according to his own pleasure, without the interruption of any man whatsoever. By his last testament, dated October 2, 1529 (18 Henry VIII.) he appointed his body to be buried in the new chapel on the north side of the church of Compton-Murdoc, in the county of Warwick; and dying on September 28, the next year, a monumental stone was placed over him, with the portraiture in brass of himself, his wife, and nine sons and five daughters, with the following inscription round the verge thereof:

Of your charitie pray for the soules of Richard Verney, esquire, and Anne his wife; which Richard departed out of this present world the 28th day of this month of September, A. Dni. 1527.

He had issue by the said Anne, daughter of William Danvers, esquire, (appointed one of the justices of the court of Common-Pleas, in 3 Henry VII.) nine sons and five daughters, as is said before; of which daughters, Anne was married to Edward Odingells, of Long-Ichington in the county of Warwick, esquire; and was buried in Compton church, under a stone, with her portraiture, and her arms, and the following inscription, all in brass, viz.

Off zeor chartye pray for the sole off Anne Odyngsale, the wife of master Edward Odyngsale of Ygyngeton, and dogter of Richard Verney, Esquyer, the whyche departyde the yere of or. Lord MCCCCXXIII; on whose sole Jhu have mercy.

His son and heir,

Sir THOMAS VERNEY, knight, married Alice, the eldest of the three sisters, and coheirs of Sir Edward Tame, of Fairford, in the county of Gloucester, knight, by whom he had issue three sons:

1. Richard Verney.
2. Peter Verney.
3. Timothy Verney.

Sir RICHARD VERNEY, knight, the eldest, married Frances, daughter of George Raleigh, of Farnborough, in the county of Warwick, esquire, by Joan his wife, daughter of Sir William Coningsby, knight, and by her had issue four sons and two daughters:

1. Dorothy, married to ——— Danvers.
2. Eleanor, married to ——— Roydon.

The sons were,

1. George Verney.
2. Richard Verney.
3. John Verney.
4. Stephen Verney.

He died July 26, in 9 Elizabeth, possessed, in Gloucestershire (as by inquisition taken at Gloucester after his decease) of the manor of Upton, and of two messuages, with the lands thereunto belonging, in East-Leech; twelve messuages, with appurtenances, in Upton-Todbury, Charlton, Doughton, and Tedbury; fifty-one messuages in East-Leech, Turville, Willingstrup, and Colne-Alwyns; the manor of Nymmsfield, with three messuages and appurtenances in Nymmsfield: which manor descended to the three sisters and coheirs of Sir Edward Tame, whereof a third part descended to Sir Richard Verney by his mother; and he, with his father, purchased the other two parts, by indenture tripartite, dated February 26, in the first of Edward VI. as set forth in the said inquisition: to all which George Verney was found to be his son and heir, and aged twenty-two years.

Which

GEORGE VERNEY, his eldest son, died possessed of the said manors and lands, &c. on the 8th of April, in 16 Elizabeth; and was buried in Compton church before-mentioned, with the following inscription set over him, viz.

Heere lies George Verney of Compton, Esq; sonne of Sir Richard Verney, knight, and husband of Jane the daughter of William Lucy of Charlcot, Esq; by whome he had one sonne and fower daughters. Hee died the eight day of Aprill, Anno Dni 1574.

His son was

Sir RICHARD VERNEY, knight, born in 1563, who took to wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Fulk Grevill, knight (by Elizabeth his wife, daughter and coheir to Edward Willoughby, esquire, eldest son to Robert lord Willoughby, of Broke) and at length heir to her brother Fulk Grevill, lord Broke, of Beauchamps-Court, in the county of Warwick, and died the 7th of August, 1630, aged sixty-seven years, and she the twenty-sixth of March following, aged seventy years; and were both buried in Compton church; for whom was erected in the chancel an altar-monument, their effigies in full proportion lying thereon, and on the verge this inscription:

Hic Jacent Richardus Verney Miles qui obiit vii^o die Aug^{te}. A^o D^o MDCXXX et ætat LXX. Et Domina Margareta uxor ejus quæ obiit 26 Martij A^o Dom. 1631 et ætat 70.

For the male line of ancestry belonging to this Margaret, we refer our readers to the account of the earl of Warwick, towards the beginning of this volume; where they will find, that her grandfather, Sir Fulk Grevill, married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Edward Willoughby, and granddaughter and heir to Robert baron Willoughby de Broke. As the honours which the noble lord of whom we are now treating inherits descended from the Willoughbies through this lady, it is necessary that we give an account of her family. For the origin of the Willoughbies, we refer our readers to our account of the eldest branch, lord Willoughby, of Parham, where they will find, that

Sir ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, who died 1397, had two wives; that from the former he had a son, William Willoughby, ancestor to lord Willoughby, of Parham; that from the latter, Margaret, daughter of lord Zouch, of Harringworth, he had four sons; which were,

1. Robert Willoughby, who died young.

2. Thomas

2. Thomas Willoughby, who continued the line with which we are now concerned.

3. John Willoughby.

4. Sir Bryan Willoughby.

Sir THOMAS WILLOUGHBY, the second son, married Elizabeth, sister and heir of John Nevil lord Latimer, and had issue.

Sir John Willoughby, who by Joan Welby, was father of another.

Sir JOHN WILLOUGHBY, who married Anne, daughter and heir of Sir Edward Cheney, of Broke, in Wilts, and had issue two daughters, Cecily, abbess of Wilton, and Elizabeth, married to William Currant, of Tumber in Somersetshire.

Also four sons:

1. Robert Willoughby.

2. Sir William Willoughby, seated at Turners-Piddell, in Dorsetshire.

3. Richard Willoughby, seated at Sibton, in Dorsetshire.

4. Edward Willoughby.

The eldest son,

(First Lord.) Sir ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, was steward of the household to king Henry VIII. summoned to parliament as baron Willoughby de Broke, August 12, (7 Henry VIII.) 1492, and died 1503. Having married Blanch, daughter and heir of Sir Edward Champenoun, knight, he had issue Elizabeth, married to John baron Dymham, and a son and successor,

(Second Lord.) Sir ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, who married first Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Richard baron Beauchamp, of Powick (she brought with her Alcester, the manor-house of which is called Beauchamp-Court) and by her had a son and successor, Edward Willoughby. By his second lady Dorothy, daughter of Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorset, he had issue two daughters, Elizabeth, married to John Pawlet, marquis of Winchester; and Ann, married to Charles Blunt lord Mountjoy; and two sons, Henry and William, who both died without issue in their father's life-time. This nobleman dying 1522, was buried at Bere Ferrers; and the honours, &c. of the family devolved upon his grand-daughter, ELIZABETH WILLOUGHBY, the only daughter of Edward Willoughby (only son of the last lord by his first wife) by Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Nevil lord Latimer; but were not claimed by her or her descendants till the year 1695, as will be seen. This illustrious lady is already treated of at large in pages 160, 161, of this Volume; to what is there said, we shall only add, that her son Foulk Greville (see page 145 of this Volume) had a son of his name, who died without issue; and a daughter, Margaret, who became the wife of this Sir Richard Verney, whose ancestors we have already traced; and at length sole heir to her brother, and of course to the barony, as has been already observed.

The issue of this last mentioned marriage were four daughters, Mary, married to Sir Ralph Samwell, baronet; Ann, married to John Bretton, of Norton; Elizabeth, died unmarried; and Margaret, married — Shirley, but died without issue.

Also four sons:

1. Greville Verney.

2. John Verney, who married Elizabeth, daughter of — Berkeley, of Cotheridge in Worcester-shire; and had a son, Richard, whose son,

Compton, dying without issue, that line ended:

3. Richard Verney, died unmarried.

4. George Verney, who married Tryphena, daughter of Edmund Sheffield, earl of Mulgrave.

The eldest son, Sir GREVILLE VERNEY, succeeded his father, and married Catherine, daughter to Sir Robert Southwell, of Woodrising in Norfolk, knight; and of Elizabeth Howard, daughter of Charles Howard, earl of Nottingham, lord high-admiral in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and widow of James, earl of Carrick, in Scotland; by whom he had:

1. Greville Verney, his heir.

2. John Verney, who died an infant.

3. Sir Richard Verney, of Compton, in the county of Warwick, knight of the shire for that county.

4. George Verney, who died unmarried.

Which Greville, marrying Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to Thomas the second viscount Wenman, and dying in 1648, by her left a son, Greville, who was knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles II. and he marrying Diana Ruffel, eldest daughter to William the first duke of Bedford, by her, who married secondly William lord Allington, had William, his only child, who, dying unmarried, put an end to that line; so that we now return to the third son of Sir Greville Verney, (Third Lord.) RICHARD VERNEY, of Compton, who being descended, through the heirs of the Greilles, from Robert Willoughby, baron of Broke, laid claim to the said title, alledging that he was lineal heir to Sir Robert Willoughby, knight of the Garter, who was summoned to parliament, as lord Broke, 7 Henry VII. to whom succeeded Sir Robert Willoughby, knight, his son and heir, who was summoned to parliament by the same title, by king Henry VIII. and seized of the said barony, to him and his heirs, as of fee and right; whereupon the barony descended to Elizabeth, lady Greville, grandchild and at length sole heir to the second lord Broke, and afterwards to her grandchild and heir, Sir Foulk Greville, knight; and though he was created lord Broke of Beauchamp's Court, by king James I. by patent to him and his heirs male, with remainder to his cousin Robert Greville, and his heirs male, yet was he rightfully entitled to the said barony of Broke in fee; and, dying without issue, the said barony in fee descended to Margaret, sister of the said Foulk, and his sole heir, grandmother to the petitioner: and, the same being allowed in parliament, the 13th of February, 1695-6, he, on the 25th of the same month, took place as the ancient barons of Broke, and died on the 18th of July, 1711, in the ninetieth year of his age.

He married first Elizabeth, daughter to Sir John Prettyman, of Lodington, in the county of Leicester, baronet, and by her had three sons, and a daughter of her name, married to Samuel Davenport, of Caverley, in the county of Chester, esquire; and by his second wife Frances, daughter to Thomas Dove, of Upton, in the county of Northampton, esquire, he had Richard, who died a bachelor, and Diana, who was married to Sir Charles Shuckburgh, of Shuckburgh, in the county of Warwick, baronet.

Of the sons by the first wife, which were John, George, and Thomas, the latter was a merchant, (Fourth Lord.) GEORGE VERNEY, his next brother, who was a prebendary and canon of Windsor, and chaplain to queen Anne, succeeded his father in the honours and estate.

He married Margaret, daughter and heir to Sir John Heath, of Braystode, in Kent, knight; also heir by her mother to Sir Matthew Mennes, knight; and by her grandmother, to the earl of Carrick, in Scotland. By her, who died October 18, 1729, had three sons and a daughter, Margaret, wife of Anthony Duncomb, of Barford, in the county of Wilts, esquire, afterwards lord Feverham.

Thomas Verney, the eldest son, married Eleanor, youngest daughter to Thomas lord Leigh, of Stonleigh, in the country of Warwick, and died of the small-pox in May 1710, without issue male; leaving his lady big with child, who was afterwards delivered of a daughter named Eleanor.

George, and Thomas, the latter was a merchant,
Of the sons by the first wife, which were John, county of Warwick, patron.

10 (Sixth and present Lord.) JOHN PEYTO VERNY, (son of his brother John before-mentioned) born Aug. 4, 1738. His lordship, who is one of the lords of the bedchamber to his present majesty, on the eighth of October 1761, was married to Louisa, eldest daughter of Francis North, earl of Guildford, by Elizabeth, only daughter and heir of Sir Arthur Kaye, of Woodfom, in the county of York, baronet; and widow of George viscount Lewisham, son and heir of William Legge, earl of Dartmouth, by whom he had issue a daughter, Louisa, born January 25, 1765, and two sons:

1. John-Peyto Willoughby, born May 28, 1762.
2. George-Peyto Willoughby, born May 25, 1762.

(CREATIONS.) Baron Willoughby of Broke, in the county of Wilts, allowed in parliament, by a resolution upon the question, February 13, 1695, 8 William III. by descent; and thereupon summoned by writ, dated the 25th of the said month. Originally August 12, 1402, 7 Henry VII.

WILLOUGHBY, Baron WILLOUGHBY of PARHAM.

THE noble family of Willoughby (as appears by a pedigree drawn in the reign of queen Elizabeth) is descended from

Sir JOHN DE WILLOUGHBY, a Norman knight, who had the lordship of Willoughby, in Lincolnshire, by the gift of the Conqueror; and left issue a son of his own name,

Sir JOHN DE WILLOUGHBY, knight, father of

Sir HUGH DE WILLOUGHBY, knight, who married Frethland, daughter and coheir of William de Cokerinton, by Berta, his wife, daughter and coheir of Lambert de Scotenai, a person of great possessions in Lincolnshire; whereof Cumberworth, and Thorp, of his inheritance, descended to the Willoughbys. He had issue William de Willoughby, and Ralph de Willoughby, who was seated at Willoughby, near Alford, in the county of Lincolnshire; and about the end of king John's reign, having his lands seized for his adherence to the rebellious barons, he had, in 1 Henry III. the king's precept to the sheriff of that county for restitution of them.

WILLIAM DE WILLOUGHBY, in 44 Henry III. on the death of Frethland, his mother, had livery of the lands of her inheritance.

Sir William Dugdale, in his Baronage, vol. I. p. 83, presumes, "That the said William de Willoughby had no issue which continued, for Robert his uncle enjoyed the estate." But he quotes no authority for it; and, in point of time, that Robert is more likely to be his son than his uncle, it being evident, that, in 48 Henry III. (which he cites himself)

ROBERT DE WILLOUGHBY took part with the rebellious barons; and, for some time after, was so powerful in Yorkshire, that (as the record specifies) the sheriff could not execute his office there for the king.

Sir William Dugdale makes this Robert to leave issue, by the heir of — Oreby, William, his son and heir; and we also find that Sir Robert Willoughby, lord of Willoughby, married —, daughter and heir of John Oreby, and by her had issue,

Sir WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY, knight, who in 54 Henry III. was signed with the cross, together with many others, who then accompanied prince Edward into the Holy-land. He married Alice, daughter of John, lord Beke, of Eresby, and sister and coheir of Walter, lord Beke, of Eresby, in the county of Lincoln, who had that, and other possessions in Lincolnshire, from Sir Walter Bec, who possessed divers lordships by gift of William the Conqueror, coming over with him to England, though he had a fair inheritance in Flanders. This Walter married Agnes, daughter and heir of Hugh, son of Pinthon, who also came into England with the Conqueror; and with Eudo (his sworn brother in war, tho' otherwise not allied) had of his gift the lordship of Tatshall, with the hamlet of Thorpe, and town of Kirkeby, in the county of Lincoln, to be equally shared between them; Eudo to hold his of the king, and Pinthon his of the bishoprick of Durham. And the said Hugh, his son, was surnamed Steward, by performing that office to the bishop of Durham for the barony of Eresby.

That Sir William de Willoughby married Alice, heir to the barony of Eresby, is also evident from the will of Sir John Beke, lord Beke, of Eresby, dated at Eresby on Wednesday preceding the feast of St. Margaret, 29 Edward I. wherein he calls him his son-in-law, and constitutes him one of his executors, together with his son, Sir Robert de Willoughby. Which

Sir ROBERT DE WILLOUGHBY, in 25 Edward I. was in that expedition then made into Gascon; and in 28 Edward I. in the wars of Scotland. In 33 Edward I. he obtained a charter for free warren in all his demesne lands in Eresby, and Willoughby, in the county of Lincoln, and was in those expeditions, against the Scots in 34 Edward I. and 4 Edward II. In this last year he was on the inquisition taken after the death of that great prelate, Anthony Bec, bishop of Durham, and patriarch of Jerusalem, found to be one of his cousins and next heirs, viz. son of Alice, daughter of John, brother to the bishop; and at that time forty years of age. Having been very serviceable to the king, and possessing so ample an estate, by the accession of those lands which came to him by descent, as well from his grandmother, as the bishop, he had summons to parliament among the barons of this realm in 7 Edward II. and the year after had command to be at Newcastle upon Tyne, to restrain the incursions of the Scots. He died in 10 Edward II. leaving issue by Margaret* his wife, daughter of William de Ferrers, earl of Derby, John, his son and heir, at that time fourteen years of age.

Which Margaret had for her dowry an assignation of the manor of Willoughby, with certain lands in Ulkeby and Dierthorp; as also the manor of Wybington, and certain lands in Wyrhale, and Scryvelby, Langton, Thymelby, Foletby,

* Mr. Edmondson says: "Margaret, daughter of Edward, lord D'Eyncourt."

Levethon, Eoston, and Braytoft, all in the county of Lincoln.

Sir JOHN DE WILLOUGHBY, their son, in 20 Edward II. received the honour of knighthood by bathing, &c. having all his accoutrements, relating to that solemnity, allowed out of the king's wardrobe: and in 1 Edward III. making proof of his age, had livery of his lands. In 7 Edward III. he was in the Scottish wars. So likewise in 8, 9, 10, and 11 Edward III. also in 12 Edward III. was in that expedition made into Flanders; as likewise in 13 Edward III. In 19 Edward III. being again in those wars, and of the retinue with Robert de Ufford, earl of Suffolk, he attended the king to relieve Aguylon; and was in that famous battle of Cressy in 20 Edward III. where the English obtained a glorious victory.

In 22 Edward III. being then called John de Willoughby the elder, he obtained licence to give the advowson of the churches of Over-Toynton, Kirkeby, and Eresby, with the chapel of Spillesby, annexed to the church of Eresby, for a master and twelve priests to celebrate divine service, in honour of the blessed virgin, in the said chapel, for the good estate of himself, his wife, and children, during this life; and afterwards for the health of their souls. And having been summoned to parliament, from 6 Edward III. until the 23d of that king's reign inclusive, departed this life the same year; leaving issue by Joan his wife, sister and coheir of Sir Thomas Rosceline, knight.

Sir JOHN WILLOUGHBY, knight, his son and heir, twenty years old; who, making proof of his age, the next ensuing year, had livery of his lands.

He served under king Edward III. in his wars with France, from the twenty-ninth year of his reign to the twenty-third, and was in the famous battle of Poitiers, where the king of France was taken prisoner. And having been summoned to parliament from 24 Edward III. departed this life in 46 Edward III. being then seized of the manor of Eresby, with its members, viz. Spillesby, Grebby, Ingoldmells, Flyxburgh, Tonelby, Friskney, Bishopthorp, Askeby, Kirkeby super Bayne, Tatterfall, and Thorpe; all which he held of the bishop of Durham, by the service of one knight's fee, and of being bailiff to the bishop for the time being, for all his lands in the county of Lincoln of his fee, viz. to hold his courts, &c. also, by the service of being steward to him and his successors, and to carry the messes of meat to the table on the day of their consecration; as also at Christmas and Whitsuntide; or his eldest son, if he was a knight, or some other fitting knight thereunto deputed by letters patent. He likewise died seized of the manors of Willoughby, Oreby, Scrivelby, Stikford, and thirty-seven other manors, all in the county of Lincoln; leaving (by Cecilia his wife) Robert, his son and heir, then twenty-three years of age; and two daughters, Joan, married William baron Astley, and Margaret, married to John Braose.

Which Cecilia was daughter of Robert Ufford, earl of Suffolk, and of Margaret his wife, sole daughter and heir of Sir John Norwich, knight; and by the death of William Ufford, earl of Suffolk, her brother, she was one of his coheirs; and brought to this family the lordship of Barbican, in London, and the lordships of Ufford, Parham, and Orford, &c. in Suffolk; being also heir to the families of Norwich, Valens, Glanvil, and Blond. The said

ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, her son and heir, being retained by indenture in 47 Edward III. to serve with thirty men at arms, and thirty archers, arrived with the duke of Lancaster at Calais, and was in that expedition then made into Flanders. In the 5th of Richard II. on the death of William de Ufford, earl of Suffolk, he was found to be one of his coheirs; and, in the 9th of Richard II. accompanied John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, into Spain, for the recovery of Castile; being the year following retained to serve the king in defence of the realm. He had summons to parliament from the 40th of Edward III. to the 19th of Richard II. inclusive, and died on the 9th of August the year following.

He married Alice, daughter of Sir William de Skipwith, by whom he had a son and successor, William. By his second wife Margaret, daughter of lord Zouch, of Harringworth, he had issue four sons; Robert, who died young; Sir Thomas Willoughby, ancestor to lord Willoughby de Broke; (see Vol. II. p. 397.) John, and Sir Bryan. The son by his first wife,

WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY, was one of those peers in the parliament of the 22d of Richard II. when that king made a formal resignation of his dignity. In the 2d of Henry IV. he was retained to attend the king in his expedition then made into Scotland; and had summons to parliament from the 22th of Richard II. to the 11th of Henry IV. and died that year, leaving issue by his first wife, Lucy, daughter to Roger lord Strange, of Knockyn, two sons:

1. Robert Willoughby.

2. Thomas Willoughby, of whom hereafter.

ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, in the 12th of Henry IV. obtained from that king a confirmation of king Henry II's charter, made to Hugh, the son of Pinchon (his ancestor) some time steward to the bishop of Durham, of all the lands which the said Pinchon held of him, viz. Eresby, with its members. And, being of an active and heroic spirit, was one of the greatest worthies in the age. In 3 Henry V. he attended that warlike prince, when he took Hareflew, and became victorious in that memorable battle of Agincourt. The year following he was retained again for those wars; and in the interim, upon the death of Isabel, widow of William de Ufford, earl of Suffolk, had livery of the castle and town of Orford, with the manor of Ufford, and a considerable portion of other lands. In 5 Henry V. he was in another expedition made into France, and was one of the chief commanders at the siege of Caen, in Normandy, and obtained, in consideration of his signal services, a grant of three hundred pounds per annum. In 6 Henry V. he continued still in those wars, and was at the siege of Roan; when being one of the knights of the most noble order of the Garter, and with the king asserting his right in Normandy, he was excused from attending at a chapter held on the feast of St. George that year at Windsor, by the duke of Bedford. The next year, being again with the king in France, he was also excused from attending at a chapter held at Windsor, by Humphry, duke of Gloucester. In 9 Henry V. he obtained leave to travel, but in the same year being at London, don, when king Henry V. himself held a chapter of the Garter at Windsor, on the 3d of May, he was taken ill on the point of his coming to the feast then held, and thereupon was likewise excused. In 1 Henry VI. he was, by indenture, retained to serve the king in his wars of France; and, with Thomas de Poinings, employed to conduct a supply of forces to John, duke of Bedford, the king's uncle, then regent of France, whom the next year he accompanied at the taking of Yvrie; and in the great battle of Vernoi, where the English obtained a signal victory. In 3 Henry VI. he was sent with Sir John Falstaff to prevent the surprize of Alençon by the French; and defeated the party under Charles de Villers, sent to that purpose. Soon after which, he was, with the earls of Salisbury and Warwick, at the siege of Mauns, in Campagne, which was then taken, with other towns and castles, to the number of 36. In 7 Henry VI. he accompanied the great cardinal Beaufort in his journey to Bohemia; and in 10 Henry VI. besieged and took the castle of St. Selerine; at which time it appears, that John, duke of Bedford, gave him the titles of earl of Vaudesme, and of Beaumont, lord Willoughby of Monblay, and Beaumesguil. The next year he was sent to recover St. Valeries, which, after a short siege, was surrendered; and about the same time gave battle to the French in Burgundy, where being victorious, he took Loxiers in his return. And on the insurrection of the Normans, marched with the earl of Arundel, and vanquished them, having then the command of six thousand archers, and one thousand three hundred horse. In 12 Henry VI. on the death of Joan, dutchess of York, widow of Sir Henry Bromflete, being then in the wars of France, he had livery of the lands she held in dower from William, lord Willoughby, his father, whose second wife she had been. And the next year, augmenting his retinue, he joined with the lords Talbot and Scales, in taking the towns of St. Dennis and Pontoise. After the death of the duke of Bedford, the dukes of Somerset and York being made generals of the English army, and the French recovering strength, he was sent to Paris for the defence of that city (by the assistance of the duke of Burgundy) then besieged; and, wanting supplies, was obliged to surrender it, after it had been fifteen years in the hands of the English, and thence marched to Roan. In 20 Henry VI. he gave battle to the French near Amiens, and, being victorious, returned with great booty to Roan; in which year he was made master of the king's hart-hounds, and sent by Richard, duke of York, then regent of France, into Anjou, where he made great spoil. This Robert, lord Willoughby, whose name is recorded amongst the greatest soldiers of that time, took to wife Maud, cousin and coheir to Ralph, lord Cromwell; and, having been summoned to parliament from 12 Henry IV. to 29 Henry VI. died the year following, leaving issue by her an only daughter and heir, Joan, wife of Sir Richard Wells, knight. His brother,

Sir THOMAS WILLOUGHBY, of Parham, knight, was with king Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt, and left issue by Joan his wife, daughter and heir to Sir Richard Fitz-Alan, knight, (son of John Fitz-Alan, lord Maltravers, second son of Sir Richard Fitz-Alan, third earl of Arundel) one son,

Sir ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, knight, who died May 30, 5 Edward IV. leaving by Cecilia his wife, daughter of Leo, lord Wells, and eldest sister and coheir of Richard, lord Wells, two sons,

1. Sir Robert Willoughby.
2. Sir Christopher Willoughby.

Sir ROBERT WILLOUGHBY enjoyed the inheritance but a short time, dying March 23, in 7 Edward IV. within age, leaving Christopher, his brother and heir, 14 years old. Which

Sir CHRISTOPHER WILLOUGHBY, in 14 Edward IV. making proof of his age, had livery of his lands; and was made one of the knights of the Bath at the coronation of king Richard III. In 2 Henry VII. he brought forces to the aid of the king, against the earl of Lincoln, Lambert Simnel, and their adherents, and was in the battle of Stoke, near Newark upon Trent, June 16, when they were defeated, and the earl of Lincoln slain. By his last will, bearing date November 1, 1498, 14 Henry VII. (the probate whereof is on 13 July following) he ordered his body to be buried in the church of the nuns at Campsey, in the county of Stafford, before the high altar, where his father lay interred; bequeathing to the prioress there twenty pounds, also ten marks for making another tomb for Robert, late lord Willoughby (his uncle) at Mettingham; and to William Willoughby, his eldest son, or to him who, after his death, should be his heir, half his plate and jewels. He married Margery, daughter of Sir William Jennens, of Knotshall, in the county of Stafford, by whom he left issue five sons,

1. William Willoughby.
2. Christopher Willoughby.
3. John Willoughby.
4. George Willoughby.
5. Thomas Willoughby, ancestor to the present lord Middleton.

Also three daughters,

1. Dorothy, wife of John Neville, lord Latimer.
2. Catherine, wife of Sir John Heydon, of Baconsthorp, in the county of Norfolk, knight.
3. Elizabeth, married to William, lord Ewers.

WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY, the eldest son, had the title of lord Willoughby, in 14 Henry VII. on failure of the issue male of John, lord Wells, and became possessed of the manors of Grimsby and Grimsthorp, together with the greatest part of the estate of the said lord Wells, who had considerable possessions anciently belonging to the family of Willoughby, by the marriage of Joan, daughter and heir of Robert, lord Willoughby, with Sir Richard Wells, knight, as before-mentioned.

The said William, lord Willoughby, was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the coronation of king Henry VIII. and in 3 Henry VIII. a war being then designed with France on the behalf of Ferdinand, king of Arragon, accompanied Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorset, general of the English army, in order to invade Guyen. Also, in 5 Henry VIII. being with the king at the siege of Tournay, he was one appointed, on the surrender thereof, to take possession of it, having been joined with Charles Brandon, viscount Lille, in defence of the ordnance. He departed this life in 17 Henry VIII. and was buried at Mettingham, in Suffolk, leaving issue by Mary Salines, his wife, (a Spaniard, Spaniard, who had been maid of honour to queen Catherine, first wife of king Henry VIII.) one sole daughter, his heir, named Catharine, whose wardship, in 20 Henry VIII. Charles Brandon, then duke of Suffolk, obtained. Which Catherine, making proof of her age, in 26 Henry VIII. had livery of the lands of her inheritance, and afterwards became the fourth wife of that great duke, whom she survived, and was secondly married to Richard Bertie, esquire, ancestor to the present duke of Ancaster, as has been already shewn.

We are now therefore to treat of
CHRISTOPHER WILLOUGHBY, next brother to the said William, lord Willoughby.

Which Christopher, in 5 Henry VIII. was nominated by act of parliament, as one of the most discreet persons, justices of the peace, (as the words of the act are) for assessing and collecting a subsidy of one hundred and sixty-three thousand pounds by a poll-tax, &c. And being the same year with the king in his expedition against the French, he was knighted for his valiant behaviour at the sieges of Teroven and Tournay. By Elizabeth his wife, sister and heir of Gilbert, lord Talbois, of Kime, in the county of Lincoln, he had issue,

William Willoughby, his son and heir.

And four daughters,

1. Dorothy, wife of Ralph Hopton, of the county of Somerset, esquire.
2. Elizabeth, married to Sir John Braose, of Norfolk, esquire.
3. Anne, wedded to Robert Hall, of Grاتفord, in the county of Lincoln, esquire.
4. Margaret, died young.

His only son,

(First Lord) Sir WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY, was knighted by king Henry VIII. who further designed him the honour of a baron of this realm; but, that monarch dying before his creation, he was advanced to the title of lord Willoughby of Parham, by patent, against the coronation of king Edw. VI. bearing date Feb. 16, 1546. And having distinguished himself in the wars in the reign of king Henry VIII. he was in 4 Edward VI. made lieutenant of Calais, and the marches adjacent, where he resided during the remainder of that reign; and on a feud between him and Sir Andrew Dudley, captain of Guisnes, son of the duke of Northumberland, Sir Andrew was sent for in the last year of that king, to prevent any mischief that might ensue.

In the reign of queen Mary, he was removed from the government of Calais; and in 12 Elizabeth, on that insurrection in the North by the earls of Northumberland and Westmorland, marched with the earl of Suffex against them, having under his command a great charge of footmen, as Stow in his annals relates. His last will bears date at Doncaster, in Yorkshire, December 10, 1573, 16 Elizabeth, wherein he bequeathed his body to be buried at Parham; and died in 1574 (as may be seen by the probate thereof) leaving Margaret, his second wife, surviving, who was the widow of Richard Devereux, viscount Hereford, father of Walter, earl of Essex.

His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Heneage, knight, and on her decease, August 22, in 1st of queen Mary, was then thirty-five years of age, and the wife of the said William, lord Willoughby, and heir to the following manors and lands of the said Sir Thomas Heneage, as is evident from the inquisition taken after his decease at the castle of Lincoln, January 27 that year, viz. the house, scite, and monastery of Topholm, the manors of Topholm-Rawdby and Knaith, with the advowson of the church, eighty-four messuages, one hundred and twelve bovats of meadow and pasture, with eleven pounds seventeen shillings and five-pence rent of assize in Stow, Newton, Laughterton, Brampton, Fenton, Upton, Kexby, Knaith, and Hevenings, parcel of the manor of Stow, Littleborough-ferry, the rectories of Upton and Kexby, and the glebe lands, tythes, and seven pounds nine shillings and four-pence rent, with the advowson and vicarage of Upton and Kexby, all in the county of Lincoln: also in the said county, the scite and monastery of Bardney, and all houses, edifices, with appurtenances in Bardney, and Laughton, and one hundred acres of wood in Horsley-wood and South-wood, the manor of North-Reston, and house and scite of the priory of Hennings, alias Hevenings, and the church and fields, villages, and all lands thereto belonging; which Sir Thomas had by patent, August 17, 2 Edward VI. in exchange for other lands in Yorkshire. By her he had issue a daughter, Mary, married to William Metham, of Binbroke, in Lincolnshire, and a son and heir, (Second Lord) CHARLES WILLOUGHBY, who succeeding to the honours, married Margaret, daughter of Edward Clinton, earl of Lincoln, by whom he had issue five sons and three daughters:

1. William Willoughby, who died in his lifetime.
2. Sir Ambrose Willoughby, knight, ancestor to the present lord.

5. Sir Thomas Willoughby, who married Mary, daughter of John Thorney, of Fenton, in Nottinghamshire, and had issue two sons, Thomas, who afterwards, as will be seen, assumed the honours of the family, and William, who was a priest of the church of Rome: also a daughter, Mary, married first to Augustine Wingfield, of Ruslip, auditor of the exchequer, secondly to —

Sau. The daughters were,

1. Catherine, married to Sir John Savile, of Howley, in the county of York, knight.

3. Mary,

3. Mary, was married to Sir William Booth, of Killingholm, in the same county.

(Third Lord) WILLIAM WILLOUGHBY, succeeding his grandfather in his honour, 1603, made his will Aug. 26, and died two days after in the same year, as the inquisition shews, taken after his decease, October 14 following, at the castle of Lincoln; when the jury found, that he died seized of the manors of Bardney and Southbrey, rectories of Upton and Kekby, the site of the monastery of Bardney, and the lands thereto belonging in Bardney and Langton, the manor of Bucknal, called Stixwood manor, and Crowland manor, and advowson of the church of Bucknal, the manor of Munting, alias Thorley park in Munting, the manor of Stow and hundred of Stow, the manors of Abierton and Orbye, the monastery of Tuxholm, and manors of Tuxholm and Knaith, and advowsons of the churches, with the site, and lands, and monastery of Heavenings, all in the county of Lincoln, and the manor of Parham, in Suffolk: to all which Henry, lord Willoughby, was found to be his son and heir, and then of the age of four years and eleven months, by his wife Frances, daughter of John, earl of Rutland, by whom he had also issue two other sons, Francis Willoughby and William Willoughby.

to Robert Cotton I rector of Trellicks in Cornwall.

His lordship departing this life June 24. 1755 was succeeded by his eldest son

Baron PETRE, whose son Otho Petre, of Bowhay, in Devonshire, had a son John Petre, of the same place; which John Petre married a lady of the name of Hurst, in the aforesaid county;
their son Otho Petre married Frances, daughter of Thomas Southcote, esquire, by whom he had a son, John Petre, living in 1620, and a daughter, Elizabeth, the wife of James Dawbney, of Wagford.

THE first of this noble family upon record is JOHN PETRE, of Tor-brian, in Devonshire; whole son,

WILLIAM PETRE, by his wife Jane, was father of two sons,

1. John Petre.
2. Thomas Petre, whose son Otho Petre, of Bowhay, in Devonshire, had a son John Petre, of the same place; which John Petre married a lady of the name of Hurst, in the aforesaid county;
their son Otho Petre married Frances, daughter of Thomas Southcote, esquire, by whom he had a son, John Petre, living in 1620, and a daughter, Elizabeth, the wife of James Dawbney, of Wagford.

The eldest son,
JOHN PETRE, married Alice, daughter of John Collins, of Woodland, in Devonshire, and had issue, three daughters,

1. Alice, married to Thomas Read, of Uplomar.
2. Thomasin, married to William Parkin, of Cornwall, esquire.
3. Milcent, married to John Petre, of Exeter.

Also six sons,
1. John Petre, whose son of the same name married first Joan, daughter of Michael Ridgeway, of Newton-abbey; and, secondly, Alice, daughter of Jacob Blackaller, of Totnefs. By the former he had issue two sons, John and William.

2. John Petre, who died without issue.
3. William Petre, ancestor to the barons Petre.
4. William Petre, } who died without issue.
5. Robert Petre, }
6. Alexander Petre, chancellor of Exeter, and archdeacon of Huntingdonshire.

The third son,
Sir WILLIAM PETRE, about the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. having his education at Exeter college, in Oxford, became so great a proficient in his studies there, that he was elected fellow of All-Souls college, and afterwards became principal of Peckwaters-Inn; and in 24 Henry VIII. arrived to the degree of a doctor of laws, and grew so eminent therein, that he was employed by that king in divers affairs of consequence, especially in what tended to the dissolution of religious houses, then in agitation; being in the 27th of that reign, with some others, put into commission by Cromwell, the general visitor, to repair to all the monasteries throughout England, and to enquire into the government and behaviour of the votaries of both sexes, whereby to pick up sufficient matter to ground an accusation; and that grand work being afterwards fully accomplished

Andrew St. John, Bachelor St. John, William St.
John, Beauchamp St. John, Rowland St. John,
John St. John, and Henry St. John: the latter was at the university of Oxford; Beauchamp died unmarried in 1716; Rowland was drowned at sea in 1700, with Sir Cloudesley Shovel, master-and Oliver, the eldest, dying unmarried in 1700.

according to the king's mind, his majesty, as a reward for the good service of the said William therein, granted to him and Gertrude his wife, in fee, the priory of Clattercote, in the county of Oxford, in the 30th year of his reign; and, the year after, the manor of Gynge-abbots, in the county of Essex, parcel of the possessions of the then dissolved monastery of Berkyng, in that county, with the advowson of the rectory of Ingarston, alias Gynge ad Petram. In which commissions for visiting the religious houses, he had the title of one of the clerks in chancery, and was also master of the requests. But in these employments his great learning and abilities being observed by the king, he was, in the 35th year of his reign, first sworn of the privy-council, and soon after (the same year) constituted one of the principal secretaries of state.

In 36 Henry VIII. the king declaring his intentions of invading the French dominions for the recovery of his right to the crown of France, he appoints this William (then a knight, and one of the principal secretaries of state) one of the council to be aiding and assisting to queen Catharine his consort, in the administration, during his absence: and, being so aggrandized, he, in 37 Henry VIII. obtained special licence to retain twenty men, besides his own menial servants, and to give them liveries, badges, or cognizances. And in 38 Henry VIII.
the king then lying on his death-bed, and appointing such as should be of the council to Edward his son and successor, in matters of great consequence, he was nominated one of those who were appointed assistants to them.

Nor had he less esteem from king Edward VI.
who continued him in his office of principal secretary of state. And, in the third year of his reign, he was constituted treasurer of the court of firstfruits for life: and in 4 Edward VI. one of the commissioners to treat of peace with the French at Guines. He was also in that reign commissioned with the archbishop of Canterbury, and others, in confidence of their sound knowledge, zealous faith, innocency of life and behaviour, and readiness to dispatch affairs, to punish and correct all rectors, vicars, and other ecclesiasticks, as well as laymen, of what condition soever, who shall despise or evil speak of the book called, "The book of the Common-prayer, and administration of the sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church, after the use of the church of England;" with power to imprison the guilty, and load them with irons, if necessary, or admit them to bail. And was also in several other commissions for ecclesiastical affairs.

Nevertheless,

Nevertheless, he was so much in the favour of queen Mary, on her coming to the crown, that she also made him her principal secretary of state, and chancellor of the Garter, in the first year of her reign, with the fee of an hundred marks per ann. but then discerning, that the restoration of the Romish religion might endanger his enjoyment of those abbey-lands which he had formerly acquired, he got a special dispensation from pope Paul IV. for the retaining of them; "affirming, that he was ready to employ them to spiritual uses," as by his bull, bearing date 4 cal. Dec. anno 1555. (2 and 3 Philip and Mary) appeareth. That queen also intrusted him with concluding the treaty of marriage between her and Philip, archduke of Austria.

Likewise to queen Elizabeth he was for some time principal secretary of state, and was one of her privy-council till his death. He was commissioned with others, in 1 Elizabeth, to take the oath of supremacy of all persons enjoying any post or trust under her. Also, in 8 Elizabeth, having the title of chancellor of the order of the Garter, he was in commission with Sir Nicholas Bacon, knight, lord-keeper, in consideration of their prudence, dexterity, and integrity, in transacting affairs, to search into the records of the tower of London, exchequer, and the rolls in chancery, in order to give what light they could to the queen's deputies at Bruges, who were on a treaty with Philip, king of Spain, where certain difficulties were started, touching matters relating to the queen and her subjects.

Hollinshed, in his Chronicle, gives these further particulars of him: "The 13th of January 1572, (14 Elizabeth) deceased Sir William Petre, knight, who, for his judgment and pregnant wit, had been secretary, and of the privy council, to four kings and queens of this realm, and seven times ambassador abroad in foreign lands: he augmented Exeter college, in Oxford, with lands to the value of an hundred pounds by year; and also builded ten almshouses, in the parish of Ingerstone, for twenty poor people; ten within the house, and ten without the house; having every one two-pence the day, a winter gown, and two load of wood, and among them feeding for six kine, winter and summer, and a chaplain to say them service daily."

The learned Camden, in his Britannia, in Essex, saith, that "he was a man of approved wisdom and exquisite learning, and not so much memorable for those honourable places and offices of state which he bare, and for his oftentimes being sent in embassy to foreign princes, as for that, being bred and brought up in good learning, he well deserved of learning in the university of Oxford, and was both pitiful and bounteous to his poor neighbours about him, and of Ingerston, where he lies buried."

By his last will and testament, and the preamble thereof, it appears, that he died a protestant. He orders his body to be buried "in the new isle of the church of Ingerston, if it should fortune him to die within fifty miles thereof, or otherwise to be committed to the earth in such place, order, and sort, as his executors think most convenient. And that, in the same new isle at Ingerston, there be erected some monument, with the names of him and his two wives, the ordering whereof he wholly commits to the discretion of his executors. He wills, that immediately after his death there be bestowed on the poorest inhabitants of Ingerston, alias Ging-Petre, Writtle-Ging hospital, Butterbury, Stoke, Ging-Mounteney, Ging-Margaret, East-Thorneden, and Heron-Green, and other places within the county of Essex, the sum of forty pounds, to be distributed by the direction of his executors. And to the poorest inhabitants of Torrington Magna, in Devonshire, five pounds. To the poorest inhabitants of Hawkehurst, in the county of Kent, five marks. To the poorest inhabitants in the parishes of Montagu and Tyntenhull (being lord of the said manors) in the county of Somerset, six pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence. To the poorest inhabitants of Kingsbridge and Thurston, in Devonshire, four pounds. To the poorest inhabitants of his manor of Brent, alias South-Brent, in the said county, four pounds. To the poorest inhabitants of St. Botolph, without Aldersgate, in London, six pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence. To the prisoners in London and Southwark, twenty pounds; and the like sum to the relief of the poor in the hospitals belonging thereto. He was also bountiful to his servants, bequeathing them a whole year's wages, besides legacies.

"To his good and loving wife, dame Anne Petre, he bequeathed much plate, and one ring with a diamond, given him by queen Mary, of good memory. To his son and heir, John Petre, his other jewels, plate, &c. but if he died without issue, before he arrived to twenty-two years, to be divided into four parts: one part to his wife, if living; another among his daughters, and their children then living; as also his wife's part, if not living: and the third and fourth parts among the poor, and in deeds of charity, in such sort, as to his executors and supervisors of his will, or the survivor of them, shall seem best."

It further appears, that he had seven manors in Devonshire, the manor of Charmouth in Dorsetshire, nine manors in Essex, the manors of Todenham and Sutton, in Gloucestershire, the manors of Cheriton, Montagu, and Tyntenhull, in Somersetshire, the manor of Kenet, in Kent, and the manor of Kentford, in Suffolk: all which "he entails on John, his son and heir, and the heirs male of his body, and in default thereof, on the son and heir of his brother John Petre, of Torbrian, in Devonshire."

"He constitutes his wife's son-in-law, Richard Baker, esquire, and his brother Robert Petre, executors; and Sir William Gerrard, alderman of London, and Edmund Tirrell, esquire, overseers." Dated April 12, 1571, 13 Elizabeth, and proved January 29, 1572.

He was buried at Ingerston, according to his desire, where a monument is erected to his memory. He left issue by Gertrude his first wife (who died May 28, 1541) daughter to Sir John Tirrell, of Warley, in the county of Essex, knight, a daughter, Dorothy, married to Nicholas Wadham, of Merrifield, in the county of Somerset, esquire, who having no issue by her, they were the founders of Wadham college, in Oxford; he beginning, she finishing, and both richly endowing it; whereby it is become as rich as most, and more uniform than many, in England.

But the said Sir William Petre, by Anne his second wife (who surviving him, died in 1581, and was interred at Ingerston) daughter of Sir William Browne, knight, lord-mayor of London, in 6 Henry VIII. 1514, and widow of John Tirrell, of Heron-Place, in Essex, esquire, had issue John Petre, his only son.

And three daughters,

1. Elizabeth, wedded to John Gostwick, of Willington, in the county of Bedford, esquire.
2. Catherine, married to John Talbot, of Grafton, in the county of Worcester, esquire, ancestor to the earl of Shrewsbury.
3. Thomafine, espoused to Lodowick Grevil, of Milcot, in the county of Warwick, esquire.

Which,

(First Lord) JOHN PETRE, was knighted in 18 Elizabeth, and chose knight of the shire for the county of Essex in two parliaments, called in 27 and 28 Elizabeth. He was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Petre, of Writtle, in the county of Essex, by letters patent bearing date July 21, 1603, 1 James I. and died on October 11, 1613, at West Hornden, in Essex.

He had to wife Mary, daughter of Sir Edward Walgrave, knight, by whom he had issue four daughters,

- } who died infants.

3. Thomas Petre was of Cranham, in Essex, and by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of William Baskerville, of Wanborough, in Wiltshire, had issue four sons; Sir Francis Petre, of Cranham, knight and baronet, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Gage, of Firle, in Sussex, knight and baronet; William Petre, second son, who wedded Lucy, daughter of Sir Richard Farmer, of Somerton, in the county of Oxford, knight; John Petre, third son, of Fidlers, in the county of Essex, esquire, who espoused Elizabeth, daughter of John Pincheon, of Writtle, in the said county, and had issue Philip, his son and heir, baptized May 1, 1668.

4. Robert Petre died before his father, unmarried.

(Second Lord) William Petre, was elected one of the knights of the shire for the county of Essex, in the 39th year of queen Elizabeth; and, taking to wife Catharine, second daughter of Edward Somerset, earl of Worcester, had issue seven sons,

- } successively barons.

Also two daughters,

2. Dorothy, to John Thimelby, of Innham, in the county of Lincoln, esquire.

By the inquisition taken after the decease of the said Robert, lord Petre, December 14, 14 Charles I. at Stratford, in Essex, the jury found, that he made his will October 20, 14 Charles I. 1638, and died three days after; and that,

ARUNDEL, Baron ARUNDEL of WARDOUR.

THE family, of which I am now to treat, is a branch of that, which for some centuries has flourished in the West of England.

ROGER DE ARUNDEL came into England with William the Conqueror, and, at the time of the general survey in that reign, held twenty-eight lordships in Somersetshire; part of which were the manors of Halfee, Hiwis, Wilegletone, Destone, Cerletone, Aix, Opecedre, and Cedre.

Robert de Arundel, youngest son of the said Roger, in 5 Stephen, on levying of the Dane-gelt, paid fifty-eight shillings for the lands he held in the counties of Dorset and Wilts. He was a benefactor to the canons of Taunton, in the county of Devon, by his gift of the church of Diffam, and two hides of land in that town. Also, in 7 Henry II. Roger de Arundel accounted for forty pounds for the knight's fee he then held.

To this Roger succeeded his eldest son,

GILBERT DE ARUNDEL, who by Rosamond, daughter of John de Novant, was father of

RICHARD ARUNDEL, who by his wife Juliana had a son and heir,

SIR REINFRICK ARUNDEL, who married Alice, daughter and heir of Sir John Lanherne, of Lanherne, in Cornwall. Their son,

SIR HUMPHRY ARUNDEL, married Joan, daughter of Sir John Umfrevil, and had issue

SIR RALPH ARUNDEL, who was sheriff of Cornwall in 1260, and by Eve, daughter of Sir Richard de Rupe, or Rock, knight, was father of

REINFRICK ARUNDEL, whose wife, Margery, bore to him

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, knight, who by his wife Joan, daughter and heir of John de la Beer, of Talvern, in Somersetshire, had issue

JOHN ARUNDEL, who married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to Sir Oliver Carmyno, knt. and the dying in 37 Edward III. left issue

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, knight, who in 2 Richard II. (being then marshal of England) with Sir Thomas Banaster, a knight of the Garter, was ordered to conduct an army into Bretagne; when a violent tempest drove them into the Irish sea, where the latter was drowned. He married Joan, daughter and coheir to Sir William de Lustock, knight, (who bore for his arms, azure, a buck's head, argent) and was succeeded by SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, knight, his son and heir, made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Henry IV. October 13, 1399. He was seated at Lanherne, in the county of Cornwall; and, in 7 Henry V. was with the king's fleet at sea, in the retinue of Sir Hugh Courtney. He was sheriff of the county of Cornwall, in 6, 8, and 9 Henry V.

also in 1, 2, 5, and 6 Henry VI. and dying on the Tuesday after the Epiphany, 1434, 13 Henry VI. left issue by Eleanor his wife, daughter and heir of Sir William Lamborne, knight, (by Joan his wife, daughter and heir of Ralph Soor, of Talvern) three sons,

1. Sir John Arundel, his successor.

2. Sir Thomas Arundel.

3. Humphry Arundel, who married Jane, sister and heir of Sir John Cotesull, knight, and left issue Sir Humphry Arundel, knight, and John, bishop of Exeter, who died in 1503; and, leaving no issue, his two sisters were his heirs; Elizabeth, wife of Nicholas Brome of Baddefley, and secondly of Edward Stradling; and Dorothy, wife of William Whittington, of Pantley, in the county of Gloucester, esquires.

The eldest son,

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, married Margaret, daughter and coheir of Sir John Burgwash, knight, and died in the life-time of his father, 1417, leaving issue one son,

SIR JOHN ARUNDEL, knight, one of those valiant commanders who served king Henry VI. in France; and, in 29 Henry VI. when the French king sent a puissant army to subdue Aquitain, the lord Camois, Sir John Arundel, and Sir John Seymour, having the government of the country, manned towns; and, as Hall says, animated the fearful Gascoigners, and did all that was possible to frustrate their designs. He married first Elizabeth, daughter to Thomas, lord Morley; and, she dying without issue male, leaving only a daughter Anne, wife of James Tirrel, he took to his second wife Catharine, daughter and coheir to Sir John Chidiok, knight, of Chidiok, in the county of Somerset, and Caundle, in the county of Dorset, (whose other daughter and coheir was married to William, lord Stourton; and, in the division, the first estate fell to Arundel, and Caundle to Stourton) by whom he had a son, Sir Thomas Arundel, knight.

Also six daughters,

1. Thomasine, wife of Sir Henry Marney, knt. baron Marney.

2. Elizabeth, married to Giles Daubeney, lord Daubeney.

3. Ellen, to Ralfe Copleston, of Copleston and Warley, in the county of Devon, esquire.

4. Catharine, to Sir Walter Courtney, knight, and secondly to John Moyle.

5. Margaret, to Sir William Capel, knight, ancestor to the present earl of Essex.

6. Dorothy, to Sir Henry Strangeways, knight. He was succeeded by his only son

Sir

ARUNDEL, BARON ARUNDEL OF WARDOUR.

413

Sir THOMAS ARUNDEL, of Lanherne, in Cornwall, knight of the Bath, left issue by Catharine his wife, daughter of Sir John Dynham, and sister and coheir to John, lord Dynham, three sons and three daughters,

1. Eleanor, married to Richard St. Low.
2. Elizabeth, married to Thomas Stradling.
3. Catharine, married to John Speke, esquire.

The sons were,

1. John Arundel.
2. Roger Arundel, who married Joan, daughter of ——— Calewoodly, and had a daughter, Joan, the wife of William Pether.
3. Edward Arundel, who died without issue.

The eldest son,

Sir JOHN ARUNDEL, succeeded to the estate at Lanherne, and, in 10 Henry VII. was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the creation of the duke of York. In 17 Henry VII. on the death of John, lord Dynham, knight of the Garter, he was found to be cousin and heir to him, viz. son of Catharine, late wife of Sir Thomas Arundel, knight, and third sister and coheir of the said lord Dynham. And in 5 Henry VIII. for his valour at the sieges of Teroen and Tournay, and at the battle that ensued, was made a knight banneret. He died in January 1545, and was buried at St. Mary Woolnoth in London, leaving issue by Eleanor his first wife, daughter to Thomas Grey, marquis of Dorset, two sons,

1. Sir John Arundel, of Lanherne, who, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Gerard Danet, of Danet's hall, was father of Sir John Arundel, knt. who married Anne, daughter of Edward Stanley, earl of Derby, and by her was ancestor to the Arundels of Lanherne, in the county of Cornwall, and of Chidiocke, in the county of Dorset.
2. Sir Thomas Arundel of Wardour, ancestor to the lord Arundel of Wardour.

Also by his second wife, Jane, daughter to Sir Thomas Greenvil, knight, he had issue a daughter, Mary, married to Robert Ratcliff, earl of Suffex, and secondly to Henry Fitz-Alan, earl of Arundel.

He had also a daughter by his first wife Elizabeth, married to Sir Richard Edgcombe, knight.

The second son,

Sir THOMAS ARUNDEL, by the gift of his father, had Wardour-castle, in the county of Wilts, which castle formerly belonged to the crown; and in the reign of Edward IV. lord Audley was warden thereof, as well as of the parks thereunto belonging. In 5 Edward VI. being charged with Edward, duke of Somerset, for conspiring the murder of John Dudley, duke of Northumberland, he lost his head on that account, February 26, 1552, in 6 Edward VI. He was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of Anne Boleyn.

He married Margaret, one of the daughters and coheirs to Edmund Howard (third son of Thomas, duke of Norfolk) and sister to queen Catharine, fifth wife of king Henry VIII. and by her had issue

Sir Matthew Arundel, knight; and Margaret, wife of Sir Henry Weston.

On an handsome brass monument at Tisbury is the following inscription:

86

Daughter of Lord Edward Howard,
Third Son of Thomas Duke of Norfolk,
And Wife of Sir Thomas Arundel of Wardour castle, a famous Knight. A. D. 1571.

Sir MATTHEW ARUNDEL was knighted in 17 Elizabeth, 1574, and by his wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Henry Willoughby, of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham, esquire, had issue,

2. William Arundel, who died in 1591, and was buried at Tysbury, where also afterwards his father was interred.

The inscription upon the tomb of this knight, who died in 1598, is as follows:

Here lieth William Arundel, the younger sonne of Sir Matthew Arundel Knighte, as Rare a Yong Man, as ever England Bred. He died the sixth Day of February, in the Yeare 1591.

The eldest son,

(First Lord) THOMAS ARUNDEL, though but a young man, behaved himself so valiantly against the Turks in Hungary, that he merited from Rodolph II. emperor of Germany, the honour of a count of the empire, Dec. 14, 1595, 38 Elizabeth: "For that he had behaved himself manfully in the field; as also in the assaulting of divers cities and castles, shewed great proof of his valour; and, that in forcing the water tower near Strigonium, he took from the Turks their banner, with his own hand," (as are the words of that emperor's charter); so that every of his children, and their descendants, of both sexes, should for ever enjoy that title, have vote in all imperial diets, purchase lands within the dominions of the empire, list any voluntary foldiers, and not to be put to any trial, except in the imperial chamber.

But the year after, on his return home, a dispute arising among the peers, whether that dignity, so conferred by a foreign potentate, should be allowed here, as to place and precedence, or any other privilege; it occasioned a warm dispute, which Camden mentions in his History of Queen Elizabeth; and that the queen being asked her opinion in the case, answered, "That there was a close tie of affection between the prince and subject; and that, as chaste wives should have no glances but for their own spouses, so should faithful subjects keep their eyes at home, and not gaze upon foreign crowns: that she, for her part, did not care her sheep should wear a stranger's marks, nor dance after the whistle of every foreigner." Whereby it passed in the negative. Which induced king James, in the third year of his reign, in consideration of his singular merits, to create him a baron of this realm, realm, by the title of baron Arundel of Wardour, by letters patent, bearing date May 4, 1605, with limitation thereof to the heirs male of his body.

This Thomas, lord Arundel, called The Valiant, departing this life at Wardour-castle, 1639, lieth buried at Tisbury, in Wiltshire. On a marble in the chancel is the following inscription:

Thomas Dominus Arundelius, Primus Baro de Warder, sacri Romani imperii comes,
Obijt 7^{mo} Die Novembris,
Ætatis suæ 79, anno Domini 1639.

In the middle of the stone:

He first married Mary, daughter to Thomas Wriothesley, earl of Southampton, and by her had issue a daughter, Elizabetha-Maria, married to Sir John Philpot, of the county of Southampton, knight.

Also two sons,

1. Thomas Arundel, his successor.
2. William Arundel, of Hornisham, in the county of Wilts, who was buried at Tisbury, in Wiltshire; where a monument is erected to his memory with the following inscription:

Here lieth William Arundell, the second son of Thomas the first Lord Arundell of Wardour, by his first wife Maria Wriothesley, the only daughter of Thomas, earl of Southampton. He was married to Maria Brown, the eldest daughter of Anthony Maurice, Viscount Montague, being the relict of William lord St. John of Basing, eldest son of William Marquis of Winchester. He departed this life the 15th of May, 1653, in the 65th year of his age; leaving his loving and beloved wife to mourn and pray; by whom he had many children.

Credo videre bona Domini in terra viventium.

His eldest surviving son was Charles Arundel, of Hornisham. He had also a daughter, Mary, married to Sir Henry Tichborn, of Tichborn, in the county of Southampton, baronet.

The said Thomas, lord Arundel, had to his second wife Anne, daughter of Miles Philipson, of Crooke, in the county of Westmoreland, esquire, widow of ——— Thoroughgood, and by her, who died June 28, 1637, had issue three sons, Matthew, Thomas, and Frederick, who all died infants.

Also six daughters,

1. Catherine, married to Ralphe, son and heir of William, lord Evre.
2. Mary, to Sir John Somers, knight, second son of Henry, earl of Worcester.
3. Anne, to Cecill Calvert, lord Baltimore, and died 1649.

5. Margaret, to Sir John Fortescue, of Saldon, in the county of Buckingham, baronet.

Ann Arundel, the most beautiful and best wife of Cecil Calvert Baron Baltimore, proprietor of Maryland and Lord of Glastonbury, and most beloved daughter of Thomas Arundel, first Baron of Wardour, and Count of the most sacred Roman empire.

Whatsoever is shining in the gems, beautiful in the flowers of Phœnicia, charming in the graces,
(How super-eminently great in Heaven)

Here lieth Ann Arundel Lady Baltimore.
Farewel you most lovely of earthly Beauties.
This tomb was erected to her memory by her husband as a monument of his love. She departed this life on the 23d of July, in the 34th year of her age, and of our Lord 1649.

Requiescat in pace.

(Second Lord) THOMAS ARUNDEL, of Wardour (son and heir of Thomas, the last lord) married Blanch, fifth daughter to Edward, earl of Worcester: and, having raised a regiment of horse for the service of Charles I. was in the battle of Landsdown, in 1643, where he was shot in the thigh with a brace of pistol-bullets, whereof the same year dying in his majesty's garrison at Oxford, he was also buried at Tisbury; where on two marbles are engraved the following inscriptions for him and his lady:

D. O. M.

Hic parte sua mortali quiescit, qui in cœlo potiori parte vivit, immortalis,

Thomas Arundel,

Baro Arundel de Warder, sacri Romani imperii comes, primogenitus nempe Thomæ Arundel, Baronis etiam de Warder, qui, ob insignia et pietatis et fortitudinis exempla in communem christiani nominis hostem in Hungaria ad Strigonium præstita, hæreditarium, hunc honoris titulum a Rodolpho secundo meruit ipse, et ad posteros transmisit; cujus dignitatum virtutumque hic hæres, dum vixit, sic Deo in constanti pietatis exercitio militavit in terris, ut debitum sibi in cœlis triumphum expectare videretur, ita se totum in Regis Caroli Primi obsequium, imminente

ARUNDEL, BARON ARUNDEL OF WARDOUR. 413

On the second is this:

D. O. M.

Hic Conjugi Conjux amantissima adjacet
Domina Blanca Somerset,

filia Edwardi Somerset, Wigorniae comitis, privati sigilli custodis, magistri equitum, &c. quæ marito par generis splendore, exercitio virtutum non impar, in Aula Regia quasi in cella privata vixit quanto dignitate terrena sublimior, tanto pietatis fulgere splendidior, quantoque Regiæ vicinor Majestati, tanto (quod parum est inter mortales) Supremo dilectior Numini quo ut propius frueretur cœlo natura mortalitatem exiit Wintoniæ die 28^o Octob. ann. ætat. LXVI. annoque Dom. MDC XLIX.

This lady, during the absence of her husband, bravely defended Wardour, with a courage above her sex, for nine days, with a few men, against those rebellious forces, which, under the command of Sir Edward Hungerford and Edmund Ludlow, did then attempt it on behalf of the parliament, and then delivered it up upon honourable terms, which they broke; but were soon dislodged by the resolution of this lord Arundel, who, at his return, ordered a mine to be sprung under his own castle, and thus sacrificed that noble and magnificent structure to his loyalty. On the ruins of this old castle over the great gate way is an image of our Saviour, under which, in golden letters, is,

And a little lower the following inscriptions:

Gentis Arundelæ Thomas Lanhernia Proles

Ut sedit cecidit, sine crimine plectitur ille
Infons infonem, fata sequuta probant,
Nam quæ Patris erant, Mathæus filius emit

Here branch of the Arundel Lanhernian race,
Thomas, first sate and fell, merit the fatal crime,
And Heaven, to make him faultless, blessed his line;
Mathew, his offspring, as the father great,
And happier in his prince, regain'd his seat.
Confirm'd, enlarg'd, long may its fortune stand
His care, who gave, resum'd, restor'd the land.

He left issue

Henry Arundel, his son and heir, who succeeded him in his honours.

Also two daughters,

1. Catharine, married to Francis Cornwallis, esquire.

2. Anne, to Roger Vaughan, esquire.

(Third Lord) HENRY ARUNDEL, his son and heir succeeded him in his honours and titles in 1643.

In 1678 he was, with William Herbert, earl of Powis, William Howard, viscount Stafford, William, lord Petre, and John, lord Bellasis, committed prisoners to the Tower, upon the information of the profligate Titus Oates, and other abandoned miscreants, and afterwards were impeached by the house of commons of high crimes and offences, without being brought on their trial. He continued with the other unjustly aspersed lords, till the year 1683, when they were admitted to bail.

On king James's accession to the throne, he was sworn of his privy-council in 1685: was constituted lord-privy-keeper of the seal on the 11th of March, 1685, and knight of the Bath. Also when that monarch began his journey towards Salisbury, he committed the administration of affairs, in his absence, to the lord chancellor, the lords Arundel, Bellasis, Preston, and Godolphin.

On king James's abdication, he retired to Breamore, in Wilts (a seat now belonging to Sir Edward Hulse, baronet, where the family resided after the destruction of the castle of Wardour) where he lived with great hospitality, and died December 28, A. D. 1694, and was buried at Tisbury.

He married Cecily, daughter of Sir Henry Compton, of Brambletye, in the county of Sussex; knight of the Bath, and widow of Sir John Fermour, knight, of Somerton, in the county of Oxford, who died in 1673, and was buried at Tisbury, where is a monument erected to her memory with the following inscription:

D. O. M.

Here lieth in sure hopes of a blessed Immortality, Cecily Compton,

Daughter of Henry Compton, Knight of the Bath, Wife to the Rt. Hon^{ble} Henry Arundell; Baron of Wardour, Count of the Sacred Roman Empire, who, to say much in few words, exerted such a firmness of mind, in a feeble and tender body, such solid virtues in a frail and weak sex, maintained so modest a deportment in an exalted station, such a constant, pious, and watchful sollicitude in behalf of the poor in a great affluence, as to express that image of God, stamped in the soul, much more happily by a lively resemblance of the Deity thro' her invariably religious demeanours. That she might meet its due reward, our merciful God called her out of this mortal life, to a most sweet repose in everlasting bliss, on the 21st of March, in the 67th year of her age, and of our redemption, 1675. Requiescat in pace.

of

THE Blighs were an antient family in Yorkshire; whereof, it is probable,

Upon his casting lots, among other adventurers, the allotment fell in the baronies of Lune and Moghergallen and county of Meath: in consequence whereof there were set out and delivered to them the several proportions of one thousand plantation acres, amounting to one thousand six hundred and nineteen acres, three rods, and thirteen poles, English statute measure; one thousand one hundred thirty-three acres, one rod, thirteen poles, plantation, making one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five acres, three rod, nine poles, statute, in the barony of Lune, called by the name of the lordships of Athboy, Rathmore, &c. and five hundred acres, plantation, making eight hundred and nine acres, three rods, twenty-six poles, statute, were to be delivered in some certain place in the barony of Moghergallen; the third part of which premises was ascertained to him by a decree in chancery, June 16, 1657, and confirmed to his son Thomas, by two patents under the acts of settlement, bearing date May 12, and November 12, 1668. In the first parliament after the restoration, he was returned member for Athboy; and March 14, 1663, joined in commission with William Smith, Thomas Worsopp, Peter Harvey, and William Dodson, esquires, for examining, stating, and auditing the arrears of the customs and excise, of tonnage, poundage, and new impost, from the 30th of January 1648, to the 26th of December 1663; and also the 8th of March 1665, was made joint commissioner of the office called the duty of inland excise, and licences of all the beer and strong waters of Ireland.

THOMAS BLIGH, of Rathmore, esquire, the only son, was returned to the parliament of Ireland one of the knights of the shire for the county of Meath, and was of the privy council to queen Anne, in that kingdom.

By patent May 12, 1668, he had a confirmation of the lands allotted to his father as an adventurer, in the county of Meath; and, with his mother, had a grant of lands (November 12) under the acts of settlement; also, August 24, 1681, the grant of four yearly fairs at Athboy, to be holden April 23, July 25, October 1 and 28. And being proprietor of most of the lands lying in the parishes of Rathmore, Moyagher, Kildalkey, and Athboy, in the barony of Lune, and county of Meath, had the same erected (on his petition to king William) June 4, 1694, into the manor of Athboy, with power to hold five hundred acres in demesne, to impale eight hundred acres for deer, to hold courts, and many other privileges.

He departed this life at Bath, August 28, 1710, and was buried in September at Rathmore. He married Elizabeth, youngest daughter to colonel

On December 26, 1740, he succeeded colonel Alexander Rose in his regiment of foot; was made a brigadier-general of his majesty's armies in 1745; and in 1746, succeeded general Whitshed in the command of his dragoons. In 1747 he was constituted a major-general, and February 22d following colonel of a regiment of horse, and on March 23, 1754, raised to the rank of lieutenant-general. He married Aug. 19, 1737, Elizabeth, sister to William Bury, of Shannon-Grove, in the county of Limerick, esquire, and had a son Thomas, born January 5, 1739, who is dead. rent September 14, 1721; and, on the 22d following, took his seat in the house of peers. He was further created viscount Darnley, of Athboy, by privy seal, dated December 31, 1722, and by patent March 7 following; also was created earl of Darnley, by patent June 29, 1725.

His lordship married August 24, 1713, Theodosia Hyde, then only daughter and heir to Edward, earl of Clarendon, by Catharine his wife, baroness of Clifton, daughter of Henry O'Brien, lord Ibrackan (son and heir of Henry, earl of Thomond) by Catharine his wife, sole daughter of George, lord Aubigny, and of Catharine his wife, eldest daughter of Theophilus Howard, earl of Suffolk, and heir to her brother, Charles, duke of Richmond and Lennox, earl of Litchfield and March, and baron of Leighton-Bromswold, who died at Elsinore in Denmark, December 21, 1672, being sent ambassador extraordinary to that king, and left no issue. By the inquisition, after his decease, taken at Ailesbury, January 16, 14 James I. the jury found that he died on the 8th of November, in the 14th of king James, possessed of the manor of Winge, alias Askott, and the manors of Wynges, and rectory and advowson of the church; the manors of Hoggeston, and advowson of the church; Ravensmeere, Abbots-Aston, alias Aston-Abbotts, with the rectory of the church; Hugeden, and rectory and advowson of the church; Dagnall and Spigarnells; Ilmer in Aston, and rectory and advowson of the church; Peterley, Peterstone, Hunderdye, Rollesham, Wingrave, Martens, Wroughton, and Grove, Chawley, Bereton, Beachenden, Etherop, and Cramwell, St. Cleers, and West-Wiccomb, Studham-Budbroke, alias Hampton supra Montem, and Buckland, all in the county of Buckingham; and divers other lands and messuages elsewhere: also, of the office of master of the king's falcons, granted to him, his heirs, and successors, held of the king by grand serjeantry. And that Robert, lord Dormer, was his grandson and heir, and then of the age of six years, being son and heir of William, eldest son and heir of the said Robert, lord Dormer, who died in his father's life-time.

Which William Dormer married Alice, daughter of Sir Richard Molineux, of Sefton, in the county of Lancaster, knight and baronet, by whom he had also Elizabeth, married to Edward Somerset, lord Herbert of Ragland, afterwards marquis of Worcester, and ancestor by her to the present duke of Beaufort; and four sons, the second and third, William and Richard, died unmarried; and the fourth, Francis, married a lady of the name of Catesby, but died without issue.

The eldest son,

(Second Lord, first Earl) ROBERT DORMER, so succeeding his grandfather, was advanced to the dignity of viscount Ascot, and earl of Caernarvon; and, being a valiant loyalist, took up arms in defence of king Charles I. and was one of those lords, A. D. 1642, who subscribed that declaration of the king's, wherein he published, That he had no intention of making war upon his parliament, or saw any reason for believing he had any such designs; but that all his endeavours tended to the firm and constant settlement of the true protestant religion, the just privileges of parliament, the liberty of the subject, and the law, peace, and prosperity of this kingdom. He was excepted against the same year, when the earl of Essex, by instructions, was impowered to proclaim a pardon to all such as within ten days returned to their duty. In the year 1643, he had the command of a regiment of horse, and went with prince Rupert, the marquis of Hertford, prince Maurice, and colonel Howard, into Dorsetshire, and charged as a volunteer in Sir John Byron's regiment at the battle of Roundway-down, in the county of Wilts, June 13: after which, upon some difference with prince Maurice for non-observance of the articles upon the taking of Dorchester and Weymouth, as he was full of honour and justice on all contracts, he took it so ill, that he quitted the command he had there, and went to the king before Gloucester, being then a general of the horse: but was slain at the battle of Newbury September 20 following, after he had charged and routed a body of the enemy's horse, and, returning carelessly back through some some of the scattered troopers of the enemy, was, by one of them that knew him, run through the body with a sword, of which he died in an hour. Lord Clarendon gives this account of him:

"Before the war, though his education was adorned by travel, and an exact observation of the manners of more nations than our common travellers, use to visit (for he had, after the view of Spain, France, and most parts of Italy, spent some time in Turkey, and those eastern countries) he seemed to be wholly delighted with those looser exercises of pleasure, hunting, hawking, and the like, in which the nobility of that time too much delighted to excel. After the troubles began, having the command of the first or second regiment of horse, that was raised for the king's service, he wholly gave himself up to the office and duty of a soldier, no man more diligently obeying, or more dexterously commanding; for he was not only of a very keen courage in the exposing of his person, but an excellent discernor and pursuer of advantage upon his enemy. He had a mind and understanding very present in the article of danger, which is a rare benefit in that profession. Those infirmities, and that licence which he had formerly indulged to himself, he put off with severity, when others thought them excusable under the notion of a soldier. He was a great lover of justice, and practised it then most deliberately when he had power to do wrong; and so strict in the observation of his word and promise as a commander, that he could not be persuaded to stay in the West, when he found it not in his power to perform the agreement he had made with Dorchester and Weymouth. If he had lived, he would have proved a great ornament to that profession; and an excellent soldier; and by his death, the king found a sensible weakness in his army."

He married Anna-Sophia, daughter to Philip Herbert, earl of Pembroke and Montgomery, by whom he had issue

(Third Lord, second Earl) CHARLES DORMER, his son and heir, who succeeded him in his honours, but died, without issue male, on the 29th of November, 1709. He had two wives; first, Elizabeth, daughter to Arthur, lord Capel, and by her (who died July 30, 1678, and was buried at Wenge August 7 following) had issue two sons,

1. Charles Dormer, } who died young.
2. William Dormer, }

Also three daughters,

1. Elizabeth, married to Philip Stanhope, earl of Chesterfield.
2. Isabella, to Charles Coote, earl of Montrath in Ireland.

3. Anna-Sophia died of the small-pox, unmarried, February 2, 1694-5 in the twenty-second year of her age.

By his second wife, Mary, (daughter to Montagu Bertie, earl of Lindsey) who died June 30, 1709, he had no issue; whereby the earldom became extinct, and the barony of Dormer devolved on the issue of Anthony Dormer, of Grove Park, in the county of Warwick, second son of Robert, the first lord Dormer. Which

ANTHONY DORMER, seated at Grove-Park, took to wife Margaret, the daughter of Sir Anthony Terringham, of Terringham, in the county of Buckingham, knight, by whom he had issue four sons,

1. Robert Dormer.

2. Anthony Dormer,

3. John Dormer,

4. Francis Dormer,

who died without issue.

Also two daughters: Elizabeth married to — Watson, of Madamcourt, in the county of Cambridge; and Mary to — Smith, of Queenby, in the county of Leicester.

ROBERT DORMER, son and heir to this Anthony, married Anne, daughter of Rowland Eyres, of Haslop, in the county of Derby, esquire, by whom he had issue one son, Rowland Dormer, to whom, on the death of Charles, earl of Caernarvon, without issue male, A. D. 1709, the title of lord Dormer descended. Which, (Fourth Lord) ROWLAND DORMER, so inheriting the barony, did not long enjoy the honour, dying unmarried in the year 1712. He had two sisters that died unmarried; as also Anne, wedded first to Edmund Powel, of Sandford, in the county of Oxford, and afterwards to Sir John Curson, of Waterperry, in the same county, barr.

The other three sons of the said Anthony Dormer, of Grove-Park, and uncles to Rowland, lord Dormer, leaving no issue, we therefore come to the descendants of ROBERT DORMER, of Peterley, in the county of Buckingham, third son of Robert, the first lord Dormer.

He married Mary, daughter of Edward Baniſter, of Ilsworth, in the county of Southampton, esquire, by whom he had eight sons and six daughters, died without issue.

2. Mary, to John Roper, esquire.

3. Anne, to George Eyston, of Hendred, in Berkshire, esquire.

4. Frances,

5. Bridget,

6. Winifred,

who died unmarried.

CHARLES DORMER, fourth son, by the death of his elder brothers, became heir to his father. He was seated at Peterley, Buckinghamshire, and died March 22, 1677, leaving issue, by Mary his wife, daughter of — Cellier, esquire; two sons,

1. Charles Dormer.

2. Robert Dormer, who married Frances, daughter of Windsor Finch, of Ruthock, esquire.

Also three daughters,

MAYNARD, Viscount * MAYNARD.

GENEALOGISTS generally admit the claim which this noble family lays to a descent from Mainard, or Maignard; who, according to the roll of Battle-abbey, was among those Normans who came into this kingdom with William the Conqueror.

It stands upon record, that in the reign of Henry III. Edward Maynard sold lands in Misted in Kent, to the monastery of Shepey Land, as it does that

JOHN MAINARD, of Axminster, in Devonshire, who served under Edward, prince of Wales, in his victorious expeditions in France, was, on July 28, 1352, constituted governor of Brest-castle, in Brittany. His son,

JOHN MAINARD, feated at Shorefield, in Devonshire, died 1401, who married a daughter of W— Winton, and was father of

NICHOLAS MAINARD, esquire, who left this world in 1421; and by a daughter and coheir of — Hilliard, was father of

JOHN MAINARD, esquire, who married Jane, daughter of John Alexander, and departed this life in the first year of King Edward IV. and was succeeded by

NICHOLAS MAINARD, his son and heir, who died in 14 Henry VII. and left issue a son of his own name,

NICHOLAS MAINARD, esquire, who had two wives; Margaret, daughter to John Ellys, of Ellys, in the county of Devonshire, esquire; and Dorothy, daughter to Edward Mundy, of the county of Derby. By the first he had issue a son, John; also by his second a son named John, who by his will, December 4, 38 Henry VIII. orders his body to be buried in the chapel of the Holy-Trinity, within the church of St. Mary Arches, in the city of Exeter; and gave lands for a yearly obite to be kept in the said church on the 3d of November (if not on a Sunday) to pray for the souls of John Bradmore, his father-in-law, his father's and mother's souls, and all the souls he is bound to pray for. He leaves a legacy to his brother John Maynard; and wills, that all his evidences, concerning his lands, be by his overseers sorted, and put in boxes, and then put into a coffer, with three locks and three several keys belonging to each of them; one to remain with the mayor of Exeter, for the time being, another with the overseers of his will, and the third to be kept by the head warden for the time being of the parish of St. Mary Arches; and the said coffer to remain in the council chamber, till such time as his son and heir came to the full age of twenty-eight years. It also appears by the will, that he held lands in the parishes of Kenne, Rew, Wymple, Crews, Morchard, Exminster, and other parishes in Devonshire; and that he left two sons, John and Richard. His elder brother, JOHN MAYNARD, esquire, in the 7th year of king Edward VI. was steward of the borough of St. Alban's for life; in which year they were first incorporated. He died October 21, 1556, leaving Ralph Maynard, his son and heir, twenty years of age; as is evident from the inquisition after his death, taken at St. Alban's January 14 following. He made his will (writing himself John Maynard, of St. Alban's, esquire) October 18, 1556, ordering his body to be buried in the parish church of St. Michael, in St. Alban's; and bequeaths to his son Ralph Maynard, ten pounds yearly for his education in the law (but, if he withdrew from that study, the annuity to cease) as also all his goods in his dwelling-house at St. Alban's. He mentions his son's wife, the daughter of John Bridge; Anne Bridge, his wife's daughter; Henry and Robert Maynard, his sons; and Dorothy, Mary, and Awdry, his daughters; constituting Dorothy his wife executrix, and his brother Thomas Skipwith overseer.

The said John Maynard was chose one of the members for St. Alban's, in the parliament called in the 1st year of queen Mary; and was one of those thirty nine members, who are recorded in my lord chief justice Coke's institutes to absent themselves from the parliament, rather than join in receiving the pope's authority into this realm; for which they were indicted in the king's bench, "For that they appeared in the parliament, and were there present; yet notwithstanding, lightly esteeming the inhibition of the king and queen, and having no regard of the commonweal of this realm of England, afterwards, namely January 12, in the 1st and 2d of the king and queen, and during the parliament, departed without licence, in manifest contempt of the said king and queen's command and injunction, and to the great detriment of the commonweal of the kingdom, and to the pernicious example of all other."

But to this they pleaded, "That the high court of parliament subsisted by its own laws and customs, and that the king cannot take notice of any thing said or done in the house of commons, but by the report of the said house, &c."

This John Maynard had to his first wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Ralph Rowlet, of St. Alban's, and Sandridge, in the county of Hereford (and co-heir to her brother Sir Ralph Rowlet) by whom he had issue Ralph Maynard, of St. Alban's, esquire, who was twice married: first to Elizabeth, daughter of John Bridge, of London; secondly to Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Scale, knight. He died in 1613, leaving issue by his last lady, an only son, Robert Maynard. His sister Dorothy was married to Sir Robert Clarke, baron of the Exchequer; and Elizabeth to Henry Barnes of London. The second wife of the said John Maynard was Dorothy, daughter of Robert Heron, esquire, and widow of John Bridge; by whom he had issue.

Sir HENRY MAYNARD, his son and heir, who was secretary to the famous William Cecil, lord Burghley, lord treasurer of England in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and served in three several parliaments for the borough of St. Alban's, viz. in 28, 30, and 39th years of queen Elizabeth, also, in the 43d of that reign was elected one of the knights for the county of Essex, and was sheriff of the said county in the last year of queen Elizabeth, who conferred the honour of knighthood on him. Writing himself of Little Estane, in Essex, knight, he makes his will 20 August, 1609, and bequeaths to the poor of Estane, six pounds; to the poor of Much Estane, five pounds; to the poor of Thaxted, ten pounds; to the poor of Much Dunmowe, ten pounds; to the poor of Little Canfield, four pounds; to the poor of Broxsted, five pounds; to be distributed by the overseers of each parish, as soon as may be, after his decease. He bequeaths to his daughter, Elizabeth Maynard, two thousand pounds, at the age of eighteen years, or on the day of her marriage. To his daughter Mary Maynard, two thousand pounds, to be paid as aforesaid. To his son, Charles Maynard, all those his house and houses situate in London; and, for default of issue, to descend to Francis Maynard, another son to him the said Sir Henry; to whom he also bequeaths five hundred pounds, and his lease of lands in Warwickshire, which he holds of the king.

He bequeaths to Sir William Maynard, his son and heir, all his furniture, &c. in that part of his mansion-house, in which he then dwelt, called Estane-Lodge, which lieth from the kitchen toward the east. To his beloved wife, the lady Susan Maynard, four hundred ounces of plate; and the residue of his plate to his son, Sir William Maynard. He gives and grants to his executors the wardship and custody of Robert Jocelyn, son and heir of Richard Jocelyn, esquire, deceased, and the marriage of the said Robert, and lease of his lands, which he had by grant from the king; which executors were his said loving wife, and his son, Sir William Maynard; to whom he leaves all the rest of his money, debts, goods, and chattles, whatsoever. And desires it would please his very honourable good lord, the lord Cavendish, to be the overseer of his will; which was proved, and administration granted to his said executors, May 18, 1610.

He lies buried at Estans, in Essex, otherwife called Little Easton, (a manor he purchased) under a fair tomb of alabaster in the south isle, with the statues, in full proportion, of him and his lady lying thereon at full length, and this inscription:

Quis fuerim, qualeinque diu me Curia novit;
Plebs, proceres, principes, patria testis erit:
Hos de me (lector) non marmora consule, famas
Saxa nihil tribuant ambigua mea.

Whence, who, and what I was, how held in court,
My prince, the peers, my country can report:
Ask those of me (good reader) not these stones;
They know my life, these do but hold my bones.

Here resteth, in assured hope to rise in Christ,
Henry Maynard, knight, descended of the ancient family of Maynard, in the county of Devon; and dame Susan, his wife, daughter and one of the co-heirs of Thomas Peirson, esquire, to whom he bare eight sonnes and two daughters. He ended this life the 11 of May, 1610; his lady, six sonnes, and two daughters then living.

The said two daughters were, Elizabeth, wedded to Sir Edward Bainton, of Bromham, in Wiltshire; and Mary, who died unmarried.

Of William Maynard, his eldest son, we shall hereafter treat.

Sir John Maynard, his second son, who died July 29, 1658, was seated at Walthamstow, in Essex, also at Tooting, in Surry. He was made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles I. and having married Mary, daughter of Sir Thomas Middleton, knight, lord-mayor of London, left issue two daughters, Mary, married to Thomas Batters, esquire, and Ann; also Sir John Maynard, knight, his son and heir, who had to wife Catherine, sister to Sir James Rushout, created baronet, June 17, 1661, and left a daughter, his heir, married first to William Adams, esquire; secondly, Sir Rushout Cullen, baronet, and thirdly, to Francis Buller, of Chillingham, in the county of Cornwall, esquire.

MURRAY, Baroness STRANGE.

THIS ancient barony Strange, of Knockyn, came into the Stanley family by a female, Joan, daughter of John, baron Strange of Knockyn, which Joan married Sir George Stanley (eldest son of Thomas, first earl of Derby) who, in her right, had summons to parliament from 1482 to 1497 (see Vol. I. p. 458). After his decease, the barony was enjoyed by his descendants down to Ferdinand, fifth earl of Derby; but by this earl's death without issue male, the same became in abeyance between his three daughters, Anne, Frances, and Elizabeth, all married, as may be seen Vol. I. p. 460, and continues so to this day, each of those ladies having many representatives now living. However,

(First Lord) JAMES, seventh earl of Derby, before he succeeded to that honour, had summons to parliament in 1627, as baron Strange of Knockyn. His lordship had three daughters, of which one only, Amelia Sophia (married to John, marquis of Athol) had issue. (See Vol. I. p. 463.) Through this lady the barony devolved, as will be seen, upon the lady who now bears that honour. His lordship's second son died without issue, and the eldest,

(Second Lord) CHARLES STANLEY, eighth earl of Derby, succeeded to the barony among the other honours of the family. His eldest son,

(Third Lord) WILLIAM-RICHARD-GEORGE STANLEY, ninth earl, succeeded. Then for want of issue,

(Fourth Lord) JAMES STANLEY, tenth earl, succeeded; but dying without issue, the barony Strange of Knockyn devolved upon, (Fifth Lord) JAMES MURRAY, duke of Athol, grandson to Amelia-Sophia, already mentioned, daughter to James Stanley, seventh earl of Derby. We must refer our readers to the first volume of this work for a particular account of the ancestry of that lady; but as the present baroness is descended in the male-line from the ancient house of Murray, we must give some account thereof.

THE NOBLE FAMILY OF MURRAY

This nobleman knowing that his fon was heir in line to the earldom of Athol, refigned his title of Tullibardine to his brother Patrick, which was confirmed by patent 1628. His lordfhip happily refcued the king from a tumult of the citizens of Perth in 1609, when John, earl of Gowrie, was killed, whereupon he had a fpecial grant of the fheriffship of Perthshire, which continued in his family family till the suppression of all heritable jurisdictions by act of parliament in 1747.

He departed this life in 1628, and was buried at Dunkeld.

His only son,

JOHN MURRAY, was a faithful adherent to the cause of Charles I. from the beginning of his troubles in 1640. He succeeded to the title and dignity of earl of Athol, pursuant to several royal charters, as heir general of the patentee, John, earl of Athol, who was grandfather's grandfather, or tritavus to his mother Dorothea, confirmed by patent February 16, 1629. He departed this life in 1642, and was buried at Dunkeld.

By his wife Jane, daughter of Sir Duncan Campbell, of Glenorchy, he had two sons, John and Mungo, and a daughter Ann, married, as already observed, to James, earl of Tullibardine.

The eldest son,

JOHN MURRAY, earl of Athol, in the year 1653, when but eighteen years of age, loyally took up arms in defence of Charles II. and had several encounters with the English usurpers in the north of Scotland: in consideration of which, after his majesty's restoration, this nobleman was appointed of the privy council, and master of the household 1661: he was constituted justice-general of Scotland 1663; captain of the guards 1670; lord privy seal of Scotland 1672. He was also appointed an extraordinary lord of session, and created marquis of Athol, by patent, February 7, 1676.

On the 11th of June, 1685 (1 James VII.) he defeated a party of the earl of Argyll's men; after which he was constituted lord lieutenant of Argyll, and made knight of the Thistle, 1687.

He died 1703, and was buried at Dunkeld. He married, as has been already observed, Amelia-Sophia, daughter of James Stanley, earl of Derby; by this lady, who was interred at Dunkeld, he had issue one daughter, Emilia, the wife of Hugh, lord Frazer of Lovat, and six sons,

1. John Murray.

2. Charles Murray, created earl of Dunmore, in the county of Perth, August 16, 1686, by James VII. king of Scotland, and II. of England, whose great grandson was father of the present earl.

3. James Murray, who married Lillie, daughter of John Drummond, earl of Perth.

4. William Murray, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of Robert Nairn, created lord Nairn by Charles II. January 27, 1680, and in her right became lord Nairn. He was a party in the rebellion in 1715, and was taken at the battle of Preston in Lancashire. Being tried, he was sentenced to death; but afterward included in the act of grace, 1717, and had back, of his majesty's bounty, the family estate. His eldest son John, the titular lord, was killed in the same rebellious cause, at the battle of Culloden, 1746; and his youngest son engaged on the same side, was taken, with Mr. Ratcliff, on board the Esperance in 1745.

5. Edward Murray.

6. Mungo Murray.

The eldest son,

JOHN MURRAY, succeeded as marquis of Athol, 1703. He was made secretary of state, 1695; created earl of Tullibardine, 1697; privy counsellor, 1702; created marquis of Tullibardine, and duke of Athol, June 30, 1703; knight of the Thistle, and lord privy seal, 1713.

This nobleman, who was also high commissioner to the parliament, and chancellor of the university of St. Andrew's, married first Catherine, daughter of William, duke of Hamilton, and viscount Glenalmond; and secondly Mary, daughter of William, lord Ross. By this last lady, who died in January 1767, he had issue one daughter, Mary, the wife of James, earl of Finslater; and three sons, John, Edward, and Frederic. The youngest died unmarried; and the eldest married Mary Dalton; and by her, who died May 21, 1765, and was buried at Sheffield, had a daughter Mary, born 1759.

By the first lady his grace had issue one daughter, Catherine, married to William Gordon, earl of Aberdeen; and five sons,

1. John Murray, called marquis of Tullibardine, who was slain at the battle of Mons, a colonel in the Dutch service, 1709.

2. William Murray, called after his brother's death marquis of Tullibardine, was attainted of high-treason in 1716, and being taken in the other rebellion, 1746, was sent to the Tower, where he died in 1747.

3. James Murray.

4. Charles Murray, died young.

5. George Murray, who joined the rebels in 1745, as a lieutenant-general, and after the defeat at Culloden escaped into France; but was attainted in 1746, and died in November 1760. He married Amelia, daughter and sole heir of John Murray, of Strowan and Glencarse. By her, who died March 28, 1766, and was buried at Tullibardine, had issue two daughters, Amelia, married first to John, lord Sinclair; secondly to James Farquharson, of Invercauld; and Charlotte, yet unmarried. Also three sons, John, the present duke of Athol; James, a captain in the army; George, a captain in the navy.

In 1706, when the twenty-second article of the union came to be debated concerning the number of representatives for Scotland in the parliament of Great Britain, his grace thought fit to protest against the number as insufficient and unreasonable.

In answer to which it was said, that the number of representatives ought strictly to be equal with such proportion of land-tax as Scotland was to pay jointly with England; for it was agreed when South Britain raises two millions, North Britain should add only forty eight thousand pounds, which is not a fortieth part, about a penny in the pound to four shillings. The English peerage at the Union was one hundred and eighty, bishops included, therefore sixteen peers for Scotland is above three times the proportional number; for a fortieth part, according to the quota of land-tax, is not quite five; and the English commons being five hundred and thirteen, a fortieth part doth not amount to thirteen members. And notwithstanding five peers and thirteen commoners are above the due proportion, yet England was willing to admit forty-five commoners and sixteen peers. Moreover it, was represented that Scotland would gain unspeakable advantage, not only in its free trade with England, but likewise with all the British plantations.

He

He was elected one of the sixteen peers in the third and fourth British parliaments.

The third son of whom we are to treat as fifth lord Strange, JAMES MURRAY, succeeded as duke of Athol, 1724, at his father's death, by virtue of an act of parliament, whereby, after the first duke of Athol's decease, the estates and honours of the family of Athol were settled on him, in the same manner as if William, his elder brother, had died before his father, and had never been attainted.

This nobleman, who was knight of the Thistle, was at his father's death member of the British parliament for the county of Perth, and a colonel in the third regiment of guards. In 1726 he married Jane, the daughter of Sir John Frederic, baronet, and widow of Sir Timothy Lenox, of Hammer-smith, in Middlesex, baronet. By this lady, who died June 13, 1748, aged fifty-five, he had issue two sons,

1. John Murray, } both died young.
2. James Murray }

Also two daughters,

1. Jane, married in October, 1747, to John, earl of Crawford, in Scotland. Her ladyship died soon after, at the baths of Aix, in Germany, without issue.

2. Charlotte Murray, the present possessor of the barony.

In 1749, his grace married secondly Jane, daughter of John Drummond, of Magginch, esq; but by her had no issue.

This nobleman became an English peer by the title of lord Strange, of Knockyn, (as we have already observed) as also lord of the Isle of Man, on the decease of James Stanley, the tenth earl of Derby, who died without issue on the first of February, 1735-6, which dignities derived from his grandmother Amelia-Sophia, daughter of James, earl of Derby, beheaded in 1651. In April 1763, he resigned the privy-seal of Scotland, and succeeded the duke of Queensbury as keeper of the great-seal. He departed this life on January 8, 1764, and the titles of duke of Athol, &c. devolved upon his nephew John, the present duke; but the barony Strange of Knockyn, and the lordship of the Isle of Man, devolved upon his only surviving daughter, and sole heir.

(Sixth and present L.) CHARLOTTE MURRAY, married to her cousin John, present duke of Athol. Their issue are four sons,

1. John Murray, born June 30, 1755.
2. James Murray, born December 5, 1757.
3. George Murray, born January 30, 1761.
4. William Murray, born March 20, 1762.

And three daughters,

1. Charlotte, born August 2, 1754.
2. Amelia, born July 3, 1763.
3. Jean, born December 2, 1764.

In 1764 a contract was made with the government for the sale and surrender of the Isle of Man, together with its regalities, franchises, and seaports; all which were annexed by act of parliament to the crown, on payment of seventy thousand pounds, reserving to his grace his estate therein, manor rights, patronage of the bishoprick, honorary service at the coronation, &c. and his majesty was further pleased by his letters patent, bearing date July 10, 1765, to grant a pension of two thousand pounds per annum, upon the Irish establishment, for the lives of the present duke and duchess.

L E I G H, Baron L E I G H.

ACCORDING to the most ancient account we have of this noble family, their ancestry were seated at High Leigh, in Cheshire. The first of the name we find upon record was,

HAMON LEIGH, who lived in the time of Henry II. whose son,

WILLIAM LEIGH, of West Hall, in High Leigh, had issue Margery, married to Aytrop de Millington; and two sons, Richard and Madoc, of which the eldest,

RICHARD LEIGH, had an only daughter and heir,

AGNES LEIGH, who married first Richard de Lyme, of Lyme, in Cheshire, and bore to him a son, THOMAS DE LYME, who inherited West Hall, in High Leigh, in right of his mother, and for that reason took the surname and arms of Leigh. From this marriage the Leighs of West Ham, Oughton, &c. derive their descent.

She married secondly, William Venables, of Bradwell, second son of Sir William Venables, baron of Kinderton; thirdly, William de Hawardine, of Cheshire. To the last husband she bore no issue; but made the second, father of two sons,

1. Sir John Venables.

2. Thomas Venables.

Sir JOHN VENABLES was seated at Booths, and took the name of LEIGH, but bore his father's arms. By his wife Ellen, or Isabel, daughter of Sir William Baguly, of Baguly, and sister and co-heir of John Baguly, he had issue five sons,

1. Sir John Leigh, seated at Booths, ancestor of the Leighs of that place.

2. William Leigh, seated at Baguly, ancestor of the Leighs of that place.

3. Robert Leigh, ancestor to the lords Leigh of Stoneleigh.

4. Peter Leigh, seated at Bechington.

5. Gilbert Leigh, who married Alice, daughter and heir of Robert Vernon, of Little Warforth, in Cheshire. From this gentleman the Leighs of Middleton, in Yorkshire, derive their descent.

The third son,

ROBERT LEIGH, seated at Adlington, in Cheshire, departed this life 1369, having been twice married, first to Susan*, daughter of Henry Handford, of Handford, in Cheshire; secondly to Maud, daughter and heir of Sir Thurstan & Norley, of Norley. By the former his issue were two daughters, Margery, married to John Aston, and Susan, married to William Ratcliff, of Ratcliff, in Lancashire; and a son, Robert Leigh, from whom the Leighs of Addlington derive their descend. By the second lady Robert Leigh had issue two sons, Peter and John, both properly speaking lineal ancestors to the lords Leigh; for John had an only son, Robert, whose sole daughter and heir Ellen, was married to Roger Leigh, the son of Peter, the elder brother: which

Sir PETER LEIGH, seated at Lyme and Handley, married first Margaret, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Daniel, knight, and widow of Sir John Savage; secondly Cicely, daughter of John Hagh, of Hagh, in Derbyshire. By the former only he had issue two sons, Peter and Roger, ancestor to the lords Leigh.

The said Sir Peter Leigh served from his youth in the wars of France, and bore the banner of Edward, prince of Wales (called the Black Prince) at the battle of Cressley, where he took the earl of Tankerville prisoner. But, as Holinshed relates, being one of king Richard's faithful and trusty friends, he lost his life, whilst the king was in the castle of Conway: for the duke of Lancaster coming to Chester, in his way to Conway, commanded his head to be struck off, and set upon one of the highest turrets about the city, for opposing him. And just before, Sir Robert Leigh (of Adlington) and Sir John Leigh, were sent from Chester to treat with the duke of Lancaster (after king of England by the name of Henry IV.) for the city and county of Chester, in order to their submitting to him.

The said Sir Peter Leigh, of Lyme, was succeeded by his eldest son, Sir PETER LEIGH, who, serving under the victorious king Henry V. in his wars in France, was made a knight banneret, and was slain at the battle of Agincourt, 1414. He had two wives; first Joan, daughter and heir of Sir Gilbert Haydock, knight, by whom he had Sir Peter Leigh, of Lyme, knighted at the battle of Wakefield by Richard, duke of York, and dying in 21 Edward IV. was buried at Winwick, from whom (by Margaret his wife, daughter of Sir Richard Molineux) the Leighs of Lyme descend.

ROGER LEIGH, the younger brother of Sir Peter Leigh, knight banneret, married (as has been already observed) Ellen, sole daughter and heir of his first cousin, Robert Leigh, the son of his uncle John Leigh; by her he had issue

JENKYN LEIGH, of Ridge, in right of Alice his wife, daughter and heir of John Alcock, of Ridge, by whom he had issue three sons,

1. Roger Leigh, from whom the Leighs of Ridge are descended.

* Collins says Sibil.

† Collins says Adam de Norley.

2. Richard Leigh, ancestor to the present lord Leigh, of whom I am principally to treat.

3. John Leigh, from whom descended Sir John Leigh, of Stockwell, in Surrey, knight of the Bath, who was buried in the South chapel of the church at Lambeth, where a fair monument was erected to his memory, with this inscription :

Here lieth Sir John Legh, knight of the Bath, son of Ralph Legh, Esq; lord of the manors of Stockwell and Levehurst, and Dame Isabel, his wife, daughter of Otwell Worsley : which Sir John deceased the 17th day of August, anno dom. MDXXIII, and the same Dame Isabel deceased the 18th day of April.

RICHARD LEIGH, second son before mentioned, was seated at Rushall, in Staffordshire, in 35 Henry VI. (1456) and left issue

ROGER LEIGH, his son and heir, who was seated at Wellington, in Shropshire, as well as at Rushall. He married a lady of the name of Trafford, by whom he had issue four sons,

1. William Leigh, usher to king Henry VIII. who married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Sir John Harpur, knight, from which match the Leighs of Rushall derive their descent.

2. Thomas Leigh.

3. John Leigh.

4. Robert Leigh, usher to queen Mary.

Sir THOMAS LEIGH, the second son of the said Roger, being bred up under Sir Rowland Hill (a rich merchant, and lord-mayor of London, son of Thomas Hill, of Hodnet, in Shropshire) he at length, for his knowledge and industry, made him his factor beyond sea; in which trust he behaved so well, that Sir Rowland, having no child, gave him in marriage his favourite niece Alice, daughter to John Barker, alias Coverall, of Haghmond, in the county of Salop, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Thomas Hill; on whose issue he entailed the greatest part of his estate. Which Sir Thomas Leigh was free of the mercers company, one of the sheriffs of London, A. D. 1555, and lord-mayor of that city at the death of queen Mary; and, during his mayoralty, was knighted. He died at London in 1571, and was buried in Mercers-chapel, with this epitaph on his tomb :

Sir Thomas Leigh bi civil life

All offices did beare,

Which in this city worshipfull

Or honourable were :

Whom as God blessed with great wealth,

(So losses did he feele ;

Yet never chang'd he constant minde,

Tho' fortune turn'd her wheele.

Learning he lov'd and helpt the poore,

To them that knew him deere ;

For whom his lady and loving wife

This tomb hath builded here.

Obiit 17 Nov. 1571.

His lady lived at Stoneleigh to a very great age, having seen her children's children to the fourth generation; and, departing this life in January 1603, was buried at Stoneleigh, where in her lifetime she founded and endowed an hospital for five poor men and five women, all of them to be unmarried persons, and nominated after her decease by Sir Thomas Leigh, her son, and his heirs for ever. She had issue four daughters, and four sons,

1. Rowland Leigh.

2. Thomas Leigh.

3. William Leigh.

4. Richard Leigh, who died young.

The daughters were,

1. Alice, married to Thomas Coucy, of Basingthorpe, Lincolnshire.

2. Catherine, married to Edmund Bower, esq.

3. Winifred, married to Sir George Bond, knight.

4. Mary, who died unmarried.

Rowland Leigh, the eldest son, was largely provided for at Longborough, in Gloucestershire, and thereabouts, by Sir Rowland Hill, his godfather; and having married a daughter of Sir Richard Berkley, knight, from him descend the Leighs of Longborough and Adlestrop, in Gloucestershire.

William Leigh, the third son, knighted by queen Elizabeth, A. D. 1589, was seated at Newnham Regis, in Warwickshire, and by Catharine, his wife, daughter of Sir James Harrington, left issue Francis Leigh, his son and heir, made knight of the Bath, at the coronation of king James. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Egerton, viscount Brackley, lord chancellor of England, by whom he had a son of his own name, Francis.

Which Francis was created a baronet December 24, 16 James I. and having to wife Audrey, eldest daughter of John, lord Boteler, of Bramfield, in the county of Hertford, by Elizabeth his wife, sister to George, duke of Buckingham, was raised to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Dunsmore, July 31, in the fourth year of king Charles I. after which, manifesting his loyalty to that king in the time of the rebellion, he was made captain of the band of pensioners in 1643, and by letters patent bearing date at Oxford, June 3, in the 20th year of his reign, in consideration of his especial merits in those troublesome and perilous times, advanced to the degree and title of earl of Chichester, with limitation of that honour to the heirs male of his body, and, for default of such issue, to Thomas, then earl of Southampton, and to the heirs male of his body, begotten on Elizabeth his wife, eldest daughter of him the said Francis, who had also another daughter, Mary, married to George Villiers, viscount Grandison, in Ireland. This Francis, earl of Chichester, departing this life on the 21st day of December, 1653, was buried at Newnham. And, for want of heirs male, that title was extinct.

We now return to the second son of Sir Thomas Leigh, lord-mayor of London, also named Thomas. Which

THOMAS LEIGH was knighted by queen Elizabeth, and honoured with the title of baronet, at the first erection of that order, June 29, 9 James I. and, having lived to a great age, in much reputation, being custos rotulorum for the county of Warwick, and in all public employments of his time one of the superior rank, deceased in February, in the first year of king Charles I. And having wedded wedded Catharine, fourth daughter to Sir John Spencer, of Wormleighton, in the county of Warwick, knight (ancestor to the present duke of Marlborough) had issue,

1. Sir John Leigh, his son and heir.
2. Sir Thomas Leigh, } who died issueless.
3. Ferdinando Leigh, }

And a daughter,

Alice, who was married to Sir Robert Dudley, knight, created a duke of the empire by the emperor Ferdinand II. She was created duchess Dudley for life, by patent, May 23, 1644, and dying 1699, was buried at Stoneleigh.

The eldest son,

Sir JOHN LEIGH, (knighted at Whitehall, July 23, 1603, before the coronation of king James) had two wives; first, Ursula, daughter and heir of Sir Christopher Hodefon, knight, lord of the manor of Leighton-Buzzard, in Bedfordshire; and secondly, Anne, eldest daughter of Sir Anthony Cope, knight and baronet: and, dying in the life time of his father, left issue by his first wife, Thomas, his son and heir. Which,

(First Lord) THOMAS LEIGH, having been dignified with knighthood by king James, and serving as one of the knights of the shire for the county of Warwick, in the reign of king Charles I. was, for his adherence to that king in the time of the rebellion, advanced to the dignity of a baron of this kingdom, by letters patent bearing date at Oxford, July 1, 1643, 19 Charles I.

Before the king had set up his standard at Nottingham, he marched to Coventry; but finding the gates shut against him, and that no summons could prevail with the mayor and magistrates to open them, he went the same night to Stoneleigh, the house of Sir Thomas Leigh, where, as lord Clarendon observes, he was well received. It is probable, that Sir Thomas marched with the king to Nottingham, and was in the battle of Edgehill; for he paid at one time, as a composition for his estate, no less than four thousand eight hundred and ninety-five pounds. But he lived to see the restoration of monarchy and episcopacy, departing this life in the 77th year of his age, February 22, 1671, and was buried in a vault on the south side of the chancel of the church at Stoneleigh. He had to wife Mary, one of the daughters and co-heirs of Sir Thomas Egerton, knight, eldest son to Thomas, viscount Brackley, lord chancellor of England, by whom he had issue five sons,

1. John Leigh, who died young.
2. Thomas Leigh, hereafter mentioned.
3. Charles Leigh, who died 1672*.
4. Christopher Leigh.

* Mr. Collins says, Charles, third son, was seated at Leighton, in Bedfordshire, and married first Anne, daughter of Sir Edward Littleton, knight, and widow of Sir Thomas Holt, knight and baronet, and by her (who died on the 2d of November, 1697) had issue two daughters, Alicia, married to Altham Annesley, lord Altham, of Ireland, and died the 4th of June, 1682, aged twenty-four; and Anne, who died, aged seventeen, A. D. 1680. He had to his second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Bradshaw, of Stiford-Clay, in Essex, esquire: and departing this life, without issue surviving, on the 30th of July, 1704, aged eighty years, left his estate at Leighton to his nephew, the honourable Chales Leigh, esquire, of Leighton. He was a gentleman of the strictest honour and integrity, and so pious and charitable, that, in 1680, he purchased lands in Stanbridge-field, in Bedfordshire, in trust, to pay forty shillings yearly into the vicar's hands of

5. Ferdinand Leigh, who died unmarried.

Also six daughters,

1. Catherine, born 1614; } who died young.
2. Mary, } who died young.
3. Frances, }
4. Elizabeth, married to John, lord viscount Tracy, of Ireland, seated at Todington, in Gloucestershire.

5. Vere, to Sir Justinian Isham, of Lamport, in the county of Northampton, baronet.

6. Ursula, to Sir William Bromley, of Bagington, in the county of Warwick, knight of the Bath.

The second son,

THOMAS LEIGH, was knighted at his father's house at Stoneleigh, by king Charles I. August 22, 1642, and died before him in the forty-sixth year of his age, and was buried at Stoneleigh, April 12, 1662. He had two wives; first Anne, daughter and sole heir to Richard Brigham, of Lambeth, in the county of Surry, esquire, by whom he had issue one daughter, Anne, who died young; secondly Jane, daughter of Patrick Fitz-Maurice, baron of Kerry, in Ireland, by whom he had issue, Thomas Leigh, his only son, successor to his grandfather.

Also three daughters,

1. Honora, married to Sir William Egerton, knight, second son to John, earl of Bridgewater; and after to Hugh, lord Willoughby of Parham.

2. Mary, wedded to Arden Baggot, of Pipehall, in the county of Warwick, esquire.

3. Jane, to William, lord viscount Tracy.

Which,

(Second Lord) THOMAS LEIGH, so succeeding his grandfather, first married Elizabeth, daughter and heir to Sir ——— Brown, of Shingleton, in the county of Cambridge, esquire, and afterwards Eleanor, eldest daughter to Edward, lord Rockingham, by whom he had issue four sons,

1. Thomas Leigh, born June 26, 1681, } died
2. Lewis Leigh, born Feb. 3, 1682, } young.
3. Edward Leigh, grandfather to the present lord Leigh.

Also four daughters,

1. Anne, born July 12, 1680, who died unmarried in September 1734.

2. Eleanor, married to Thomas Verney, esquire, eldest son of George, lord Willoughby of Broke.

the church of Leighton; to distribute twenty shillings of it to poor persons receiving the sacrament at Easter, and to buy good books for the poor with the other twenty shillings. And in 1704, by his will, appointed twenty pounds per annum to be paid, out of his Windsor leasehold estate, to the vicar and his successors for ever, for reading daily prayers in the said church of Leighton: five shillings thereof to be abated for every day prayers were omitted, and to be given to such poor as constantly attend the said prayers: also twenty shillings to the vicar, for a sermon on Good-Friday; and twenty shillings to the parish-clerk at Christmas, for ringing the bell to the said prayers. He likewise left ten pounds yearly to the school-master of the said town, for educating ten poor boys, to be chosen by the vicar and churchwardens, and to attend the said prayers on penalty of losing their schooling.

3. Mary,

3. Mary, } who died young.
4. Arabella, }

The said Thomas, lord Leigh, departing this life in November, 1710, was succeeded by Edward, his eldest surviving son. Which,

(Third Lord) EDWARD LEIGH, born Jan. 13, 1684, took his seat in the house of peers, March 13, 1710-11. He married Mary, sole daughter and heir of Thomas Holbeech, of Fillongley, in the county of Warwick, esquire, heir, by Elizabeth her mother, to Bernard Paulet, esquire, descended from the lord Giles Paulet, a younger son to William, marquis of Winchester; and by her (who died September 6, 1743) had issue three daughters,

1. Mary, born July 19, 1711.

His lordship departed this life March 16, 1737-8, and was succeeded by his only surviving son,

B Y R O N, Baron B Y R O N.

BY Doomsday book it appears, that Gospatrick held of Erneis de Buron, four bovates of land in Bengeley, in the county of York; and, in Borgefcire, he held in Duncthorpe four bovates of land, &c. He also had in the same shire Drantune and Grattune, with three carrucates of land in Cathal, as also Hulsingore, the soke of Chenaresburge, Ripeftane, and Homptone, Hatesbi, the soke of Burg, Argendune, and Lotes; Copegrave, Bernekeham, Wipelei, Bernessei, Burle, Dacre, Littlebran, Menfon, Wederbi, Bergki, Distone, Holftingoure Soke, Crane, Merdelei, Cotinglai, Colingaward, Denardium, Hagene-word, East Reding, Cave, Hundret, Cotewood, and Stetlingetlet. In Lincolnshire, he held Medeltone, Ulvesby, Brochelesbi, Haburne, Newhuse, Waragebi, Hatune, Caldecote, Pavetone, Hardie, Barworde, Ternilo, Langetone, Fulnebi, Raude, Gusebi, Burg, Chinthorpe, Colebi, Wege, Baret, Walcote, Wintertune, and Graingeham.

The wapentake of the West Riding of Lincolnshire witness, that Erneis de Buron ought to have the land, which Wege held in Winteringeham, viz.

six bovates and one toft in the soke of Gilbert de Gand, and one other toft with soke and sake.

Likewise in the chapter of claims, in the South Riding of the said county, the wapentake say, that Erneis de Buron, of right, ought to have the soc of four bovates of land in Sagesbi, about which there was a dispute between him and William de Perci.

What relation this Erneis de Buron was to Ralph de Buron, cannot certainly be made out; but most probably they were brothers. However, the said

RALPH DE BURON held divers manors in Nottinghamshire and Derbyshire, and is the direct ancestor of the present lord Byron.

In Nottinghamshire, at the time of the survey (20 William I.) he held the manors of Oscintune, Calun, Hochehale, Rampestune, Laudecote, and Godegrav. In Derbyshire, he held the manors of Westune, Horslei, Denebi, Halun, and Hereby.

In the park of Horseley there was a castle (some of the ruins whereof are yet visible) called Horestan-castle, which was the chief mansion of his successors.

To

To this Ralph succeeded his son.

HUGH DE BURON, lord of the castle of Horestan, who, in the 9th year of king Stephen, together with Hugh, his son and heir, gave to the monastery of Lenton the church of Oscinton, about which there was a dispute in the 7th of Richard I. with the prior of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem; when the prior of Lenton produced the grant of the said Hugh, and the prior of the hospital of St. John that of Roger de Buron, by which he gave to that house the town of Oscinton, with the appurtenances; whereupon no judgment was given by the court, because the prior of Lenton's attorney knew not whether he should put his cause to an issue before he had his client's direction.

This Hugh de Buron gave likewise in the said reign, by his charter (wherein he is stiled lord of Horestan-castle) the church of Horsley to the then prior of Lenton, and his successors; which was confirmed by the bishop of Coventry and Litchfield, and ratified by the pope.

He was succeeded by a son of his own name,

HUGH DE BURON, baron of Horestan, who, in the reign of king Henry II. retiring from all secular affairs, professed himself a monk, and held the hermitage of Kerfale, belonging to the priory of Lenton, as appears by deed of king John, confirming that hermitage to the said priory. He was succeeded by his brother, ROGER DE BURON, who gave certain lands to the church of Swinsted, and to the monks there, as appears by a confirmation thereof by king Henry II. in which reign he paid ten pounds scutage for ten knights fees in Nottingham and Derby-shires. Also in the sixth year of king Richard I. on the aid of twenty shillings for each knight's fee, for that king's redemption, he answered ten pounds for ten knights fees in the before-mentioned counties. Likewise, in the first year of king John, he answered for ten knights fees towards the scutage of Normandy, then assessed at two marks for each knight's fee. He married Nichola, daughter of Roeland de Verdun, who survived him, and had for her second husband Anketin de Brikesard; but, being married without the king's consent, her lands were seized, and for some of them she fined in the second year of the reign of king John. By the said Roger de Buron she had issue two sons, Robert and Peter; which last had a son, John de Byron, living in the reign of king Edward I.

ROBERT DE BYRON, the eldest, is mentioned in a plea between him and the prior of Lenton, concerning two carucates of land in Cotegrave, which, by a fine levied at Westminster, in Michaelmas term, in the first year of the reign of king John, was settled on the said Robert and his heirs, who, in consideration thereof, gave to the said priory three bovates of land in Cotegrave, with his moiety of the plowed land called Gelderhomor; and obliged himself to defend from scutage the whole land of the said priory in Cotegrave, of his fee. He had lands given to him and Cecilia his wife, by Aubert Grelli, in Barnby, to hold by the fourth part of a knight's fee, and had issue by the said Cecilia, daughter and heir of ——— Clayton, of Clayton, in Lancashire:

1. Robert Byron, his son and heir.
2. Sir Richard Byron, who had issue James Byron, lord of the manor of Cadenev, in the county of Lincoln, who married Alice, relict of John de Comyn, of Ullby, in the said county, and daughter of William de Ros, of Hamlake. In the 14th of king Edward I. he paid to the executors of his wife ninety-eight pounds, eighteen shillings, and sixpence farthing, for the third part of her moveable goods, left at the time of her death; and also gave, for the health of his soul, and that of Alice his wife, to the men of Hufum, a selion of land. In the 21st year of that king's reign, he is said to hold lands to the value of one hundred shillings, and more, in the county of Lincoln.

3. Henry Byron.

4. Peter Byron.

The eldest son,

ROBERT BYRON, was lord of the manor of Clayton, Robert de Heston releasing to him and his heirs all his right in the said manor, and in all his lands within these bounds, viz. from Hardene, ascending by the ——— little brook next Drulsden, as far as the ditches, and from them to the little rill next to the land of Sinderland, so descending by the said rivulet as far as the demesne lands of Hardene; in consideration whereof, the said Robert gave him three marks and a half of silver: and, by another deed, he remises to Richard his brother, and to his heirs, all his right and title in Clayton, Failesworth, and Drylesden, in the county of Lancaster; also, by another deed, all his right in the whole town of Drylesden.

King Richard I. in the first year of his reign, confirmed to the prior and monks of Royston, in Cambridgeshire (inter alia) the grant of this Robert de Buron to that convent, of two acres and a half of land in Burley.

He married Maud, daughter of ———, who was living in the second year of the reign of Edward I. and had issue by her two sons, John and William.

The latter was in the king's service in his army in Scotland, under the command of William de Ros, of Hamlake, as appears by the king's grant of a protection to him.

JOHN BYRON, together with the sheriff of Yorkshire, William de Latimer the elder, and Ralph Fitz-William, received a præcipe from king Edward I. dated at Wetherby, in Yorkshire, January 14, in the 8th year of his reign, declaring his intention of being at Carlisle on Midsummer-day then next following, commanding them to meet him then there (with horse and arms, in company with such persons as owe him any service) ready to march against the Scots, to chastise, with God's help, manfully and powerfully, their rebellion, perfidy, and wickedness. He also commands the said sheriff to summon all knights and others in his said baliwick, who have forty pounds per annum, to meet him there in like manner.

In the 25th year of the said king's reign, he had another summons (as holding twenty pounds per annum land in Northamptonshire) to be at London on Sunday following the octave of St. John Baptist, ready with horse and arms to go on an expedition with the king beyond the seas, as well for his honour, as for the preservation and profit of the kingdom. And in the 28th year of the said king's reign, as holding forty pounds per annum land in that county, he was commanded to meet the king with horse and arms at Carlisle, on the feast of the nativity of St. John Baptist, ready to go against the Scots.

This John was seated at Clayton, and, in the 24th year of king Edward I. was governor or custos of the city of York, as he had been, for five or six years before, of the castle of Dover. He married to his first wife Joan, daughter of Sir Baldwin (Teutonick, or) Thies, and relict of Sir Robert Holland, knight (son of John, son of Ingelram de Holland, of Holland in Lancashire) secretary to Thomas, earl of Lancaster, who had in marriage with her, by gift of the said Sir Baldwin, all his lands in Rochdale, in the county of Lancaster, viz. Bostworth, Gleggs, Gartside, Akedon, the two Holinworths, and Halcht.

He was succeeded by his son and heir,

Sir JOHN BYRON, knight, lord of Clayton, in the 20th year of king Edward I. who was witness to the confirmation of king Edward II. of his father's grant to the convent of Burscough, of a weekly market on Thursday, at Ormeschurch, in Lancashire; and of a fair every year there, on the eve, day, and morrow of the decollation of St. John Baptist, and on the two succeeding days.

This John, and Alice his wife, by deed dated at Clayton, the Sunday after the feast of St. Peter, in the 6th year of king Edward II. grant to Sir Richard Byron, knight, and to Agnes his wife, the manor of Farlington, in Yorkshire, together with all goods and chattels found upon the premises on the day of making the said grant.

This Alice was cousin and heir of Robert Banaftre, of Hyndeley, in the county of Lancaster, and, after the decease of Sir John Byron (by whom she had issue Sir Richard Byron) was married to Sir John Strickland, knight, whom she also survived; for, in the 12th year of king Edward II. she is called his widow.

Sir RICHARD BYRON aforesaid, knight, was of Cadenay; and also lord of Clayton, &c. King Edward II. by charter dated at York, the 28th of June, in the 1st year of his reign, grants to him and his heirs free warren in all their demesne lands in Clayton, Boterworth, and Riston, in the county of Lancaster; Cadenay, Walesby, Ulsby, and Croxton, in the county of Lincoln; Hudrefeld, Hunshef, and Hollugh, in the county of York. Also by the title of Richard Byron, son of Sir John Byron, knight, he, by deed without date, grants to Sir James Byron, knight, his son, his manor of Alton, together with the reversion of all the lands and tenements, which lady Alice Byron (grandmother of the said Sir James) held in dower, by gift of John, his father, A. D. 1320, 13 Edward II. he had a discharge, dated at York on the 20th of November, from John Wofton, late chamberlain of Scotland, for one thousand pounds due on a recognizance.

In 16 Edward III. he grants to his son, Sir James Byron, knight, and to John his brother, his manors of Cadenay, Hufum, and Walesby, and departed this life before the 21st year of king Edward III. for then his son and heir, Sir James Byron, knight, and John his brother, released to Elizabeth, his widow (who was his second wife, and afterwards married to John Colepeper) the manor of Walesby, with the advowson of the church, as also all those lands and tenements, which the said Sir Richard, and the said dame Elizabeth, formerly held of the feoffment of Sir William de Cadeney, chaplain, and others, in the towns of Useby, Croxton, and Kernington, &c. Which Sir JAMES BYRON, knight, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bernake, whom he left a widow before the 24th year of king Edward III. as appears by an agreement dated at Cadeney, made between John Colepeper and Elizabeth his wife, of the one part, and Elizabeth, late wife of Sir James Byron, knight, on the other part; whereby the said John confirmed to the said Elizabeth, all the lands, &c. which accrued to her as her dower, in the manors of Clayton and Boterworth, in the county of Lancaster.

1. Sir Richard Byron.

2. Sir John Byron, who served in the wars of France, under king Edward III. and was knighted for his valour at the siege of Calais. He married Mary, daughter of John Booth, of Barton, and had issue Sir Richard Byron, knight; whose issue by his wife Lucy, daughter of Sir John Ashton, of Ashton, were three daughters, coheiresses, all married; Margaret to Thomas Walfsh, of Onely, in Leicestershire, esquire; Joan, to William Basset, of Blore, in Staffordshire; and Margery, to Thomas Walleys, of Anlpe, in the same county, esquire.

Sir RICHARD BYRON succeeded before the 4th year of Rich. II. when Thomas de Pynchebec confirmed to him the manor of Armeston, in the parish of Polebrook, in the county of Northampton, and all other lands, &c. rents and services, of which he was enfeoffed by Sir John Byron, knight, brother to the said Richard.

He married Joan, second daughter of William de Colewick, of Colewick, in the county of Nottingham, and sister and heir of Thomas de Colewick, who was two years old at the death of his father, in 35 Edward III. By this match a considerable estate came into the family, the said William Colewick having married Joan, daughter and heir of John Peche, and of his wife Alice, daughter and heir of Sir William Hayward, knight, by Joan his wife, daughter and heir of Sir Saier de Huntingfield, of South-Stoke.

Sir Richard died in 1398, leaving an only son, John Byron, and Joan his widow, surviving, who had, in the year 1397, vowed perpetual chastity before Robert, archbishop of York. Which

By her first husband she had a son, James Byron, who married Joan, daughter of Sir Edmund Trafford, of Trafford, in the county of Lancaster, and died without issue; also a daughter, Margery, first married to William, son of John Leke, and secondly to Thomas Welshe, of Onlepe, in Leicestershire, esquires.

He was steward of Manchester and Rochdale, as also lieutenant of the forest of Sherwood. By his first wife, Isabell, daughter of — Lemington, he had no issue: but by his second lady, Elizabeth, daughter of William Casterden, and relict of George Halgh, of Halgh, in the county palatine of Lancashire, esquire, he had a daughter, Margaret, married to Sir Maurice Berkeley, of Wymondham, knight, and an only son and heir,

Sir JOHN BYRON, succeeded to the family estates. He was sheriff of Nottingham, 1612, and married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Fitz-Williams, lord deputy of Ireland, and had issue two sons:

foot, as made often skirmishes with the enemy; sometimes with notable advantage, never with any signal loss." He married Sophia, daughter of Charles Lambert, of Nimeguen, governor of Breda, and had issue, Sir Ernestus Byron, who married Isabel, daughter of William Stanley, esq.

The eldest son,

He never went out with his regiment, but he would tell them, "That never brave men came to any thing, that resolved not either to conquer or perish."
8. Thomas Byron, who was knighted, and, as lord Clarendon writes, was a gentleman of great courage, and of very good conduct. He commanded the prince of Wales's regiment under the earl of Northampton, in that fight near Stafford, where the earl was killed; and, charging with good execution on the enemy, received a shot in the thigh, whereby he was not able to keep the field. He married Catharine, daughter of Henry Braine, esquire, by whom he had two sons, Thomas and John, who died infants.
9. George Byron,
10. Charles Byron, } who died unmarried.
11. Francis Byron, }

We now return to the eldest son,

(First Lord.) JOHN BYRON. In the 21st year of king James I. he was returned to parliament for the town of Nottingham, as also in the first parliament called by king Charles I. at whose coronation he was made one of the knights of the Bath. In the third year of that king, he was chose one of the knights for the county of Nottingham; and being one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber to his majesty, and giving proofs of his courage and fidelity, was made lieutenant of the Tower in 1641, in the room of Sir Thomas Lunsford, removed on a complaint of the house of commons. But, in those turbulent times, this change gave them no satisfaction, for desiring a creature of their own, they used all their arts to remove Sir John Byron. On which pretence, as lord Clarendon writes, "There was a petition brought and delivered to the houses, in the names of several merchants, who used to trade to the Mint; in which they desired that there might be such a person made lieutenant of the Tower, as they could confide in (an expression that grew from that time to be much used) without which no man would venture bullion into the Mint, and by consequence, no merchant would bring it into the kingdom: whereas, in truth, there was no gentleman in the kingdom of a better reputation amongst all sorts of men, and there had been more bullion brought into the Mint in the short time of his being lieutenant, than had been in many months before. However, the house entertained the complaint as very reasonable, having great apprehensions, by observation made, that he took great store of provisions into the Tower, as if he made provision for a greater garrison. Whereupon they sent for a conference with the lords, with whom they prevailed to join with them in a desire to the king to remove Sir John Byron from being lieutenant of the Tower, which at that time he refused to do." And shortly after, when the king removed to Hampton-court, the commons resuming the consideration of the lieutenant of the Tower; and, on new information that much provision was sent in thither every day, they sent for Sir John Byron, who appeared at their bar, and gave such full answers to all the questions they asked of him, that they could not but dismiss him. Yet they sent again to the king to remove him, and put a fitter man in the place, and recommended Sir John Coniers to him; and, because they did not speedily receive such an answer as they liked, they appointed their major-general Skipton to place such guards about the Tower, as might prevent the carrying in more provision of victual thither, than would serve for one day's consumption; notwithstanding which, the king would not consent to their desire. But at length, on the 20th of January, 1641, the king sending a message to the parliament, advising them "to digest into one body all the grievances of the kingdom, and to send them to him, promising his favourable assent to those means which should be found most effectual for redress, wherein he would not only equal, but exceed the most indulgent princes;" they took the opportunity again to renew their request, desiring, "that for a ground for their confidence, and removal of jealousies, that they might apply themselves to give his majesty satisfaction in the method he proposed, his majesty would presently put the Tower of London into the hands of such a person, as both houses should recommend to him:" in which the lords differed with them, as well "for that the disposal of the custody thereof was the king's peculiar right and prerogative, as likewise, that his majesty had committed the charge thereof to Sir John Byron, a person of a very ancient family, an honourable extraction, and good fortune, and as unblemished a reputation as any gentleman in England." The commons, much troubled that the lords should again take the courage to dissent from them in any thing, resolved to press the king upon their own account, and to get the recommendation of so great an officer to themselves; and, on the 26th of January, sent a petition to him, in the name of the knights, citizens, and burgessees of the commons house, assembled in parliament.

Nevertheless, his majesty did not then consent to the removal of this loyal person, telling them in answer thereto, "That he hoped his gracious message would have produced some such overture, as by offering what was fit on their parts to do, and

and by asking what was proper for him to grant, might have begot a mutual confidence in each other. Concerning the Tower of London, that he did not expect, having preferred a person of a known fortune and unquestionable reputation to that trust, he should have been pressed to remove him without any particular charge objected against him: however, that if, upon due examination, any particular should be presented to him, whereby it might appear he was mistaken in his good opinion of the gentleman, and that he was unfit for the trust committed to him, he would make no scruple of discharging him; otherwise, he was obliged, in justice to himself, to preserve his own work, lest his favour and good opinion might prove a disadvantage and misfortune to his servants, without any other accusation; of which he hoped his house of commons would be so tender, as of a business wherein his honour was much concerned; as, if they found no material exceptions against that person, they would rather endeavour to satisfy and reform the fears of other men, than, by complying with them, press his majesty to any thing which did so much reflect upon his honour and justice." But, when the lords (many of whom had withdrawn themselves, out of a just indignation to see their honour and their liberties sacrificed) had been awed by the tumults of the rabble to pass the bill "for settling the militia and forts in such hands as the commonwealth might confide in;" the king was again pressed to confer the custody of the Tower on Sir John Coniers. "With which, (as lord Clarendon relates) being surprised, and desired likewise by Sir John Byron to free him from the agony and vexation of that place, which had exposed his person and reputation to the rage and fury of the people, and compelled him to submit to such reproaches, as a generous spirit could not brook without much regret; for he had, upon frivolous surmises, been sent for as a delinquent, and been brought upon his knees at the bar of both houses; his majesty consented to that alteration, and made Sir John Coniers lieutenant of the Tower."

Sir John Byron had served in the Low-Country wars, and the states-general committed to him the care of their ordnance and ammunition; so that he was a very useful officer to his majesty on the breaking out of the rebellion, when he repaired with a good body of men with arms and ammunition to the standard at Nottingham, and brought a large sum of money to the king for his supply at Shrewsbury.

From Nottinghamshire, he passed with some troops to countenance the commission of array in other counties, and particularly in Oxfordshire, to secure the university from the rebels, when assaulted by the forces from Northampton, and betrayed by the town of Brackley. He was on that occasion obliged to march to their relief with such expedition, that he lost his carriages and cabinet; which falling into the hands of Mr. Clark, of Craughton, he wrote to him to restore them, concluding, "Which if you do, I shall represent it to his majesty as an acceptable service; if not, assure yourself, I shall find a time, with advantage, to repay myself out of your estate; and consider, that as rebellion is a weed of an hasty growth, so it will decay as suddenly; and that there will be a time for the king's loyal subjects to repair their losses sustained by rebels and traitors." Upon sending of which letter to the parliament, and their proclaiming him and his adherents traitors for their allegiance to their sovereign, he marched to Worcester; wherein he had not been many hours, before a strong party of horse and dragoons, sent by the earl of Essex, under the command of Nathaniel Fines, son to the lord Say, came to surprize the town, which was open in many places, though in some it had an old decayed wall, and, at the most usual and frequented entrances into the city, weak and rotten gates. However, finding them shut against them, and not that quick appearance of a party within the town the commander promised himself, he retired in great disorder. But prince Rupert coming up the same day, a rencounter ensued, wherein the enemy were vanquished; which was principally owing to the courage of Sir John Byron, and the rest of the officers, who charged them sword in hand, most of the soldiers being in that city wearied with a long march.

He afterwards commanded the body of reserve at the battle of Edgehill; and the victory of Roundway-down, wherein Sir William Waller was routed, was chiefly owing to the bravery and conduct of Sir John Byron, who, at the head of his regiment, charged Sir Arthur Haslerig's cuirassiers, and after a sharp conflict, in which Sir Arthur received many wounds, that impenetrable regiment (as lord Clarendon writes) was routed, and in a full career chased on their other horse, which in half an hour were so totally dispersed, that there was not one of them to be seen on that large spacious down; every man shifting for himself with greater danger by the precipices of that hill, than he could have undergone by opposing his pursuer.

On the 1st of November, 1642, he was, with other loyalists, created doctor of the civil-law at Oxford; and in the first Newberry fight, September 19, 1643, which was disputed with great fierceness and courage, he warily and valiantly led on the king's horse, which were so far too hard for the troops on the other side, that they routed them in most places, till they had left the greatest part of their foot, without any guard at all of horse.

Sir John Byron having given such proofs of his courage and military conduct, and being otherwise a person of great abilities, and his six valiant brothers also at that time following his loyal example, he was, in consideration thereof, advanced to the degree and dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Byron, of Rochdale, in the county of Lancaster, with limitation of that honour, in default of issue male of his own body lawfully begotten, to every of his brothers, and the issue male of their bodies, viz. Richard, William, Thomas, Robert, Gilbert, and Philip, by letters patent bearing date at Oxford, October 24, 1643, 19 Charles I. He was afterwards made field-martial-general of all his majesty's forces in the counties of Worcester, Salop, Chester, and North-Wales; also, on his uncle, Sir Nicholas Byron, governor of Chester, being taken prisoner, he was governor of Chester. In which station he was appointed to take care for the reception and accommodation of some regiments of foot; that, on the cessation of arms in Ireland, were to land there. And the lord Clarendon gives a particular account of their successes, and of the lord Byron's being at length forced to retire into Chester.

"Nevertheless, the lord Byron was not discouraged; but, by his honourable and obliging deportment, soon got together a body of five thousand men, and forced Sir Thomas Middleton to retreat from Montgomery-castle, whereunto laying siege, and the parliament forces under Sir William Fairfax marching to raise it, a fight ensued in October 1644; wherein the lord Byron routed their horse, and both parties came to push of pike; but, after a hot engagement, the parliament forces rallying, he was obliged to retire.

"The next year the king's cause declining, he was besieged in Chester, wherein he made a brave defence, and, by his judicious management, kept both town and garrison contented with cats and dogs; and those failing, but with one meal in three days, while there was any hope of relief. He refused nine summons, and did not answer the tenth, till his messenger returned with assurance that there were no hopes of any succour. Then he yielded on the most honourable terms for himself and the whole garrison, that were given in England, except those he afterwards gained at Caernarvon, having endured a long and gallant siege, the benefit whereof he enjoyed, and retired beyond the seas." Whilst he was besieged in Chester, several attempts were made for his relief, as Whitlock, in his memorials, relates. In September 1645, the king, with about five thousand horse and foot, advanced to relieve Chester; but his forces being entirely routed by major-general Pointz and others, his majesty, with three hundred horse, with some difficulty got into Chester, and from thence retired into Wales. In October 1645, the garrison of Chester made divers resolute sallies on the besiegers; and the lord Byron's brother having got together four hundred horse about Holt-castle, on notice thereof, colonel Jones drew out a party of horse from before the Languer, and fell on him in the field, but on the first onset was worsted; yet, after a sharp dispute, took him prisoner. On December 27, 1645, there was a treaty for the surrender of Chester; but the lord Byron stood on such high terms, as were not agreed to. On the 9th of December, colonel Booth, with the Lancashire forces that took Lathom-house, was ordered to join the forces before Chester. On the 18th of December, a party of fifteen hundred from Oxford, and the garrisons thereabouts, marched out with a design to relieve Chester, but were forced to retire, the parliament forces having broke down Avon-bridge, and other bridges they were to pass. On the 8th of January, the commons at Westminster received advice, that the inhabitants of Chester urged the governor to surrender, being in great want of victuals, which he promised to do, if relief came not within a week.

On the 21st of January, Sir William Brereton sent another summons to the mayor of Chester, and the lord Byron, governor, to which they returned no answer in five days; upon which Sir William Brereton sent another letter to them, requiring an answer the same day, which they did, and offered to come to a treaty, if the king did not relieve them within twelve days, and desired a pass to send to him, but it was denied. On the 29th of January, a treaty was begun about the surrender thereof, but nothing concluded. And the lord Byron's letter to the king at Oxford was intercepted, "That, if they had not relief by the last of January, then of necessity they must surrender Chester." On the 5th of February, letters came to the speaker from Sir William Brereton, "That his care of preserving Chester, the most considerable city in those parts, from ruin, invited him to entertain a treaty, which was continued ten days, and delayed by the enemy, hoping for relief, for which there were strong preparations, by conjunction of Ashley, Vaughan, and the Welsh and Irish forces, and those Irish newly landed. That he sent forth a strong party under colonel Mitton, who prevented their conjunction; and then those of Chester, hopeless of relief, came to a treaty. They desired farther time for the treaty to be continued, but Sir William Brereton refused it, and thereupon they came to an agreement, on both parts, to surrender the city to the parliament upon articles: in it they had all the arms, ammunition, ordnance, and provisions, the county-palatine seal, swords, and all the records, &c."

On the 10th of March, 1645, there was a debate between the two houses, concerning the lord Byron, whom the lords thought fit not to except from pardon. In April 1645, he commanded in Conway in Wales, and, in June 1646, was besieged in Caernarvon-castle; but the king being in the hands of the Scots, and the parliament having brought all places to their devotion, he surrendered on honourable terms.

He was afterwards appointed, by king Charles I. governor to his royal highness the duke of York; and being at Paris, when his majesty was under confinement, he was sent on importunities from Scotland to get as many to declare in England in several places, as might distract the army, and keep it from an entire engagement against them; also, to dispose his old friends about Chester and North-Wales to appear as soon as might be. Thereupon, with the help of colonel Robinson, he presently possessed himself of the island of Anglesey, and disposed all North-Wales to be ready to declare, as soon as the Scots should enter the kingdom. And though there were risings in several counties, yet, on the defeat of the Scots army under duke Hamilton, they all proved unfortunate. The lord Byron had again the good luck to escape from the hands of the rebels, and repaired to Paris to his charge, as governor of the duke of York; but, during his absence, Sir Edward Herbert and Sir George Ratcliff had so far insinuated themselves in the duke's favour, that he resolved on a journey from Paris to Brussels, to visit the duke of Lorraine, without the advice of his governor, or the queen his mother. But, at the request of the queen, the lord Byron waited on him, as he did when the duke visited his sister at the Hague, and from thence returned with him to Paris. He afterwards accompanied that prince, when he made the campaign under the marshal Turenne; and returning to Paris, died there in 1652, whereby (as the earl of Clarendon relates) the duke was deprived of a very good servant.

He

He first took to wife Cecillie, daughter of Thomas lord De-la-War, who dying anno 1638, he afterwards married Eleanor, daughter of Robert Needham, lord viscount Kilmorey, in Ireland, and widow of Peter Warburton, of the Lodge, and of Arley, in the county of Leicester; but, leaving no issue by either of them, he was succeeded in his honour by Richard, his next brother and heir.

(Second Lord) RICHARD BYRON, knighted by king Charles I. was one of those valiant colonels at the fight of Edge-hill, who on the 1st of November, 1642, was created master of arts at Oxford. He was governor of Appleby castle, in the county of Westmoreland; and Lloyd, who wrote the lives of the loyalists in the reign of king Charles I. says, he deserves to be chronicled for his government of Newark, and many surprizes of the enemy about it.

He married two wives; first, Elizabeth, daughter of George Rossel, of Ratcliff, on Trent, in the county of Nottingham, esquire, and widow of Nicholas Strelley, of Strelley, in the same county, esquire, by whom he had issue,

1. William Byron, his son and heir.
2. Richard Byron, who died an infant.

And four daughters,

1. Elizabeth.
2. Anne.
3. Cecilia.

4. Catharine, married to Sir William Stanhope, of Linby, in the county of Nottingham, knight, and died without issue.

He married secondly, Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Sir George Booth, of Dunham-Massey, in the county of Chester, aunt of George, lord De la Mere; but by her had no issue.

He lies buried in the chancel of Hucknal-Torkard church, where a monument is erected to his memory, with the following inscription:

Beneath, in a vault, is interred the body of Richard Lord Byron, who, with the rest of his family, being seven brothers, faithfully served King Charles the First in the civil war, who suffered much for their loyalty, and lost all their fortunes: yet it pleased God so to bless the honest endeavours of the said Richard Lord Byron, that he repurchased part of their ancient inheritance, which he left to his posterity, with a laudable memory for great piety and charity. He departed this life upon the 4th day of October, anno domini 1679, in the 74th year of his age. In the same vault is interred the lady Elizabeth, his first wife, daughter of George Rossel, Esq; by whom he had ten children; and the Lady Elizabeth, his second wife, daughter to George Booth, Knt. and Bart. who appointed this monument to be erected to the memory of her dear husband, and, for her great piety and goodness, acquired a name better than that of sons and daughters.

His eldest son,

(Third Lord) WILLIAM BYRON, took his seat in the house of peers January 21, 1695. He married Elizabeth, daughter to John, lord viscount Chaworth, in Ireland, and by her (who died in December 1683) had issue five sons, (Fourth Lord) WILLIAM BYRON, his only surviving son and heir, born January 4, 1669, was one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber to George, prince of Denmark; in which post he attended at the funeral procession of that prince, November 13, 1708. He married to his first wife, Mary, daughter of John, earl of Bridgewater, and sister to Scroop, duke of Bridgewater; which lady died of the small-pox, on Sunday the 11th of April, 1703, having been married but eleven weeks, and was buried at Hucknal-Torkard.

His lordship married secondly, on December 19, 1706, Frances-Williamina, third daughter of William Bentinck, earl of Portland, and by her had issue three sons,

1. George Byron, born October 1, 1707, and died July 6, 1720.

2. William Byron, born July 6, 1709, and died a few days after.

3. William-Henry Byron, born October 23, 1710, died soon after.

Also a daughter,

2. John Byron, born November 5, 1722, appointed a captain in the navy December 30, 1746. In August 1748, he married Sophia, daughter of John Trevanion, of Carhais, in Cornwall, and had issue, John Byron, born February 7, 1756; George-Anson Byron, born November 30, 1758; also seven daughters, three of which died infants; the other four are, Frances, Juliana-Elizabeth, Sophia-Maria, Charlotte-Augusta.

3. Richard Byron, born October 28, 1724, who had his education at Christ-church college, Oxford, of which he is a student.

4. Charles

4. Charles Byron, born April 6, 1726, who died May 16, 1731.

5. George Byron, born April 22, 1730, is in the army. LANGDALE, Baron LANGDALE.

OF this noble family, seated originally in the county of York, in the time of king John, we find

Sir LAUNCELOT DE LANGDALE, of Langdale-End, in the hundred of Pickeringlith; whose son, THOMAS DE LANGDALE, married Edith, daughter of Sir Gerrard Salvin, of Killam, in Yorkshire, knight. His son, LAUNCELOT DE LANGDALE, married Godith, daughter of Patrick Aslaby, of Pickeringlith, and had a son named after his father-in-law,

PATRICK DE LANGDALE, who married Amanda, daughter of Laurence de Etton, in the county of York, and had issue a son of his own name,

PATRICK DE LANGDALE, who married Ellen, daughter of William, and heir of Edmund de Haughton. His son,

WILLIAM DE LANGDALE married Cicely, daughter of Nicholas Cliff, of the county of York, and had issue

THOMAS DE LANGDALE, who by Isabel, daughter of Thomas Comerforth, was father of

WILLIAM DE LANGDALE, whose lady, of the name of Partington, bore to him

JOHN LANGDALE, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Gaire, alderman of York, and had issue,

ANTHONY LANGDALE, who by Alice, his wife, daughter of John Middleton, merchant, was father of two sons, John, who died without issue, and,

ANTHONY LANDALE, who marrying Agnes, daughter of Philip Constable, of Hamborough, continued the line. Of his four sons, Thomas, John, Edmund, and Francis, the eldest only appears to have had issue. This

THOMAS LANGDALE married Anne, daughter of Peter Vavasor, of Spalding, in the county of York, esquire; and had issue three sons:

1. Anthony Langdale.

2. Thomas Landale.

3. Marmaduke Langdale.

And two daughters:

1. Catharine, married to George Fowberry, of Newbold, in Yorkshire.

2. Agnes.

ANTHONY LANGDALE, the eldest son, was seated at Haughton, and died on the 1st of April, in 19 Elizabeth, leaving issue by Joan his wife, daughter to Thomas Vavasor, of Copinthorp, in the county of York, esquire, three sons:

1. Richard Landgdale, his son and heir, who had the estate at Houghton, and died in 1586, in the 29th of Elizabeth, having had to wife

Joyce,

Joyce, daughter and coheir of Marmaduke Thirkeld, of East-Thorpe, esquire.

2. Peter Langdale.

3. Marmaduke Langdale.

The second son,

PETER LANGDALE, was seated at Pighill, near Beverley, in the county of York, and had to wife Anne, daughter of Michael Wharton, and sister of Sir Michael Wharton, of Beverley, in the same county, knight, by whom he left issue

Marmaduke Langdale, his son and heir.

And a daughter, Elizabeth.

Which,

(First Lord) MARMADUKE LANGDALE, knighted by king Charles I. at Whitehall, February 5, 1627, is by Lloyd, who wrote memoirs of the loyalists to king Charles I. characterized to have "added to his honourable descent most scholar-like accomplishments and good husbandry, having bought the estate of Sir William Constable, before the war, for twenty-six thousand pounds, and was esteemed a serious and a wise man, and therefore able to do his country service, when he stood for the liberty of the subject, as he did in the first years of king Charles I. and did his majesty as great service, when he saw it necessary to support his government."

In 1642, being sheriff of the county of York, he brought the major part thereof to petition his majesty to accept of their assistance; "and all the clergy of the North to vindicate his majesty's cause by their subscriptions, as the laity had done by their contributions." And, as the preamble to his patent (when he was created lord Langdale) sets forth, "being a person of an antient family in that county, when he discerned that king Charles was, by the dangerous tumults of seditious people, then predominant, driven from his parliament sitting at Westminster, and for his better safeguard forced to go to York; he freely repaired unto him; and shortly after, having at his own proper charge raised three companies of foot, and a troop of seventy horse, brought them thither for his service; with which he encountered a strong party of those rebellious invaders, the Scots, at Corbridge, in Northumberland, and put them to flight.

"Next, being commander in chief of those troops which the king sent from Oxford against that great rebel of Lincolnshire, colonel Rossiter, he gave him the foil. Thence, marching against the lord Fairfax, and putting him to the rout, he relieved Pontefract castle, at that time besieged by a numerous body of the northern rebels. And, after all this, firmly adhering to that good king, until necessity prompted his majesty to cast himself on his native subjects, the Scots, so that he could not serve him further in this realm, he betook himself to foreign parts, till he discerned a fitter opportunity. And then courageously attempting the strong garrison of Berwick upon Tweed, and that well fortified city of Carlisle, he reduced them both to his majesty's obedience.

"After which, having raised new forces for his service, he did great things, and attempted greater. But soon after, thro' the powerfulness of the enemy, the king's interest sinking more and more, his armies being totally scattered, he became their prisoner. Whence making his escape with no little difficulty, he again got beyond sea; there, with most exemplary loyalty, attending king Charles II. in his most low and desperate condition. In consideration therefore of these his great actings and sufferings, he was, by letters patent bearing date at Bruges in Flanders, on the 4th day of February, in the 10th year of his majesty's reign (about two years preceding his happy restoration) advanced to the degree and dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Langdale of Holme in Spaldyngmore, and to the heirs male of his body."

His further memorable actions we shall relate from good authorities.

In the year 1642, he forced Hotham to retreat to Hull, and, besieging that town, his care and vigilance were so eminent, that, in a rally from the place, they met with so warm a reception, that most of the foot were taken prisoners, and few of their horse escaped. He was also very prudent in settling the contributions and quarters of the country in the easiest method, saying, "That he durst anger the parliament, but he durst not displease his countrymen." In 1643, he had the command of the horse under the earl of Newcastle; and falling on the Scots horse near Newcastle upon Tyne, in their quarters, totally routed them, and killed and took prisoners fifteen hundred men: whereupon he was one of those whom the parliament excepted from pardon in their treaty with the king at Uxbridge.

He furnished his majesty with three thousand northern horse at three several times; and, preserving all the horse that were left after the fatal fight at Marston-moor, rolled with them till they became a considerable brigade, relieving the adjacent garrisons as he marched to Hereford. It is remarked by Whitlock in his memorials, that Sir Marmaduke Langdale, in 1644, was wounded in a fight at Malpas in Cheshire; and that the same year he routed the parliament forces in Northamptonshire, and carried provisions into Newark: also, in 1645, that he relieved Sir John Wintour's house, besieged by colonel Masséy, and was hurt in the arm.

Lloyd, in his memoirs, writes, that the most famous action in those wars, was his marching with two thousand horse from Oxford, through all the enemy's quarters and army, to relieve Pomfret, ordering his march so prudently under the enemy's colours, that he was there before they were aware of him, vanquishing colonel Rossiter and the besiegers at Melton-Moubray, though twice in number to his tired forces; and returned again to Oxford, after disputing nine passes, and being in twelve skirmishes, routing first and last in that famous expedition nine thousand men. A little before the engagement at Naseby, he declared for breaking into the associated counties, and so through them to the North, to chase away the Scots. But when that battle was resolved on, and he was desired to lead the left wing of horse, he said, the averseness of his men from fighting except in their own country, and the tired condition of the whole army, would ruin his majesty; as accordingly it did.

He afterwards marched into the North by the king's command, and, having gone by many of the enemy's garrisons, he got to Ferrybridge, and soon after surprized four hundred of the parliament party at Sherborn, with their arms, whom he killed and made prisoners, and shattered colonel Wren's regiment of horse. But soon after he and his forces, endeavouring to join with the marquis of Montrose, were fallen on at Carlisle (in November 1645) where, after a sharp dispute, he was routed, and obliged to fly into the Isle of Man, from whence he transported himself into Holland. And, when the king was in the hands of the usurpers, this gallant man came privately to wait on him at Hampton-court; and of his further proceedings the lord Clarendon gives this account: "The Scots lords, who had been in England and frequented Hampton-court, whilst the king was there, to make themselves the more gracious, had treated all the king's party with all manner of caresses; and more particularly had much applied themselves to those gentlemen of the North, who had most eminently served the king, and who had good fortunes there to support their interest. Of this kind there were two very notable men, Sir Marmaduke Langdale and Sir Philip Musgrave, both men of large and plentiful estates, the one in Yorkshire, the other in Cumberland and Westmoreland; who having been, in the time of peace, eminent in their country in the offices of justices of peace and deputy lieutenants, had, in the beginning of the war, engaged themselves in commands in the king's army, with great reputation of stout, diligent, and active officers; and continued to the end, and had not after applied themselves to make any composition, but expected a new opportunity to appear with their swords in their hands. They were both looked upon by the parliament and the chief officers of the army with great jealousy, as men worthy to be feared, and who could never be induced to comply with them. The Scottish lords had not been scrupulous to let these two gentlemen know what they intended, and 'that they made no question but they should engage their whole kingdom and nation to enter into a present war with England on the king's behalf; and therefore desired them, by the interest and influence they had upon the Northern countries, to dispose them to a conjunction with them.' And, because they knew that they two were too notorious to stay with any security about London, much less in their own country, they invited them into Scotland, where, they assured them, 'they should not only be safe, but very welcome; and should be witnesses of their proceedings, and have parts of their own to act in, as soon as the season should be ripe.'

"These gentlemen, therefore, being persuaded that the Scots would engage for the king, accepted their invitation, and told them, 'They should quickly find them in Scotland after their own return.' Accordingly, after having secretly spent some time in their own countries, and directed their friends to be in readiness when they should be called upon, and in the mean time settled a way how to correspond together, they went into Scotland to those who had invited them, and were received by them with civility enough."

The same Sir Marmaduke Langdale's being well received at Edinburgh, and that many English officers and soldiers daily flocked to him, set (as the same noble author observes) all the wheels going in England, so that several had undertaken to raise forces for rescue of the king. And, when the Scottish army under duke Hamilton were ready to march, Sir Marmaduke (tho' the Scots had failed in their promises to him) departed to fur-prize Berwick, of which the earl of Clarendon gives a particular account.

The king had promised, that Berwick and Carlisle should be delivered to the Scots, on duke Hamilton's march into England; whereupon Sir Marmaduke Langdale delivered Berwick accordingly, and was required to march with all the English to the parts adjacent to Carlisle, and there to increase his troops to what number he could; which he performed so effectually, that in a very few days he mustered three thousand foot well armed, and seven hundred horse not so well armed; all which were raised in Cumberland and Westmoreland, over and above the garrison of Carlisle, which yet remained under Sir Philip Musgrave; and within two days after, five hundred horse, well appointed, came to him out of the bishoprick of Durham and Yorkshire. With these forces he resolved to march into Lancashire, to reduce the parliament troops there, which he could easily have done, the lord Byron being ready on the borders of Cheshire to have joined him. But my lord Clarendon observes, "This quick advance and progress towards an army was not well looked on at Edinburgh; and an express was dispatched, with positive orders to Sir Marmaduke Langdale, not to engage or fight with the enemy, on what advantage soever, till the Scottish army should come up: and, wheresoever that express should overtake him, he was immediately to retire with his forces near Carlisle; which he obeyed; when he might have marched against Lambert, who was sent before with a less strength than Sir Marmaduke commanded, and which, in all probability, would have been defeated." Whereupon Sir Marmaduke sent Sir Philip Musgrave to Edinburgh, to expostulate upon the matter; and in the mean time Lambert, having gotten a strong body of horse and foot, advanced on him, who, being enjoined not to fight, was forced to retire to Carlisle, and suffer himself to be blocked up on one side, whilst he sent letter upon letter to duke Hamilton to hasten his march, or to send some troops to his assistance, and liberty to fight the enemy.

It was in the middle of July, when duke Hamilton entered England with his army, having been limited in his command by the presbyterian party; and, as the same noble author observes, made such slow marches, and quartered at so great a distance, that the head-quarter was very often at twenty miles distance from some part of the army; the duke being wholly governed by the lieutenant-general, and two or three other officers. Sir Marmaduke Langdale marched with his body of English, consisting of near 4000 foot and about 1000 horse (which would have further increased, had it not been for the injunction laid on him not to fight) always a day before the army; and, if his advice had been followed, in all likelihood Cromwell had been defeated. But the duke and his officers would neither follow his counsel, nor credit his intelligence, that Cromwell was ready to join battle, till Sir Marmaduke was obliged to retreat with very sharp skirmishes (in which many men fell on both sides) into the head-quarters of the duke; whither he likewise brought with him some prisoners, who averred that the whole body of the army was within five or six miles, and marched as fast as they were were able. What followed shall we relate from the earl of Clarendon,

"The duke was confounded with this intelligence, and knew not what to do. The army was not together; and that part that was about him, was without any order, and made no shew of any purpose to fight. In this amazement, the duke stayed himself, with some officers, at Preston; and caused his foot to be drawn over a bridge, that they might march towards Wiggan, a town in Lancashire, where he should, as he thought, find some regiments, and where they might make some stand, till the rest should come up. In the mean time Sir Marmaduke Langdale returned to his troops, the duke having promised to send him some troops to assist, and that some foot should be sent to keep a lane, that would flank his men upon his retreat. Sir Marmaduke retired before the enemy, and drew up his troops into the closes near Preston. The enemy followed him close, and pressed him very hard; notwithstanding which, he maintained the dispute for above six hours with great courage, and with very great loss to the enemy in officers and common soldiers; insomuch as they seemed to retire, at least, to make a stand. And, in all this time, the Scots sent him no assistance, but concluded, that it was not Cromwell's whole army that assaulted him, but only some party, which he would be well enough able to disengage himself from. And Sir Marmaduke Langdale told me often afterwards, that he verily believed, if one thousand foot had then been sent to him, he should have gained the day. And Cromwell himself acknowledged, that he never saw foot fight so desperately as they did.

"The Scots continued their march over the bridge, without taking care to secure the lane, which he had recommended to them; by which Cromwell's horse came upon his flank, whilst he was equally pressed in the van: so that, his excellent body of foot being broken, Sir Marmaduke, and such of his horse as kept together, were driven into the town, where the duke remained yet with some officers; who all retreated over a ford to the foot, who were in equal disorder. For, as soon as the English forces were broken, the Scots were presently beaten from the bridge, and forced to a very disorderly march. And at length, at Warrington and Uxeter, without any resistance, the duke and his forces yielded themselves prisoners."

Sir Marmaduke Langdale was also taken prisoner, when his forces were broken; but, before he went for Scotland, he concerted with his friends in Yorkshire the surprisal of Pomfret-castle; which was accordingly executed, and was now the only garrison that stood against the power of the usurpers. Cromwell therefore, after the defeat of the Scottish army, sent general Rainborough to reduce them; but not being yet come before the castle, and keeping his head-quarters at Doncaster, ten miles from it, they resolved to endeavour to take him prisoner, and exchange him for Sir Marmaduke Langdale, who was in close confinement in Nottingham-castle; and the parliament had declared they would make him an example of their justice. The garrison of Pomfret succeeded in the design of taking Rainborough prisoner, but were obliged to kill him, so that Sir Marmaduke was still in great danger of losing his life.

He afterwards, however, by carefing his guards, happily escaped out of their hands, and transported himself beyond the seas, loyally attending king Charles the Second in his exile; when he was advanced to the dignity of a baron of this kingdom, as before is mentioned. In 1669, the king's friends having come to a resolution for a general rising in England on a day named in July, when his majesty went to Calais, to be ready to land in this kingdom, and the duke of York to Boulogne; the lord Langdale was the principal person who attended his highness thither. But, affairs in England not then answering expectation, he remained abroad till his majesty's restoration, when we do not find he had any recompence for his loyalty and sufferings.

On the 9th of October, 1660, he was constituted lord lieutenant of the West-Riding of the county of York, and of the city and county of York, and custos rotulorum thereof. And, departing this life in his house at Holme (in the East-Riding of Yorkshire) 5 August, 1661, was buried at Santon.

Lloyd, before-mentioned, gives this character of him: "He was a very lean and much mortified man, so that the enemy called him ghost (and deservedly, they were so haunted by him) and carried that gravity in his converse, that integrity and generosity in his dealings, that strictness in his devotion, that experience, moderation, and wariness in his counsel, and that weight in his discourse, as much endeared strangers to his royal master's cause, and to his own person, in all the counties he travelled, as he did in many; and to all the armies he engaged in, as he did in most of them a-foot in Europe; till he was restored with his majesty, 1660; when, after appearing in parliament as baron Langdale of Holme, he returned to his considerable estate in Yorkshire, having lost 160,000 l. in his majesty's service, without any other recompence than the conscience of having suffered it in a good cause, and acquitted himself bravely, and played the MAN."

He married Lenox, daughter of Sir John Rhodes, of Barlborough, in the county of Derby, knight, son and heir to Francis Rhodes, Esq; one of the justices of the Common Pleas, and by her had issue four sons.

BERKELEY, Baron BERKELEY of STRETTON.

IN the genealogy of lord Botetourt (See Vol. ii. p. 389) the reader will find

SIR RICHARD BERKELEY, seated at Stoke-Gifford in Gloucestershire, who died 1514, and having taken to wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Humphry Coningsby, knight, ancestor to the present countess of Coningsby: by her he left two sons, Sir John Berkeley, of Stoke-Gifford, ancestor to lord Botetourt; and Sir Maurice Berkeley, of Bruton, in Somersetshire.

The said

SIR MAURICE BERKELEY, knight of the Bath, was standard-bearer to king Henry VIII. king Edward VI. and queen Elizabeth. In the first year of queen Mary, riding casually to London, he met with Sir Thomas Wiat at Temple-bar, and persuading him to yield himself to the queen, he took his advice, and mounting behind Sir Maurice, rode to the court. His last will bears date at Bruton, in Somersetshire, on the 10th of February, 1579, 22 Eliz. and the probate thereof, the 16th of November, 1581. He orders his body to be buried where he departs this life, and bequeaths to Elizabeth, his second wife, daughter of Anthony Sands, of Throwley, in Kent, Esq; this mansion and manor of Bruton, during life; and to Edward, his second son, his mansion at Datchet, and other lands; to Robert, his third son, his manor of Patenden in Kent, and other lands; and constitutes Henry Berkeley, his eldest son, sole executor; and overseers for the performance of his will, Sir George Speake, and Sir Richard Berkeley, knights.

His first wife was Catharine, daughter of William Blount, lord Montjoy, who died the 25th of February, 1559, and was buried at Datchet; by whom he had issue two sons.

1. Henry Berkeley.

2. Edward Berkeley.

Also four daughters.

1. Gertrude, wife of Edward Horne.

2. Elizabeth, married to James Percival, second of that name, of Weston-Gordon, in the county of Somerset, Esq; whose grandson, Thomas Percival, was the last heir male of that branch of the family, of which John, now earl of Egmont, is the chief,

3. Anne, married to Nicholas Poynings, of Adderley.

4. Frances, who died unmarried.

Elizabeth, second wife, was buried on the north-side of the church of St. James, Clerkenwell, London;

London; where a tomb is erected to her memory, with her effigies lying thereon (but now much damaged, having pews built before it) with this inscription:

The Lady Elizabeth Berkley, of the Queen's Majesty's bedchamber, and second wife to Sir Maurice Berkley, Knight (standard-bearer to her Majesty, to her father, and to her brother) departed this life in this parish, the 16th day of June, 1585, aged 53; and was buried under this tomb. She was the daughter of Anthony Sands, Esq; and had 2 sons and 1 daughter, Robert, Margaret, and John.

His eldest son,

Sir HENRY BERKELEY of Bruton, knighted by queen Elizabeth, 1585, had to wife, Margaret, daughter of William Liggon, of Maithfield, in the county of Stafford, Esq; by whom he had three sons.

1. Sir Maurice Berkeley.

2. Sir Henry Berkeley, of Yarlinton, in the county of Somerset, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Nevil, of Billingbeer, in the county of Berks.

3. Sir Edward Berkeley, of Pill, in the county of Somerset, knighted at Bruton, 13 Sept. 1625. Also a daughter.

Margaret, married to Sir Lewis Pollard, of King's Nympton, in the county of Devon.

The eldest son,

Sir MAURICE BERKELEY, was knighted by the earl of Essex, serving under him in that expedition to Calais, 1596, and died the year 1617: having married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Killigrew, of Hanworth, in the county of Middlesex, knight, by whom he had issue five sons, all knights.

1. Sir Charles Berkeley.

2. Sir Henry Berkeley.

3. Sir Maurice Berkeley.

4. Sir William Berkeley.

5. Sir John Berkeley, ancestor to the lords Berkeley.

Also two daughters.

1. Margaret.

2. Jane.

His eldest son,

Sir CHARLES BERKELEY, received the honour of knighthood at Bewley, August 26, 1623; and being eminently loyal to king Charles the First, he was, on the restoration of king Charles the Second, made comptroller of his household, and sworn of the privy-council; afterwards made treasurer of the household, and, on the death of his second son, Charles, earl of Falmouth (1665) was lord Berkeley of Rathdown, and viscount Fitz-Harding, in the kingdom of Ireland. He died at Whitehall, 12 June, 1668, and by Penelope, his wife (born 13 July, 1607) daughter of Sir William Godolphin, of Godolphin, in Cornwall, knight, had issue three sons.

1. Sir Maurice Berkeley, created baronet, July 2, 1660, 12 Car. II. and married Anne, daughter and coheir of Sir Henry Lee, but died without issue male, after succeeding his father in the title of lord viscount Fitz-Harding, which was entailed by his second brother, Charles, earl of Falmouth, on his creation to that title. He had three daughters and coheirs; Eleanor, married to Hugh Montgomery, earl of Mount-Alexander, in Ireland; and Jane, married first, to George Berkeley of Stoke Gifford, and secondly, to monsieur Grandault.

2. Charles Berkeley, having faithfully served king Charles II. throughout the whole time of his greatest distresses in foreign parts, both by his personal attendance on him, and otherwise; as also his royal highness the duke of York in the Netherlands; was created lord Berkeley, of Rathdown, and viscount Fitz-Harding, in the realm of Ireland, with limitation of those honours to Sir Charles Berkeley his father, and the heirs male of his body. And, by reason of his descent in blood from the ancient lords Botetourt, was, by letters patent bearing date at Westminster, the 17th of March, 16 Car. II. advanced to the state and degree of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Botetourt of Langport, in the county of Somerset; as also to the dignity of an earl, by the title of earl of Falmouth, and to the heirs male of his body; and was keeper of his majesty's privy-purse, and colonel of a regiment of guards. He married Elizabeth, daughter to colonel Hervey Bagot, second son to Sir Henry Bagot, of Blythfield, in the county of Stafford, baronet (who, after his decease, was married to Charles, earl of Dorset) by whom he had an only daughter, Mary, born in 1665, married to Gilbert Cosyn Gerrard, son and heir-apparent of Sir Gilbert Gerrard, of Fiskerton, in the county of Lincoln, and Harrow on the Hill, in the county of Middlesex, baronet, from whom she was divorced in 1684, and dying 1693, was buried at Bexley, in Kent. And this earl of Falmouth being slain in that bloody sea-fight against the Dutch, on the 3d of June, 1665, his corps was conveyed to the abbey-church at Westminster, and there honourably buried.

Whereupon the titles of earl of Falmouth and baron Botetourt became extinct; but that of viscount Fitz-Harding, &c. devolved on his father, as before was said; on whose decease, Sir Maurice Berkeley, his eldest son, succeeded to those honours, and, by his death without issue male, they came to his younger brother, John Berkeley.

3. Sir William Berkeley was governor of Portsmouth, and vice-admiral of the White, and was slain at sea in the Dutch wars in 1666.

4. John Berkeley, lord viscount Fitz-Harding, was treasurer of the chamber, and one of the tellers of the exchequer, in the reign of queen Anne, and died on the 19th of December, 1712, having survived his lady, who was daughter of Sir Edward Villiers, and sister to the earl of Jersey. She was governess to his royal highness William, duke of Gloucester, and died on the 19th of September, 1708; their issue were two daughters, Mary, married to Walter Chetwynd, of Ingestre, in Staffordshire, and Frances, married to Sir Thomas Clarges, baronet.

We now return to

(First Lord.) Sir JOHN BERKELEY, the youngest of the five sons of Sir Maurice Berkeley, father of Sir Charles Berkeley, lord viscount Fitz-Harding, before-mentioned. Which Sir John, being a commander in that army raised to march against the Scots in 1638, was knighted by the king at Berwick on the 27th of July; and, at the beginning of the rebellion, appearing in arms for the king, was one of those very good officers (as the earl of Clarendon stiles them) who was ordered with the marquis of Hertford, to form an army in the western parts of the realm. But, before his appearing there, he was sent over to Holland, to hasten that provision of arms and ammunition, the queen was to send the king; which, in 1642, he safely landed in the parts of Holderness, having narrowly escaped the parliament's ships, and afterwards came to the king at York, and from thence went into the West to the marquis.

At Sherburn, by their conduct and courage, the earl of Bedford, with his forces, though more than five to one, received a foil. After which, the marquis transporting himself with the foot into Glamorganshire, Sir John was left with the horse (about 120) to march into Cornwall, having been constituted commissary-general; and with that small body, secured the whole county, and made incursions into Devonshire. "Sir John Berkeley (as Clarendon writes) with a good party volant of horse and dragoons, with great diligence and gallantry, visited all places in Devon, where their people were gathered together, and dissolving them, took many prisoners of name; and so kept Chudleigh, the major-general of the parliament forces, from raising a body there, which he industriously intended." And, being in joint commission with Sir Ralph Hopton (after lord Hopton,) he obtained divers victories against the rebels of those western counties, in the several battles of Bradock, Saltash, Launceston, and Stratton; as also at Modbury, in the county of Devon. And laying siege to Exeter, after divers bold skirmishes with the enemy, at length not only reduced it to his majesty's obedience, but most valiantly repulsed their fleet, then at Topsham, under the command of Robert earl of Warwick, taking three of their ships in that harbour: whereupon he was constituted governor of that great city, and general of all his majesty's forces in Devonshire.

He was in such favour with the queen, that she chose Exeter to lie in at, when she was delivered of the princess Henrietta-Maria, who was married to the duke of Orleans. And in a letter from her majesty to the king, dated March 13, 1644, are these expressions: "Farewell, my dear heart: behold the mark which you desire to have to know when I desire any thing in earnest*. I pray begin to remember what I spoke to you concerning Jacke Berkeley, for master of the wards."

After Sir Thomas Fairfax had defeated the king's forces, he laid siege to Exeter, which was defended by Sir John Berkeley for three months; till, being distressed for want of provisions, and no relief expected, he surrendered the city, on the 13th of April, 1645, on most honourable conditions: "That the princess Henrietta should depart to any place in England or Wales, till his majesty should give order for her disposal. That neither the cathedral, nor any of the other churches, should be defaced. That the garrison should march out according to the most honourable custom of war, with their arms, &c. and to have free quarter all the way; and not to be compelled to march above ten miles a day, to the places agreed on. The composition of persons of quality should not exceed two years purchase. That all persons, comprized within these articles, should quietly and peaceably enjoy all their goods, debts, and moveables, during the space of four months next ensuing; and be free from all covenants, oaths, and protestations; and have liberty, within the said four months (in case they should not make their compositions with the parliament) to go beyond sea (for which they shall have passes) to dispose of their said goods, debts, and moveables, allowed by these articles, &c."

Sir John Berkeley, after the said surrender, and spending his four months allowed by the articles to solicit his affairs where he would, transported himself into France, and waited on the queen at Paris, being still a menial servant to her majesty. And having, whilst he was in treaty for the delivery of Exeter, contracted some acquaintance with the officers of the parliament army, he was sent by the queen (when the king was in custody of the army) to endeavour to bring the chief officers to reason, and had her majesty's letter of recommendation of him to the king.

On his arrival, he had leave from the superior officers of the army to wait on his majesty; and he, with colonel Ashburnham, were the two principal agents for conferring with the king's friends, and the officers of the army, and on whose information and advice his majesty principally depended; it being thought at that time, on the high contests between the parliament and the army, both would be willing to make the king the umpire.

But when the army had subdued all opposition, and the parliament and they had agreed, the chief officers came rarely to the king at Hampton-court; nor (as the earl of Clarendon writes) "had they the same countenances towards Berkeley, and Ashburnham, as they used to have; nor at leisure to speak with them, and, when they did, asked captious questions, and gave answers themselves of no signification. And their agitators sent propositions to the king, as ruinous to the church, and destructive to the regal power, as had been yet made by the parliament; and, in some respects, much worse and more dishonourable; and said, if his majesty would consent thereunto, they would apply themselves to the parliament, and do the best they could to persuade them to be of the same opinion. But his majesty rejected them with more than usual indignation, not without some reproaches upon the officers for having deluded him, and having prevailed in all their own designs, by making the world believe that they intended his majesty's restoration and settlement, upon better conditions than the parliament was willing to admit." Whereupon the king, believing they had a design to murder him, resolved to transport himself beyond the seas.

The same noble author writes, that when the king escaped (which was on the 11th of November, 1674) Ashburnham alone seemed to know what they were to do, Sir John Berkeley and colonel Legg having received only orders to attend. And Sir John Berkeley, in his account of that unfortunate affair, clears himself from having been consulted about it, before the king had escaped, which the earl of Clarendon agrees in. His narrative begins thus: "In the year 1647, her majesty and his highness the prince of Wales were pleased to send me into Holland, to condole the death of the prince of Orange; and, having performed that office, I returned, with Mr. John and Mr. William Ashburnham, to France, by the way of Calais, lais, where we met with the news of his majesty's being seized by one cornet Joyce, in Holmby-house, from whence he was carried with a guard of 400 horse towards the army; the cornet producing no authority whereby to warrant his proceeding. The next post brought us advertisement to Calais, that his majesty was well received by the officers and soldiers of the army, and that there were great hopes conceived, that they would both concur to establish his majesty in his just rights. From Calais we went to Rouen, where we met a confirmation of this intelligence, and heard withal, that one Sir Edward Ford (who was brother-in-law to commissary-general Ireton) was sent by her majesty and his highness the prince of Wales, into England, to discover the intentions of the army, and to promote an agreement between his majesty and them. From Rouen we went to St. Germain, where we were no sooner arrived, but we heard that Mr. Denham (who, during his imprisonment had contracted a great familiarity with Peters, a preacher, and a powerful person in the army) was dispatched with a commission to the like effect with that of Sir Edward Ford. As I was going up to her majesty, I met accidentally with my lord Colepepper, who scarce had saluted me, before he told me, that I must prepare myself immediately for another journey, her majesty being resolved to send me into England after Sir Edward Ford and Mr. Denham. I answered, that I had no pass, nor any acquaintance with any one of the army; and that I doubted, if the king's party should come too thick upon them at first, those of the army would be jealous they should have too many sharers in the places and preferments, they might perhaps meditate to procure and preserve to themselves. His lordship replied, that if I were afraid to go into England, her majesty and his highness would serve themselves of some other person, because they conceived it necessary to employ some to the army, that might be supposed to have greater trust both with the queen in France, and with the king in England, than either Sir Edward Ford, or Mr. Denham had. I returned, that if, after a serious consideration, it should be judged of use to dispatch me into England, I would adventure, though I had not the honour to be very well known to his majesty, and therefore could not expect any great trust from him. To that part his lordship replied, that there was an intention to send Mr. John Ashburnham after me; but that he would not go without a pass, and therefore that I should have it added to my instructions to procure him one. Within a few days after, I had my dispatch, and went by the way of Diepe, where I met with Mr. William Legg, of the bed-chamber to his majesty. He embarked with me for England. We arrived at Hastings, and from thence went the next day towards London. Two miles on this side Tunbridge, I met with Sir Allen Apsley, who had been my lieutenant-governor of Exeter, and afterwards governor of Barnstaple, in the county of Devon. He told me, he was going to me from Cromwell, and some other officers of the army, with letters, and a cypher, and instructions. I thought this rencounter no ill omen to my future proceedings. Sir Allen Apsley told me, I should have to do with subtle men, that governed themselves by other maxims than the rest of the world. I remember, I answered that the caution was good, and that I would arm myself the best I could; but that it was hard to secure ourselves from malicious men, when we are absolutely in their power. I took the best information I could from Sir Allen Apsley, and resolved with him to go into London, before I went to the king or the army, that I might be enlightened by the most able men of our party."

It is further set forth in the narrative, that, by his instructions from the queen and the prince, he was to endeavour to incline his majesty to comply with the army, as far as would stand with his honour and conscience. But that, the king not following his advice, he procured a pass for Mr. Ashburnham, with whom he hoped he might prevail, and he with his majesty. His conferences with Cromwell, &c. are too long to be inserted here. We shall therefore only observe, with what honour and disinterestedness he acted, from the time of the king's escape from Hampton-court, and during his confinement in the Isle of Wight. The earl of Clarendon, in his history of the rebellion, tho' no friend to Sir John Berkeley, says of him, that when governor Hammond demanded that Mr. Ashburnham might stay with him, and Sir John might go to the king to acquaint him with what had been agreed on in the Isle of Wight, Mr. Ashburnham refused so to do; but that Berkeley offered himself to remain with him, whilst Ashburnham should attend his majesty. This affair in the narrative is made more clear. It sets forth, that he and Mr. Ashburnham had the king's orders to let the governor know, that his majesty had made choice of him to put himself in his hands, as a person of good extraction, &c. "and to desire his promise to protect his majesty and his servants to the best of his power, and, if it should happen that he should not be able to do it, then to oblige himself to suffer them to make their escape." The narrative goes on thus, "With these instructions we parted; but, before I had gone ten yards, I returned to his majesty, and said I had no knowledge of the governor, and therefore could not tell whether he might not detain us in the island; and therefore advised his majesty, if we came not to him the next day, to think no more of us, but secure his own escape. His majesty thanked me for the caution, and pursued his way, and Mr. Ashburnham and I ours. We came to Limington that night, but could not pass, by reason of a violent storm that blew. The next morning we got over, and had then eight miles to the castle of Carrisbrook, where the governor dwelt, where we came after ten in the morning, and found him gone towards Newport.

"When we overtook him, Mr. Ashburnham desired me to open the matter to him, which he would afterwards second himself. On delivering our message to him, he grew so pale, and fell into such a trembling, that I did really believe he would have fallen off his horse: which trembling continued with him at least an hour after, in which he broke out into passionate and distracted expressions; sometimes saying, O gentlemen! you have undone me by bringing the king into the island, if at least you have brought him; and, if you have not, pray let him not come; for what between my duty to his majesty, and my gratitude for this fresh obligation of confidence, and my observing my trust to the army, I shall be confounded. Other while he would talk to a clean contrary purpose. I remember, to settle him the better, I said, that God be thanked, there was no harm done; that his majesty intended a favour to him and his posterity, in giving an occasion to lay a great obligation upon him, and such as was very consistent with his relation to the army, who had so solemnly engaged themselves to his majesty: but, if he thought otherwise, his majesty would be far from imposing his person upon him. To that he replied, that then, if his majesty should come to any mischance, what would the army and kingdom say to him, that had refused to receive him? To this I replied, that he did not refuse him, who was not come to him. He returned, that he must needs know where his majesty was, because he knew where we were. I told him, he was never the nearer for my part. He then began a little to sweeten, and to wish that his majesty would have reposed himself absolutely upon him, because it would be much the better for both. I then went to Mr. Ashburnham, and told him, that this governor was not a man for our purpose; and that, for my part, I would never give my consent that his majesty should trust him. Mr. Ashburnham acknowledged that he did not like him; yet, on the other side, he much feared what would become of his majesty, if he should be discovered before he had made his point, and made appear what his intention was; for then he would be accused of what his enemies pleased to lay upon him. I replied, that, if we returned not that night, his majesty would be gone to sea. I perceived Mr. Ashburnham liked not that so well, and therefore took the governor to task apart, and, after some conference, they came both to me; and the governor said, that, since we desired it, he would say, that because he believed his majesty had made choice of him, as a person of honour and honesty, to lay this great trust upon, therefore he would not deceive his majesty's expectation. I replied, that expression was too general, and did not come home to our instructions. He then made many discourses not much to the purpose, during which time he kept himself between Mr. Ashburnham and me; and, when he found me still unsatisfied, he added, that I was harder to content than Mr. Ashburnham, and he did believe that his majesty would be much easier pleased than either; and thereupon concluded, that I should go into the castle, and that Mr. Ashburnham should take his horse and go to the king, and tell his majesty what he said. I embraced the motion most readily, and immediately went over the bridge into the castle, tho' I had the image of the gallows very perfectly before me. Mr. Ashburnham went, I believe, with a better heart to horse; but, before he was gone half a flight shot, the governor (being before the castle gate) called to him, and had a conference of at least a quarter of an hour with him; to what purpose I never knew until I came into Holland, where a gentleman of good worth and quality told me, that the governor affirmed afterwards in London, and in many other places, that he then offered to Mr. Ashburnham, that I should go, and he should stay, as believing his majesty to be less willing to expose him than me; but that Mr. Ashburnham absolutely refused. Whatever passed between them, I am sure they came both back to me; and the governor, putting himself between us, said, that he would say that which he was sure ought to content any reasonable man; which was, that he did believe his majesty relied on him as on a person of honour and honesty, and therefore he did engage himself to us to perform whatever could be expected from a person of honour and honesty. Before I could make any, Mr. Ashburnham made this reply, 'I will ask no more.' The governor then added, Let us all go to the king, and acquaint him with it. Mr. Ashburnham answered, With all my heart. I then broke from the governor, who held me in his hand, and went to Mr. Ashburnham, and said, What! do you mean to carry this man to the king, before you know whether he will approve of this undertaking or no? undoubtedly you will surprize him. Mr. Ashburnham said nothing but, 'I'll warrant you.' And so you shall, said I; for you know the king much better than I do, and therefore, when we shall come where the king is, I assure you I will not see him, before you have satisfied his majesty concerning your proceedings. Well, he would take that upon him. I then desired he would not let the governor carry any with him, that in all events we might the more easily secure him; which he consented to. Nevertheless, when we came to Cows-castle, where we were to take boat, Hammond took Basket, the governor of that castle, along with him; and when I complained of it to Mr. Ashburnham, he answered, It was no matter, we should be able to do well enough with them two. When we came to Titchfield, my lord Southampton's house, Mr. Ashburnham, according to his promise, went up to the king, and left me below with Hammond and Basket. I afterwards understood, that when Mr. Ashburnham had given an account of our message and the governor's answer, and came to say that he was come along with us, to make good what he had promised, his majesty struck himself upon the breast, and said, 'What have you brought Hammond with you? O! you have undone me; for I am by this means made fast from stirring.' Mr. Ashburnham replied, that if he mistrusted Hammond, he would undertake to secure him. His majesty said, I understand you well enough, but the world would not believe him, if he should follow that counsel; it should be said and believed, that he ventured his life for him, and that he had unworthily taken it from him. No, it was too late now of thinking any thing, but going through the way he had forced him upon, and leave the issue to God. But, when his majesty began anew to wonder that he could make so great an oversight, Mr. Ashburnham, having no more to reply, wept bitterly. In the mean time Hammond and Basket were so impatient at this long stay below in the court, that I was forced to send a gentleman of my lord Southampton's, to desire that his majesty and Mr. Ashburnham would remember that we were below. About half an hour after, we were sent for up; but before Hammond and Basket kissed his hand, his majesty took me aside and said, Sir John Berkeley, I hope you are not so passionate as Jack Ashburnham. Do you think you have followed my directions? I answered, no indeed, Sir; but it is none of my fault, as Mr. Ashburnham can tell you, if he please; I have exposed my life to prevent it: and then told his majesty the sum of what had passed, and particularly of my being a prisoner soner in the castle, and of Mr. Ashburnham's coming away without me; which Mr. Ashburnham had omitted. His majesty judged that it was now too late to boggle, and therefore received Hammond cheerfully, who promised more to his majesty than he had done to us, and we all went over that night to Cows."

Three days after they were sent for by the parliament; but the governor refused to let them go. And thereupon Sir John was employed by the king and the governor, with letters to the general, to Cromwel, and Ireton; but, as he relates, was very coldly received at Windsor; whereof he immediately advertised his majesty by his kinsman Henry Berkeley, whom he cautiously took with him from the isle of Wight, and procured a pass from the governor for his return; doubting the event, and fearing his own confinement. He sent by him two letters, one to the governor, and the other to the king, informing him of his danger, concluding with a most passionate supplication to his majesty, to meditate nothing but his immediate escape: and finding that Cromwell and others were resolved to bring the king to a trial, he took horse for London, resolving not to acquaint any man with the intentions of the army, nor of his majesty's intended escape, which he presumed would be within few days; the wind serving, and the queen having sent a ship for that purpose, and pressed it earnestly by her letters.

On his arrival at London, the lord Lanerick and the lord Lauderdale desired a meeting with him, presuming he had a commission from his majesty to treat with them, but were surprized to find the contrary. In discourse with them he happened to say, "The last words his majesty said to him, at parting, were, that whatever he should undertake to any person in his name, his majesty would make it good on the word of a king." Whereupon my lord Lanerick replied, he would ask no more commission from him, believing it to be true, because he affirmed it, and because he had received the like from his majesty on the like occasion. Thereupon he held two conferences with those lords, and appointed a third; but, in the interim, he received a letter from Mr. Ashburnham, requiring him, in his majesty's name, to lay by all other business whatsoever, and return instantly to the king. The same night he received the letter, he went out of town, and the next morning was with his majesty, though (as he writes) he would willingly have been excused the journey, believing it was only to assist the king in his escape.

His majesty received him more graciously than ordinary, telling him, "He had always a good opinion of his honesty and discretion, but was never so much confirmed in it, as by his dispatch from Windsor, for which he thanked him." During his stay, he continually pressed his majesty to make his escape; but, the Scots being in treaty with the king, as also commissioners from the parliament at London, his advice was not listened to, till (as the event shewed) it was out of his majesty's power. The king had at last come to a resolution to endeavour to make his escape; but he met with two great obstacles: the wind in the very instant became cross; and his majesty not agreeing with the commissions from the parliament, put the governor in such fury, that he locked up the gates of the castle, doubled his guards, commanding all his majesty's servants from him, and appointed a guard over the king.

On taking their leaves, Sir John Berkeley and Mr. Ashburnham informed his majesty, that they had left the captain of the frigate (which was to carry him over) and two trusty gentlemen of the island, to assist his escape; and that they would have all things in readiness on the other side of the water. But after staying three weeks, expecting the king's coming over to them, and beginning to despair of it, Mr. Ashburnham, Mr. Legg, and Mr. Denham, sent Sir John Berkeley over to the queen in their names, to inform her majesty of the danger the king was in.

When the duke of York had made his escape from St. James's to Holland, the queen immediately sent Sir John Berkeley from Paris to wait on the duke as his governor there; which was so great an uneasiness to colonel Bamfield, who contrived his escape, and expected that post, as induced him to use all his skill and insinuation to lessen him in his royal highness's opinion; so that, some time after he had brought him to the queen at Paris, he quitted his charge to the lord Byron, who had before been appointed his governor by the king.

The queen had such a sense of his services, that when king Charles II. at Paris, called the marquis of Ormond, the lord Jermyn, and the lord Wilmot to his council, who, with the chancellor of the exchequer (after earl of Clarendon) were to be consulted in all his affairs, she very earnestly pressed the king that Sir John Berkeley might likewise be of the council; which his majesty did not consent to, thinking he could not refuse the same honour to the lord Wentworth and the lord Byron. On this affair, the chancellor of the exchequer and he had some dispute, which at last ended in a breach of friendship between them; so that, as the chancellor himself writes, he came to him and told him, "That since he was resolved to break all friendship with him, which had continued now near twenty years, he thought it but just to give him notice of it, that from henceforward he might not expect any friendship from him; but that they might live towards each other with that civility only that strangers used to do." The chancellor told him, "That the same justice, that disposed him to give this notice, should likewise oblige him to declare the reason of this resolution." He answered, "His exception was, that he could not be brought to make any promise; and that their judgments were so different, that he would no more depend upon him." And so they parted, without having any conversation with each other while they remained in France.

This, it is probable, was the reason that the earl of Clarendon, in his history of the rebellion, has endeavoured to lessen his services and merits; though, from what I have observed, it may be justly said, that he behaved with courage, honour, and integrity. In the year 1652, by the death of the lord Byron, he was again at the head of the duke of York's family, and had the management of all his receipts and disbursements. And the king, in consideration of his loyal and successful services, advanced him to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Berkeley of Stratton (having gained there a memorable victory over the rebels) by letters patent, bearing date at Brussels in Brabant, on the 10th of May, 1658, in the 10th year of his majesty's reign.

On the restoration of king Charles II. he was sworn of his most honourable privy council; and, at the latter end of the year 1669, was constituted lord-lieutenant of Ireland, where he landed in May 1670, and came to England in June 1671, leaving the government to the lord chancellor, and Sir Arthur Forbes, lords justices, till his return, which was on September 23 following. He was succeeded by Arthur, earl of Essex, sworn lord-lieutenant, on August 5, 1672; and, in 1675, the lord Berkeley was sent ambassador extraordinary to the French king. He departed this life at Twickenham, on the 28th of August 1678, aged 71, and was buried at Twickenham. And Christian his wife, daughter and heir of Sir Andrew Riccard (president of the East-India company) and widow of Henry Rich, lord Kensington, son and heir of Henry, earl of Holland, surviving him, died in August 1698. They left issue three sons, and a daughter, Anne, married to Sir Dudley Culum, of Hawsted, in the county of Suffolk, baronet.

The eldest son,

(Second Lord) CHARLES BERKELEY, captain of the Tyger man of war, succeeded his father, and died at sea unmarried, in the Straights, aged twenty years, three months, and three days, and was buried at Twickenham, September 21, 1682; whereupon the title and estate devolved on his second brother, (Third Lord) JOHN BERKELEY, who was groom of the stole and first gentleman of the bed-chamber to prince George of Denmark; and, in the reign of king William, was one of the admirals of the fleet, and colonel of the king's second regiment of marines. On his lordship's decease this publick notice was given in the Gazette: "Whitehall, Feb. 27, 1696. The lord John Berkeley, baron of Stratton, who commanded in several expeditions his majesty's fleet in the channel, died this day, after a few days sickness, of a fever and pleurisy." He married Jane-Martha, daughter of Sir John Temple, of East-Sheen, in the county of Surry, knight, and had issue a son and daughter, William and Mary, who died infants. His lady was married secondly to William Bentinck, earl of Portland, and dying March 24, 1751, was buried at Mortlake.

To whom succeeded in the honour, his youngest brother,

(Fourth Lord) WILLIAM BERKELEY, who took his seat in the house of peers, April 9, 1697, and on September 20, 1710, was constituted chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaster, and sworn of the privy council to her majesty queen Anne. Also, on the accession of king George I. was constituted first lord commissioner for trade and the plantations. He married Frances, youngest daughter of Sir John Temple, aforesaid, by whom he had issue three sons and four daughters,

1. John Berkeley, now lord Berkeley.

2. William Berkeley, born May 22, 1700, and being brought up in the sea-service, was captain of the Tyger, one of his majesty's ships of war, on board of which he died March 25, 1733, in his passage from the coast of Africa, to Barbadoes, fourteen days before the ship made land.

3. Charles Berkeley, was born June 21, 1701, and died 1765. In 1745 he married Frances, daughter of colonel John West, and great-grand-daughter of Sir Peter Killigrew, of Arwenack, in the county of Cornwall, by whom he had issue two daughters, Frances-Jane, born September 11, 1746, and Sophia, born Nov. 6, 1747, the former of which died young: also a son, born Sept. 28, 1750, christened Maurice-John, who died in 1757.

The daughters were,

1. Jane, who died unmarried in April 1744.

2. Frances, born April 5, 1703, married to William lord Byron, and secondly to Sir Thomas Hay, of Alderston, in East-Lothian, in North-Britain, baronet.

3. Barbara, born November 8, 1704, married March 29, 1726, to John Trevanion, of Carhays, in the county of Cornwall, esquire, who, dying in 1740, left issue by her a son, William, and two daughters.

4. Anne, born June 24, 1707, was married in May 1737, to James Cocks, of Reygate, in Surry, esquire, by whom he had one son, now living, named James. She died 1739.

His lordship, on Tuesday, March 24, 1740, died at his seat in Bruton, in Somersetshire; and this character was given of him in our publick papers: "This noble lord was great by birth, nature, and education. He was greatly learned, understood religion, and practised it. He was chancellor of the dutchy of Lancaster in the reign of queen Anne, and appointed by the late king first commissioner of the board of trade; which he resigned, choosing to retire."

He was succeeded by his eldest son,

(Fifth and present Lord) JOHN BERKELEY, who on February 8, 1742-3, was constituted captain of the yeomen of his majesty's guards, in the room of the earl of Essex, deceased, which he after resigned; and, on February 1752, was sworn at St. James's of his most honourable privy council. November 20, 1746, he was appointed captain of the band of gentlemen pensioners. His lordship is now constable of the Tower of London, and lord lieutenant of the Tower-Hamlets. He is yet unmarried.

BOOTH, Baron DELEMER.

THE antiquity of this noble family in the counties of Lancaster and Cheshire, is universally acknowledged; in the former of which was a place called the Booths, where they usually resided, from which they assumed the surname which their descendants have preserved to this day, altho' they have from time to time varied in the spelling, viz. Booth, Boothe, Both, Bothe, Bouth, and Bouthe. This appears from ancient deeds and evidences belonging to the family. The first we meet with from whom we can lineally deduce the present nobleman, was

ADAM DE BOOTH, whose son,

WILLIAM DE BOOTHs, was living in the year 1275, and married Sibil, daughter of Sir Ralph de Brereton, knight, a very antient family, seated at Brereton, in the county of Chester, and continued there in a long succession of heirs-males; until the same became extinct, by the death of Francis, lord Brereton, in the kingdom of Ireland, without issue, in the year 1721.

To this William succeeded

THOMAS DE BOOTHES his son and heir, who had issue

JOHN DE BOUTHE, living in the reign of king Edward II. and married to Agnes or Anne, daughter and heir to Sir Gilbert de Barton, knight, lord of Barton, near Eccles, in the county of Lancaster, as likewise near Booths aforelaid, by whom he had issue,

Sir THOMAS BOUTH, of Barton, knight, called Tomalin of the Booths, who married Ellen, daughter of Thomas de Workeſley, of Workeſley, now wrote Worſley, near Booths, afore-mentioned, in the ſaid county of Lancaſter, eſquire, (from whom the Worſleys of Apuldercumbe, in the Iſle of Wight, are deſcended) and by her had iſſue three ſons, viz.

1. John Bouth, his son and heir.
 2. Henry Bouth, who had issue John.
 3. Thomas Bouth, who had issue Robert.
- And four daughters,

1. Alice, married to William Leigh, of Baguley, in the county of Chester, esquire, a family but

* It is said by some, that this John Bouth was the first who gave for his coat of arms, argent, three boars heads erased, and erected fable; as now borne by this family, being granted to him and his heirs for ever, by Thomas Barton, of Barton. But this is conceived to be a mistake; for that this John Bouth being the grandfon and heir of Agnes, or Anne, who was daughter and heir to Sir Gilbert de Barton, and inherited all the lordship of Barton, as appears by the same being at this day possessed by the heirs general, descended from this Agnes: It is to be presumed that the family of Barton, of Barton, became extinct in her, and seems not at all probable that there could be any Barton, of Barton, contemporary with this John lately extinct; afterwards to Thomas Duncalf, of Foxwist, esquire.

2. Catharine.
3. Margaret.
4. Anne, married to Sir Edward Weever, knight.

This
JOHN BOUTH *, the (son and heir of Sir Thomas or Tomalin) called John Bouth, of Barton, esquire, lived in the time of king Richard II. and Henry IV. and married first Joan, daughter of Sir Henry Trafford, of Trafford, in the county of Lancaster, knight, a family of the greatest antiquity, having been there seated before the time when William, duke of Normandy, entered England, and have continued there in a lineal descent to Humphry Trafford, esquire, now living. By this lady he had a numerous issue, famous in their generation, viz. seven sons, and five daughters,

1. Margery, married to John Byron, of Clayton, in the county of Lancaster, esquire.
2. Joan, married to Thomas Sherborne, of Stanhurst, in that county, esquire, (ancestor to her late grace the duchess dowager of Norfolk) and afterwards married to Sir Thomas Sudworth, knight.
3. Catharine, wife to Thomas Ratcliffe, of Wimmerley, esquire.
4. Alice, married to Sir Robert Clifton, of Clifton, in the county of Nottingham, knight, who lieth buried in the church of Clifton, with this inscription, "Hic jacet Domina Alicia Clifton, Filia Johanne Bothe, Ar. Soror bonæ memoriæ Domini Willielmi Bothe, Ebor. Archiepiscopi, & Vxor Domini Roberti Clifton Militis, quæ obiit, 9 Sept. 1470."
5. Lucy, married to Sir Edward Weever, knight, if this be not mistaken for Anne, her father's sister afore-mentioned.

The fons were,

1. Thomas Bouth, of Barton, knighted in 14 Henry VI. He married a daughter of Sir George Carrington, knight, and widow of — Weever, and left issue Sir John Bouth, knight, to whom Booth, to make such a grant: neither was there occasion for any such grant, the descendants of the said Agnes being entitled by the laws of heraldry, to bear her coat of arms, or to quarter it with their paternal coat, if such they had prior to their ancestors marrying her: nor if such grant were, is it probable that the same should have been deferred till the grandson of Agnes, and not rather to have been made to Thomas her son and immediate successor. And the family of Booth have antiently, as to this day, quartered next to their paternal coat, another, viz. argent, a fess engrailed gules, by the name of Barton; it is therefore much more probable that the three boats heads, as now borne by them, was always their paternal coat.

king Henry VII. did, for the good services of the said Sir John Bouth, by patent bearing date 14 Sept. 3 Hen. VII. grant (over and above a former annuity of twenty pounds) an annuity of ten marks, sterling, per annum for his life, payable out of the rents and profits of the county palatine of Lancaster. He was slain at Flodden-field, 9 Sept. 5 Hen. VIII. leaving issue John, who had issue John, and he also had issue John, who left three daughters his coheirs, in whom this eldest line of the Booths of the Barton expiring; the line of

2. Robert Botth, the second son of the above-named John Booth of Barton, became the head branch of the family, and has so continued in a lineal descent, to the right honourable Nathaniel Booth, now lord Delemer.

3. William Bouth was bishop of Litchfield and after six years translated to the archbishopric, of York. He built a chapel joining to the south wall of the church of Southwell, in Nottinghamshire, called Bothe's chapel, now utterly ruined: as is likewise a fair palace there, conjectured to have been built by this archbishop, or by Laurence his half-brother, and successor in that see. He was buried at Southwell, aforesaid.

4. Richard Bothe was the first of the name seated at Strickland, near Ipswich, in Suffolk. In the south-side of the chancel of Sawley church, in the county of Derby, is a memorial of him, and Phelippe his wife, daughter of Thomas Pey, Esq; and Anne his wife, who are also commemorated there.

5. Roger Booth married Catherine, daughter and heir to Ralph Hatton, of Mollington, near Chester, Esq; and had issue Robert Booth of Sawley, in the county of Derby, Esq; and a daughter named Isabel, the wife of Ralph Nevil, the third earl of Westmoreland, by whom he had issue Anne, wife to William, lord Coniers. The said Roger, and his son Robert, are both buried in Sawley church: and on a marble tomb, on the north-side of the chancel, are the arms of Booth, "Argent, three boars heads, erased and erected fable; in the centre, a catherine-wheel, impaling, argent, a griffon fable," and this inscription. Hic jacet Rogerus Bothe, Arm. quondam pater, Archiepi Eboracensis, et Laurentii Epi Dunelmensis, et Katerini uxoris ejus, pater & mater Magri Johis Bothe, Thesaurarii Lych, qui quidem Rogerus, Ob. 18 Aug. 1467, & Katerina uxor ejus, Ob. Ao. Dom. 1466, Quorum Animabus propitiatur Deus, Amen. His son Robert Booth, has also a tomb erected to his memory, at the entrance into the chancel; and in the center of his arms, is a tun, with a star on it (as may be presumed for difference) and the following inscription was engraved in brass. Hic jacent Robts Bothe, Arm. filius et hæres Rogeri Bothe, in Cancellio Sepulti, frater Magri, Johis Bothe Archidiaconi Duresm; et Magri Radi Bothe, Archidiaconi Eborum, et Margareta Vxor ejus, qui quidem Robertus, Ob. 22 Febr. Ao. 1487, et Vidua Margareta, Ob. . . . Ao. 14. . . About the tomb are portraitures in brass, and over them; Charlys, John, Roger, Katherine, Isabell, Dowce, Jane, Agnes, Eme. There are also the arms of Nevile, impaling Booth; inscribed, Arma Comes Westmorland et Isabella uxoris ejus.

6. John Booth, was bishop of Exeter, in 6 Edward IV. 1465, and was buried in the church of St. Clement Danes, London, 1478.

7. Ralph Booth, was archdeacon of York.

By a second lady, whose name is not handed down to us, this John Booth had one son

Laurence Booth, who was chancellor of the university of Cambridge, bishop of Durham, and afterwards archbishop of York; and was keeper of the privy-seal in 35 Hen. VI. and made lord-chancellor of England, 20 Sept. 12 Edw. IV. He founded a chantry for two priests in the church of Southwell, and bought the manor of Battersea nigh London, which he annexed to the archbishopric of York. He died at Southwell, aforesaid, 20 Edward IV. 1480. Ætat 53; and was there buried.

Having thus treated of the children of John Bouth, or Bothe, of Barton, we now return to his second son

Sir ROBERT BOUTH, or Sir Robert del Bothe of Dunham, Knight, who married Dulcis, or Dowce, daughter and coheir to Sir William Venables of Bollen, by Wilmeslowe, in the county of Chester, knight, which Sir William Venables, was son of Joan, daughter and heir of Hamon Fitton, who was grandson of John Fitton of Bollen, by Cicilie his wife, eldest daughter and coheir of Sir Hamon de Massie, the sixth and last baron of Dunham-Massie, in the parish of Bowdon, in the county palatine of Chester, being one of the eight barons instituted by Hugh Lupus, earl of Chester, to whom William, commonly called the Conqueror, in the 4th year of his reign, granted the whole county and earldom of Chester, to hold to him, tam liberè ad Gladium, sicut ipse Rex tenebat Angliam ad Coronam. This family of Massie, had been settled at Dunham-Massie, before the entrance of that prince into England; and appears by the famous survey called Doomsday-book, to have been then possessed of a vast estate, as in other parts of the county of Chester, so of the greatest part of this parish of Bowden, which is of a large extent, containing several townships, or parts of townships; and the church is supposed to have been erected before that time, for in Doomsday-book, it is said, ibi Presbyter et Ecclesia, cui pertinet dimidia Hida, and is believed to have been founded by this family of Massie, not only from their great property in the parish, but from their being invested with the advowson of the said church, the nomination of the parish-clerk, and the sole appointment of all the four churchwardens; which last privilege doth continue in the lords of Dunham-Massie to this day. But the advowson, (together with some lands) were granted away by Hamon Massie, the first baron of Dunham-Massie, in the year 1728, 6 Edward I. to the prior and convent of Birkened, in Wirral in the said county, according to the superstition of those times, pro salute animæ mæ & animarum antecessorum meorum, says the grant.

This Sir Robert Booth, through Duce his wife, was the first Booth of Dunham-Massie, so called from the afore-mentioned family of the Massies, the ancient lords thereof, to distinguish it from another Dunham in this county, called Dunham on the Hill, or Stony-Dunham, from its situation. He and William his son, had a grant of the office of sheriff of Cheshire, for both their lives, and to the survivor of them, by patent bearing date at Chester, March 8, 21 Henry VI. with all fees belonging longing to the said office, and to occupy it by themselves or deputies.

He died 16 Sept. 1450, and lies buried in the chancel of the parish church of Wilmesslowe, in the county of Chester; on whose grave-stone is his arms on a brass-plate, viz. the three boar heads, with a garb for distinction. Douce his wife, died 23 Sept. 1493, and lies buried by her husband: they had likewise a numerous issue, viz. nine sons and five daughters.

The sons were,

1. Sir William Bothe, knight.
2. Ralph Bothe, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of Thomas Sibell, of Sandwich in Kent, esquire, and left issue three daughters his co-heirs.

3. Geoffrey Bothe.

4. Hamond Bothe, a doctor of laws.

5. John Bothe.

6. Robert Bothe.

7. Edmund Bothe.

8. Peter Bothe.

9. Philip Bothe, who married —, daughter and heir to Sir William Hampton, of Willington, Knt. and left issue male.

The daughters were,

1. Lucy, wife to William Chauntrell, of the Bache, near Chester, Esq.

2. Ellen, married to Robert Leigh, of Adlington, in the county of Chester, Esq; a family of great estate still residing there.

4. Joan, wife to Hamond Massie, of Rixton, in that county, Esq; whose descendants are still there living.

5. Margaret, or Margery, wife to James Searebrick, Esq.

Sir WILLIAM BOTHE, the eldest son and heir of Sir Robert, married Maud, daughter of John Dutton, of Dutton, in the county of Chester, Esq; and by her had issue five sons,

1. George Bothe.

2. Richard Bothe.

3. Laurence or Ralph Bothe.

4. John Bothe.

5. William Bothe.

Also nine daughters.

1. Douce, wife to Thomas Leigh, of the West Hall, at High Leigh, in the county of Chester, Esq; a family still there in being.

2. Anne, married to John Leigh, of Booths, in the same county, Esq; whose descendants in the male-line continued there till very lately; she was married afterwards to Geoffrey Shakerly, of Shakerly, in the county of Lancaster, Esq.

3. Ellen, wife to Sir John Leigh of Baguley, in the county of Chester knight, whose issue male continued there till very lately.

4. Margery, wife to John Hyde, of Haighton, in the county of Lancaster, Esq.

6. Elizabeth, wife to Thomas Pitton, of Pownall, in the same county, Esq.

7. Joan, wife to William Holt, in the county of Lancaster, Esq.

8. Isabella.

9. Catherine.

To this Sir William Bothe, king Henry VI. did, in consideration of his good services, grant an annuity of ten pounds, to be received yearly during his life, at the exchequer at Chester, by patent bearing date 27 March, 24 Henry VI. This Sir William Bothe built, or enlarged the chapel on the south-side of the chancel of the parish church of Bowdon, in the county of Chester, which has ever since been the burial-place of this family. He died in 16 Edward IV. 1476.

GEORGE BOTHE, Esq; eldest son and heir of the said Sir William, married Catherine, daughter and heir of Robert Mountfort, of Bescote, in the county of Stafford, and of Monkspath, in the county of Warwick, Esq; descended from Charlemagne, emperor of the Romans, and from David, king of Scots; and by his great grandmother, heir to the ancient and great family of Clinton, of Colhill, in the said county of Warwick. Which Catherine brought to her husband an ample estate of manors and lands, in the several counties of Salop, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Leicestershire, Wilts, Somerset, Cornwall, and Hereford. He had issue by her three sons.

1. Sir William Bothe.

2. Laurence Bothe.

3. Roger Bothe.

Also two daughters.

1. Alice, or Anne, wife to William Massie, of Denfield, in the county of Chester, Esq; a family still in being, although of late gone to decay.

2. Ellen, married to Thomas Vaudrey, afterwards to — Trafford, of Bridge-Trafford, in the same county, Esq.

This George Bothe died 1 Richard III. 1483, and was succeeded by his eldest son and heir,

Sir WILLIAM BOTHE, knight, who married two wives, viz. Margaret, daughter and coheir to Sir Thomas Affleton or Ashton, of Ashton Under-lyne, in the county of Lancaster, knight, and of his wife Anne, daughter of Ralph, lord Graystock and Wemm, by whom a large inheritance in the counties of Lancaster and Chester came to the family of Booth. By her he had issue,

1. George Bothe, his son and heir.

2. John Bothe, who married Margery, daughter of Sir Piers Dutton, of Dutton, in the county of Chester, knight, by whom he had issue William, and Robert, who was steward to the earl of Shrewsbury.

This Margaret, the wife of Sir William Bothe, dying before the 19th of Henry VII. Sir William took for his second wife, Ellen, daughter of Sir John Montgomery, of Frewly, in the county of Stafford, knight, and by her had issue five sons, and three daughters.

The sons were,

1. William Bothe, who married —, daughter of — Smith, in the county of Leicester.

2. Hamnet Bothe, who married —, daughter of Humphry Newton, of —.

3. Edward Bothe, married Mary, daughter and coheir to Roger Knutsford, of Twamlow, in the county of Chester, Esq; from whom descended the Booths of Twamlow, still there extant.

Mr. Richardson says, that he and his brother Henry both died without issue.

4. Henry Bothe, who married —, daughter of — Bowdon, of Bowdon, in the said county of Chester, an antient family, but now lately extinct.

5. Andrew Bothe.

The daughters of this Sir William Bothe, were,

1. Jane, wife to Hugh, son and heir of Sir Piers Dutton, of Dutton, in the county of Chester, knight, afterwards to Thomas Holford, of Holford, in the same county, Esq.

2. Dorothy, wife to Edward, son and heir of Laurence Warren, of Pointon, in the same county, Esq; a family descended from the antient earls of Warren, and Surrey, and still there existing, with an ample estate.

3. Anne, wife to Sir William Brereton, of Brereton, in the same county, knight.

This Sir William Bothe, died 9 Nov. 11 Henry VIII. and was buried at Bowdon, under an alabaster grave-stone, whereon was the coat of Massie, put for his coat of arms: from whence, and from several other reasons, to induce a probable opinion, it is conjectured that Booth of Dunham, whilst it continued a younger branch of the family, during the existence of Booth of Barton, the elder line, or for great part of such time, did give the arms of Massie, of the ancient Barons of Dunham-Massie, to whose seat and estate they had inherited.

GEORGE BOTHE, Esq; the son and heir of the said Sir William, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Boteler or Butler, of Beaufey, near Warrington, in the county of Lancaster, knight, whose progenitors had been summoned to parliament among the peers of England, in the reigns of king Edward I. and II. By her he had issue,

1. George Bothe, his son and heir.

2. John Bothe, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Dutton, Esq; by whom he had four sons; William, Robert, Edmund, and Henry.

3. Robert Bothe, who was rector of Thornton in the Moors, in the county of Chester.

This George had also seven daughters.

1. Ellen, wife to John Carrington, of Carrington, Esq.

3. Margaret, wife to Sir William Davenport, of Bromhall, knight, whose family are still owners of that estate.

4. Elizabeth, wife to Richard Sutton, of Sutton, near Macclesfield, Esq.

4. Dorothy, married to Robert Tatton, of Wilthenshaw, Esq; whose descendants are still there living.

6. Alice, wife to Peter Daniel, of Over-Tabley, Esq; a family but very lately extinct; all in the county of Chester.

7. Cecilie, who died unmarried.

This George Bothe, Esq; died in 22 Hen. VIII. in the fortieth year of his age.

GEORGE BOTHE, Esq; the eldest son and heir of the last-mentioned George, being but sixteen years of age, married to his first wife, (or was to marry her) as appears by an antient deed, June 12, 23 Hen. VIII. Margaret, daughter of Rowland Bulkeley, of Beaumorris, Esq; ancestor to the now lord viscount Bulkeley, of the kingdom of Ireland, but by her, (if the marriage did take effect) had no issue; and she dying, he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Edmund Trafford of Trafford, in the county of Lancaster, knight, which marriage was agreed by deed, May 20, 27 Henry VIII. not quite four years after the deed for his former marriage. By this Elizabeth Trafford, he had issue William Bouthe, and three daughters.

1. Elizabeth, wife of William Chauntrell, of the Bache, near Chester, Esq.

2. Mary, married to Randle Davenport, of Henbury, in the county of Chester, Esq; which family continued there for many generations.

3. Anne, wife to — Wentworth, in the county of York, Esq.

To this George Bothe, being then in the twenty-second year of his age, queen Jane Seymour commanded a letter to be written, acquainting him with the birth of a son, (afterwards king Edward IV.) bearing date at Hampton-Court the very day of her delivery, October 12, 29 Henry VIII. in hæc verba, viz.

By the QUEENE.

"Trusty and welbeloved, we grete youe well. And for asmuche as by the inestimable goodnes and grace of Almighty God, we be delivred and brought in childbed of a Prince, conceived in most lawful matrimonic between my Lord the King's Majestye and us, doubting not but that for the love and affection which ye beare unto us, and to the common wealth of this realme, the knowledge thereof shuld be joyous and glad tidings unto youe, we have thought fit to certifie to youe of the same, To thintent ye might not only sende unto God condigne thanks and praise for soo great a benefit, but also pray for the long continuance and preservation of the same here in this lief, to the honor of God, joye and pleasor of my lord the King, and us, and the universall weale, quiet and tranquillity of this hole realme. Yewyn under our signet, at my lord's manor of Hampton-cort, the xii day of October."

To our trusty and welbeloved,
George Both, Esq;

Which letter shews the error of those historians, who represent this queen to have been ripped up, for delivery of the child, and thereby dying.

To this George Bothe also, did king Henry VIII. write a letter concerning forces to be raised, to war against the Scots, bearing date at Westminster, 10 February, 34th of his reign, in hæc verba, viz.

By the KING.

"Trustie and welbeloved, we grete you well. Lating you wit that forasmuche as by the manifold injuries, wrongs, and displeasures doon unto us, our realme and subjects, by the Scots, we have been enforced latelie to enter into open warre and hostilitie with the same, which we entend and purpose, God willing, (onles the nobles of Scotland shall conform themselves to reason) to prosecute in such sorte as shall redound to our honour, and to the commonwealthe of our realme and subjects. To thintent we maie the better know the forces of our said realme, and thereby put the same in such ordre and aredines, as they maie serve us in this enterprice as the case shall require. We have thought mete and necessarie, to have special musters taken of all our people, and thereupon to have also such plaine and perfyte certificats made, as shall declare what maye be trusted to in that behalf: Wherefore our pleasure and commaundment is, that you by vertue and authoritie herof, shall with all convenient diligence, take the musters of all thable men as well horsemen as fotemen, which you can make and furnishe bothe of our tennants inhabiting upon fermes, holds, and tenements, within any office whereof you have the stuardship under us, if you have any suche; and also of your oune serfants and tenants, dwelling upon your oune tenements; and the same so taken, to certifie in writing to our right trustie and right entirely beloved cousyn and counsaillor, the Duke of Suffolk our Lieutenant-generall in the Northe parties, with all possible diligence; with a speciall note and declaration to be expressed in the said certificate, how many of the said persons be furnished with horses, hable to occupie a spere or a javelyn; how many be archers, and how many be billmen; and how many principall men may be picked out of every sort of thole nombre; fforing that in these musters and certificats, you medle not in any wise with any maryns; forasmuche as we purpose to reserve the same for our furniture by see. And that you put all the same in such aredines as they set forth upon oon hoursers warning whensoever, you shall receyve commaundment from our said cousyn in that behalf. And theise our letters shalbe your sufficient warrant, and discharge herein accordingle. Yeven under our signet, at our palace of Westminster, the 10th daie of February, the xxxiith yere of our reign."

To our trustie and well biloved,

George Boothe Esquier.

[The originals of both which letters were in the custody of the right honourable George, late earl of Warrington.]

This George Bothe, Esq; died in 35 Henry VIII. 1548, in the thirtieth year of his age; Elizabeth his wife surviving him, and dying 22 June, 1582, was interred in Trentham church, in the county of Stafford.

WILLIAM BOTHE or Bouthe, son and heir of the last mentioned George, being but three years old when his father died, was in ward to the king. He was knighted in 1578. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Warburton of Warburton and Arley, in the county of Chester, knight, a family still continuing. She, in her widowhood, resided at the city of Bath, in the county of Somerset, where she paved the north isle of the church; and dying, was there interred 27 December, 1628, having survived her husband forty-nine years. She did, by sundry indentures, grant several considerable sums of money, to be let out, and the interest thereof to be applied for ever, in buying and distributing of bread weekly on the Lord's day, to the poor of the city of Worcester, and to the poor of the town of Congleton, and of the parishes of Astbury, Great Budworth, Bowdon, Wilmeslow, and Motteram in Longedendale, in the county of Chester, and of Ashton-Under-lyne, in the county of Lancaster; and moreover ten shillings yearly to a minister, to preach a sermon at St. John's church in Chester, at the time to be appointed by the mayor and citizens, and forty shillings to be laid out in a drinking, after the said sermon.

By her, Sir William Bouthe had issue seven sons, and six daughters:

1. George Bouthe, of whom we shall hereafter treat.

2. Edmund Bouthe.

3. John Bouthe, who married a daughter of Preistwick, of Hulme, near Manchester, in the county of Lancaster, esquire, and had several children.

4. Robert Bouthe.

5. Peter Bouthe.

6. Richard Bouthe, who married the daughter and heir of — Massie, of Cogshul, from whom is descended the Booths of Barrow, in the county of Chester.

7. William Bouthe*, who died without issue in his father's life-time, and was buried at Bowdon, March 31, 1572.

The daughters were,

1. Mary.

2. Elizabeth, married to William Basnet, of Eaton, in the county of Denbigh, esquire, afterwards to — Walsh, in Ireland.

3. Dorothy, wife to Ralph Bunnington, of Barrowcote, in the county of Derby, esquire.

4. Alice, wife to — Panton.

5. Eleanor.

6. Susan, wife to Sir Edward Warren, of Poin-ton, in the county of Chester, knight; afterwards to John Fitton, of the city of Chester, esquire.

This Sir William Bouthe died November 28, 1579, aged thirty-six years, and was buried at Bowdon, December 8 following.

The eldest son,

SIR GEORGE BOTHE, or Booth, was, by reason of his minority, at the death of his father, in ward to the crown, and his estate being of considerable value, was by queen Elizabeth, granted to her favourite, Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, to the great detriment and expence of the said George Booth, in obtaining afterwards livery of his lands.

He was knighted about the latter end of the reign of queen Elizabeth, and created baronet by patent 22 May, 9 James, 1611, being the tenth of those who received that order at its first institution. He had two wives; the first was Jane, sole daughter and heir to John Carrington, of Carrington, in the county of Chester, esquire, a family of long standing there, and she was second cousin to him; George Bothe, the grandfather of this George, being brother to Ellen, the mother of the said John Carrington. By this Jane he had no issue, nor did they live long together; yet he inherited all the lands of her father; the same being strictly settled by her said father, previous to her said marriage, to descend to the family of Booth, in which settlement, among other provisos, is one particularly to be taken notice of, That if she the said Jane should, after marriage, he detected of incontinency, the estate should remain to the family of Booth.

After her death, he married Catherine, daughter of Edmund Anderson, chief-justice of the Common-pleas, by whom he had issue,

1. William Booth, of whom hereafter.
2. Francis Booth,
3. Thomas Booth,
4. Edmund Booth,

5. Sir John Booth, who having been active for the service of his then majesty king Charles II. was knighted after the restoration, in the year 1660. He married Dorothy, daughter of Sir Anthony St. John, knight, younger son to Oliver, earl of Bolingbroke, and dying May 9, 1678, was buried in the church of St. Werburge, in Chester, having had issue four sons, George, Sir John, John, and Thomas: also six daughters, of which the first and fifth, Catherine and Frances, died young; the others were, Susannah, Elizabeth, Catherine, and Frances. The eldest son, George Booth, was prothonotary of Cheshire; and marrying Martha, daughter of Ralph Hawtrey, had issue four sons, 1. George, who died young. 2. John, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Progers, Esq. and had an only daughter, married to — Masculine. 3. George. 4. Robert, who married a lady from Bettlesfield, of the name of Hanmer. He had also three daughters; Mary, married to captain Breholt; Catherine, married first to Edward Hodgson, and secondly to James Howard, esquire; also Elizabeth, married to Thomas Tyndale, esquire.

Sir George had also issue seven daughters,

1. Mary, who dying unmarried at London, May 12, 1657, was buried in St. Sepulchre's church there.

2. Alice, wife to George Vernon, of Haslington, in the county of Chester, esquire.

3. Frances, died unmarried, and was buried at Bowdon, September 10, 1669.

4. Susan, married to Sir William Brereton, of Handforth, in the county of Chester, baronet.

5. Catherine, died unmarried at Chester, September 24, 1684, and was interred in St. Werburge's church there.

6. Cicely, who died young.

7. Elizabeth, second wife to Richard, lord Byron, baron of Rochdale, who died February 10, 1687, leaving no issue, at Bulwell-park, in the county of Nottingham.

This Sir George Booth was twice sheriff of Cheshire, and as often of Lancashire; and after having survived his father seventy-three years, and considerably augmented his estate, and lived in great hospitality, till he had compleated the age of eighty six years, died October 24, and was interred at Bowdon, November 18, 1652.

We come now to

WILLIAM BOOTH, Esq. the son and heir-apparent of the aforementioned Sir George Booth, knight and baronet. He married Vere, second daughter and coheir to Sir Thomas Egerton, lord Ellesmere, and viscount Brackley, and lord chancellor of England; and by her had issue,

1. Thomas Booth, who died at twelve years of age.

2. George Booth, of whom we shall hereafter treat.

3. William Booth, who died young.

4. Nathaniel, who married Anne, third daughter of Thomas Ravenscroft, of Bretton, in the county of Flint, by whom he had issue four sons and eight daughters. The sons were, George, Thomas, and Nathaniel, who died without issue; the third having nevertheless been married to Jane, daughter of Henry Dixon, esquire. The fourth son, John Booth, married Mary, daughter of Gilbert Pickering, and had issue George Booth, rector of Ashton-under-line, who married Hannah, daughter of Harry Turner, esquire; and had two daughters, Catherine, who died young, and Hannah Vere, born 1748, who died 1765.

5. Charles Booth, who died young.

Likewise two daughters,

1. Elizabeth, who died young.
2. Catherine, wife to Sir John Jackson, of Hickleton, in the county of York, baronet, which title is now extinct.

The said William Booth was made custos rotularum for the county of Chester, by commission bearing date November 20, 19 James I. Which office from that time, except with some intermission in the latter end of king Charles II. and during the reign of king James II. when many, who preferred the interest of their country to the pernicious designs of evil ministers, were discountenanced, continued in this family until the year 1693; when, on the death of Henry, first earl of Warrington, who left his son, the late earl, a minor, the same was disposed of elsewhere.

This William Booth, esquire, died before his father, viz. 26th of April, 1626, and was buried at Bowdon the 3d of May following; his said wife Vere, having been there interred seven years before him, viz. 4 May 1629. By the inquisition taken after his decease, at Chester, September 1, 12 Car. I. the jury found, that he died possessed of the manor of Dunham-Maslie, with divers messuages, and tenements in Bellington; and of the manors of Hatterly, and Botham-hall, Carrington, Thornton, alias Thornton on the Moor, Norcliff, with divers messuages, lands and tenements, in Wilmeslow and Bollin; the manor of Stayley, alias Staveley; the manors of Ashton Under-line, Warrington, Orford, alias Overford, Harpley, and Herkley; to all which George was found his son and heir, and of the age of thirteen years, eight months, and fifteen days, at the decease of his father.

(First Lord) GEORGE BOOTH, by reason of his minority at the death of his father, became ward to the crown, which wardship was purchased by Sir George Booth, his grandfather, for the sum of four thousand pounds, anno 13 Char. I.

To this George, who after the death of his grandfather, in 1652, was Sir George Booth, baronet, king Charles II. sent a commission under his signet and sign-manual, bearing date 22 July, 11 Car. II. a duplicate whereof bore date at Brussels, August 9, 1659, 11 Car. II. constituting him commander in chief of all forces to be raised for his majesty's service in Cheshire, Lancashire and North Wales. Which commissions are recited in an instrument under that king's signet and sign-manual, bearing date at Whitehall, 21 March, 22 Car. II. declaring that the said George Booth (then lord Delemere) acted by his said commission in all he did, in order to his majesty's jeſty's reſtoration; and his majeſty grants this, both to declare the ſame, and for the remembrance of his early and eminent endeavours for his reſtoration, and to remain as a mark of his particular eſteem for the merit of his ſervice in that important conjuncture. Which original inſtrument was in the cuſtody of the counteſs of Stamford, and is as follows:

CHARLES R.

"Charles the ſecond, by the grace of God King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To all perſons to whom theſe preſents ſhall come, greeting. Whereas we were graciously pleaſed by commiſſion under our ſignet and ſigne manuall of the two and twentieth day of July, in the eleventh year of our reigne, to conſtitute our right truſty and well-beloved George lord Delamer, then Sir George Booth, baronet, our commander in chiefe of all forces which then were, or afterwards ſhould be raiſed for our ſervice, within our countyes of Cheshire, Lancashire and North-Wales, as appears by a duplicate of the ſame under our ſaid ſignet and ſign manuall of the ninth of Auguſt in the ſaid eleventh year of our reigne, now remaineing in the hands of the ſaid Lord Delamer, in theſe words: Charles, by the grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. To our right truſty and well-beloved Sir George Boothe, Bart. greeting: We do by theſe preſents conſtitute and appoint you to bee commander in chiefe of all forces which are or ſhall be raiſed for our ſervice, within our counties of Cheshire, Lancashire and North-Wales, giving you full power and authority to order, conduct, and command the ſame in all things, according to the lawes and cuſtomes of warre; and therewith to fight, kill and deſtroy all who are or ſhall be in armes againſt us, and to ſeize on any forts or places in rebellion againſt our authority within the ſaid counties, and to keepe and defend the ſame for us and in our name: and to doe and execute all acts and powers belonging to the duty and office of a commander in chiefe, appointed to command the forces of thoſe our ſaid countyes; and we hereby require all major-generals, colonells, and other inferiour officers and ſouldiers under you, to obſerve and obey you as commander in chief of the forces of the ſaid counties. And you are to bee obedient to ſuch orders as you ſhall receive from us. For all which this our commiſſion ſhall bee your ſufficient warrant, to continue in force, till wee ſhall ſignify our pleaſure to the contrary. Given at our court at Bruxelles, this 9th day of Auguſt, 1659, in the eleventh year of our reigne. And whereas it hath ſo happened, that through the troubles and imprisonment, wherewith the uſurped powers of thoſe times perſecuted the ſaid Lord Delamer for his loyalty to us and our intereſt, the ſaid commiſſion of the ſaid 22d of July is miſcarried and loſt; we have thought fit, aſwell in remembrance of the early and eminent endeavours, of the ſaid Lord Delamer for our reſtauration, of which we will ever retaine a very particular ſence; as more eſpecially in juſtification of him, for what hee did and acted in order to our happy reſtauration and returne, whereſoever the ſame ſhall be neceſſary, hereby to declare, That the ſame was done, acted, and commanded by him, in vertue of our ſaid commiſſion, under our ſignet and ſigne manuall of the 22d day of July, in the 11th year of our reigne; which we do well remember to have been iſſued to that purpoſe, and whereof the copy or entry hath ſince appeared to us, among the papers of the late Sir Edward Nicholas, then our principall ſecretary of ſtate. Whereof we have thought fit to give this declaration, and will that the ſame doe ſerve not onely for the juſtification and indemnity of the ſaid Lord Delamer's actings and doings at that time; but alſo that it bee and remaine, as a marke of the particular eſteeme we have of the merit of his ſervice, in that ſo important a conjuncture. Given under our ſignet and ſigne manuall at our court at Whitehall, the 21ſt day of March, in the 22d yeare of our reigne."

By his majeſty's command,

Arlington.

To this Sir George Booth, his ſaid majeſty alſo wrote a letter, bearing date at Columbe, December 16, 1659; and another, (all of his majeſty's own hand-writing) bearing date at Bruffells, April 2, 1660, acknowledging his great obligations to the ſaid Sir George Booth, for his endeavours to ſerve him, with aſſurances of his conſideration of him and his for the ſame. The originals being as follows, viz.

A letter from king Charles II. to Sir George Booth.

Columbe, 16th Decemb. 1659.

"YOUR handsome and conſiderable engagement, gave me not onely full ſatisfaction for your former actions, but a tender ſence of your particular miſfortune; and if it pleaſe God to bleſſe me, neither you nor yours ſhall have cauſe to repent it.

"Soe ſignall a testimony as you have lately given of your inclinations to me, makes me very willing to encourage the generous retournes of miſſed perſons, and to aſſure them they can noe ſooner acknowledge their error, then I ſhall ſhew a valed and eſteem for them. Your good friend my Lord Mordaunt, has given me a particular account of all your proceedings, by which I cleerly find you intended my reſtoration, and my kingdoms tranquillitie; and this induces me to give you the aſſurance of my being,

Your very affectionate Friend,

CHARLES R.

A letter from king Charles II. to George Booth.

Bruffelles, 2 Aprill, 1660.

"I am very willing to write by this honeſt bearer to you, not only that you may know that I am very well ſatisfied in his integrity and affection for my ſervice, but likewise that I may tell you, he hath upon all occaſions repreſented you, your courage and zeal for my intereſt, with that juſtice and kindeſſe he ought to do: which I rather mention, becauſe, in this time of licence and reproach, there are too many who take delight in traducing

all men : and I doubt not this person will be a good instrument, to preserve a good understanding between all my friends in those partes, and that you will give him credit accordingly. There is no person of whose affection I have more confidence than of yours, and I hope the time is at hande that I may publish to all men how much I owe you ; and that you and your friends will concur with me in such a way, that the peace and happiness of the nation may be established upon those good foundations, as may make it lasting and perpetuall ; which is heartily pray'd for, and shall be as heartily endeavour'd by,

Your affectionate frinde,

CHARLES R.

This Sir George Booth (having been defeated in his attempts for the king's service, which however unsuccessful in him, were esteemed to be what opened the way for those measures, which afterwards brought about his majesty's happy restoration) was committed close prisoner to the Tower of London, by the then usurping powers, where he continued a considerable time, until the secluded members of the house of commons were restored to their seats in parliament.

He was the first of the twelve members, sent by the house of commons, in May 1660, to carry to king Charles II. the answer of that house to his majesty's letter, as appears by the journal of the house of commons, May 7, 1660. And on Monday, July 13, 1660, the house of commons ordered, That the sum of ten thousand pounds be conferred on him, as a mark of respect for his eminent services, and great sufferings for the publick ; and that the same be charged upon the excise in course, and paid unto the said Sir George Booth and his assigns. To which, on Thursday, August 2, 1660, that house sent to desire the concurrence of the lords ; and by a message from the lords on Friday, August 3, 1660, their lordships did concur therein, as by the journal of the house of commons appears. Of which gift there is this singular to be observed, That the first motion was for twenty thousand pounds, which the house was about to agree to, had not Sir George Booth himself, in his place, requested of the house, that it might be no more than ten ; declaring, that what he had acted, was purely with intention of serving his king and country, as became him in duty to do, without view of any reward. And so ready was the court to take him at his word, that excepting this ten thousand pounds, which was the gift of the two houses of parliament ; and save that the king gave him liberty to propose six gentlemen to receive the honour of knighthood, and two others to have the dignity of baronets conferred on them ; this was the only recompence made to him by that king, for all his sufferings and services, except, that by letters patent bearing date at Westminster, April 20, 13 Charles II. he was, in consideration of his great services towards his majesty's restoration, created baron Delemere of Dunham-Massey, to hold to him and the heirs male of his body. So frugal a method had the crown, at that time, of rewarding services. On the 30th of July 1660, he was constituted custos rotulorum for the county of Cheshire, and so continued till May 30, 1673, when he resigned it to Henry, his son and heir. After this, he not being studious to please the court in those measures, which were taken in some parts of that reign, both he and his family were soon afterwards disregarded by the king, and ill used by his successor king James II. as will be seen.

This George, lord Delemere, married two wives : first, Catherine Clinton, daughter and coheir to Theophilus, earl of Lincoln, who died in childhood, and was buried at Bowdon, August 5, 1643, by whom he had issue one daughter, Vere, born July 19, 1643, and died unmarried, November 14, 1717, at Canbury-house, in the 74th year of her age, and was buried in Islington church, in the county of Middlesex, the 23d of the same month. His second wife was Elizabeth Grey, eldest daughter of Henry, earl of Stamford, by whom he had issue seven sons and five daughters :

1. William Booth, born April 17, 1648, a child of very promising hopes, but died young, January 20, 1661.
2. Henry Booth, of whom hereafter.
3. Charles Booth, died in France unmarried.
4. George Booth, who married Lucy, daughter of the right honourable Robert Robartes, Esq; commonly called lord viscount Bodmin, son and heir apparent to John, earl of Radnor ; and was sister to Charles Bodvile, earl of Radnor : by her this George had issue one son named Charles-Henry, who died unmarried, and was, together with his father and mother, buried in a vault in St. Paul's church, London.
5. Robert Booth, father of the present lord Delemere.
6. Cecil Booth, who dying unmarried, was interred at Wilmslowe, in the county of Chester, May 19, 1711, in a chapel adjoining to the chancel of that church, belonging to this family.
7. Nevil Booth, who died unmarried, in his return from a voyage to the East Indies in the year 1685.

The daughters of this lord Delemere were,

1. Elizabeth, married to Edward Conway, earl of Conway, then principal secretary of state.
2. Anne, died unmarried.
3. Jane, died unmarried.
4. Diana, wife to Sir Ralph Delavall, of Seaton-Delavall, in the county of Northumberland, baronet (which title is extinct) afterwards to Sir Edward Blacket, of Newby, in the county of York, baronet, by whom he had no issue.
5. Sophia, who died very young.

This George, lord Delemere, departed this life at Dunham-Massey, in the sixty-third year of his age, on August 8, 1684, and was buried in a very splendid manner, suitable to his rank, at Bowdon, in the burial vault of the family, on September 9 following ; Elizabeth his lady surviving him, who dying January 4, 1690, was interred in the same vault with her lord.

We come now to,

(First Earl) HENRY BOOTH, lord Delemere, the second son of the said George, lord Delemere, who, on the death of William, his elder brother, became the eldest son and heir, and succeeded to the honour in the year 1684, and took his seat in the house of peers, May 19, 1685. He had, in the life-time of his father, been custos rotulorum, and also knight of the shire for the county of Chester in several parliaments, in the reign of king

Charles II. wherein he always acted with great zeal for the interest of his country, and had been particularly warm for the passing the famous bill of exclusion; for which that great and good man the lord Russell, the morning of his going to be executed, sent him a very kind message of his respects for him: and having thereby incurred the displeasure of the then duke of York, he was before the death of king Charles II. committed close prisoner to the Tower of London; but after several months strict confinement, was released. Yet soon after king James's accession to the throne, he was again committed close prisoner there; and being after some time admitted to bail, was quickly afterwards taken up again, and committed a third time close prisoner to the Tower, on a false accusation of high treason. On Thursday January 14, 1685 (having but the day before compleated the thirty-fourth year of his age) he was, in a court erected in Westminster-hall (as usual in case of trials of peers) tried for high-treason, before the lord chancellor Jeffreys, his particular enemy, constituted lord high steward on that occasion. And altho' the parliament was then actually existing by prorogation, he was not tried by the whole house of peers, but a select number of twenty-seven peers summoned by the lord high steward for that purpose, viz. Laurence, earl of Rochester, lord high treasurer of England; Robert, earl of Sunderland, lord president of his majesty's privy council; Henry, duke of Norfolk, earl marshal of England; Charles, duke of Somerset; Henry, duke of Grafton; Henry, duke of Beaufort, lord president of Wales; John, earl of Mulgrave, lord chamberlain of his majesty's household; Aubrey, earl of Oxford; Charles, earl of Shrewsbury; Theophilus, earl of Huntingdon; Thomas, earl of Pembroke; John, earl of Bridgewater; Henry, earl of Peterborough; Robert, earl of Scarisdale; William, earl of Craven; Louis, earl of Feverham; George, earl of Berkeley; Daniel, earl of Nottingham; Thomas, earl of Plymouth; Thomas, viscount Falconberge; Francis, viscount Newport, treasurer of his majesty's household; Robert, lord Ferrers; Vere Effex, lord Cromwell; William, lord Maynard, comptroller of his majesty's household; George, lord Dartmouth, master general of his majesty's ordnance; Sidney, lord Godolphin, and John, lord Churchill: three others, viz. James, duke of Ormond, lord steward of his majesty's household; Christopher, duke of Albemarle; and Richard, earl of Burlington; who were likewise summoned, not appearing. At which trial, his lordship made so full and clear a defence, that he was, by all those peers his judges, who gave their voices seriatim, unanimously acquitted. Happy for him, that his father was then dead, whereby he was, of right, to be tried by his peers; and not by such a jury of commoners, as in those times that worthy lord Russell, and many more great patriots, had felt the dire effects of!

After this, he lived retired at his seat at Dunham-Massey, not less beloved by his countrymen for the hardships he had undergone from the court, until the happy revolution; when on intelligence of the prince of Orange's design of coming, he, thro' the desire of delivering his country from popery and arbitrary power, and perhaps not without some remembrance of the ill usage he had received from king James, raised, in a very few days, a great force in Cheshire and Lancashire, and therewith marched to join that prince. His lordship, on his first appearance in arms, among other reasons, made this declaration: "I am of opinion, that when the nation is delivered, it must be by force or miracle. It would be a great presumption to expect the latter; and therefore our deliverance must be by force; and I hope this is time for it, &c." On his march, he received the following letter from the prince of Orange.

Hindon, the 2d of December, 1688.

My LORD,

"I have heard so worthy a character of you, that I am heartily glad to find you so frankly embarked in the same design with me; and you may depend on me to show you all the kindness in my power. If your occasions will allow of it, I shall be glad to see you at Hungerford next Friday night; but you must send me notice of your coming the night before your arrival, that I may direct quarters for you and your troops, and that my out-guards may let you pass to me.

I am your most affectionate friend,

To the lord Delemer

at Gloucester.

On the prince of Orange's arrival at Windsor, in his approach toward London, this lord Delemer, together with the marquis of Halifax, and the earl of Shrewsbury, were on the 17th of December, 1688, sent by that prince with a message to king James, to remove from Whitehall; which message, they being introduced into his majesty's bed-chamber by the earl of Middleton, secretary of state, delivered at one o'clock in the morning to the king, who was then in bed. A remarkable instance of the vicissitudes of fortune, or rather the appointments of an all-ruling providence, that the king, who had been a spectator of the lord Delemer's standing at the bar upon trial for life, for a pretended high-treason, should, within less than three years, see that lord come to his bedside to bid him depart his royal palace: a warning to all to use their prosperity in such manner, as may best fit them for unforeseen adversities; remembering that on this side the grave, no man can tell what is to befall him! And such was the use this lord made thereof, whatever temptation it might be to him, to have then shewn an insulting resentment; for he comported himself with so much respect and decency towards that then unhappy prince, and so sensible was that king of his civility to him on this occasion, that after his retirement into France, he said, "The lord Delemer, whom he had used ill, had then treated him with much more regard than the other two lords, to whom he had been kind, and from whom he might better have expected it."

Out of the forces which were raised by this lord to join the prince of Orange, a regiment of horse was afterwards formed, and the command thereof for some time committed to him as colonel thereof; which regiment served in Ireland during the war in that kingdom.

This Henry, lord Delemer, was on the 13th of February, 1688, sworn a privy-counsellor, and on on April 9, 1689, made chancellor and under-treasurer of the exchequer; also on the 12th of the same month, made lord-lieutenant of the county of Chester, and of the city of Chester, and county thereof: and on July 9 custos rotulorum of the said county: which last offices, together with that of privy-counsellor, he enjoyed for life; but, as to the others, he continued in them for about a year only. For what reasons he so soon lost the favour of a prince, whose advancement to the throne he had been so instrumental in, is not for us to pretend to give any account of: but he is thus characterized in a noted poem of that time (according to Collins):

A noble, but ungovernable fire,
(Such as the hero's) did his breast inspire.
Fit to assist to pull a tyrant down;
But not to please a prince that mounts the throne.
Impatient of oppression, still he stood
His country's mounds against th' invading flood.

However, it was not thought advisable to put this lord out of employment in a disobliging manner; and therefore he was by letters-patent, bearing date at Westminster. April 17, 1690, 2 William and Mary, created earl of Warrington, in the county of Lancaster, to hold to him and the heirs-males of his body, for his great services in raising and bringing great forces to his majesty, to rescue his country and religion from tyranny and popery, as the preamble of the patent expresseth it: and had likewise for the better support of that dignity, a pension of two thousand pounds per annum granted to him; the which having been paid to him only for the first half year, was afterwards suffered to run in arrear, and now remains stated amongst the rest of king William's debts, in a list of them drawn up at the command of queen Anne. Thus this lord was recompensed for serving a government, built on foundations, which he had so severely suffered for his zealously appearing a steady supporter of, and adherent to. His lordship shewed a concern for the legal establishment, by writing a defence of William, lord Russell, tried for high-treason, July 13, 1683, printed with this title, "The late lord Russell's Case, with observations upon it." Written by the right honourable Henry, lord de la Mere: wherein his lordship, with great weight and judgment, fully proves lord Russell could not be guilty of the indictment he was tried on.

He married Mary, sole daughter and heir to Sir James Langham, of Cottesbrooke, in the county of Northampton, knight, and baronet; a lady of most clear judgment, very exemplary piety, great virtue, extensive charity, and adorned with all commendable qualities becoming her sex and station. But, to the unspeakable loss of this family, she was too early taken hence to receive the reward of her labours, departing this life at Dunham-Massey, on Monday March 23, 1690, in the thirty-seventh year of her age; whose body was on Monday April 6, 1691, deposited in the burial-place of this family, in the parish church of Bowdon; and was afterwards, by the peculiar care and inspection of her son, who honoured her memory, there placed, according to her desire, between the remains of her lord, and of her father-in-law, the said George, lord Delemere.

The said Henry earl of Warrington by her had two daughters,

1. Elizabeth, married to Thomas Delves, esquire, then son and heir apparent to Sir Thomas Delves, of Dodington, in the county of Chester, baronet; and dying without issue, in 1697, was buried in Widenbury church, in the county of Chester, the burial-place of her said husband's family.

2. Mary, wife to the honourable Russell Robartes, esquire, who by her had issue the right honourable Henry, last earl of Radnor of that family.

Also four sons,

1. James Booth, who died an infant, and was interred at London.

2. George Booth, succeeded his father.

3. Langham Booth, born June 8, 1684, of whom it is to be observed, that he was begotten in the Tower of London, when his father was there confined close prisoner, for a pretended high-treason, the first of the three times already spoken of: which remarkable beginning seemed to presage something extraordinary to follow; nor did he frustrate such expectations: for being endowed with a solid unbiaised judgment, quickness of parts, and an honourable uprightness of mind, he shewed an early disposition to be useful in his generation, for the service of his country; and being elected into parliament by the county of Chester, as early as by law he was capable of; and continuing in that station, with very little intermission, until the time of his death, he acted therein, and as a justice of peace in his county, with an unblemished reputation, and an uncorrupted integrity: a pattern worthy of imitation, in this and all times! He was a groom of the bed-chamber to king George II. when prince of Wales; which place he held till his death, dying at the Bath, unmarried, in the 40th year of his age, on Monday May 12, 1724, and was interred, pursuant to his own desire, in the family burial-place in Bowdon-church, near the ashes of his father and mother: a general loss to his country, and a fatal blow to his family, in being so early bereaved of so valuable a branch thereof.

4. Henry Booth, born July 17, 1687, was a student in the Temple, till in the fatal South-sea year, confiding in the fidelity of some villainous harpies of Exchange-ally, he was so inconvenienced in his circumstances, as to retire to Rotterdam, in Holland, where he lived in great esteem, until the 2d day of February, 1726, when he died unmarried, in the 40th year of his age; greatly regretted by all who knew him, and an inexpressible loss to his family, who best knew how to value him. He was a man of untainted virtue and true piety; and departed in peace, praying for his persecutors. His earthly remains rest in a vault in the great church of Rotterdam.

The said Henry, earl of Warrington, having survived his lady almost three years, died at London on January 2, 1693, having well nigh completed the forty-second year of his age; and was interred in the family-vault in Bowdon church, in the county of Chester, on Sunday the 14th day of the same January; that very day of the month which, eight years before, had been the day of his afore-mentioned trial, and which he every year commemorated with acts of devotion and charity; and which now eight years afterwards became a day doubly memorable to his posterity.

His son and successor George Booth, earl of Warrington, out of his great regard to their memory, has erected a beautiful monument over the burial-vault of this noble family, in the parish church of Bowdon, on which are the following inscriptions:

Which,
(Second Earl) GEORGE BOOTH, was born on Sunday the 2d day of May, 1675, at Meyre-Hall, in Cheshire; he and his two younger brothers, the said Langham, and Henry, being all born on the same day of the week, and in the same room; and did not less resemble each other in brotherly love and affection. He married Mary, the elder of the two daughters and coheirs of John Olbury, of London, merchant, by Mary his wife, daughter and coheir to Thomas Bohun, or Boone, or Mount-Boone, near Dartmouth, in the county of Devonshire, esquire, descended from the Bohuns, the antient earls of Hereford; and by her, who died at Dunham Massey, in April 1740, had issue an only child, Mary, born 1704, married in 1736, to Henry, earl of Stamford.

His lordship departed this life on the 2d of August, 1758, when the earldom of Warrington became extinct, and the barony Delemer devolved upon,

(Fourth and Present Lord) NATHANIEL BOOTH, third, but only surviving son of Robert Booth, the the fifth son of George Booth, first baron De-mer: which

ROBERT BOOTH, 1666, was collated archdeacon of Durham in 1691, and installed dean of Bristol, June 20, 1708. This gentleman, who died at Bristol, on the 8th of August, 1730, married two wives: first Anne, daughter of Sir Robert Booth, chief justice of the Common-pleas in Ireland, by whom he had a son Henry, who died without issue; secondly, Mary, daughter of Thomas Hales, of Howlets, in Kent, by whom he had issue four daughters.

1. Mary, married to Charlton Thrupp, of London, merchant. She died February 4, 1741.
2. Elizabeth, died unmarried.
3. Vere, married to George Tyndale, of Bathford, Somersêthshire, son of Thomas Tyndale, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of George Booth, of Chester, esquire.

4. Catherine, died unmarried.

Also five sons,

1. Robert Booth, who was called to the bar. He died in 1733, being then member of parliament for Bodmin, in Cornwall.

2. George Booth, educated first at the collegiate school at Westminster, afterwards at Christ church, Oxford, took holy orders. He departed this life in 1726.

3. Edward Booth was also called to the bar, but died unmarried in June 1729.

4. Nathaniel Booth, the present peer.

5. William Booth, who died young.

The father of these children was interred in the cathedral church-yard at Bristol, where the following lines, descriptive as they are of superior excellence, present us with a very inadequate idea of the noble personages therein mentioned :

Nat A D 1666 Ob A D 1730

Dec: Briftol A D 1708.

His lordship was born June 9, 1709, and on April 26, 1743, married Margaret, daughter of Richard Jones, of Ramsbury manor, Wiltshire, esquire, by whom he has had issue a daughter, Elizabeth, born February 28, 1743-4, who died January 9, 1765, and two sons,

1. George Booth, born March 1, 1744-5, who died September 3, 1757.

2. Henry Booth, born October 4, 1747, who died December 8, 1748.

The remains of these three children are deposited in a vault in Hampstead church yard, Middlesex, over which is erected a handsome marble monument. On the one side is inscribed the young lady's name, time of her decease, &c. as above, with the following pathetic lines :

Heav'nward directed all her days,
Her life one act of pray'r and praise,
With every milder grace inspir'd,
To make her lov'd, esteem'd, admir'd,
Crown'd with a cheerfulness that shew'd
How pure the source from whence it flow'd.

Such was the maid — when in her bloom,
Finding th' appointed time was come,
To sleep she sunk, without a sigh;
The faint may sleep, but cannot die.

On the other side the names of the two sons, their decease, &c. attended by an epitaph no less ingenious than the other :

Rest, undisturb'd, ye much lamented pair,
The smiling infant, and the rising heir :
Ah ! what avails it that the blossom's shoot
In early prospect of maturer fruit,
If death's chill hand shall nip their infant bloom,
And wither all their honours in the tomb.
Yet weep not——if in life's allotted share
Swift fled their youth——they knew not age's care.

ARUNDEL,

ARUNDEL, Baron ARUNDEL of TRERICE.

THE first lineal ancestor we find in the most accurate genealogies of this noble family, is

RANDELL ARUNDEL, who married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of John Steward. Their son,

RALPH ARUNDEL, was living in the 31st of Edward III. and married Jane, daughter and heir of Michael Trerice. They had issue a daughter, Jane, married to Robert Trevanion; and two sons, Nicholas and Thomas: of which the eldest,

NICHOLAS ARUNDEL, married Elizabeth, daughter of John, and sister and coheir of Martin Pellocher, and had issue,

Sir JOHN ARUNDEL, of Trerice, whose wife Joan, daughter and heir of John Durant, bore to him two sons, Nicholas and Richard; the eldest,

NICHOLAS ARUNDELL, married Jane, daughter of Edward St. John, esquire, and had issue four daughters, Amy, Alice, Elizabeth, and Jane: also four sons, John, Nicholas, Alexander, and Leonard. The eldest,

Sir JOHN ARUNDEL, was sheriff of Cornwall in 1471, and being forewarned, as Carew writes in his Survey of Cornwall, that he should be slain on the sands, he forsook his house at Elford, as too maritime, and removed himself to Trerice, his more inland habitation, in Cornwall; but he did not escape his fate, for being sheriff of Cornwall in that year, and the earl of Oxford surprising Mount Michael, for the house of Lancaster, he had the king's commands, by his office, to endeavour the reducing of it, and lost his life, in a skirmish, on the sands thereabouts.

He was twice married; first to Margaret, daughter of Sir Hugh Courtenay, knight, by whom he had two sons, Robert and Walter, who died young: secondly to Anne, daughter of Sir Walter Moyle, knight, who also bore to him two sons, John and Robert, of which the eldest,

Sir JOHN ARUNDEL, was sheriff of Cornwall, 1524. He married Joan, daughter of Thomas Greenvil, esquire, and had issue an only son,

Sir JOHN ARUNDEL, who was knighted at the battle of the Spurs, 1513. He rendered himself very famous, being vice-admiral to king Henry VII. and Henry VIII. when encountering Duncan Campbell, (the great Scottish pirate) after a short fight at sea, he took him prisoner.

He was twice married; first to Mary, daughter and coheir of John Bevil, of Garnache, in Cornwall, by whom he had issue three daughters, Elizabeth, married to Robert Tridenham; Catherine, married to Richard Prideux, of Thewborough; and Jane, married to William Wall, esquire: also a son, Roger. He married, secondly, Julian, daughter, of James Eresby, and widow of — Gurlyn, by whom he had issue five daughters, 1. Margaret, married to Robert Breket, esquire; 2. Grace, to John Nance, esquire; 3. Margery, to — Dunham, esquire; 4. Mary; and 5. Jane.

Also a son and heir,

JOHN ARUNDEL, who married first Catherine, daughter and coheir of John Cofworth, by whom he had issue four daughters,

1. Mary, married to Oliver Dynham, esquire;
2. Dorothy, married to Edward Cofworth, esquire;
3. Julian, to Richard Carew, of Anthony, in Cornwall;
4. Alice, to Henry Sornaster, of Painsford, esquire.

By his second wife, Gertrude, daughter of Robert Dennis, of Holcomb, esquire, he had John, his son and heir, and Thomas; also two daughters, Ann and Catherine; the former married to William Cornfew, of Bucelesly, the latter to John St. Aubyn, esquire: and writing himself John Arundel, of Trerice, in Cornwall, he made his will September 14, in 22 Elizabeth, and therein orders his body to be buried in the parish church of St. Newbyn, or such other place as shall be thought best by his executors, and touching the disposition of his manors, lands, &c. late the inheritance of Sir John Arundel of Trerice, his father, lying in the counties of Somerset, Dorset, Devon, and Cornwall, he bequeaths two parts to his son, John Arundel, and his heirs, when he shall accomplish the age of 21 years, or to such other his next heir male of the full age of 21 years; and if such heir should happen to die without issue, then to descend to his daughters, Anne, and Catharine, by Gertrude, his wife. He bequeaths to his said son, John Arundel, his chain of gold, with all his arras and tapestry hangings. He further bequeaths legacies to Christopher Arundel, son of Robert Arundel, esq; and John and William, Robert and Richard, other of the sons of the said Robert; and to Julian, wife of Richard Carew, of Anthony; also to Jaqueth, Blanch, and Mary, daughters of the said Robert. And constitutes William Viell, Richard Carew, John Dynham, John Naunce, and Robert Arundel, executors; and ordains Sir John Arundel of Lanhern, knt. Sir John Chichester, knt. Sir Richard Greenvil, knt. Francis Godolphin, Thomas St. Aubyn, and Thomas Cofworth, esqrs. with John Kymphthorne, gent. overseers of his will. The probate is dated Nov. 26, 1580, whereby it is probable he died in that year. Gertrude, his second wife, survived him, and had to her second husband Edward Morley, esq;

Which,

JOHN ARUNDEL, of Trerice, esq; his said son, in in 39 Eliz. was returned one of the members for St. Michael in Cornwall, to the parliament then held; and was knight of the shire for the county of Cornwall, in the last parliament of queen Elizabeth, as also in that which met at Westminster in the 18th year of king James I. and served for the borough of St. Maws, in 21 James I.

In the reign of king Charles the first, he served for the borough of Tregony; and two of his sons were also with him in parliament. On the breaking out of the rebellion, he took arms for the king, together with four of his sons; whereof two of them, John and William, lost their lives. He most valiantly held out the castle of Pendennis, which was long besieged both by sea and land, till the very end of those unhappy wars; being, as lord Clarendon relates, then near fourscore years of age, and of one of the best estates and interests in the county of Cornwall. Whitlock gives an account, that on Aug. 31, 1646, letters came to the parliament of the surrender of Pendennis castle, and in it were colonel Arundel the governor, four knights, five colonels, and divers others of quality. That they had store of arms, but little provision. He married Mary, daughter of George Carey, of Clovelly, in the county of Devon, esq; by whom he had issue Richard, John, William, Francis, Agnes, and Mary, married first to — Trevanion, secondly, to Sir John Arundel, of Langherne.

(First Lord) RICHARD ARUNDEL, the eldest son, was a member for Lestwithiel in the two last parliaments of king Charles I. and, personally attending that king in his army, was one of the commanders in the first battle he had with those rebels near Kineton, in Warwickshire, in which he gave signal proofs of his courage and conduct; likewise, in the battle at Lansdown, in Somersetshire, and other battles and tedious sieges; wherein he received many wounds, and acquired the reputation of a stout and diligent officer. And though at length, through the prevalency of those rebels, he lost his whole estate, yet he did not at all desert his majesty's interest: wherefore, in consideration of these his great actions and sufferings, and in memory of his father's services, he was, by letters patent, bearing date at Westminster, March 23, in the 16th year of the reign of king Charles II. advanced to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Arundel of Trerice, and to the heirs male of his body. He married Gertrude, daughter to Sir James Bagg, of Saltham, in the county of Devon, knight, and widow of Sir Nicholas Slanning, of Bickley, knight, by whom he had issue two sons,

1. John Arundel, who died in his childhood.
2. John Arundel, who succeeded him.

His lordship died 1688, and was succeeded by his only surviving son,

(Second Lord) JOHN ARUNDEL, who married 1st Margaret, daughter and sole heir to Sir John Acland, of Columb-John, in the county of Devon, knight, by whom he had issue, John Arundel, his son and heir.

Also a daughter,

Gertrude, married to Peter Whitcomb, of Essex; 2dly, to Sir Bennet Hoskins, of Harwood, in Herefordshire, baronet.

He married secondly, Barbara, daughter to Sir Henry Slingsby, of Scriven, in the county of York, baronet, and relict of Sir Richard Maleverer, of Alerton-Maleverer, in the county of York, by whom he had issue one son, Richard Arundel, member of parliament for the borough of Knaresborough, in Yorkshire, who was appointed surveyor of his majesty's works, May 2, 1726; in which he was continued by his late majesty, September 29, 1727; and on June 21, 1737, was appointed master and warden of his majesty's mints: also, on December 25, 1744, appointed one of the commissioners for executing the office of treasurer of his majesty's exchequer. He was in 1749 appointed clerk of the Pipe for life, and died in 1759. He was married on September 2, 1732, to Frances Manners, sister to the present duke of Rutland.

This John, lord Arundel, departed this life September 27, 1697, and was succeeded by his son and heir, (Third Lord) JOHN ARUNDEL, who took his seat in the house of peers, February 10, 1700, and married Jane, daughter of William Beaw, D. D. bishop of Landaff, and had issue two sons,

1. John Arundel, died young.
2. John Arundel, his successor.

And dying September 24, 1706, was succeeded by his son, (Fourth and present Lord) JOHN ARUNDEL, who in 1722, married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Wentworth, of Ashby Puerorum, in Lincolnshire, and sister of Thomas Wentworth, earl of Stafford, but has no issue.

C R A V E N, Baron C R A V E N.

THE ancestry of this noble family were seated at Appletreewick, in Craven, in the county of York; from which circumstance we cannot be at a loss how to account for the origin of their surname. From this place many branches of this ancient house issued forth, and still retaining their surname of Craven, settled in different parts of the kingdom. That branch with which we are immediately concerned, claims descent from

JOHN CRAVEN, who lived at Appletreewick aforesaid, in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. By his wife, whose maiden name was Simpson, he had issue three sons,

1. Henry Craven, ancestor to four lords Craven, as will be seen.
2. William Craven, grandfather to William, earl of Craven, and John, baron Craven, &c.
3. Anthony Craven.

We must begin with the second son,

WILLIAM CRAVEN, who marrying Beatrix, daughter of John Hunter, had an only son,

Sir WILLIAM CRAVEN, who served the office of sheriff in the city of London, in the 42d of queen Elizabeth, and lord mayor of that city, 1611, 9 James I. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Whitmore, of London, esquire, and had issue two daughters, Mary, the wife of Thomas, lord Coventry; and Elizabeth, the wife of Percy Herbert, lord Powis: and three sons,

1. William Craven, his heir.
2. John Craven, who was high in the esteem of king Charles I. inasmuch that by letters patent, bearing dated at Oxford, March 21, 1642, in the 18th year of his reign, his majesty conferred upon him the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Craven, of Ryton, in Shropshire. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William, lord Spencer, but died without issue.
3. Thomas Craven, died without issue.

The eldest of these brothers,

(First Baron, and only Earl) WILLIAM CRAVEN, was much affected with military exercises from his youth, and signalized himself in Germany, and in the Netherlands, under Henry, prince of Orange. In which valiant adventures he gained such honour, that, on his return, he was first knighted at Newmarket, March 4, 1626, and, in the same month and year, was deservedly raised to the degree and dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Craven, of Hampsted-Marshall, in the county of Berks, by letters patent bearing date March 12, 2 Charles I. with remainder, for want of issue male of his own body, to John Craven, and Thomas Craven, his brothers, successively, and the heirs male of their bodies.

In 1631, he was one of the commanders of those forces sent to the assistance of that great hero, Gustavus, king of Sweden, then in arms in Germany, in defence of the protestants. And when that monarch, with the king of Bohemia, marched out of Bavaria, in February 1632, and came before the strong castle of Crutzenack, the English volunteers, by their bravery in three assaults, obliged the garrison to surrender; and the capitulation was signed by William, lord Craven, and colonel Boulin, quarter-master-general of the king of Sweden's army. The lord Craven was wounded in the assaults, and, on his coming into the king of Sweden's presence, was told by him, "He adventured so desperately, he bid his younger brother fair play for his estate."

He was afterwards sent to the assistance of the elector Palatine, who having besieged Limegea in the year 1637, a battle ensued; wherein, the emperor's army being victorious, the elector, with difficulty, escaped by flight; and his brother prince Rupert, and the lord Craven, were taken prisoners.

As soon as his lordship obtained his liberty, he went into the service of the states of Holland, under the prince of Orange, where he resided without coming to England for above twenty years, till the restoration of king Charles II. But though he did not personally serve king Charles I. against his rebellious subjects, yet he manifested his loyalty in sending him divers considerable supplies, as also to king Charles II. in his greatest necessities; as the king himself acknowledged after his restoration, when by his letters patent, bearing date March 16, 16 Charles II. he advanced him to higher degrees of honour, viz. to the title of viscount Craven, of Uffington, in the same county of Berks, and earl Craven, of Craven, in the county of York.

And, by reason that both his brothers were then dead without issue, the title of lord Craven of Hampsted-Marshall was then limited, for want of issue male of his own body lawfully begotten, to Sir William Craven, of Lenchwike, in the county of Worcester, knight, and to the heirs male of his body; and, for default of such issue, to Sir Anthony Craven, knight, brother to the same Sir William, and to the issue male of his body.

How great a sufferer his lordship was for his adherence to king Charles the second, is evident from a printed case in those times, setting forth the great injustice done him by the parliament of England, in confiscating his estate. By which it appears, that, in the year 1650, one Falconer deposed, That the lord Craven did promote a petition, wherein several persons "did desire to be entertained to serve the king of Scots against the parliament of England, by the name of barbarous and inhuman rebels."

And col. Hugh Reyly deposed Feb. 10, 1650,

"That, during the late treaty at Breda, this informant did oftentimes see the lord Craven with the now king of Scots, in his bed-chamber, and also walked abroad with him, there being no man more conversant with the king than he. That the said lord Craven, during the said treaty, did twice go to Rotterdam and Dunhagh, and back again, being employed; as was commonly reported at court there, by the said king. That the said lord Craven had a charge from the king to look to one Mrs. Barlow, who (as is reported, and he believes to be true) had a child by the king of Scots, born at Rotterdam; which he did: and, after the king was gone for Scotland, the said lord Craven took the child from her; for which she went to law with him, and recovered the child back again, as is reported.

Also captain Kitchingman deposed Feb. 20, 1650,

"That the said captain Thomas Kitchingman, in April and May 1650, saw the lord Craven several times with the king of Scots at Breda, and waiting upon the said king several times at his table at Breda. This informant also saw the earl of Oxford at the same time with the king of Scots at Breda, waiting upon the said king at his table; and saw the lord Craven and the earl of Oxford many times go into the withdrawing rooms after the said king. This informant also saw the lord Craven and the earl of Oxford, in the Bowling-alley in Breda castle, with the said king.

Thomas Kitchingman."

Whereupon, March the 16th, 1650, it was "Resolved by the parliament, That the lord Craven is an offender against the commonwealth of England, within the declaration of the 24th of August, 1649, intitled, A declaration of the commons assembled in parliament, declaring all persons who have served the parliament of England in Ireland, and have betrayed their trust, or have or shall adhere to, or aid and assist Charles Stewart, son to the late king, to be traitors and rebels.

"Resolved by the parliament, That the estate of the lord Craven be confiscated accordingly.

"Resolved, That the commissioners for compounding be impowered and required to seize and sequester all the estate real and personal, of the said lord Craven, and to receive the rents, issues, and profits thereof, to the use of the commonwealth."

Accordingly, his personal estate throughout all England (which was of no small value) was seized upon as confiscate, and sold; and much of it bought by members of that parliament, who condemned him unheard, and who probably had then in their eye the purchase of his estate; for some of them, ever after that vote of confiscation, violently pressed on the sale of his estate, procuring an act for it, which passed Aug. 3, 1652, and bought large possessions thereof at easy pennyworths.

The elector palatine wrote the following letter to his agent, to desire the states general to intercede with the parliament of England in the lord Craven's behalf; which, as it shews his lordship's services, must not be omitted.

"Our friendly service, &c. Forasmuch as we have given our faithful resident, Peter de Groot, a commission to propound unto your lordships on our behalf in a matter about the lord Craven; therefore it is our friendly request to your lordships, to grant him a courteous audience, and to give full credit to his message, and to be mindful of the said lord Craven in his affairs; in regard that he hath been many years in your service, and hath done much good service to us and our electoral family, and to hold him especially recommended; and we shall acknowledge such favour as though it were done to ourselves, and upon all occasions seek to requite herewith, &c. The 31st of May, 1651."

And the said resident delivered the following memorial:

"High and Mighty Lords,

"In pursuance of the verbal proposition made this day in your honourable assembly by his electoral highness, my lord and master, conform to his missive letter of the 1st of this month, in the business of my lord Craven, I have put in writing, and thereunto annexed the depositions made or contrived against the said lord Craven, the condemnation which followed thereon, the confiscation of his goods which rose upon it, the execution thereof decreed and partly done, with a confutation of the said depositions, and a demonstration of the nullities, as well as of the injustice committed in the said condemnation: that your honours, according to your accustomed goodness in relieving and assisting the oppressed, besides the merits of the person, and the earnest request of his electoral highness; especially considering the justness of the matter for redress of your credit, and the opportunity which is given you by occasion of the alliance with England now in hand; will be pleased to take such a course, as that the deponents may be punished as perjured calumniators, the condemnation wrongfully done be annulled, and my lord Craven be put again into the former possession and enjoyment of his rightful goods. The depositions are three in number; whereof the first is ridiculous, the other two utterly false: if they were supposed to be all true, I have in the margin confuted them to be frivolous, and confirmed the confutation with true certificates or attestations, so as the condemnation upon them cannot but be unjust. It is further void, because it is not applicable to the matter, considering the declaration whence it is formed (it only concerning those, who, falling to the king's side from the parliament's service, are declared for traitors and rebels) considering the person, who besides he never served the parliament, and so cannot have been either rebel or traitor: besides, that he never gave any such assistance or aid to the king; yea, is not charged therewith in his accusations, how false soever they be: also during all that time was out of the country, whom, according to the laws of England itself, a new law, made in his absence, cannot prejudice, except it appear that he had notice of it. And considering your honours, who, without a weakening of your power and honour, cannot suffer that a person, who is not only an inhabitant, but a sworn servant of this state, should be condemned in a country who are in mutual amity and correspondence with your lordships, for civilities and duty towards this state; and by orders of his highness, as general, done and performed amongst your honours, his lords and masters. All which being considered, your honours are intreated, that in respect of the matter, which is so just and important, amounting to about 150000 guilders per annum; in respect of the person, who, besides the twenty years service that he hath done this state, hath so bountifully distributed his means in this country; in respect of your honours own authority, who, according to the declaration thereanext, made about the persons of the English merchants at Rotterdam, do not permit that any of their inhabitants (I forbear to say sworn ones) be bound to another state without their knowledge and consent; and in respect of the special recommendation of his electoral highness; your honours would please to be so mindful of the said lord Craven and his business, that he may be put again into the full possession of his goods, so as he hath been formerly seized of them, by revocation, annulation, or otherwise of cancelling or avoiding the aforesaid condemnation, and the effect thereof: that your honours would be pleased to grant your special letters of recommendation for that purpose to the parliament, to request the ambassadors here for the like recommendation and endeavours: and, if need require, to make the same in your treaties with the ambassadors of England, as hath been deemed to be done in other matters of the like nature. Assuring your honours, that the said lord Craven shall be always ready to employ his said estate to the benefit or good of this country and her inhabitants; and that his electoral highness, besides the many other engagements which he is obliged to this state, shall also account this as particularly done to his person or family, and shall take hold of all opportunities for to shew his thankfulness therefore to this state and inhabitants."

But all the interest the lord Craven could make, both by the elector palatine and the states general, and the precedents and witnesses produced by his council, could not bring the parliament to reverse their judgment; whereby his lordship was kept out of his estate till the restoration of king Charles the second. It was offered to the parliament to prove Falconer's perjury; but on their refusal to be judges thereof, he was afterwards convicted for it in the court of upper bench (as it was then called) when it was proved by three witnesses, who read and signed the petition he swore to, that there were no such words in it as "barbarous and inhuman rebels," tho' Falconer himself often pressed those words might be put in, having, without doubt, his design on the lord Craven; and the original draught of that petition was produced in court, all of Falconer's hand writing, which he could not deny, wherein there was not the least mention of those words. Yet, on his single testimony, the lord Craven lost his estate; for what the other two witnesses, Reyly and Kitchingman, deposed, carried not treason, or cause of confiscation, along with it. However, these proceedings, and sale of the lord Craven's estate, never passed with the clear judgment of the parliament, but met with great and high opposition, dividing four times; when on the first it was carried by only a single vote, the second by two, the third by three, and the fourth time by four votes. And when the act for sale of his estate was put to the question, on the division of the house, there were twenty in the negative, and only twenty-three members in the affirmative, of whom nine contracted for near 5000*l.* per annum of the estate, as appeared by the books of Drury-house; besides what was bought in other men's names, for the use of members of that parliament, and those who were of the former parliament, which voted the confiscation of his estate.

King Charles therefore, on his restoration, taking into consideration his great losses in his service, created him an earl, as before-mentioned; and constituted him colonel of the regiment of foot-guards, called the Coldstream regiment. He was likewise of his privy-council, lord-lieutenant of the county of Middlesex, and of the borough of Southwark; and June 30, 1660, custos rotulorum of Berkshire. He was also high-steward of the university of Cambridge, one of the governors of the Charter-house, and one of the lords proprietors of the province of Carolina, in North-America.

And, Sir William Craven, of Lenchwike, dying, leaving only a daughter, Elizabeth, (after married to Theophilus Leigh, of Longborough, in the county of Gloucester, Esq.) he obtained a further grant, by other letters-patent, bearing date December 11, 17 Car. II. that the said title of lord Craven, of Hampstead-Marshall, should remain unto Sir William Craven, knight, (son of Sir Thomas Craven, brother to Sir Anthony before-mentioned) and to the heirs-male of his body for ever.

The earl of Craven continued in the esteem of king Charles the Second during the course of his reign; and Elizabeth, queen of Bohemia, the king's aunt, committed all her affairs to his lordship. When king James came to the crown, his lordship attended at his coronation, and for some time was in his favour, and was sworn of his privy-council; but at length having intimation, that the king would be pleased with the resignation of his commission, he said, "If they took away his regiment, they had as good take away his life, since he had nothing else to divert himself with."

On king William's accession to the crown, the earl being very aged, his regiment was bestowed on that gallant soldier, general Talmash, and the earl of Clare was constituted lord lieutenant of the county of Middlesex. But his lordship, to the time of his death, was ever ready to serve the publick, and was particularly famous for giving directions in extinguishing fires in the city of London and suburbs; of which he had so early intelligence, and was so ready to mount on horseback to assist with his presence, that it became a common saying, "His horse smelt a fire as soon as it happened."

His lordship, in his younger days, was one of the most accomplished gentlemen in Europe, an useful subject, charitable, abstemious as to himself, generous to others, familiar in his conversation, and was universally beloved. He died, unmarried, on the 9th of April, 1697, aged 88 years and 10 months, and was buried at Binley, near Coventry, April 20, following.

Whereupon the dignity of lord Craven of Hampstead-Marshall, according to the entail, devolved (by

(by the death of Sir Anthony Craven, of Spersholt, in Berks, in 1670, without issue) on William, grandson of Sir Thomas Craven, as it was limited in 17 Charles II. Which,

CLIFFORD, Baron CLIFFORD.

THIS younger branch of the Clifford family claims descent from Sir LEWIS CLIFFORD, third son of Roger, baron de Clifford (see Vol. II, p. 385.) and Maud, daughter of Thomas, de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick.

He was a knight in 31 Edward III. and received the king's command, together with Sir Donald Hefilrige and Sir Walter Mewes, to deliver to Thomas, earl of Kent, the custody of the fort and place of Cruyck, in Normandy. In 47 Edward III. he accompanied the duke of Lancaster in his expedition into France; and in 51 Edward III. when that duke, espousing Wickliff and his doctrine, had affronted the bishop of London, and thereupon the citizens rising beset the duke's house, called the Savoy, the princess of Wales sent three of her knights, whereof Sir Lewis Clifford was one, to intreat them to be reconciled to the duke:

to which they answered, "How, for the honour of the princess, they would obey, and with all reverence be ready to do whatever she should please to require."

He was chosen one of the knights companions of the most noble order of the Garter, before the 7th of Richard II. for then he was one of the twenty-four of that noble order, who, against the feast of St. George, had surcoats given them, by the king, of violet in grain. In 9 Richard II. he was commander in chief of the city of Carlisle, when the Scots and French attacked it; which he valiantly defended, and forced them to retire. In 13 Richard II. he signed, with the king, the peers, and other great men, a letter to the pope, dated May 26, 1390, complaining of the exorbitances and incroachments of the apostolical see. In 15 Richard II. he was, with the lord Percy and Sir Robert Biquet, sent ambassador to the king of France,

France, to declare to him the good affection of the king his master towards peace, and to appoint a place to treat thereof, which was concluded on to be at Amiens. In 19 Richard II. he was, with others, sent again on an embassy to France, to treat of a marriage between the lady Isabel, daughter to the French king, and the king of England.

He died in the 4th year of Henry IV. and is much taken notice of by our historians, for being seduced by those zealots of that time, called Lollards (amongst which he was one of the chief) but, being at length sensible of those schismatical tenets, he confessed his error to the archbishop of Canterbury, and did cordially repent, as is evident from those remarkable expressions in his last will and testament; a transcript whereof, for the satisfaction of the curious, we shall here recite:

"In nomine Patris, et Filii, et Spiritus Sancti. Amen. The sevententhe day of September, the yere of our Lord Jesu Christ, a thousand foure hundred and foure, I Lowys Clyfforth, fals and traytor to my Lord God, and to all the blessed company of Hevene, and unworthi to be clepyd a cristen man, make and ordeyne my testament and my last will in this manere. At the begynning I most unworthi and Goddis traytor recommaunde my wrechid and synfule soule hooly to the grace and to the grete mercy of the blessed Trynitye; and my wrechid careyne to be beryed in the ferthest corner of the chirche-zerd, in which pariche my wrechid soule departeth fro my body. And I prey and charge my survivors and myne executors, as they wollen answere to fore God, and as all myne hoolle trust in this matere is in him; that on my stinking careyne be neyther ley'd clothe of gold, ne of silk; but a black clothe, and a taper at myne hed, and another at my fete; ne stone ne other thing, whereby any man my witt where my stinking careyne liggeth. And to that chirche do myne executors all thingis, which owen duly in such caas to be don, without eny more cost saaf to pore men. And also I prey my survivors and myne executors, that eny dette that eny man kan axe me, by true title, that hit be payd. And yf eny man can trewly say, that I have don hym eny harme in body or in good, that ye make largely his gree, whyles the goodys wole stretch. And I wole also, that none of myne executors meddle or mynystrey eny thinge of my goodys withoutyn avyse and consent of my survivors, or sum of hem.

"Now first I bequethe to Sire Phylpe la Vache, knight, my masse-book, and my porhoos; and my book of tribulacion to my daughter his wyf.

"Et quicquid residuum fuerit omnium et singulorum bonorum et catallorum, superius seu inferius legatorum, do integrè et lego Philippo la Vache, Johanni Cheyne, et Thomæ Clanvow, militibus, libere sibi possidendum; ac pro libito voluntatis suæ, tanquam de bonis et catallis suis propriis inde disponendum et faciendum, absque contraditione, calumnia, seu perturbatione cujuscunque, pro me, vel nomine meo aliquo aliter inde faciendum. Hujus autem testamenti, ultimæ voluntatis meæ, facio, ordino, et constituo executores bonorum meorum, et administratores, Johannem Andrew, Johannem Carleton, Walterum Gaytone, et Thomam Barbowe: et ipsi Deum præ oculis habeatis, omnia singula præmissa faciant, et fideliter perimplcant, et exequantur, ad honorem Dei, et utilitatem populi sui, secundum dispositionem et concilium atque assensum supervisorum meorum, viz. Philippi la Vache, Johannis Cheyne, et Thomæ Clanvow, militum, vel alicujus eorum. In cujus rei testimonium huic præsentis testamenti, et ultimæ voluntatis meæ sigillum meum apposui. Dat. &c. die et anno superadictis."

Probat. 5 Dec. 1404. (6 H. IV.)

By his wife Eleanor, daughter of John, lord Delawar, he had issue a daughter, Eleanor, married to Sir Philip la Vache, knight of the Garter, and a son, WILLIAM CLIFFORD, who had to wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to Sir Arnold Savage, knight, and widow of Sir Reginald Cobham, knight. By her, who died, 1451, he had issue two sons, Lewis, and John, ancestor to the present lord Clifford, and departed this life in 16 Henry VI.

His eldest son, Lewis Clifford, died in the lifetime of his father, having married Anne, daughter of the lord Molins, by whom he had issue Alexander Clifford, of Holm, in Kent, who had to wife Margaret, daughter of Walter Colepeper, by whom he had issue two sons, Nicholas and Richard, from whom the Cliffords of the county of Kent are descended.

JOHN CLIFFORD, the second son of William (son and heir of Sir Lewis) married first Alice Gainsford, who bore to him three sons, William, Thomas, and Nicholas; secondly Florentia, daughter of John St. Leger, esquire, by whom he had issue a daughter, Ann, married to Robert Kemp, and a son and successor.

THOMAS CLIFFORD, seated at Borscombe, in the county of Wilts, who had to wife Thomasine, daughter of John Thorpe, of King's-Teignton, esquire, by whom he had issue.

WILLIAM CLIFFORD, of Borscombe, who marrying Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Vaux, of Odiam, in the county of Southampton, had issue, a daughter, Mary, married to Leonard Carrant, and a son,

HENRY CLIFFORD, of Borscombe, who had to wife Elizabeth, daughter of Anthony Hungerford, of Down Amney, in Gloucestershire, and was succeeded by ANTHONY CLIFFORD, his son and heir, seated at Borscombe aforesaid, who made his will April 19, in 22 Elizabeth, and, departing this life on September 12, 1580, was buried in the cathedral at Exeter.

He had to wife Anne, daughter of Edward Courtney, of Ugbrook, in the parish of Chudley, in Devonshire, by whom he had issue three sons,

1. Henry Clifford, from whom descended the Cliffords of Borscombe, and King's-Teignton, in Devonshire; the last of which name there, James Clifford, left issue an only daughter and heir, Mary, married to colonel Bampfield, the only son of Sir Copleston Bampfield, of Poltimore, in the county of Devon, baronet, who had issue by her Sir Copleston Warwick Bampfield, baronet, and John Bampfield, esquire.

2. Simon Clifford, seated at Borscomb, married to Ciciley Williamson, and had issue.

3. Thomas Clifford. Which

THOMAS CLIFFORD had the seat of Ugbrook, in Devonshire; and, by Amy, his wife, daughter and heir of Hugh Steplehill, of Bremble, in the county of Wilts, he had issue two sons,

1. Hugh

1. Hugh Clifford.
 2. Thomas Clifford.
- Also four daughters,
1. Sabina, married to Matthew Hales, of Elford, in Devonshire.
 2. Shelston, married to James Eastchurch.
 3. Elizabeth, married to John Carew, of Haccombe.
 4. Ann, married to Thomas Carew, of the same place.

In his youth he served in the wars in the Netherlands; and, after taking to his studies in the university of Oxford, he attended Robert, earl of Essex, in his naval expedition to Cadiz, in the latter part of queen Elizabeth's reign, and was twice sent by that queen envoy to some of the German and Italian princes. Having passed the age of fifty years, he fell to the study of divinity; in which he became so great a proficient, that, doing all his exercises, he took the degree of doctor in the university of Oxford, where he preached a Latin sermon, and in that function continued without accepting any preferment in the church, but preached gratis all his time, to shew others the way of avoiding those rocks, whereon he himself had, in his youth, sometimes run (as he often expressed) and died in 1634.

The eldest son,

HUGH CLIFFORD, had also the seat of Ugbrook; and in 1639, on the rebellion of the Scots, took up arms for the king, and was colonel of a regiment of foot; but, falling sick on the Northern march, returned home, and died the same year. He married Mary, daughter of Sir George Chudleigh, of Ashton, in the county of Devon, baronet, by whom he had three sons,

1. Thomas Clifford, who was created lord Clifford.
2. George Clifford, who married Elizabeth, daughter of George Price, of Esler, in Surry, and had issue George, his son heir, Elizabeth, and Margaret.
3. Simon Clifford, one of the tellers of the Exchequer.

(First Lord.) THOMAS CLIFFORD, beforementioned, born at Ugbrook, 1 August 1630; being a person of great natural parts, much accomplished by his education, and a sedulous student of the law in the Middle-Temple, London, was, by the borough of Totness, in com. Devon, elected a member in that parliament which restored king Charles II. also a member of the parliament which began at Westminster, May 8, 1659 Charles II. and, having been knighted, he attended the duke of York in the great sea-fight with the Dutch, which happened June 3, 1665. And, continuing with the fleet, then commanded by the earl of Sandwich (as vice-admiral) he was in that service at Bergen in Norway, where the English fleet, on the 2d of August next following, attacked the Dutch: soon after which he was sent to the kings of Sweden and Denmark, with full power to treat and make new alliances with them.

And the next year (1666) he was in another engagement at sea against the Dutch, which continued the four first days of June, the fleet being then commanded by prince Rupert and the duke of Albermarle; and likewise in that of the 25th of July next ensuing.

On his return from those great adventures, in November following, on the death of Sir Hugh Pollard, he was made comptroller of his majesty's household, and, on the 5th of December following, sworn of the privy council, for (as the Gazette expresses it) "his singular zeal, wherein he had upon all occasions, merited in his majesty's service, and more eminently in the honourable dangers in the then late war against the Dutch and French, where he had been all along a constant actor, and as it was observed, had made it his choice to take his share in the warmest part of those services." Also, on the death of Thomas earl of Southampton, lord treasurer of England, he was appointed one of the lords commissioners for executing that honourable office; and, on the 14th of June 1668, constituted treasurer of the household.

In 1672, on the death of Sir John Trevor, and in the absence of Henry earl of Arlington, he executed the office of his majesty's principal secretary of state, until the return of the lord Arlington from his embassy in Holland, and Mr. Henry Coventry from his embassy in Sweden. In all which employments he merited so well, that, on the 20th of April, 24 Charles II. his majesty advanced him to the degree and dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Clifford, of Chudleigh beforementioned. And, in November following, made him high treasurer of England, by the delivery of the white-staff, and constituting him, by letters patent, treasurer of the exchequer.

In which high post of lord treasurer he continued but a short time; for chusing retirement, he resigned his staff, and retired into the country, where he ended his days in the 43d year of his age, in September 1673; and was buried in Ugbrook chapel.

It is further memorable of him, that, in consideration of his faithful services, his majesty granted him a lease for sixty years, of Creslow pastures near Aylesbury, in the county of Bucks; and gave to him, and to the heirs male of his body, the manors of Cannington and Rodway-Fitz-Payne, in the county of Somerset: also, that he erected a fair chapel at Ugbrook aforesaid, which was consecrated by Anthony, bishop of Exeter, and afterwards procured an act of parliament for the entailing of Ugbrook, and the rectory of Chudleigh, on the heirs male of his body.

He married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to William Martin, of Lindridge, in the county of Devon, esquire, by whom he had issue seven sons, and eight daughters,

1. Thomas Clifford, } died infants.
2. Thomas Clifford, }
3. Thomas Clifford, born December 3, 1652, (a very hopeful gentleman) educated at Queen's college, Oxford. He travelled into Italy, and died at Florence, at the duke's court, by whom he was much caressed, March 29, 1671.
4. George Clifford, } successively lords.
5. Hugh Clifford, }
6. Simon Clifford.
7. Charles Clifford.

His daughters were,

1. Elizabeth, who died young.
2. Elizabeth, married to Henry Carew, only son to Sir Thomas Carew, of Haccombe, in the county of Devon, baronet.

BOYLE, Baron BOYLE.

Genealogists unanimously declare that the ancestors of this noble family were seated in Herefordshire, but are by no means agreed in the early part of their pedigree. Some derive their descent from Sir Philip Boyle, a knight of Aragon, who in the reign of king Henry VI. tilted at a tournament with Sir John Astley, knight of the Garter; and, who, it is said, "became" seated in the county of Hereford. This by implication fixes Sir Philip as the first of the family who lived in that county: whereas we have very eligible authority, though not to determine the precise time of their settling in those parts, yet to believe that they were there seated near two hundred years before that period; and we rather incline to favour the latter account, because we have the lineal succession from father to son uninterruptedly down to this time; but in the former it is not even settled who was the immediate descendant and heir of Sir Philip Boyle.

LUDOWICK BOYLE lived in the reign of Henry III. and was father of

JOHN BOYLE, whose son,

JAMES BOYLE, had issue, according to Seager's Tables,

LUDOWICK BOYLE, of Bidney, and of the Friars, in the city of Hereford. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ruffel, esquire, and had issue a daughter, Eleanor, married to Watkin Ruffel; as also two sons, John Boyle, esquire, who had the estate in Herefordshire; and Roger Boyle, second son. Which

ROGER BOYLE married Jane, daughter of Thomas Pattishall, of the county of Hereford, and had issue

1. JOHN BOYLE, of Hereford.

2. ROGER BOYLE, of whose descendants we are principally to treat.

3. MICHAEL BOYLE, of London, who left a numerous issue; whereof Richard, his second son, was bishop of Cork and Ross, being also allowed to keep the see of Cloyne, in commendam, was afterwards archbishop of Tuam, and died the 19th of March, 1644. He left issue Michael Boyle, archbishop of Ardmagh, and lord chancellor of Ireland, who died aged 93, and was father to Murrough Boyle, created lord viscount Blessington. Michael, another son of the said Roger, was bishop of Waterford and Lismore; and Sir George Boyle, his fourth son, died without issue.

ROGER BOYLE, second son, seated at Preston, in Kent, had issue

1. JOHN BOYLE, bishop of Cork and Ross, in Ireland.

2. RICHARD BOYLE, who laid the foundation of the honours which this family now enjoy.

3. HUGH BOYLE, who died without issue.

RICHARD BOYLE, the second son aforesaid, was earl of Cork. His lordship wrote a narrative of the events of his life to the year 1632, which he intitles his True Remembrances, as follows.

"I Sir Richard Boyle, knight, lord Boyle, Baron of Youghall, viscount Dungarvan, earl of Cork, lord high treasurer of Ireland, one of his majesty's honourable privy council, and one of the two lords justices for the government of this kingdom, do commend these True Remembrances to posterity, this 23d day of June, 1632, who having lived in this kingdom of Ireland full forty-four years, and so long after as it shall please Almighty God.

"My father, Mr. Roger Boyle, was born in Herefordshire. My mother, Joan Naylor, daughter to Robert Naylor, of Canterbury, in the county of Kent, Esq; was born the 15th of October in the 21st year of king Henry VIII. And my said father and mother were married in Canterbury, the 16th of October, in the 8th year of Queen Elizabeth.

"My father died at Preston, near Feversham, in Kent, the 24th of March, 1576.

"My mother never married again, but lived ten years a widow, and then departed this life at Feversham aforesaid, the 25th of March 1586; and they both are buried in one grave in the upper end of the chancel of the parish-church of Preston. In memory of which my deceased and worthy parents, I, their second son, have, 1629, erected a fair alabaster tomb over the place where they were buried, with an iron grate before it, for the better preservation thereof*.

"Sir

* On the tomb lie their effigies at length, in white marble, against the North wall; and on a square of black marble is the following inscription:

Here lyeth entombed the body of Roger Boyle, late of the parish of Preston, Esq; who descended of the antient and worthy family of the Boyles in Herefordshire. As also the body of Joan his faithful and loving wife, daughter of Robert Naylor, of the city of Canterbury, gentleman; who as they lived and loved together, so were both here buried together; leaving behind them three sons and two daughters, here under depicted:

Sir Richard Boyle, Knt. lord Boyle, baron of Youghall, viscount of Dungarvan, earl of Cork, &c. one

" Sir Richard Boyle, now earl of Cork, the second son of Roger Boyle, Esq; was born in the city of Canterbury, as I find written by my father's own hand, the 3d of October, 1566.

" ~~After the decease of my father and mother,~~ I being the second son of a younger brother, having been a scholar in Bennet's college, Cambridge, and a student in the Middle Temple, London, finding my means unable to support me to study the laws in the inns of court, put myself into the service of Sir Richard Manwood, knight, lord chief baron of his majesty's court of Exchequer, whom I served as one of his clerks; and perceiving that the employment would not raise a fortune, I resolved to travel into foreign kingdoms, to gain learning, and knowledge, and experience abroad in the world. And it pleased the Almighty, by his divine providence, to take me, I may say justly, as it were, by the hand, and lead me into Ireland, where I happily arrived at Dublin, on the Midsummer-eve, the 23d day of June, 1588. I was married at Limerick to Mrs. Joan Apfley, one of the two daughters and coheirs of William Apfley, esquire, the 6th of November 1595, who brought me in 500l. lands per annum, which I still enjoy; it being the beginning and foundation of my fortune. And she died at Moyallo, the 14th day of December, 1599, in travail of her first child, who was born a dead son; and both of them buried together in Buttavant church.

" When first I arrived at Dublin in Ireland, the 23d of June, 1588, all my wealth was 27l. 3s. in money, and two tokens which my mother had given me, viz. a diamond ring, which I have ever since and still do wear; and a bracelet of gold, worth about ten pounds; a taffety doublet, cut with and upon taffety; a pair of black velvet breeches, laced; a new Milan fustian suit, laced, and cut upon taffety; two cloaks, competent linen and necessaries, with my rapier and dagger.

" And since the blessing of God, whose heavenly providence guided me hither, hath enriched my weak estate in beginning with such a fortune, as I need not envy any of my neighbours, and added no care or burden of my conscience thereunto.

" And the 23d of June 1632, I have served my God, queen Elizabeth, king James, and king Charles, full forty-four years, and so long after as it shall please God to enable me.

" When God had blessed me with a reasonable fortune and estate, Sir Henry Wallop, of Wares, Sir Robert Gardiner, chief justice of the king's-bench, Sir Robert Dillam, chief justice of the common pleas, and Sir Richard Bingham, chief commissioner of Connaught, being displeased at some purchases I had made in the province; they all joined together by their lyes, complaining against me to queen Elizabeth, expressing that I came over a young man, without any estate or fortune, and that I had made so many purchases, that it was not possible to do it, without some foreign prince's purse to supply me with money; that I had acquired divers castles and abbeys upon the sea side, fit to receive and entertain Spaniards; that I kept in my abbeys, fraternities and convents of fryars, in their habits, who said mass continually; and that I was suspected of my religion with divers other malicious suggestions: whereof having some secret notice, I resolved to go into Munster, and so into England, to justify myself; but before I could take shipping, the general rebellion in Munster broke out. All my lands were wasted as I could say, that I had not one penny of certain revenue left me, to the unspeakable danger and hazard of my life. Yet God preserved me, as I recovered Dingle, and got shipping there, which transported me to Bristol; from whence I travelled to London, and betook myself to my former chamber in the Middle Temple, intending to renew my studies in the law, till the rebellion were past over. Then Robert, earl of Essex, was designed for the government of this kingdom, unto whose service I was recommended by Mr. Anthony Bacon; whereupon his lordship very nobly received me, and used me with favour and grace, in employing me in the issuing out his patent and commissions for the government of Ireland; whereof Sir Henry Wallop, treasurer, having notice, and being conscious in his own heart, that I had sundry papers and collections of Michael Kettlewell's, his late under-treasurer, which might discover a great deal of wrong and abuse done to the queen in his late accounts; and suspecting, if I were countenanced by the earl of Essex, that I would bring those things to light, which might much prejudice or ruin his reputation (although, I vow to God, until I was provoked, I had no thought of it); yet he, utterly to suppress me, renewed his former complaints against me to the queen's majesty; when by her majesty's special directions, I was suddenly attacked, and conveyed close prisoner to the Gatehouse, all my papers seized and searched; and altho' nothing could appear to my prejudice, yet my close restraint was continued till the earl of Essex was gone to Ireland, and two months afterward; at which time, with much suit, I obtained the favour of her sacred majesty to be present at my answers, when I so fully answered and cleared all their objections, and delivered such full and evident justifications for my own acquittal, as it pleased the queen to use these words, viz. " By God's death, these are but inventions against this young man, and all his sufferings are for being able to do us service, and those complaints urged to forestall him therein: but we find him to be a man fit to be employed by ourselves; and we will employ him in our service; and of the lords of his majesty's most honourable privy council in Ireland, second son to the said Roger and Joan, married Catherine the only daughter of Sir Geffraie Fenton, knight, secretary of state in Ireland, by whom he has a plentiful and hopeful posterity, whereof five sons and eight daughters are now living; who in memory of his virtuous and worthy parents, caused this monument to be erected.

On the front of the tomb, in squares of white marble: Elizabeth Boyle, the eldest daughter of the said Roger and Joan, married Piers Power, Esq; and by him has issue. Mary Boyle, second daughter of the said Roger and Joan, married Sir Richard Smith, Knt. and by him has issue.

Hugh Boyle, youngest son to the said Roger and Joan, in his travails in foreign kingdoms, was slain in the wars, before he had issue.

and Wallop and his adherents shall know, that it shall not be in the power of any of them to wrong him; neither shall Wallop be our treasurer any longer." Thereupon she directed her speech to her lords in her council there present, and commanded them presently to give her the names of six men, out of which she might choose one to be treasurer of Ireland: her election falling upon Sir George Carey of Cockington. And then the queen arose from council, and gave orders not only for my present enlargement, but also discharging all my charges and fees during my restraint, and gave me her royal hand to kiss, which I did heartily, humbly thanking God for that great deliverance.

"Being commanded by her majesty to attend at court, it was not many days before her highness was pleased to bestow upon me the office of clerk of the council of Munster, and to recommend me over to Sir George Carey, after earl of Totness, then lord president of Munster; whereupon I bought of Sir Walter Rawleigh his ship called the Pilgrim, into which I took a freight of ammunition and victuals, and came in her myself by long seas, and arrived at Carrig Toyl Kerry; where the lord president and the army were at the siege of that castle; which when we had taken, I was there sworn clerk of the council of Munster, and presently after made a justice and quorum throughout all this province. And this was the second rise that God gave to my fortune. Then, as clerk of the council, I attended the lord president in all his employments, and waited upon him all the whole siege of Kinsale, and was employed by his lordship to her majesty, with the news of that happy victory; in which employment I made speedy expedition to the court; for I left my lord president at Shannon-castle, near Cork, on the Monday morning, about two of the clock; and the next day, being Tuesday, I delivered my packet, and supped with Sir Robert Cecil, being then principal secretary of state, at his house in the Strand; who after supper held me in discourse till two of the clock in the morning; and by seven that morning called upon me to attend him to the court, where he presented me to her majesty in her bedchamber, who remembered me, calling me by name, and giving me her hand to kiss, telling me that she was glad that I was the happy man to bring the first news of that glorious victory. And after her majesty had interrogated with me upon sundry questions very punctually, and that therein I had given her full satisfaction in every particular, she again gave me her hand to kiss, and recommended my dispatch for Ireland, and so dismissed me with grace and favour. At my return into Ireland, I found my lord president ready to march with the army to the siege of Beerhaven-castle, then fortified and possessed by the Spaniards, and some Irish rebels; which, after battering, we had made assailable, we entered and put all to the sword. His lordship fell then to reducing those Western parts of the province to subjection and obedience of her majesty's laws; and having placed garrisons and wards in all places of importance, made his return to Cork; and in his way homewards acquainted me with his resolution, it being presently to employ me into England, to obtain licence from her majesty for his repair to her royal presence; at which time he propounded unto me the purchase of all Sir Walter Rawleigh's lands in Munster, offering me his best assistance for the compassing thereof; which he really performed: for, upon my departure for England, he wrote by me two effectual letters; one to Sir Robert Cecil, wherein he was pleased to magnify my service and abilities; and concluding with a request that he would make intercession with Sir Walter Rawleigh, to sell me all his lands in Ireland, that were then altogether waste and desolate.

"To Sir Walter Rawleigh he also wrote, advising him to sell all his lands in Ireland, then untenanted, and of no value to him; mentioning withal, that in his lordship's knowledge, his estate in Ireland never yielded him any benefit, but contrariwise stood him in two hundred pounds yearly for the maintenance and support of his titles; whereupon there was a meeting between Sir Robert Cecil, Sir Walter Rawleigh, and myself; where Sir Robert Cecil mediated and concluded the purchase between us: accordingly my assurances were perfected, and this was a third addition and rise to my estate.

"Then I returned into Ireland, with my lord president's licence to repair to court, where in his way to Dublin (where he proposed to embark) he dealt very nobly and fatherly-like by me, in persuading me it was high time for me to take a wife, in hopes of posterity to inherit my lands; advising me to make choice of Sir Jeffry Fenton's daughter, and that if I could affect her, he would treat with her parents to have the match between us; wherein he prevailed so far, as the 9th of march, 1602, I was in his lordship's presence, contracted to her in her father's house at Dublin.

The 25th of July, 1603, I was married to my second wife, Mrs. Catherine Fenton, the only daughter of Sir Jeffry Fenton, principal secretary of state, and privy counsellor of Ireland, with whom I never demanded any marriage portion, neither promise of any, it not being in my consideration; yet her father, after my marriage, gave me 1000*l.* in gold with her. But that gift of his daughter unto me I must ever thankfully acknowledge as the crown of all my blessings; for she was a most religious, virtuous, loving, and obedient wife unto me all the days of her life, and the happy mother of all my hopeful children, whom, with their posterity, I beseech God to bless.

The 10th of July, 1620, my eldest brother, doctor John Boyle, lord bishop of Cork, and Cloyne, and Ross, departed this life at Bishop's-court near Cork; and on the 12th of that instant was buried in my new tomb, erected in the chapel which I re-edified at Youghall. After whose death I obtained those bishopricks from his majesty for my uncle Michael Boyle's son (Richard Boyle) for whom I formerly obtained the deanry of Waterford, who now succeeds my brother in those bishopricks.

"I, Richard earl of Corke, was knighted by Sir George Carey, lord deputy of Ireland, at St. Mary's abbey near Dublin, the 25th of July, 1603, being St. James's day, and the very day that I was married to my second wife, Mrs. Catherine Fenton. I was sworn a privy counsellor to king James for the province of Munster, at the council table at Dublin, by the lord Chichester, then lord deputy of Ireland, the 12th of March, 1606, with commandment from the lord deputy and council to Henry Dunkard, then lord president of Munster, to admit me into that council; who, upon former direction from this state, had refused to swear or admit me a counsellor of that province.

"I was sworn a privy counsellor of state of the kingdom of Ireland by the lord Chichester, then lord deputy, at Chichester-house, the 15th of February, 1613, being the day that I arrived, out of England, at Dublin, 1612.

I was created lord Boyle, baron of Youghall, on Michaelmas-day, the 29th of September, 1616.

"I was created lord viscount of Dungarvan, and earl of Cork, the 26th of October, 1620.

"Adam, lord Loftus, of Ely, and lord chancellor of Ireland, and I, Richard, earl of Corke, were sworn lords justices, for the joint government of this kingdom of Ireland, the 26th of October, 1629, with the entertainment of one hundred pounds sterling per month, to each of us. I was made lord high treasurer of Ireland, and sworn, the 9th of November, 1631."

His lordship lived till the middle of September 1643; but gives only this further account of himself: "The several days of the births of all the children that God hath blessed me withal, with the places where they were born, and the names of their godfathers and godmothers:

"1. My first son, Roger, born at Youghall, the 1st of August, 1606: Sir Allen Apsley, Sir Thomas Brown, godfathers; and lady Alice Fenton, godmother. He died at Deptford, in Kent, the 10th of October, 1615; and was buried there.

"2. My first daughter, Alice Boyle, born at Youghall, the 20th of March, 1607: Sir Robert Tynt, godfather; lady Fenton, and Mrs. Barnard, godmothers. [She was married to David, earl of Barrimore.]

"3. My second daughter, Sarah Boyle, born at Dublin, the 29th of March, 1609: Sir William Usher, godfather; lady Winch, and lady Ely, godmothers. She was married to Sir Thomas Moore, first, [son and heir of George, lord viscount Drogheda] and then to lord Robert Digby, the 15th of December, 1626.

"4. My third daughter, Lettice, born the 25th of April, 1610: earl of Thomond, godfather; lady Chichester, and lady Moore, godmothers. [She was married to George, lord Goring, eldest son and heir of George, earl of Norwich.]

"5. My fourth daughter, Joan, born 14th of June, 1611: Sir William Fenton, godfather; ——— Brown, and lady Fenton, godmothers. She was married to [George] earl of Kildare, August 15, 1628; and had two children, Richard and Elizabeth.

"6. My second son, Richard, born at the college of Youghall, the 20th of October, 1612: earl of Thomond, Sir Richard Aldworth, and Mr. Thomas Ball, of London, godfathers; and lady Anne Parsons, godmother. God grant he may serve and fear him religiously; and be a faithful subject and servant to the king's majesty, and his heirs; and live many years full of good works, and have virtuous children; and be a worthy pillar and patriot in this kingdom. He, being viscount of Dungarvon, was knighted in my house at Youghall, the 13th of August, 1624, by the lord Falkland, lord deputy general of Ireland. And my said son departed Dublin, to begin his travels into foreign kingdoms, the 4th of June, 1631, I allowing him one thousand pounds a-year in his travels.

"7. My daughter Catharine, born the 22d of March, 1614: Sir Robert Bolton, godfather; lady Fenton, and lady Harris, godmothers. [She was married to Arthur Jones, earl of Ranelagh.]

"8. My son Jeoffry, born at Youghall, the 10th of April, 1616. He died — [an infant.]

"9. My daughter Dorothy, born December 31, 1617. She was married to [Arthur] lord Loftus, son and heir of Sir Adam Loftus, lord viscount Ely, lord chancellor of Ireland.]

"10. My son Lewis, born May 23, 1619. And in the year 1628 he was created baron of Bandonbridge, and lord viscount Boyle, of Kinalmeachy. [He lost his life, valiantly fighting in that engagement with the Irish rebels, at Liscarrel, the 3d of September, 1642. He married lady Elizabeth, daughter of William, earl of Denbigh, but left no issue by her. On the restoration of king Charles II. she was created countess of Guildford, in Surry, by letters patent bearing date July 14, 12 Charles II.]

"11. My son Roger, born 25th of April, 1621. He was created lord Boyle, baron of Broghill, 1628." [Also, by king Charles II. created earl of Orrery. And, by the decease of Richard, earl of Burlington, his descendants are now the principal branches remaining of the family; as will be shewn, when we come to treat of his lordship.]

"12. My son Francis, born June 25, 1623.

"13. My daughter Mary, born November 11, 1624. [She was married to Charles Rich, earl of Warwick. Which lady's excellent virtues and morals are particularly set forth among the lives of sundry eminent persons, wrote by Samuel Clark. She sought all occasions to do good; and after she came to the possession of that great estate her lord left her for life, her charities were so extensive and exemplary, that it was said, "the earl of Warwick had left all his estate to pious uses."]

"14. My seventh son, Robert Boyle, born January 25, 1626.

15. My eighth and last daughter, Margaret, born in Channel-row, in Westminster, April 30, 1629. [She died unmarried. The said eight daughters were ladies of great piety and virtue, and an ornament to their sex.]

"The great God of heaven I do humbly and heartily beseech to bless all these my children, whom he hath in his mercy so graciously bestowed upon me, with long and religious lives; and that they may be fruitful in virtuous children and good works; and continue, till their lives end, loyal and dutiful subjects to the king's majesty, and his heirs; and approve themselves good patriots and members to his commonwealth; which is the prayer and charge of me their father, in the sixty-seventh year of my age, 1632.

"My dear wife, the crown of all my happiness, and mother of all my children, Catharine countess of Cork, was translated at Dublin from this life into a better the 16th of February, 1629-30; and was was, on the 17th, privately buried in the night, in the upper end of the choir of St. Patrick's church in Dublin, in the grave or vault, wherein Dr. Weston, her grandfather, and good lord chancellor of Ireland, and Sir Jeffry Fenton, his majesty's principal secretary of state for this realm, were interred. Her funerals were honourably solemnized in publick the 11th of March, anno domini 1629-30. In the perpetual memory of which my virtuous and religious deceased wife, and of her predecessors and posterity, I have caused a very fair tomb to be erected, with a cave or cellar of hewed stone underneath it.

"I have purchased from the dean and chapter of St. Patrick's church the inheritance of that upper part of the chancel, wherein the cave or cellar under-ground is made, and whereon the tomb is built, to be a burying-place for me and my posterity, and their children."

There was the greatest harmony, love, and affection between all the brothers and sisters. And, as it is to the honour of their noble father, we insert his instructions to them, in the conclusion of his last will and testament, as follows: "Moreover, I do, upon my blessing, charge and command not only my said son and heir [Richard, lord viscount Dungarvan, after earl of Burlington] but also all and every of my three younger sons, Roger, lord baron of Broghill, Francis, and Robert Boyle, and all my daughters, to be most zealous and constant in that undoubted, true, protestant religion, now professed and established in the churches of England and Ireland; in which they have been, by myself, and their worthy, deceased, religious mother, seasoned, trained up, and bred: and that they, and each of them, train and breed up their children in the same, true, protestant religion. And that my said three younger sons be and continue observant, respective, kind, and loving unto their eldest brother; and that he be helping, comfortable, and assistant unto them, and they be lodged and entertained by and with him in his house in Dublin, when their several occasions call them thither. And that all his younger brethren do hearken unto him, incline, and follow all such good counsel and advice, as he, and the overseers of his will, or any of them, from time to time, shall give unto them."

These instructions they constantly persevered in, as was apparent through the whole course of their lives, insomuch that they had these epithets; Richard, earl of Cork, the Rich; Roger, earl of Orrery, the Wise; lord Kinalmeakie, the Valiant; Francis lord Shannon, the Just; and Mr. Robert Boyle, the Divine Philosopher of the World.

His last will and testament, dated November 24, 1642, 18 Charles I. is so very curious and remarkable, shewing his piety, charities, sincere and upright dealings, exemplary conduct, and honourable request, that, to do justice to his memory, hardly enough can be said; we therefore insert the preamble thereof in his own words, and an abstract of the most material parts.

"I bequeath and humbly commend my soul to Almighty God, my maker: and his only begotten son, my sole Saviour, Jesus Christ, confidently believing, that through his death, passion, merits, and mediation, all my sins are forgiven and washed away by the shedding of his most precious and innocent blood; that his sufferings are satisfaction for them; and that, by his glorious resurrection and ascension, I shall be raised again from death, and glorified in his heavenly kingdom amongst the angels and blessed saints everlastingly, and into the hands of the Holy Ghost; being well assured that nothing can perish or be lost, that is committed and willingly yielded up into the holy, blessed, and individual Trinity; to whom I willingly and joyfully surrender (as their due) my mortal body, and immortal soul, to be both glorified in heaven; as, by my faith and confidence, I undoubtedly trust they shall be. And as for my body, as it came whole into the world, so I charge my executor, children, and friends, that it may be decently and privately buried whole, without any bowelling or dividing, and without unnecessary pomp or ceremonies; and my funerals to be after solemnized (as my late wife's were) honourably and decently, suitable to my estate and degree. And as it is made of earth, so it may be returned into earth, without too much of glorious shews or funeral offices. And if God shall call me to his mercy in or near Dublin, it is my desire that my body be buried (as before) in the vault of my new tomb, erected over my last dear, deceased wife, in the chancel of St. Patrick's church in Dublin: but if God shall call me out of this world in Munster, then it is my will that my corpse be interred with my eldest brother, Dr. John Boyle, late bishop of Corke, Cloyne, and Ross, and my mother-in-law, the good lady Fenton, in my vault in my chapel and tomb in Youghall church. But if I shall be in England when God shall call me out of this vale of misery, it is my will that my body be buried, in manner aforesaid, in the chancel of the parish-church of Preston, near Feversham in Kent, under the tomb which I erected there for my deceased father and mother, who both lie there. And forasmuch as, by my former will, bearing date the last day of January, anno domini 1637, (which was then by me duly perfected) I bequeathed that, in case my second son, Sir Lewis Boyle, knight, lord baron of Bandon-bridge, and lord viscount Boyle of Kinalmeakie, should depart this world in my life-time, or without heirs of his body lawfully begotten; that then so much of my white plate, and silver vessels, whereupon my said son Lewis's arms, with a crescent, &c. unto my son, Sir Roger Boyle, baron of Broghill: now, in pursuance of my said former request, seeing it hath pleased God to take away out of this life my said second son, the lord viscount Kinalmeakie, myself surviving him, I do hereby give, legate, and bequeath all that plate and silver vessels, so engraven and marked as aforesaid, unto my said son, Sir Roger Boyle, knight, lord Boyle, baron of Broghill, &c." He bequeaths to his second son, lord Broghill, the castle, town, mills, and lands of Marston, alias Marston-Bigod, in Somersetshire; and also divers houses, messuages, &c. in the city of Dublin; with St. Francis's abbey at Cork; lands, towns, &c. of Knocknekenny; and Lewes's gate at Bandon-bridge, &c. during his life; and after, to the first issue male of his body lawfully begotten; with such remainders and limitations over of uses and estates, as by indenture septipartite, dated 14 May, 1626, he had assigned and limited. To his third son, Francis, the manors, castles, and lands of Barriecourt and Bellvelly, in the county of Cork; also all his lands in Ballyvolaghan; the manor and lands of Corbeen, with the appurtenances in the county of Cork; likewise the manor, &c. of Ballymodan, near Bandon-bridge; with lands, tenements, mills, water-courses, &c. the towns and lands of Rathdrowht, Kill-M'-Simon, and Innish Roe; houses, messuages, &c. in Castle-street, Dublin; his estate at Monckleigh, in the county of Devon, in England; with his manor of Saltcombe, and rectory of Halberton. After which he recites, "Provided always, and my will is, for that I have ever cordially desired the restitution and recovery of the earl of Barrimore's noble and anciently honourable house, that his posterity may raise the same to its former lustre and greatness again; and in regard that (in my judgment) there is no way so likely and probable (God blessing it) to redeem and bring home the incumbered and disjointed estate of the said earl, and his house, and posterity, as by giving a noble, virtuous, and religious education to the said now young earl, my grandchild, who, by good and honourable breeding, may (by God's grace) either by the favour of the prince, or by his service to his king and country, or a good marriage, redeem and bring home that ancient and honourable house, which, upon the marriage of my daughter unto the late earl, I did, with my own money, freely clear. I do hereby, for his lordship's better maintenance and accommodation in the premises, bequeath unto my said grandchild, Richard, now earl of Barrimore, from the time of my decease, for, during, and until he shall attain unto the full age of two and twenty years, one yearly annuity of two hundred pounds current money of England, to be paid unto his lordship, or his assigns, half-yearly, by equal portions, at May-day, and All-Saints, or within forty days after any of the said feasts, by my said son Francis; his heirs or assigns, out of the rents, &c. of all and every the manors, castles, towns, lands, &c. within the county of Cork, by me bequeathed to my said son Francis, or to his use; and, upon my said son's failure of payment as aforesaid, then I grant to the said earl, or his assigns, full power to distrain for the same, &c." All which, with every of their members, rights, &c. he bequeaths to his said son, Francis Boyle, with such limitations, as before recited, to his said son, Roger Boyle.

He bequeaths to his youngest son, Robert Boyle, all and every his manors, castles, dissolved abbeys, &c. with their appurtenances, &c. and all mortgages, leases, estates for years, either in possession, or reversion, or remainder, or any other, that to his use are or ought to be possessed, or may hereafter be enfeoffed in, or possessed in the province of Connaught, which before the troubles were rented at about four hundred and fifty pounds per annum; and in the King's county and Queen's county, before these troubles rented at about two hundred and forty pounds per annum; the manors, lands, &c. in the counties of Clare and Wexford; the monastery of Fermoy, alias Jermoy, alias Ardmoyle, with the appurtenances, &c. in the county of Cork; the late dissolved abbey of Castle-Lyon, alias Castle-Oleghan, with appurtenances, as well spiritual as temporal; the castle, town, and lands of Inchineback, in mortgage to him for six hundred pounds sterling; the lands, tenements, &c. of Twormore; the town and lands of Ballygowne; the town and lands of Kilmagna; the town and lands of Ballycloghie; the lands and tenements in Ballynehaw, Nockmaple, and Nockdrumcloghie; the lands called Rosnebrun, Ballyjowran, and Glenurch, mortgaged to him for two thousand pounds, the town and lands of Ballimorrough, mortgaged to him for two hundred pounds, the chief rent of four pounds per annum, out of Twormore and Ballytrafney, in the said county of Cork; also divers other lands, tenements, &c. and mortgages on manors, lands, &c. Whereby it appears that he left him better provided for, than he did his son Francis: for he also bequeathed to him eight thousand six hundred pounds sterling, which he lent to his noble brother, George lord Goring, vice-chamberlain to the king; with all his right, estate, reversion, &c. of, in and unto the manors of Waltham, with the late dwelling-house of the earl of Norwich; also the manors of Nasing, and Nasingbury, and rectory in the county of Essex, conveyed to him by the said lord Goring, for the better securing of the said eight thousand six hundred pounds. All which, with every their members, rights, &c. he bequeaths to his said son, Robert Boyle, during his natural life; and, after his decease to the first issue male of his body lawfully begotten, with such remainders as are in his said septipartite deed before recited.

He further bequeaths to every of his said sons, respectively, all rents, and arrearages of rents, due unto him at the time of his decease, out of the several manors &c. so bequeathed or conveyed to the several uses of every of them, according to his rental book, signed, with his own hand. "And whereas I did allow unto my son and heir, Richard lord viscount Dungarvan [after earl of Burlington] for his maintenance, the full sum of 1500l. per annum; and that he undertook to the King, without my privity, to raise, arm, and provide 100 horse to attend his majesty in the expedition against the Scots in the North of England; for which, and his other occasions, besides his yearly maintenance aforesaid, I supplied him with the full sum of 5553l. as by his acknowledgment and engagement thereof, under his hand and seal, dated May 3, 1639, appeareth; which sum he hath obliged himself, his heirs and executors to pay, according as I shall dispose thereof by my last will and testament: I do hereby bequeath the sums of money following to be paid by him: Imprimis, to each one of my grand children, the two daughters of the late earl of Barrymore, 1000l. a-piece; and to my two grand-children, Lettice and Catharine, (daughters of Robert, lord Digby, and my daughter Sarah, both deceased,) the like sum of 1000l. a-piece; and to my niece Catharine Boyle, now the wife of Mr. William Tynt, 800l. above the 200l. paid, since their marriage, to her father-in-law, Sir Robert Tynt, knight."

He also bequeathed legacies to his nephews, Edward Boyle, and John Boyle; his cousins, Roger Boyle, and Michael Boyle, after primate of Ireland; his cousin Thomas Boyle; the children of his cousin, Francis Boyle, and Charity, his wife, &c. He bequeaths to his daughter, viscountess Dungarvan, his diamond ring, which his mother, at her death, gave him, which he had wore for fifty-six years, praying her to wear it as a happy, fortunate, and lucky stone, during her life, and leave it to her son. To the wife of his son, Francis, his double gilt salt and cover, which which stands on four pillars, &c. and to his true and faithful friend, Sir Thomas Stafford, if he survives him, his diamond hat-band, for which he paid him 200*l*. and if his son, Francis, survives him, to bestow it on him at his death: also bequeaths legacies to many of his friends, and his chief servants. He makes his son and heir, Sir Richard Boyle, knight, lord viscount Kinalmeaky, his sole and only executor; and Sir William Parsons, knight and baronet, one of the lord's justices of Ireland, Sir William Fenton, knight, Sir Garret Lowther, knight, lord chief justice of the Common Pleas, and Joshua Boyle, esquire, overseers of his will; whom he intreats to bestow their care in causing this his last will to be punctually observed and performed in all points, so as no contentions may arise betwixt his said son and heir, and the rest of his younger sons: concluding, "Moreover I do, upon my blessing, charge and command, not only my said son and heir, but also every of my three younger sons, Roger lord baron of Broghill, Francis and Robert Boyle, and all my daughters, to be most zealous and constant in that undoubted, true protestant religion, now professed and established in the churches of England and Ireland; in which they have been by myself and their worthy religious deceased mother, seasoned, trained up, and bred: and that they and each of them breed up their children in the same true protestant religion: and that my said three younger sons be and continue observant, respective, kind and loving to their elder brother; and that he be helping, comfortable, and assistant unto them, and they be lodged and entertained by him in his house in Dublin, as their several occasions draw them thither; and he, or his heir, be there resident."

His lordship, in his life-time, and by his said will, also dedicated a portion of his temporal estate to the great dispenser thereof; having erected in Youghall an hospital or alms-house for the relief of six decayed soldiers and alms-men; also a free-school with convenient dwellings for a master and usher, which was incorporated March 3, 1613, and the school appointed the free-school of and for the diocese of Cloyne: and by his deed in 1636, he settled twenty pounds English on the master, ten pounds on the usher, five pounds on every alms-man, and five pounds to maintain and repair the same, yearly; the overplus to remain as a stock for repairing thereof, as occasion required. These stipends, by his will, he charged his son and heir, and his heirs for ever, to continue and uphold, and to pay yearly the said allowances to the school-master, &c. "And for that (says he) I much desire the good, increase, and prosperity of Bandon-bridge, and the inhabitants thereof, whom I have ever (till now of late) much tendered and respected; I do therefore declare it to be my will, that there be a very strong and substantial bridge of lime and stone, with my arms cut in stone to be set upon the wall thereof, erected over the river of Bandon, within the town, where the timber bridge now stands." For the overseeing of which he intreated the provost for the time being, and other his friends and tenants, particularly named, to take the charge upon them to see it gracefully, strongly, and substantially done, without any false or deceitful work (as other bridges of late had been.)

And whereas he had paid to John Lodden, for a bridge built over the river Nare, near Castle-Comer, called the Four-Mile Water from Clomel, which he was bound in an obligation of two hundred pounds, to perfect and perform strongly and substantially, but built the said bridge deceitfully; whereby, so soon as it was finished, part thereof was overthrown: he therefore assigns the said John Lodden's bond to his son and heir, whom he entrusts to see that work strongly and speedily finished; and bequeaths one hundred and twenty pounds more towards it, and his arms in stone to be put thereon. And as he esteemed it a work of great charity, tending to the ease and safety of travellers, to have Bennet's bridge repaired or new built, if the marquis of Ormond, and gentlemen of the county of Kilkenny, would contribute thereto, he bequeathed two hundred pounds towards it. And whereas he had been at great charges for the building a timber bridge, wherein eight hundred tops of choice timber were by him bestowed, over the Black Water near Fermoy, which by an extraordinary flood was carried away; and for that he desired the ease and safety of the neighbours and travellers; he bequeathed two hundred pounds to have a very strong and substantial stone bridge built in the place thereof, with his arms thereon, as was at Moyallow; to which work he was charitably inclined, though he lost the benefit of his ferry-boat thereby. He also devised towards the new building, covering, and garnishing of the chancel of the collegiate and parochial church of Youghall, the sum of ninety-eight pounds, and to the poor of that parish, and those of Lismore, Tallough, Tallough-bridge, Bandon, Coolfadagh, and Cloghnikilty, ten pounds each.

On the rebellion of the Irish, and cruel massacre of the protestants, in 1641, the county of Cork was the last that felt their brutal usage, being the best inhabited with English of any county in that kingdom, by the noble plantations made by the earl of Cork, and was preserved by his generosity and diligence. His lordship was then just returned out of England, and on that irruption immediately fortified his castle of Lismore, and raised two troops of horse, which he put under the command of his sons, the lords Kinalmeaky and Broghill, maintaining them and four hundred foot for some months at his own charge. This noble earl never thought any thing too much, that he ventured for the service of his king and country. In December, the same year, he was ordered by the government, to preserve Youghall from the enemy, with an assignment of one thousand foot and sixty horse, to whom he gave constant pay. His letter to George lord Goring displays his great spirit and resolution, pointing out the various barbarities the protestants laboured under: "As weak," says he, "and infirm as I am, I am commanded hither; and, God willing, I will be so good a constable to the king, my master, as I will die in the defence thereof; although I have no great hope to defend it, yet we will bestir ourselves like Englishmen." He also recites, "The lord Dunboyne, and the two lords Bourke, and, in effect, all the natives of the county of Limerick, are in open action: and, in brief, all that have sucked Irish milk, are infected with this general treason and rebellion. This poor province of Munster is encompassed with dangers round about, every day bringing us Job's messengers, of killing, preying, burning, and spoiling the English and protestants, and none other touched upon; and of the loss of cities, and walled towns. The lord Montgarret, and the lord of Upper Ossory, have (without a blow struck in the defence of the city of Kilkenny) possessed themselves thereof, and ransacked and stripped all the English protestants therein, in such a barbarous and inhuman manner, as is not to be believed, &c. And therefore, even upon the knees of my soul, I beg you to supplicate his majesty, and the lords and commons of both houses of parliament, that this fruitful province of Munster (wherein are more cities and walled towns, with more brave harbours and havens, than all the rest of the kingdom hath) and the English subjects therein, may not, for want of timely supplies of men, money, and munition, be lost; but that you will instantly solicit the hastening over the lord lieutenant with the army to Dublin, and Sir Charles Vavasor with his regiment to Youghall, with a liberal supply of arms and ammunition, whereof the province is in a manner destitute. And herein, for God's sake, let not the least delay be used; for, if there be, all succours will come too late." In the said letter he concludes, "Youghall, this twelfth day, about midnight, after a heavy and sorrowful Christmas, 1641."

In another letter to lord Goring, dated Youghall, January 12, 1641, his distresses were greatly increased, and grew more dreadful, as he informed him. "All the natives that are papists," says his lordship, "are in open action and rebellion, except the earl of Barrimore. I am, by commandment of the lord president, drawn to Youghall to secure it, the only town the English have to retreat to; which, God knows, is very weak and ruinous, a great part of the wall being fallen down within these two nights, which we are not able to repair. There is none in it but myself, my son Dungarvan, with his troop; and we have but two hundred Englishmen to guard it, of my tenants, whom I am forced to pay every day, or else they will not stay here. God bless us, for we are compassed with an innumerable company of enemies, and have neither money nor ammunition. We are now at the last gasp; and, if the state of England do not speedily supply us, we are all buried alive, &c."

In February following, Sir Charles Vavasor arriving there with his regiment of foot, the English were inspired with fresh courage; but, bringing with him the proclamation against the rebels, they grew desperate, and executed the same day eight of his lordship's tenants: and, as he writes in a letter to the earl of Warwick, February 25, the cruelties exercised on the protestants were so many, and so unchristian-like, they were inexpressible; adding, "Before this rebellion, my revenue, besides my houses, demesnes, parks, and other royalties, did yield me fifty pounds a day rent. I do vow unto your lordship, that I have not now fifty pence a week coming in to me, so as I fear I must come a begging to you, to allow me to be one of your beadsmen. But God's will be done, to whom I am thankful for granting me patience to undergo these great afflictions and losses."

In July 1642 he was commissioned by the lords justices, as custos rotulorum of the counties of Cork and Waterford, to hold a quarter-sessions for the indictment of high treason of the rebels in those counties; when above eleven hundred, which entered into rebellion there, were accordingly indicted; as in a letter to the speaker of the house of commons in England, dated August 25, 1642, his lordship sets forth; and that he sent him the said indictments to be presented to the house, to be considered by such members thereof as are learned in the laws; and, if wanting in any point of law, they may be reformed and rectified, and returned to him, with such amendment as they shall think fit; and, if the house pleased to direct, they should all be proceeded against to outlawry, whereby his majesty may be entitled to their lands and possessions, which he dare affirm were, at the beginning of the insurrection, not of so little yearly value as two hundred thousand pounds. "This course of proceedings," says his lordship, "against the lords and the rest was not by them suspected, and, I do assure you, doth much startle them; for now they begin (tho' too late) to take notice, that they are in a good forwardness to be attainted, and all their estates confiscated, to the corruption of their blood, and extirpation of them and their families. And the height of their revenge is principally bent against the earl of Barrimore, myself, and my sons, which we all foresaw, before we entered upon this work of works. Sir, I pray give me leave to present to yourself and the honourable house, that this general rebellion broke forth in October last, at the very instant when I landed here out of England; and though it appeared first in Ulster, yet I (who am seventy-six years of age, and have eaten the most part of my bread in Ireland these fifty-four years, and by my several employments and commands in the government of this province and kingdom) could not but apprehend that the infection and contagion was general, and would, by degrees, quickly creep into this province; as forthwith it did. And for that I found, to my great grief, that by the courses the late earl of Stafford had taken, all, or the greatest part of the English and protestants in this province were deprived of their arms, and debarred from having any powder in their houses; and the king's magazines here being so weakly furnished, as in a manner they were empty; I, without delay, furnished all my castles in these two counties with such ammunition as my poor armoury did afford, and sent three hundred pounds sterling into England to be bestowed in ammunition for myself and tenants; and put in sufficient guards, and nine months victuals, in every of my castles; which I thank God, I have hitherto preserved and made good, not without giving great annoyance out of these castles to the rebels. And for that the late lord president did judiciously observe, that the preservation of this important town and harbour of Youghall was of principal consequence to be kept for the service of the crown; and presuming that no man exceeded me in power and ability to make it good, he prevailed on me, for the advancement of his majesty's service, to secure it; whither I brought two companies of hundred foot a-piece, all of English protestants, and well disciplined, and them at my charges armed. And hitherto (I do thank my God) this town and harbour are made good, and is a receptacle not only for all shipping, but also for for thousands of distressed Englishmen, which have been stripped by the rebels, and have found succour and safety here. And these two hundred men I have kept all the last winter until now to defend this town, and weekly paid by poll three shillings and six pence a week, until the first of March last, &c. The troop of horse, and hundred foot, which are garrisoned at Lismore, I have also paid weekly by poll, as I do the foot company to this day. But I humbly thank the parliament, they have been pleased the beginning of last month, to bring my son Broghill, with his troop of horse into his majesty's pay; which favour he will, I hope, by his service merit. I then likewise employed my second son, Kinalmeaky, to govern a town, in the West, of my erection called Bandon bridge, the walling and fortifying whereof stood me in one thousand four hundred pounds, wherein are at least seven thousand souls, all English protestants, and not one Irishman or Papist dwelling therein; where there have been ever since and yet are maintained, a hundred horse, and four hundred foot. Which town (notwithstanding several violent assaults and attempts) hath not only been maintained and defended; but they have made many sallies on the rebels, and given them several great overthrows; and indeed beyond expectation (even almost to admiration) have gained seven strong castles from the traitors; some of which they have burned, and the rest they maintain with good wards, being great bridges on the enemy; and yet, these nine months, have not had one penny of entertainment from the king or parliament, &c." He further sets forth in his letter, that the loss of Limerick would have been prevented, had the forces come over the parliament long since had ordered; the cannon of which place had served them to reduce all the castles in that county, except Loughir, defended for the earl of Bath; and his own castle of Askeaton (in which he maintained a hundred men since the breaking out of the rebellion) which was then besieged by four thousand Irish, and in danger of being lost. That the forces maintained by him, and commanded by his sons, had destroyed above three thousand rebels since the insurrection; but was forced to sell his plate to pay the soldiers. He concludes, "I have with a free heart, and liberal hand spent all that I have, and am able to do no more. I grieve not at my own losses or wants, though they have been very great; but to see these seasoned and well disciplined companies (one hundred whereof for the present are more serviceable than three hundred fresh men) to be without cloaths, or pay, afflicts me at the soul." In a postscript to the said letter he adds, "The towns of Wexford and Dungarvan are both, by sea, lately furnished with store of powder and ammunition, whereof I had certain advertisement this day; and an admonition to the commanders of those ships that are in pay from the house, to range and watch the seas better, is humbly desired as most requisite." In this, and other few letters of his, that did not perish in the conflagration of Charleville house, may be traced his intrepidity, generosity of his heart, superiority of his understanding; and also delineate him to be a brave, benevolent, and wise man, even in his last years. His noble spirit thought nothing too much to venture for the service of his king and country, risking his whole family and fortune on the same bottom with the protestant interest in Ireland; having in the battle of Lisscarrol, fought September 3, 1642, (wherein the English obtained a complete victory) four of his sons engaged, who all behaved with great valour; and lost his second son, the lord Kinalmeaky, who in several rencounters had defeated the rebels.

At length, this great earl, in the midst of these confusions, departed this life at Youghall, aged seventy-seven; and there was buried; near the date (if not on the day) of the cessation concluded at Sigginstown, September 15, 1643, "unwilling to survive what he suspected might not be auspicious to the English, or conducive to the end for which it was designed: wherein he prophesied not ill."

Mr. Borlase gives this character of his lordship: "He was a person, for his abilities and knowledge in the affairs of the world, eminently observable, inasmuch as (though he was no peer of England) he was admitted to sit in the lords house upon the woollacks, 'ut consiliarius.' And for all the estate he arrived at (which was the greatest in the memory of the last age) none ever taxed him with exorbitances, but such as thought princes had too little, and religious men not enough."

Sir Richard Cox gives this account of him: "The noble earl of Cork, lord high treasurer, was one of the most extraordinary persons, either that or any other age hath produced, with respect to the great and just acquisitions of estate that he made, and the public works that he began and finished, for the advancement of the English interest, and the protestant religion, in Ireland; as churches, alms-houses, free-schools, bridges, castles, and towns, viz. Lismore, Tallow, Cloghmakilty, Iniskeen, Castletown, and Bandon, (which last place cost him 14,000 l.) inasmuch that, when Cromwell saw these prodigious improvements, which he little expected to find in Ireland, he declared 'That if there had been an earl of Cork in every province, it would have been impossible for the Irish to have raised a rebellion.' And whilst he was carrying on these solid works, he lived in his family at a rate of plenty that exceeded those who consumed great estates in the lavish-ways of ill-ordered success. His motto, 'God's providence is my inheritance,' shews from whence he derived all his blessings; the greatest of which was, the numerous and noble posterity he had to leave his estate unto."

He lies interred in his chapel in the parish-church of Youghall; and a beautiful marble monument is erected to his memory, his effigies lying in full length in armour, and on each side of him those of his wives, and the names and marriages of his children, his own titles and employments; concluding with this distich:

*Sic posui tumulum, superest intendere votis:
Parce animæ, carnem solvito, Christe, veni.*

His lordship in the account he has given of himself, before recited, has related his lady's decease, and the births, &c. of all his children. We shall therefore only mention, that on an elegant monument in St. Patrick's church in Dublin is this inscription:

God's providence is our inheritance.

This monument was erected for the Right Honourable Sir Richard Boyle, Knt. Lord Boyle, Baron of Youghall, Viscount of Dungarvan, Earl of Cork, lord high treasurer of Ireland, and of the King's privy-council of this realm, and of the two lords justices for the government of this kingdom, in memory of his most dear, virtuous, and religious wife, the Lady Catharine, Countess of Cork, and their posterity; as also of her grandfather, Dr. Robert Weston, some time lord chancellor of Ireland, and one of the lords justices for the government thereof; whose daughter, Alice Weston, was married to Sir Geoffery Fenton, Knt. principal secretary of state in this realm; and they had issue the said Lady Catharine, Countess of Cork, who lieth here interred with her said father and grandfather, whose virtues she inherited on the earth, and lieth here interred with them. All expecting a joyful resurrection. Obitt 16 die Februarii, anno 1629.

Of his lordship's children; from Roger Boyle, the fifth son, created baron of Broghill, and earl of Orrery, is descended the present earl of Cork; of whom we are principally to treat.

Francis, his sixth son, was created lord viscount of Shannon. He served king Charles the First, with his brethren, against the Irish rebels; and the great earl of Cork, in a letter dated at Cork, October 7, 1642, to the marquis of Ormond, gives the following account of his son Francis: "Your lordship's two commissions were not brought hither, till after my son Kinalmeaky was killed at the battle of Lisgarrol, where I had four of my sons; and [Francis] the youngest of them (if report speaks truth) carried himself with an undaunted resolution, and did narrowly endanger his life, in recovering his dead brother's body and horse, both which he brought from the rebels; and hath ever since kept both troop and foot company together, in hope (his brother being thus killed) that he shall be graced with the command of them. My humble suit is, that your lordship will confer on him the foot company, and troop of horse, which you were pleased to confer on his deceased brother."

This Francis, whilst in Ireland, was very active against the rebels, till the cessation of arms, concluded with the papists September 16, 1643; after which, he, with his brother, the lord Broghill, went over to England, and waited on king Charles I. at Oxford. The next thing we find of him is, his going over to Holland with his wife; where in Feb. 1647-8, he was visited by his brother, the honourable Robert Boyle, partly to see the country, and partly to accompany his said brother, and his wife, on their return to England; where they arrived April 15, 1648.

On May 13 following, Mr. Robert Boyle being at Stalbridge, Mr. Francis Boyle and his lady accompanied him there; also at Marlton, in Somersetshire, the seat of their brother, the lord Broghill; the greatest harmony being between all the brothers and sisters. He adhered to the royal interest; and in 1659, when his brother, the lord Broghill, had made a party for the restoration of king Charles II. and had secured all Munster, he dispatched his brother Francis to the king, then at Brussels, to invite him to land at Cork, with assurance of his being received there; and that he had got all the army of the South, as Sir Charles Coote had that of the North, in readiness to declare for his majesty. He embarked in Cork haven for Flanders; and, on his arrival at Brussels, presented his letters of invitation to the king, who received him with great joy, and gave immediate directions to prepare for his transportation; and four days after, just as his majesty was taking horse in disguise for Calais, in order to his going for Ireland, Monk's message for his coming to England put a stop to his journey to Calais; and soon after came on the restoration of the king.

He came over with his majesty from Holland; and, in September 1660, was created viscount Shannon, in the county of Limerick; was sworn of the privy council; made captain of a troop of horse, 7 February 1660; received two grants of lands under the acts of settlements; and August 20, 1672, was instituted governor of the city and county of the city of Cork.

The honourable Robert Boyle, by his last will and testament, dated the 18th of July, in the 3d year of king William and queen Mary, 1691: "I give and bequeath unto my dear brother, the lord viscount Shannon, the best watch I shall die possessed of, to put him in mind of my constant kindness and affection, which I endeavoured to express by my voluntary yearly expence, in keeping up the manor house of Stalbridge, without intending to live in it, for his sake." His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Killigrew, and sister of Sir William Killigrew, by whom he had issue two sons, Richard, and Charles; and a daughter, Elizabeth, married to John Jephson, of Moyallow, esquire.

Richard, the eldest son, in 1673, married Elizabeth, only daughter of Sir John Ponsonby, of Waterford, in Ireland, and had issue three sons, Richard, Francis, and John; also a daughter, Elizabeth; and died in the life-time of his father: so that Richard, his eldest son, succeeded his grandfather in the honour of viscount Shannon, &c. The said Richard, before he was twenty years of age, was at the battle of the Boyne; and, in 1693, went over with the duke of Ormond, served in the campaign that year in the Netherlands, and was in the battle of Landen, July 19, where his grace was taken prisoner; and his lordship behaved so well, that, on the 16th February following, he was constituted cornet of horse. He after served in the several campaigns in the Netherlands, till the peace of Ryswick; and in 1697, was made major in the second troop of horse-guards, under the command of the duke of Ormond. On the 11th of Feb. 1701-2, in the first year of queen Anne, he was constituted col. of prince George's regiment of marines; and in June following, embarked with his regiment on the expedition to Calais, commanded by the duke of Ormond. On their return, the duke receiving intelligence of the French and Spanish fleets being with the galleons in the bay of Vigo, he had the command of the grenadiers that attacked and carried the fort of Rodendallo. His gallant behaviour and conduct in that memorable action induced the duke of Ormond to send him express to the queen with the particulars of his success; of which the following account is given in our Gazette.

The said letters, published by authority, bore date from Vigo, October 16, 1702; reciting, “ That on the resolution of a general council of war, the army should land, and attack the fort on the south side of the Rodendallo, and from thence where it should be most useful for annoying the enemy. And pursuant thereunto, the duke of Ormond landed, with great diligence and expedition, about two thousand men on the south side of the river; and ordered the grenadiers to march, under the command of lord viscount Shannon, directly to the fort that guards the entrance of the harbour, where the boom lay; which he performed with great gallantry. There appeared about eight thousand foot between the fort and the hills; but, on the advance of our men, after a little skirmish with the grenadiers, they retired; who likewise pushed another party of the enemy, and, following them to the fort, possessed themselves of the lower battery. After which the enemy retired into a stone castle, and there fired on our men for some little time: but, opening the gate with intent to make a sally, the grenadiers, headed by the lord viscount Shannon, forced into the castle, and possessed themselves of it; in which were three hundred French marines, fifty Spaniards, and forty guns. This success contributed greatly to admiral Hopson's breaking and cutting the boom, whereby the queen's ships got into the harbour.”

It is further recited, that the attack was made with great resolution and bravery, and the good conduct of the land forces contributed much to the success. Colonel Pierce, who commanded next to lord Shannon, was wounded with a cannon-shot in the thigh; Mr. Talmash, colonel Seymour, and colonel Newton, were also wounded; and a lieutenant of the grenadiers, a lieutenant of lord Shannon's regiment, with about thirty soldiers, were killed.

On 24 August, 1704, his lordship was made brigadier-general of her majesty's forces; on 1 Jan. 1706-7, a major-general; and on 1 Jan. 1708-9, lieutenant-general of her majesty's forces; and, with the earl of Stair, William Steuart, Sir Richard Temple, and W. Tatton, were appointed by her majesty to inspect and regulate the cloathing of the army; and the accounts thereof. On the conclusion of the peace in the reign of queen Anne, his regiment was broke 25 December, 1713; and, on the accession of king George I. he was constituted colonel of the twenty-fifth regiment of foot, 27 January, 1714-15. On 17 of June, his majesty conferred on him a regiment of horse; and on the 9th of March, 1726-7, he was constituted colonel and captain of the fourth troop of horse-guards. On 27 October, 1735, he was made general of the horse; and on a promotion of general officers, July 17, 1739, his lordship was constituted field marshal of all his majesty's forces. His lordship, in 1720, was constituted general and commander in chief of all his majesty's forces in Ireland; and was one of the lords justices of that kingdom, and commander in chief of all his majesty's forces there, till his decease. He died at his house in Arlington-street, St. James's, on Saturday, December 20, 1740, and was buried at Walton upon Thames, in Surry. His death was greatly lamented; being of a most affable deportment, and possessed of very amiable qualities and virtues.

His lordship's first lady was Mary, widow of Roger, earl of Orrery, by whom he had no issue. He secondly married Grace, daughter and coheir of John Senhouse, of Nether-hall, in the county of Cumberland, esquire, and by her, who survived him, and died May 10, 1755, left an only daughter, named Grace, sole heir to his estate, who was in November, 1744, married to the right honourable Charles, earl of Middlesex, now duke of Dorset, but died May 10, 1763, before his grace's accession to the dukedom.

Robert Boyle, the youngest son, tho' dignified with no title of honour (as it is remarkable all his other brothers, who arrived to years of maturity, were) yet became no less famous than the rest, for many rare and eminent qualities; as if providence designed every branch of this noble stem to do good in their generation, and leave an example for our imitation. His life and studies were an ornament to our nation; of which a short abstract taken from Dr. Burnet bishop of Salisbury's sermon at his funeral, is here inserted.

“ The promising blossoms of his great piety and capacity began to appear very early; and after he had passed the trivial schools in Ireland, he studied at Leyden in Holland; from whence he travelled into France, Switzerland, Italy, &c. without receiving the least tincture of the vices of the places, or times. He often owned, that his piety received a great increase by his converse with the godly and learned archbishop Usher, who daily cultivated the hopeful seeds which he foresaw would produce such a glorious harvest. He did for many years so exactly study the holy scriptures in the original languages, that he could readily quote both the Hebrew and Greek; and understood that sacred book so well, that few, whose profession did oblige them to it, could equal him in it.

“ His veneration for the name of God was so profound, that he never pronounced it without a discernible pause. He was constant in his secret addresses at his throne; and in all his enquiries into nature his chief design was, to raise higher thoughts in himself and others, of the greatness, glory, wisdom, and goodness of God: and in that article of his will, relating to the Royal Society, he recommends it to them, and other searchers into physical truths, to refer their attainments to the glory of the great author of nature, and the comfort of mankind.

“ Having possessed himself with such an amiable view of Christianity, separated from the superstition or sourness of parties, he rejoiced in every discovery discovery from nature, which might either illustrate it, or remove objections against it, having always considered it as a system of truths which ought to purify the heart and practice.

"He loved nothing that might lessen that, nor any nicety which occasioned divisions among christians; so that, for the advancement of pure and disinterested Christianity, he left by his will a liberal provision for a certain number of well-digested sermons, on purpose to evince the truth of the christian religion in general, without touching upon sub-divisions among christians in particular. Which are annually preached, and are remembered as Mr. Boyles's Lectures.

"He was so zealous for propagating our holy religion, that he was at the charge of a translation and impression of the New Testament in the Malayan tongue, which he sent over all the East Indies. He gave a noble reward to him who translated Grotius's incomparable book of the Truth of the Christian religion into Arabick; and was at the charge of an impression, which he took care to have distributed where that language obtains. He resolved also to have an impression in the Turkish language; but the company, thinking it became them to do it, suffered him only to contribute his large share. He gave seven hundred pounds towards the charge of the Irish Bible, which he ordered to be distributed in Ireland; and contributed liberally toward the Welch Bible; and to that in Irish, for the Highlands of Scotland.

"He gave in his life three hundred pounds per annum, towards propagating the christian religion in America; and gave one hundred pounds to the East-India company towards their designs of the like nature in the East-Indies; intending a much greater sum, when the work should be set on foot to purpose. And as his zeal was lively toward the greatest concerns of religion, he avoided entering too far into those things, which have weakened and distracted christianity; had an utter aversion to whatever was destructive of morality and charity; and was particularly zealous against all severities and persecutions upon the account of religion.

"He approved of the church of England's doctrine, and never separated from her communion; was charitable in his opinion towards dissenters, and plentifully supplied their necessities; so that as he shut himself up in no party, neither did he shut out any party from him. He had been solicited to take orders, but declined it, conceiving that what he wrote in defence of religion might have more authority, when he did not share in the church's patrimony.

"His charity to those in want, and bounty to learned men, was extraordinary, but without ostentation. He was particularly liberal to persons in distress, without letting them know from whence it came: that for several years his charity exceeded one thousand pounds per annum. And as he had a good estate, he made good use of it; denying himself in all worldly pomp, and applying himself constantly to his studies, and philosophical experiments.

"He was decently cheerful, and had nothing of that moroseness, which philosophers and men of extraordinary devotion are sometimes inclinable to; he made true judgments of men and things; his advices were sound, yet cautious and modest;

and his invention fruitful to suggest good expedients.

"He withdrew early from courts and public affairs; yet was always honourably treated by his princes. He was very sagacious in discerning men's talents; and had such a vast scheme of projects, that he could quickly set those at work, who had leisure and capacity; and, when he saw them engaged, would enable them by a handsome present to carry it on. He was very well versed in Rabbinical learning, and the fathers; had nicely considered the whole controversies of religion, and thoroughly understood the body of divinity; he was absolute master of the mathematicks, and knew the utmost in geometry; geography in its several parts, with history, and books of travels, were his diversion. He was expert in all the parts of physick; but for the history of nature, of the productions of all countries, of the virtues and improvements of plants, ores, and minerals, with their varieties in different climates, he was, perhaps, the perfectest and exactest man in the world; which enabled him to make a greater number of different experiments, than any man that ever we read of; and he delivered his discoveries so exactly, according to truth, that they may be safely depended upon. But his peculiar and beloved study was chemistry; in which he engaged with no avaricious design, but only to find out nature, to see of what principles things were compounded, and into what they might be resolved; and to prepare good medicines, without spending his estate and time upon high pretensions, but kept always within compass.

"He made chemistry much the better, and himself never the worse, or the poorer by it, making it an entertainment to himself, and a charity to others; the products being disposed by his sister Ranelagh, &c. to whom he intrusted it. In short his knowledge and great performances this way are valued through the world, and his numerous writings universally esteemed.

He died December 30, 1691, aged sixty-four; and was buried on the south side of the chancel of St. Martin's in the Fields, Westminster, near the body of his sister Ranelagh; who, as "they were pleasant in their lives, in their deaths they were not divided;" as he did not survive her above a week, the grief for her decease putting him into convulsion-fits, which carried him off.

The countess of Ranelagh lived to a great age, deceasing December 23, 1691; and her character in life was so amiable, that it deserves particular mention. Her learned, virtuous, good brother, the honourable Robert Boyle, made her by his last will and testament one of his executors, with an honourable testimony of her great merits; but she died before him, as already mentioned. She had lived the longest on the most publick scene, and made the greatest figure in all the revolutions of these kingdoms, for above fifty years, of any woman of her age. She employed her whole time, interest, and estate in doing good; and as her great understanding, with the vast esteem she was in, made all persons, in their several turns of grandeur, desire and value her friendship, it gave her a title to use her interest with them for the service of others, though she never made advantage of it to any end or design of her own.

own. She was contented with her fortune; and, though she was twice stript thereof, it made no impression on her; but was the general intercessor for all persons of merit or want. This had in her the better grace, and was both more christian, and more effectual, as it was not limited within any compass of parties or relations. She divided her charities and friendships, her esteem as well as her bounty, with the truest regard to merit, and her own obligations, without any difference on account of opinion. She had a vast reach both of knowledge and apprehension; an universal affability and easiness of access; an humility that descended to the meanest persons and concerns; an obliging kindness and readiness to advise those who had no occasion for any further assistance from her. And, with all these and many other excellent qualities, she had the deepest sense of religion, with the most constant turn of thought and discourse that way, known in that age. Her honourable brother, the celebrated Robert Boyle, lived with her for the greatest part of forty-seven years, with such mutual confidence, as improved the relation under which they were born to the more exalted and endearing name of friend.

We now come to

RICHARD BOYLE, the son and heir aforesaid; who is mentioned in his noble father's True Remembrances, as I have cited; and distinguished himself by many brave actions in Ireland. On the 5th of July, 1635, he was married, in the chapel in Skipton-castle in Craven, to the lady Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Henry Clifford, earl of Cumberland.

In 1642, his lordship and the lord Inchiquin had the command of those forces that defeated the Irish army near Lisfarrul. But, after other successes, a cessation of arms being agreed on with the Irish, September 15, 1643, he carried over his forces into the king's service in England; landed with them near Chester, in February 1643-4; and from thence marching into Dorsetshire, joined his sovereign, who, in consideration of that real assistance and ready supply by him then seasonably given, and by reason of his marriage with the lady Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Henry, earl of Cumberland, by letters patent bearing date on the 4th of November, in the 20th year of his reign, advanced him to the dignity of a baron of this realm, by the title of lord Clifford of Lanesborough, in the county of York.

His lordship continued in England till all places were delivered up to the power of the parliament, and was then suffered to compound for his estate; but going beyond the seas before he had perfected his composition, the house of commons, in January 1646, ordered a committee to consider of several debts owing by the earl of Cork.

This noble earl was serviceable in the restoration of king Charles II. who, in consideration of his faithful services, both in England and Ireland, as also for the great merits of the said Henry, earl of Cumberland, was pleased to create him, by other letters patent bearing date the 20th of March, in the 16th year of his reign, earl of Burlington, alias Bridlington, in the county of York. The 13th of March, 1666, he was constituted lord lieutenant of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and of the city of York, and county of the same; also on the 2d of February, 1679, custos rotulorum thereof. In 1689, in king James's parliament in Ireland, he was attainted; but king William called his lordship to his privy council; and confirmed him in his post of lord high treasurer of Ireland. This earl died, in the eighty-sixth year of his age, on the 15th of January, 1697-8; and by Elizabeth, his wife, aforesaid (who died on the 6th of January, 1690) had issue three sons and five daughters, viz.

1. Francis Boyle, baptized April 8, 1636, who died young.

2. Charles Boyle, lord Clifford.

3. Richard Boyle, third son, who going to sea a volunteer against the Dutch, in the same ship with his royal highness the duke of York, lost his life with the earl of Falmouth and the lord Muskerry, who fell all three by one cannon shot, in the great engagement, June 3, 1665, in Solebay.

The daughters were,

1. Frances Boyle, married first to Sir Henry Courtney, knt. secondly to Wentworth Dillon, earl of Roscommon, in Ireland.

2. Catherine Boyle, who died in her childhood.

3. Elizabeth Boyle, married to Nicholas Tuf-ton, earl of Thanet.

4. Anne Boyle, married to Edward, earl of Sandwich.

5. Henrietta Boyle, married to Laurence Hyde, earl of Rochester.

CHARLES BOYLE, his second, but eldest surviving son, in 1 William and Mary, was called up to the house of peers by the title of lord Clifford, of Lanesborough, and died in the life-time of his father, on the 12th of October, 1694. He married first Jane, the youngest daughter and coheir to William, duke of Somerset, by whom he had issue four sons and six daughters,

1. Richard Boyle, who died April 9, 1675.

2. Charles Boyle, who afterwards succeeded in the earldom.

3. Henry Boyle, principal secretary of state in the reign of queen Anne, who was created a peer of this realm, by the title of lord Carleton, October 26, 1714, 1 George I. and died unmarried.

4. William Boyle, who died in his infancy.

The daughters were,

1. Frances, who died young.

2. Elizabeth, married to James, earl of Barrimore, of the kingdom of Ireland.

3. Jane, died young.

4. Mary, was married to James, duke of Queensberry, in Scotland, after duke of Dover in England.

5. Arabella, wedded to Henry Petty, earl of Shelburn, in Ireland.

6. Frances, died in her childhood.

The lady, their mother, departed this life on the 23d of November, 1679, aged forty-two years, four months, and seventeen days: and on the 8th of December following, was buried in St. Nicholas's chapel, in Westminster-abbey.

Whereupon this Charles, lord Clifford, married to his second wife, Arethusa, sixth daughter of George, earl of Berkeley, by whom he had issue one daughter, named Arethusa, married to James Vernon, esquire, son of James Vernon,

The eldest son,

CHARLES BOYLE, succeeded his grandfather, Richard, earl of Burlington, and was one of the gentlemen of the bedchamber to king William, and sworn of his privy council; and September 29, 1699, constituted lord lieutenant of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and appointed one of the commissioners to treat of an union with Scotland, in the reign of queen Anne. His lordship married Juliana, sole daughter and heir to Henry Noel, second son of Edward, viscount Campden; and departed this life, universally lamented, on February 9, 1703-4; his lady surviving, who died in the seventy-third year of her age, October 17, 1750, and on the 31st of the same month was carried to be interred by her lord at Lanesborough, in Yorkshire; leaving Richard, earl of Burlington, and six daughters,

1. Mary, died young.
2. Elizabeth, married August 28, 1719, to Sir Henry Bedingfield, of Oxborough, in Norfolk, baronet.
3. Catharine, died young.
4. Juliana, to Charles, lord Bruce, son and heir apparent of Thomas, earl of Ailesbury.
5. Jane.
6. Henrietta, wedded to the honourable Henry Boyle, of Castle-Martyr, in the kingdom of Ireland, grandson of Roger, earl of Orrery, before-mentioned.

Which

RICHARD BOYLE, earl of Burlington, born April 25, 1695, was married March 21, 1727, to Dorothy Savile, eldest of the two daughters and coheirs of William Savile, marquis of Halifax; by whom he had issue three daughters,

1. Dorothy, born May 14, 1724, and married October 10, 1741, to George, earl of Euston, son and heir apparent to his grace Charles, duke of Grafton, but died, leaving no issue by him, in April, 1742.
2. Juliana, born April 21, 1727, died March 11, 1737.
3. Charlotte, born in the year 1731, married to William, marquis of Hartington, son and heir apparent of his grace William, duke of Devonshire, by whom she had three sons and a daughter, and died December 8, 1754.

His lordship, on June 18, 1730, was installed one of the knights companions of the most noble order of the Garter; and in the 18th stall in St. George's chapel at Windsor, is a plate of his arms, and the following inscription under it:

Du tres noble et puissant Seigneur, Richard Boyle, Comte de Burlington, et aussi de Cork, Visconte de Dungarvan et Kinalmeaky en Ireland, Baron Clifford de Londesburgh, et aussi Baron Boyle de Youghall, et Baron de Bandon Ireland, grand trisorier d'Ireland, seigneur lieutenant et garde des rolles de l'Occidental Riding de York, seigneur lieutenant de la citè, province ou aynsty de York, vice-admiral de Yorkshire, garde des rolles du Septentrional Riding de Yorkshire, gouverneur en chéf de la province de Cork, et de la citè et province de la citè de Cork, connestable et senéchal du chateau, seigneurie et de l'honneur de Knaresburgh, conseiller du roy en son conseil privé, chevalier du tres noble ordre de la jarretiere, installe au chateau de Windsor, le 18 jour de Juin, 1730.

On the 21st of June, 1731, his lordship was constituted captain of the honourable band of gentlemen-pensioners. In 1732, his lordship being at the city of York, the lord-mayor, aldermen, &c. sent a deputation to return their thanks to him for the favour he had done them in building their assembly-room, and other benefactions to the city, and to beg his lordship's leave to present him with the freedom thereof; whereunto giving his consent, they presented him with it in a gold box. In 1733, he resigned his place of captain of the band of pensioners. His lordship afterwards lived retired, busying himself in his fine gardens at Chiswick, and employing himself in architecture, wherein he was consulted by several of the nobility, and was a benefactor towards the building of several public edifices. He departed this life at his seat at Chiswick, December 3, 1750; and seven days after his remains were carried from his house in Piccadilly, to be interred at Lanesborough; and in him his English honours became extinct. His lordship's titles in Ireland devolved on his heir male, the right honourable John, father to the late and present earls of Cork, and of Orrery, lord viscount Dungarvan, baron Boyle of Marston, in the kingdom of England, baron of Youghall, and baron of Broghill. We shall therefore now proceed to treat of Roger, the fifth son of Richard, earl of Cork, created by Charles I. earl of Orrery, and lord Broghill. Which ROGER BOYLE was knighted before he was seven years of age, viz. on April 7, 1628; and at the intercession of his father, the earl of Cork, king Charles I. by letters patent, bearing date February 28 following, created him a peer of the kingdom of Ireland, by the stile and title of lord Broghill, baron of Broghill, in the county of Cork, afterwards erected into a lordship and manor. After his education in the college of Dublin, he was sent to travel; and, returning to the English court in 1639, appeared so accomplished, that Algernon, earl of Northumberland, conferred on him the command of his own troop of horse, in that expedition into the North of England against the Scots.

In 1641 he had the command of a troop of horse raised by his father the earl of Cork, and distinguished himself in several encounters with the Irish rebels. On the 4th of July, 1642, (as observed in the history of Ireland) the lord Broghill, on his return from the relief of Knockmore, met a party of rebels strongly posted near Capoquin; and though he had but sixty horse, and one hundred and forty foot, yet he boldly charged them, killed two of their best captains, and two hundred of their soldiers, with very little loss. He was afterwards, the same year, in the battle of Liscarrol. He, with three of his brothers, by their gallant behaviour, obtained a compleat victory over the rebels, headed by six lords of their party. In the engagement, his brother, the lord Kinalmeaky, was killed; and his lordship ventured so far, that he was taken prisoner, but immediately rescued by the courage of some of his own men. His lordship acted with vigour against them, till the cessation of of arms, 15 September, 1643, which he earnestly opposed, foreseeing it would be destructive to the protestant interest in Ireland. On which account his lordship was at the head of a petition of the protestants at Munster, to the marquis of Ormond, lieutenant general, and the council of Ireland, setting forth, with great weight, their grievances, and beseeching them to call to mind, that his majesty gave his royal assent to an act of parliament, obliging himself not to grant any pardon or terms of peace to the rebels, without the consent of his parliament of England. And being afterwards daily alarmed with plots of the papists, who, among other contrivances, had formed a design on the city of Cork; he, with the earl of Inchiquin, Sir William Fenton, and others, did, on the 18th of July, 1644, write to his majesty, "That no peace could be concluded with the Irish rebels, which would not bring unto his majesty, and the English in general, a far greater prejudice, than the shew of a peace there would bring them advantage, &c. And thereupon besought him, that he would not so much regard so inconsiderable a handful of people as they were, as to purchase but a seeming security, by leaving thereby the protestant religion, in all likelihood, to be extirpated, and his majesty obnoxious to the loss of that kingdom; further, beseeching his majesty, that he would be pleased to proclaim again the Irish to be rebels, and not to pardon those who have committed so many barbarous crimes, that they are as far above description, as they are short of honesty; the Irish professing they had his majesty's commission for what they did. The true sense of which devilish aspersions cast upon his majesty, with other reasons, made them resolve to die a thousand deaths, rather than condescend to any peace, referring themselves in other things to their declaration."

But such a dissatisfactory answer had they from the king, that the lord Broghill (who was made governor of Limerick) with the earl of Inchiquin, put themselves under the protection of the parliament, and, by their courage and conduct, drove the rebels out of most of the port-towns in Munster, and other considerable places there, and formed a body of twelve thousand men in arms. His particular successes against the rebels are recited in Whitlock's Memorials, Cox's History of Ireland, &c. and rendered him so considerable, that Cromwell cared him by all the arts he was master of, and received him as his intimate friend.

In a manuscript account of his life, wrote by Mr. Love, and communicated to Mr. Collins, by the late earl of Orrery, the circumstances of Cromwell's bringing him over to his interests are thus related: "My lord did me the honour to converse more intimately with me, than is easily credible, and to honour me with the whole of that great, that greatest instance of divine providence (tho' at first with the greatest regret) the wisdom of God led him thro."

"On the martyrdom of king Charles I. my lord retired to a private life, to his house at Marston-Bigot, near Frome, in the West of England, where he had a letter from the royal orphan, king Charles II. then in exile: that his majesty had provided two small ships to carry him to Ireland; that he was sensible his lordship was beloved, and could influence the southern protestants of Ireland; and that he wanted only my lord Broghill to go with him.

"My lord was pleased with the king's command, and immediately sent, in answer,

"That he hoped to be very soon with his majesty: that no one in England knew the secret but his wife, and his sister Ranelagh, at whose house, in the Old Mall, he was to come in the dusk, with only four servants (on a certain day) to take his leave of her, and would then set out.

"My lord came, and we no sooner housed, but heard a voice ask for lord Broghill: he thereupon charged his faithful sister with treachery, but her protestation of being innocent tempered him. The messenger, a slightly lieutenant, said the lord general Cromwell sent him to know when and where he might wait on his lordship. My lord answered, they were utter strangers, and therefore sent the messenger back, as if he mistook the name. Cromwell, who was near for the purpose, troubled the lieutenant with several returns. At length, by mutual consent, a meeting was appointed the next morning early in St. James's garden.

"Cromwell was first there, with many officers for the Irish expedition. They both met in the middle of the garden, where all stood back, while he thus began:

"My lord, you owe me the greatest obligation." My lord answered, "if he knew it he would acknowledge it; that he did not owe above one hundred pounds in the city, and believed his creditor required no such bondsman.

"Cromwell said, "It was no such trifle; but body for body to the parliament, who resolved on his life for corresponding with Charles Stuart [so they called the king]. In short, time is precious, &c. Yesterday an express informed the house, that the strong castle of Guernsey is taken: the first papers in secretary Cooper's cabinet were a copy of the king's letter to lord Broghill, and lord Broghill's answer; and here they both are. I have a respite for your life; but the dilemma is short. If you will go with me on this expedition, to reduce the Irish rebels, you may live; otherwise you certainly die."

"'Twas then concluded, that my lord should have liberty to send to the king, and, if the king consented, he would go.

"The king immediately consented; but with a caution, if ever God gave him an opportunity, to remember his allegiance.

"Cromwell and his lordship set out together for Ireland. Oliver made a bloody entrance at Drogheda. The lord Broghill went southward, and reduced Kinsale, Cork, Bandon, and Youghall, without the effusion of blood."

Sir Richard Cox, in his History of Ireland, recites, that the lord Broghill brought the whole county of Cork to join against the rebels; being inhabited by English, who could not endure the thoughts of joining with the Irish against their own countrymen; and therefore all the towns there revolted at once from the marquis of Ormond, and proved very advantageous to Cromwell, who otherwise had been forced to a long and dangerous march to Dublin, or embarked his men on board the fleet, that coasted as he marched. Afterwards the lord Broghill performed another very considerable service, which is thus related: "Whilst Cromwell was besieging Clomell, which proved the hardest task he undertook in Ireland, the titular bishop bishop of Ross had got five thousand men, which were daily increasing, with design to raise the siege; but the lord Broghill, being at Castle-Lyons, had secret intimation from his brother-in-law, general Barry, 'That the Irish had cast off the king's authority, and had put all into the hands of their clergy; and that Ormond, discovering their design, gave liberty to the protestants of his army to treat with Cromwell; and that twenty thousand men would suddenly be in arms, under the command of the bishop of Ross.' Whereupon the lord Broghill posted to Cromwell, and obtaining of him two thousand horse and dragoons, and sixteen hundred foot, he marched with incredible celerity to Carigdroghid, garrisoned by the bishop's forces; and, leaving his foot there, marched with his horse to Maccroom. The Irish, on his approach, fired the castle there, and retired to the rest of their army; which, to the number of five thousand, were in the park. The lord Broghill pursued them, and, coming up with their forces, attacked them with such vigour, that he totally routed them, and took the bishop prisoner; who promised, if he would spare his life, he would cause Carigdroghid to surrender. But, when he was brought to the castle, he advised them to hold it out to the last; whereupon he was immediately hanged. However, his lordship soon after took the castle by a stratagem." Whitlock, reciting this action, says, that on the 24th of May, 1650, letters came from the leaguer before Clomell, that the lord Broghill had slain about seven hundred, took many prisoners, and totally routed the whole party.

Under his lordship's command, another signal victory was obtained by him over the Irish in 1651; gained by his vigilance, conduct, and courage. Ireton was besieging Limerick, and resolved to take it, being the last place of any consideration that held out; and therefore, as Sir Richard Cox observes, he formed an army volant, under the lord Broghill, to encounter the Irish, that distressed them in the siege. The lord Broghill proceeded, with all the briskness and expedition that a brave and diligent captain was capable of, and in a few days came so near the enemy, that they could perceive each other's fires; they being three miles on the south, and his lordship three miles on the north side of Black Water. The Irish army were double his number of horse, and thrice as many foot, as the English; nevertheless Broghill passed the rivers early in the morning, and meeting some Irish gentlemen that were under protection, they told him, they came thither out of curiosity, because of a prophecy, That the last battle in Ireland should be at Knocknacashy; which they supposed would happen, as both armies were so near. Lord Broghill enquired who was to have the victory; they shook their heads, and said The English.

His lordship marched to Knocknacashy; and, the enemy retiring, he marched back again, where he intended to quarter; and then the Irish fell on his rear: so that the battle happened in the very place spoke of in the morning. They fought with great spirit, horse-head to horse-head, sword in hand, till at length the lord Broghill, with the right wing, routed the left wing of the enemy; and then the left wing under major Wallis, valiantly made good their ground; but a fresh party of the Irish falling on him, had like to put the victory in dispute, till his lordship bid his men cry They run, they run; which induced the first rank of the Irish to look back; and those behind, seeing their faces, concluded they were running, and so fled. However, they had a stand of pikes, which stood so firm, that with great difficulty they were broken, and then their whole army were entirely routed, with great slaughter, by a fierce and vigorous pursuit, which lasted till night.

Sir Richard Cox observes of this battle, that it was the last fought in that war according to the Irish prophecy; and that it was fair both before and after the fight, but, during the conflict, there was a great storm of thunder, lightning, and rain; and that amongst the baggage were taken a peck of charms, whereon was written, "This is the print of our lady's foot, and whoever wears it, and says twenty Ave-Maries, shall be free from gun-shot."

Whitlock recites, that the Irish army was commanded by the lord Muskerry, and that the charge was very desperate on both sides; the lord Broghill had a hundred and twenty horsemen shot, thirty killed. That his lordship charged him that led up the opposite wing, and killed him; but the Irish were so numerous, that his own troop, which consisted of gentleman reformadoes, was charged in front, flank, and rear, both by horse and foot; amongst which his lordship was so far engaged, that they offered him quarter, and, upon refusal thereof, they cried, "Kill the fellow in the gold-laced coat," which had been effected, if a lieutenant of his troop had not come in to his rescue, whose horse was killed under him, and himself twice shot; whereby the lord Broghill got off with a dry beating by the pikemen; but his horse received three shots. That the Irish lost six hundred men; but few were taken, besides some officers of the field. That the defeated army had designed conjunction with the Leinster forces, and the relief of Limerick.

The Irish afterwards were so dispirited, that Limerick surrendered; and they never made head again, but were in general reduced. His lordship had several other encounters with the enemy, (recited by Sir Richard Cox, and Whitlock) which were so well conducted, and with such vigilance and intrepidity executed, that victory ever attended him, though he was always engaged with forces very superior to him in number. And it may justly be said, it was owing principally to his lordship's conduct and vigour, that the Irish so soon submitted to the English government.

At the end of the war, his lordship returned to England; being in 1654 elected one of the representatives of the Kingdom of Ireland, to sit that year in the parliament at Westminster; and was carried by Cromwell, and the heads of his party, to engage him in their interest. When the crowns of these kingdoms were, by that parliament, offered to Cromwell, he was desirous of hearing their arguments, to induce his acceptance thereof; and on that occasion, the lord Broghill, being one of the committee sent to him, made two learned speeches in favour of a legal government; which, with others on that subject, were then printed in a small octavo, p. 15 and 67; to which we refer.

Mr.

Mr. Love, in his account of his lordship, hath these further particulars: "Cromwell sent his lordship to Scotland; where, by methods of lenity, he brought that people to a decorum, having dealt with Mr. John Douglass, David Dick, Gallopsy, and Campbell, whom he pleasantly called The four Popes of Scotland. His prudent government opened a passage for general Monk's easy succession.

"Cromwell, not long before he died, began to grow jealous of his lordship, and so narrowly watched him, that, before his return from the Bear tavern at the bridge, where he supped with Cromwell's children (lord Falconbridge and lord Carlisle) the tapster sent him notice of their drinking the king's health."

After Oliver's death, his son Richard, who succeeded, was persuaded by lieutenant general Desborough, a violent man, to summon a council of all the military officers to meet at Wallingford-house. His lordship soon perceived this must end in a flux of blood, and persuaded Richard suddenly to dissolve that dreadful assembly. This put the aspiring general into such a fret, as made England too warm for his lordship; who retired to his country-house, near Cork harbour, in Ireland, having the bare and empty title of master of the ordnance.

"The strange proceedings of the long parliament (called the Rump) gave his lordship hopes that matters began to ripen for the restoring of the royal family. Among other fears, they grew jealous of the lord Broghill, and sent serjeant Steele, lord chancellor, judge Cooke, Corbet, and another, to Dublin, to secure his lordship, if he did not engage for all the protestants of Munster. But he screwed them to the dilemma, either to give him the command of that province, or his private liberty. Being commanded to an antichamber, he overheard Steel very worthily baffle the others, in favour of himself, who only threatened him, and sent him home.

"His lordship (having formerly hinted matters to general Monk) at his return to his country retirement, seeing the government run into wild measures, took that occasion to treat with the chiefs of Munster, such as Broderick, (father of the lord chancellor Broderick, of Ireland) Coulthorp, Clayton, Kyrle, Dillon, Pyne, Denny, King, Foulke, Jephson, Purdon, &c. In a little time he brought them all into his interests, except Wilton, governor of Limerick, whom he ventured at distantly. Wilton assured him, he would be for him, be the design what it would. Thereupon his lordship put to him, 'Suppose a king was to be set up;' Wilton consented to it, and, at his return from his lordship, stopped at Rathcormick (colonel Barry's seat) and thence sent his servant (to prevent my lord's jealousy) giving him assurance under his hand, to his confusion if he was not sincere.

"His lordship thereupon sent his brother, the lord Shannon, with eight lines in a small scrip of paper, nicely quilted in the collar of his doublet, to assure the king, he had five thousand of his protestant subjects, all tried resolute men, at or near Cork, ready to attend his majesty. The lord Shannon found the king at Brussels, who agreed to go to Ireland, and had provided disguises for that purpose: but, in the interim, the king received certain advice, that Monk designed his restoration in England; and, acknowledging lord Broghill's singular loyalty, gave him all assurances of his favour. And, the first time he spoke in council after his restoration, he mentioned his obligations to the lord Broghill, and the protestants of Ireland."

His lordship had the chief care in disposing all those who were in the king's interest in Ireland, to declare for a free parliament. And in January 1659-60, as Sir Richard Cox observes, in his history of that kingdom, surprized the castle of Dublin, and seized those who were entrusted with the government, and sent them to England. After which, their first act was to order a fast and humiliation for their sins; among which the murder of the king was enumerated; and all their actions were suitable: so that they seemed to contend with England, which should be most forward in restoring the king. On the 14th of February they published a memorable declaration for a full and free parliament in Ireland, and the re-admission of the secluded members in the parliament of England. And the convention meeting in Ireland, pursuant to it, on the 14th of March, published a declaration to the same purpose; also, on the 14th of May, accepted of his Majesty's declaration from Breda, of the 14th of April, and cheerfully concurred in his restoration.

On September 5, 1660, in consideration of his services, he was created earl of Orrery, in the kingdom of Ireland; and, at the same time, made lord president of the province of Munster. Also, in October 1660, was declared one of the three lords justices of Ireland, who managed affairs there with great candor and moderation, as observed by the continuator of Sir Richard Baker's chronicle. The next year he had the command of a regiment and an independent company in his majesty's service; and, with John, lord viscount Massareen, was made collector of all such monies as were prescribed by his majesty's declaration of the 30th of November, 1660. Likewise on the 14th of January, 1661, he and the lord chancellor were sworn lords justices, on the death of the earl of Monteath. And, on the 30th of April, 1662, they published an indulgence to dissenters, and continued in the government until the 28th of July, 1662; at which time James, duke of Ormond, was sworn lord lieutenant. The king chiefly entrusted the whole settlement of Ireland to his lordship's conduct; and it is observed by the writer of his life, that the protestants there may bless the day the lord Orrery was born, who confirmed those old soldiers in their possessions, who had given their children liberal education, so that they became professors of law, divinity, and physick.

In the year 1663 he obtained a patent for fairs and markets to be held for ever in his two villages of Rathgogran, called Charleville, and Ballymartra, now Castlemark. And, by his great credit with the king, he some time after procured those two places to be erected into boroughs, which return four members to the present parliament in Ireland; with the nomination of recorders, town-clerks, clerks of the market, and other officers, to him and his heirs for ever.

Being lord president of Munster, where he had full power both civil and military, his lordship was very active in diverting any designs prejudicial to the interest of his country. Sir Richard Cox takes notice, that, in the year 1663, the earl of Orrery discovered to the lord lieutenant a design of the fanatics to seize the castle of Dublin on May 21, whereby it was seasonably prevented. And the writer of his life informs us, that, on the French war, in the year 1667, having intelligence that the duke de Beaufort, admiral of France, was preparing to make a descent on Kinsale, he, with hardly credible application and dispatch, immediately encamped all the militia and standing army of Munster, and brought some of the biggest guns out of his majesty's ships of war, planted batteries along the shore, laid a boom or chain cross the channel to secure the ships in the harbour, and was in a few days so well provided in every particular (being all the time nobly entertained and assisted by Sir Robert Southwell, and attended by all the gentry of Munster) that Monsieur Beaufort gave over his design. Nevertheless, being sensible that, on any war with France, the kingdom lay very much exposed to an invasion; and that as Kinsale was the best harbour throughout his majesty's dominions, yet being without any fortifications, whereby it might protect our ships from foreign enemies; he prevailed with his majesty to permit him to erect a fort there, which was begun about the year 1670, and almost finished in three years time; which in 1678 being reviewed by the duke of Ormond, his grace, in honour of his then majesty, named it Charles-fort, and is now one of the best sea ports in the kingdom.

His lordship and the duke of Ormond had continued in an intimate correspondence from the restoration; but in 1669 a misunderstanding happening between them, he was deprived of the presidentship of Munster about the year 1672. Yet, as a recompence for the loss of that place, his majesty presented him with eight thousand pounds, and mediated a reconciliation between him and the duke of Ormond. His lordship afterwards concerned himself very little in publick affairs, but spent the remainder of his life chiefly in a christian preparation for eternity. He made his last will and testament, September 30, 1676; with a codicil annexed, dated September 18, 1679; and died October 16, 1679, and lies buried at Youghall. By his said will, writing himself "Roger earl of Orrery, governor of his majesty's castle and city of Limerick, major general of his majesty's army in Ireland, and one of his majesty's most honourable privy council of England and Ireland. First, I humbly commit my soul to Almighty God, hoping only in his mercy, through faith in the meritorious death of my Redeemer, the Lord Jesus Christ, to be made a blessed partaker of the eternal happiness which he hath purchased with his blood for all those who trust in him, and obey his word. And my body, if I shall die in the province of Munster, I desire may be decently buried in the collegiate church at Youghall, in that isle or part thereof, where my dear deceased father erected a monument or tomb, and to be laid at his feet. And I desire my executrix, or overseers, hereafter named, that I may be buried there without vain pomp or ostentation; and that not above one hundred pounds sterling be laid out for a tomb for me."

The rest of his will shews his excellent prudence and judgment in settling his estate, and tender affection to his lady and children. He constitutes Margaret, countess of Orrery (his wife) sole executrix; and overseers, Richard, earl of Cork and Burlington, Francis, lord viscount Shannon, lord bishop of Limerick and Kerry, Henry Howard, esquire, brother to James, earl of Suffolk, Sir Francis Foulk, knight, colonel Edward Villiers, his brother-in-law, Standish Hartstong, esquire, William Worth, esquire, and Dr. Jeremy Hall.

He enjoyed very great employments with an universal reputation; courted and respected by all parties: for, however he might temporize under Cromwell's government, it is rather an argument of his prudence, than of his disloyalty, considering the suspicions he lay under by the discovery of his design to engage with the king. His personal courage he had manifested in several encounters, and was little inferior to any of the greatest captains of that age in military experience. He wrote four plays in heroic verse, amongst which is that of Mustapha, esteemed one of the best performances in the last century. He was also a man of great wit and solid sense; serious in his whole deportment, tho' easy and affable to the meanest persons; and so pleasant, and withal so instructing, in his conversation, that whatever he said, at once delighted and informed the mind. The writer of his life says, his table was a noble academy of pleasure, divinity, and morality; and that it was really esteemed an honour for a young nobleman, country-squire, divine, gentleman, or merchant, to tell what my lord of Orrery discoursed on at dinner. He was sincere in the exercise of the protestant religion; and his charity appears in erecting a noble hospital in his own country, to maintain six poor men forever. He was (as Wood in his Fasti Oxonienses observes) "a great poet, statesman, soldier, and great every thing, which merits the name of great and good." His brother, the celebrated Robert Boyle, esquire, dedicated to him, Some considerations touching the style of the Holy Scriptures; which shews the excellency of that great philosopher, and the just opinion he had of the earl his brother: therefore an extract of it will, I hope, be entertaining to my readers, being some addition to his character. He begins his address,

"My dearest Brother,

"That sacred book, which furnishes our preachers both with their texts, and a great part of their discourses on them, being the subject about which I am to entertain you, I presume it will not much surprize you, if what I shall say, in representing to you some considerations on that book, relish more of a sermon, than of a letter of compliment." After setting forth the usefulness of his treatise, he invites his lordship to rescue so excellent a theme as the Scripture from so dull a pen as his, by employing his happy one in its defence and celebration; enforcing it as follows:

"And certainly, your pen having no less served your fame, than either your sword or your employments (how high soever) it could not but bring the Scripture more than a few of the most witty and illustrious votaries, if that eloquence were employed to enamour them of that divine book, that hath made them so generally in love with your celebrated Parthenissa. I will not represent to you so pious an exercise of your rhetorick and muse, as a duty, for fear of lessening the disinterestedness of the employment I recommend to you, by implying you cannot decline it without a fault. I shall rather invite your pen to prefer itself to, and grace religious subjects, by assuring you that as there is none more worthy of your pen, so there are few pens more likely to succeed upon some of them than yours. Those handsome essays your muse hath charmed me with upon some parts of the Bible, have given me longings, equally great and just, to see her, by a devotedness to such heavenly themes, as happy in the choice of her subjects, as she is wont to be in the embellishing of them, and to have her make that her chief employment, wherein, 'tis best to do, what she doth always, succeed well." And proceeding further in his discourse on that subject, he recites, "Towards the latter end of the ensuing papers, you will find something said to persuade our Theophilus, that the choicest poetical and rhetorical ornaments may, without injury to their lustre, be employed about such subjects as may be chosen in the Scripture: but more and better things, to the same purpose, have since been said by our ingenious friend, Mr. Cowley; who not only has employed much eloquence to persuade that truth in his preface to his poems, but has in one of them given a noble example, and consequently a proof of it: I need not tell you, I mean his Davideis ; a work and way of writing, which, since your muse has already thought fit to celebrate, I hope she will hereafter think fit to imitate: and this I wish the more earnestly, because it hath been observed that secular persons of quality are generally much successfuller in writing of religion (to gentlemen especially) than schoolasticks, or men in orders; not only because their style and way of writing is observed to have in it something pleasing, je-ne-sçay-quoy , something of easy, genuine, and handsome, that is peculiar to it, (differing from regular eloquence, as a good mien doth from beauty) and relishes of the native gracefulness wont to attend on what they do or say; but because their writings attract more readers, by the authors conspicuousness, and make deeper impressions on them, by being supposed more disinterested, and looked upon, not as suggested by their profession or self-ends, but as the sincere dictates of their unbridled souls." He concludes, "My dearest brother, if my concern for religion and you have made me importunate in appearing so eagerly solicitous to see your applauded pen sanctified by, and adorn the best of subjects: to engage you to which, if the ensuing discourse may but be so fortunate, as in any degree, or upon any score, to contribute any thing, I shall either not esteem it a trifle, or not regret the having written it."

This noble earl married Margaret Howard, daughter to Theophilus, earl of Suffolk, who is highly commended by the writer before-mentioned, for unaffected piety, love to her lord, and sweetness of temper.

He had issue by her two sons,

1. Roger Boyle, second earl of Orrery.
2. Henry Boyle, who had his house plundered, and was himself carried prisoner to Cork, by the Irish rebels, June 26, 1688; but, escaping, was constituted lieutenant-colonel of the duke of Schomberg's regiment, and went over to Ireland with king William, was at the battle of the Boyne, and died in Flanders in 1691; leaving issue by his wife Mary, daughter to Murrough, earl of Inchiquin, four sons and two daughters; 1. Roger, who died in 1705 unmarried. 2. Henry, seated at Castle-Martyr, in the kingdom of Ireland, who married Henrietta, daughter to Charles, earl of Burlington, and was speaker of the house of commons in Ireland, one of the three lords justices, and chancellor of the exchequer of that kingdom; but, in April 1754, was removed. On the 20th of March 1756, he was created viscount Shannon. He had issue by his lady (who died in 1746) six sons and three daughters; Richard, Henry, Walsingham, William, Charles, Robert, Juliana, Henrietta, and Jane. 3. Charles, who was captain of the ship Strumbulo. And 4. William, who was captain in duke Schomberg's regiment of horse, and married the only daughter of the celebrated Sir Samuel Garth. His two daughters were Elizabeth, who died without issue, and Margaret, married to Joseph Dean, esq; and died in 1747.

Also five daughters,

1. Elizabeth, married to Foliot Wingfield, lord viscount Powerscourt, who died in 1709 without issue.
2. Anne, who died young.
3. Margaret, married to William O'Brien, earl of Inchiquin, governor of Jamaica.
4. Catharine, wife of Richard Bret, of the county of Somerset, esquire, and deceasing in the 28th year of her age, on the 3d of September, 1681, was buried at Richmond, in Surry.
5. Barbara, married to Arthur Chichester, earl of Donegal, but died before him, without issue.

ROGER BOYLE, second earl of Orrery, was vice-president of Munster, as appears by a bill drawn on him by the earl of Orrery, his father, for four hundred and ten pounds sterling, dated at London, March 16, 1668, and thus addressed, "To the lord Broghill, Vice-President of Munster." Accepted the 6th of April, 1669, and paid the 3d of June following. He is characterized by the writer of his father's life to have been a person of a most refined temper; and that, perceiving the vanity of too great application in state affairs, he led a retired life to his death, in the month of September, 1688; having had issue by his wife Mary, daughter, to Richard Sackville, earl of Dorset, (great-grandfather to the present duke of Dorset) three sons and two daughters: whereof Roger and Elizabeth died young; and those who survived to maturity, were, Lionel and Charles, successively earls of Orrery; and Mary, who was married to Clotworthy Upton, of the kingdom of Ireland, esquire, and died without issue in 1694.

LIONEL BOYLE, earl of Orrery, who succeeded his father, was not of age when he died. He was first sent to Utrecht for education, and from thence set out on his travels through France and Italy. His seat called Charleville, where Roger, first lord Orrery, built one of the finest and largest houses in Ireland, was burnt in 1690. The duke of Berwick, in king James II's wars, in October 1690, dined in the house, and then ordered it to be burnt, giving the furniture to be pillaged by the soldiers; tho' at that time Lionel, earl of Orrery, was a minor in England, and could have committed no offence towards either party: but being looked upon as a garrison, and a very strong hold, was the occasion of its demolition. His lordship was likewise a further sufferer by king James's

James's forces ravaging his estate. After he came of age, he took his seat in the parliament of Ireland, June 15, 1697. He married Elizabeth, natural daughter of Charles Sackville, earl of Dorset; and dying without issue on the 23d of August, 1703, was succeeded in honour and estate by Charles, his only brother and heir: and his lady was afterwards married to Richard Boyle, late lord viscount Shannon. Which,

(First Lord) CHARLES BOYLE, earl of Orrery, was born at Little Chelsea, in August 1676, and, in consideration of his great merits and services, was created a peer of Great Britain, by her majesty queen Anne, on September 5, 1711, by the style and title of lord Boyle, baron of Marston, in Somersetshire; a lordship descended to him from his great-grandfather, the earl of Cork. The preamble to the patent has been thus translated:

"As it is a glorious and honourable thing to have a place among the peers of our kingdom of Great Britain, so are we firmly determined to confer such great honours upon none, but who shall again add some splendor to the illustrious order of our nobility; nor shall we seem to depart from this resolution, when we call our well-beloved and very faithful cousin and counsellor, Charles, earl of Orrery, in our kingdom of Ireland, to sit in the august assembly of our British lords: for he is sprung from that stem, which (having spread itself over England and Ireland) does at this time boast of several branches of noblemen; and which has produced a race, either extraordinary for human literature, or highly renowned for their most profound knowledge in natural philosophy. Excited by the examples of his family, and the glory which he has derived from his ancestors, he has cultivated and adorned his mind in the most useful learning, even from his youth. To these studies he has diligently applied himself; with these he has been delighted; yet, when our affairs required him, he has suffered himself to be withdrawn from his learned retirement; and, the war daily increasing, he expressed an equal desire and readiness to discharge the employment of a soldier. But, when we understood that he had also a genius capable of managing political affairs, we sent him our envoy to the States of Brabant and Flanders, with full commission to treat of the most important concerns. In the administration of this province, he has approved himself with very great praise, and has given us single instances of his ability in negotiations, as of his military valour. Since, indeed, on both accounts, he is entitled to some mark of our favour, we have thought that he, who was born a peer of our kingdom of Ireland, should enjoy his deserved degree of honour in that of Great Britain. Know ye, &c."

His lordship had academical education in Christ-church college in Oxford, and applied himself so closely to his studies, that he impaired his constitution. "Dr. Aldrich, the head of that society of which he was a member, observing his uncommon application and thirst after learning, conceived a very particular esteem for him, and drew up for his use that Compendium of Logick, which is now read at Christ-church, and in which he calls him, The great ornament of our college."

Whilst he was a student, he translated the life of Lysander, as it now stands in our English Plutarch's Lives. And, being a good Grecian, he afterwards set forth a new edition of the Epistles of Phalaris, which brought on him a controversy with Dr. Bentley, much talked of by the critics of that time, and occasioned the publication of many books and pamphlets. And, besides what he wrote in that dispute, he was author of a comedy, with this title, As you find it; and of some particular copies of verses, which discover his wit, good sense, and poetical genius.

After he left Christ-church, he was, in the 12th of king William, chosen member of parliament for Huntingdon, as also in that called the year after; and in three successive parliaments in the reign of queen Anne.

On his brother Lionel's death, in 1703, he became earl of Orrery, had the command of a regiment of foot conferred on him, March 1, 1703-4; and, on October 13, 1705, was elected one of the knights of the order of St. Andrew, or the Thistle. In March 1705-6, he married Elizabeth Cecil, daughter to John, earl of Exeter, by Anne, his wife, only sister of William, duke of Devonshire; which lady died within a few years after her marriage, leaving issue by him an only son, John, afterwards earl of Orrery, born January 2, 1706-7.

His lordship was constituted brigadier general of her majesty's forces, August 27, 1709; and, on January 2 following, major general of the foot. His lordship with his regiment made several campaigns under the duke of Marlborough, and, among other services, was, in 1709, at the battle of Tanieres, wherein the English suffered more than in any engagement in that war; having attacked the enemy in their intrenchments, and the fight so obstinate, and the slaughter so great, that the slain and wounded on both sides were computed at thirty thousand men. His lordship led on his regiment, with the utmost gallantry, where the action was hottest, and where most of his men fell on each side of him.

On his return to England, his signal services were distinguished, in promoting him, on December 8, 1710, to be colonel of the royal regiment of North British fusiliers; and, on the 11th of January, 1710-11, he was declared envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States of Brabant and Flanders; also, on the 9th of February following, was sworn of her majesty's most honourable privy council in England.

The treaty of Utrecht being near a conclusion whilst his lordship resided at Brussels, the magistrates knowing they were soon to become the emperor's subjects, and that the queen of England would have nothing to do with them, they took the liberty to shew less respect to her minister, than they had before done. But the earl of Orrery, looking on their behaviour as an indignity to the crown of Great Britain, managed with so much resolution and dexterity, that he got every one of them turned out of their posts.

On the accession of George I. to the throne, his lordship was not only continued in his command of the army, but made one of the lords of the bedchamber to the king, October 16, 1714; and on the removal of the duke of Ormond, was, the 3d of December, 1714, constituted lord lieutenant of the county of Somerset, and custos rotularum lorum of the same; likewise, on the 12th of the same month, was among the lieutenant generals that were appointed of the new board of general officers. In 1716 he resigned his post of the bed-chamber, and his regiment was taken from him. In 1722 he was committed prisoner to the Tower, on suspicion of high-treason; and the habeas corpus act being suspended, was under confinement six months, and then admitted to bail; the earl of Burlington, and Henry Boyle, lord Carlton, his relations, entering into a recognizance of twenty thousand pounds each for his appearance; and his lordship himself into a recognizance of thirty thousand pounds more. His lordship died, after a short indisposition, on the 28th of August, 1730, in the fifty-fifth year of his age. Among other shining accomplishments, he was well versed in the mathematics, and had a genius for mechanics, whereof the astronomical instrument that bears the name of the Orrery is an undeniable proof, and has met with an universal reception. He bought and read whatever was published in physic or medicine, and engaged many correspondents in foreign parts to transmit to him, from time to time, an account of the drugs and herbs in esteem among their respective practitioners. The attention he paid to these enquiries enabled him frequently to prescribe, with success, to many of his friends. It is a matter of doubt, whether his private or public character was most amiable: suffice it to say, that strict honour and exemplary integrity attended him both at home and abroad.

His only son,

(Second Lord) JOHN BOYLE, born January 2, 1706-7, succeeded as fifth earl of Orrery, and second lord Boyle of Marston; and, on the 3d of December, 1753, upon the decease of Richard Boyle, earl of Burlington, succeeded to the Irish honours of earl of Cork, viscount Dungarvan, and lord Boyle, baron of Youghall.

On the 9th of May, 1728, he married Harriot, third and youngest daughter of George Hamilton, earl of Orkney, and by her ladyship, who departing this life, August 22, 1732, was buried at Britwell, had issue a daughter, Elizabeth, born May 7, 1731, married to Thomas Worsley, of Pile, in the county of Southampton, and two sons,

1. Charles Boyle, called viscount Dungarvan, born January 27, 1728-9, who married May 11, 1753, Susannah, daughter of Henry Hoare, esq; of Stourton castle, in Wiltshire, and by this lady, who after his decease married Thomas, present lord Bruce, of Tottenham, Wilts, had issue a son, Henry Boyle, born January 19, 1754, who died at two years of age; and a daughter, Henrietta-Francis, born October 2, 1755. This gentleman died in the life-time of his father, September 16, 1759, and was buried at Froome.

2. Hamilton Boyle, successor to his father.

His lordship married secondly, June 30, 1738, Margaret, daughter of John Hamilton, of Caledon, in the county of Tyrone, in Ireland, esquire, and by her, who died November 24, 1762, and was buried at Froome, had issue two daughters,

Catherine-Agnes, who died an infant, and Lucy, born at Marston, May 27, 1744, married July 10, 1765, to George Byng, viscount Torrington; also a son, Edmund Boyle, successor to his half-brother in the honours, &c. of this family.

This nobleman was very eminent in the republic of letters, and intimately connected with men of the most distinguished abilities. His excellent translation of Pliny's Epistle will ever do honour to his memory, as an elegant writer, no less than his remarks on the life and writings of his near and dear friend Dr. Jonathan Swift. How far the greatness of his genius in the latter publication may atone for the decrease of friendship to the deceased dean, is not our province to determine. Departing this life on the 23d of November, 1763, his lordship's remains were interred at Froome, and his honours devolved upon his eldest son, (Third Lord) HAMILTON BOYLE (born February 3, 1729-30) who enjoyed them but a few months. At his decease, January 17, 1764, for want of issue, his lordship having never been married, they were inherited by his half brother, (Fourth and present Lord) EDMUND BOYLE, born at Marston, December 2, 1742.

His lordship married August 31, 1764, Ann, daughter of Killand Courtney, of Pemsford, in the county of Devon, and has issue,

1. John-Richard Boyle, born May 27, 1765.
2. Louisa-Isabella, born August 10, 1766.

H A Y, Baron H A Y.

GENEALOGISTS are much puzzled about the origin of the several families which bear the surname of Hay, and are settled in various parts of Europe. Some writers are very fond of deducing every family, they possibly can, from one or other of the Norman adventurers, who attended William the Conqueror into England in 1066; and true it is, that their descendants at this day are exceeding numerous. They tell you that in Normandy, there were lands and a lordship denominated Hay, and that the family and the lands derived the name the one from the other; but which was the giver, which was the receiver, is not to be determined. From that country came several who bore that name, and partaking of the Conqueror's bounty after the conquest, settled in this country. From these, it is possible, some who bear the same name in our days may be descended, but not all: for in North Britain, this name was well known near ninety years before the Norman invasion. The Scottish historians concur in relating the following particulars: "In the reign of Kenneth III. and the year 980, when the Danes had invaded Scotland, and prevailed in the battle of Lancarty, near Perth, the Scots were worsted, and gave way; and in their flight, through a narrow pass, were stopt by a countryman and his two sons, who encouraged them to rally and renew the fight; telling them, it was better and more honourable to die in the field fighting for their king and country, than to fly and be afterwards killed by the merciless Danes; and upbraided those who would fly like cowards, when all lay at stake: the more timorous stood still, and many of the stout men, who fled more by the desertion of their companions, than want of courage, joined with the old man and his sons to stop the rest, till there was a good number together: the countrymen, who were armed with only what their ploughs furnished, leading them on, and returning upon the Danes, made a furious onset, crying aloud, Help is at Hand; the Danes believing that a fresh army was falling on them, the Scots thereby totally defeated them, and freed their own country from servitude.

"The battle being over, the old man, afterwards known by the name of Hay, was brought to the king, who assembling a parliament at Scoon, gave to the said Hay and his sons, as a just reward of their valour, so much land on the river Tay in the district of Gowry, as a falcon from a man's hand flew over till it settled; which being six miles in length, was afterwards called Errol, and possessed by the family of Hay, till about the middle of the last century, they were sold to pay the debts of William, tenth earl of Errol; some superiorities only being reserved, which still remain in the family. And the king being willing to promote the said Hay and his sons from the rank of plebians to the order of nobility, he assigned them a coat of arms, which was argent three escutcheons gules, to intimate that the father and the two sons had been the three fortunate shields of Scotland."

History is silent for some generations as to the successors of the said Thomas and his sons, and the first on record is William Hay (stiled in public writs Willielmus de la Haya, who lived in David I's. time, which commenced in 1124, and terminated in 1153, and was a great man at the court of his successor Malcolm IV. king of Scotland, to several of whose charters he was a witness, being called Pincerna domini regis. By his wife Julia Juliana, sister of Ranulph de Soulis (at that time one of the most considerable men in Scotland) he left a son,

WILLIAM HAY, (also designed in Latin record, Willielmus de Haya) who made no less a figure in the court of king William, surnamed the Lion, who succeeded to the Scottish throne, on December 10, 1165, than his father had done at that of his predecessor Malcolm IV. He made a grant to the abbey of Cupar, of the lands of Edinpolis, for health of the soul of the before-mentioned king of Scotland, of his uncle Ranulph de Soulis, &c. and obtained from the said king William a charter, erecting his lands of Errol, with their appurtenances, into a barony, for the service of two knights fees. He died before the year 1199, and having wedded Eva, daughter of Alan, Hostiarius domini regis, had by her six sons,

1. Sir David Hay his heir.
2. William Hay, who for the health of his own soul, the souls of Ada his wife, of William his father, Eva his mother, &c. granted to the convent of Capar aforesaid, all the lands which he possessed in the Carse of Gowry, and had got from Sir David his brother for homage and service.
3. John Hay, who is stiled of Ardnaughton, in a donation he made of a Yair, on the river Tay, to the convent of Cupar, with the consent of Peter his son, for the health of the soul of Juliana de Lascells, late his wife.
4. Thomas Hay, who for the health of the soul of king William, and of the souls of William and Eva, his father and mother, of Ada his wife, &c. granted to the same convent a right of fishing upon the river Tay.
5. Robert Hay, } both witnesses to the above
6. Malcolm Hay, } named grant of their brother Thomas.

The eldest son,

Sir DAVID HAY, got a charter from king William last mentioned, of the lands and barony of Errol, and also obtained from king Alexander II. a charter confirming that granted to his father by king king William. He was also a benefactor to the abbey of Cupar, for he made a donation to that convent, with consent of Gilbert, his eldest son, for the soul of king William, the soul of his father William, the soul of Helen his wife, &c. The said Helen was daughter to David, earl of Strathern; and at his death, about the year 1237, he had by her two sons,

1. Gilbert Hay.
2. William Hay, ancestor to the present baron Hay.

SIR GILBERT HAY, who succeeded his father in lands of Errol, and was father of

GILBERT HAY, who died a young man, leaving a son,

SIR GILBERT HAY, heir and successor to his grand-father in the lands of Errol. He adhered faithfully to Robert Bruce, king of Scotland, in all his vicissitudes of fortune, and was a strenuous assertor of the freedom and independency of his native country. After the demise of king Robert, on the ninth of June, 1329, he was no less the faithful and valiant adherent to the cause of his son king David; in whose service he fell at the battle of Halidown Hill, July 19, 1333. The said King Robert, in 1308, being desirous of fixing a lasting mark of esteem upon him, as a reward for his eminent loyalty, conferred upon him, during pleasure, the office of lord high constable of Scotland, then forfeited by John Cumming, fourth earl of Buchan, for his adherence to the party of John Baliol, rival to Robert, for the Scottish crown; and his majesty upon the forfeiture of David de Strathbogie, earl of Athole, who had got the said office conferred on him in 1311, during the king's pleasure, but was outlawed for espousing the interest of the said John Baliol, was pleased to bestow the constabulary of Scotland on his worthy friend this Sir Gilbert de Hay, and his heirs for ever in scodo & hereditate cum hostilagiis (a lodging in every burgh when the parliament sits) ad dictum officium pertinentibus, &c. by charter dated Nov. 12, 1315. The constable's staff, which Robert gave to Sir Gilbert upon that occasion, has been, notwithstanding the iniquity of future times, preserved in the family of Errol ever since, and was never out of Scotland; those used at the coronation procession at London, since the union of the two kingdoms, having been made on purpose for those solemnities. King Robert also granted to Sir Gilbert the barony of Slains, with all its appurtenances, in the county of Aberdeen, which had fallen to the crown, by the forfeiture of the aforesaid earl of Buchan; and that extensive but contiguous estate, has remained with his posterity to this time. His posthumous son

DAVID HAY, was father of

SIR THOMAS HAY, of Errol, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert II. the first Scottish monarch of the surname of Stewart, and his descendants by that princess, several times inter-married with the same royal family. This Thomas's eldest son

SIR WILLIAM HAY, was created lord Hay, of Errol, by his cousin king James, in the year 1427. He married Margaret, daughter to lord Graham, and dying at Turriff in 1434, left two sons, Gilbert, and William. The eldest,

GILBERT HAY, succeeded his father, and marrying Alice, daughter of Sir William Hay, of Yester, ancestor to the marquis of Tweeddale, by her had six sons, and died in 1436. The eldest son, WILLIAM HAY, who succeeded, being a person of singular merit, was by king James II. in 1452, advanced to the dignity of earl of Errol. He died at Slanes in 1461. He married Beatrix, daughter of William Douglas, lord Dalkeith, and by her had Nicholas his heir, and Margaret, married to Sir Alexander Fraser, ancestor to the lord Salton.

NICHOLAS HAY, the second earl of Errol, was one of the privy council to king James III. he marrying Elizabeth Gordon, daughter to the earl of Huntley, and dying at Killimur in 1467, by her left WILLIAM HAY, the third earl of Errol, and ninth high constable of Scotland, who married Jane, daughter of John Stewart, earl of Athol; and dying in 1478, by her left William, who succeeded, and a daughter, Agnes, married to George the second earl of Huntley.

WILLIAM HAY, the fourth earl of Errol, married Elizabeth Lesley, daughter to George the first earl of Rothes, and dying in 1495, left

WILLIAM HAY, the fifth earl of Errol, who in the year 1510, was sheriff of Aberdeen; but on the 9th of September 1513, he was slain with king James IV. and eighty-seven gentlemen of his own family name, at the battle of Flodden. He married to his first wife Christian Lyon, daughter of John the fifth lord Glamis, ancestor to the earl of Strathmore, and by her had William his heir, Sir Thomas Hay, of Logie, and two daughters, of whom Isabel was married to Laurence the first lord Oliphant.

WILLIAM HAY, who was the sixth earl of Errol, was one of the privy council to king James V. and his particular favourite; and he marrying Eleanor Stewart, daughter to John earl of Lennox, by her had William his heir, and Jane, married to Andrew, the ninth earl of Errol.

WILLIAM HAY, the seventh earl of Errol, dying without issue, his estate and honour devolved upon Sir George Hay, of Logie, son and heir of Sir Thomas Hay of the said place, who was second son to William, the fifth earl of Errol, as aforesaid.

GEORGE HAY, the eighth earl of Errol, married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Robertson, laird of Stravan, and by her had four sons and three daughters, whereof Elizabeth was married to William lord Keith, son of William earl Marischal, who died before his father, and Margaret, to Laurence lord Oliphant; and of the sons, which were Andrew, John, George, and Thomas, the latter was parson of Turreff, in the county of Aberdeen; the third dwelt at Adelthun, the second succeeded to an antient family of the Hays of Murchil.

ANDREW HAY, the eldest, succeeding his father in 1553, was the ninth earl of Errol, and one of the privy council to queen Mary. He married to his first wife Jane, only daughter to William the sixth earl of Errol, and by her had three sons, and a daughter, Eleanor, who was married to Alexander Levingston, earl of Linlith-

Linlithgow; and by his second wife, who was Mary, sister of George Sinclair, the fourth earl of Cathness, he had Sir George Hay of Killour, in the county of Perth. Of the three sons of Andrew earl of Errol, by the lady Jane his first wife, which were Alexander, Francis, and Thomas, the eldest died before his father, without issue; whereupon

FRANCIS HAY, the second, became the tenth earl of Errol, his father dying at Slanes in 1585. He was a nobleman of great spirit, but in his religion a zealous Romanist, on which account he was a great sufferer in estate and liberty. On the 3d of October, 1594, he, with George, the first marquis of Huntley, fought the battle of Glenlivet, and routed the forces of the earl of Argyll, who was sent against them. He was afterwards much in favour with king James VI. and was one of the Scots noblemen, who in the year 1604 were commissioned to treat of uniting the two kingdoms. He married to his first wife Mary Stewart, daughter to James the second earl of Murray; and his second was Ann Stewart, daughter to the earl of Athol; but having no issue by either, he married, thirdly, Elizabeth, daughter of William Douglas, earl of Moreton, and by her had four sons and eight daughters; whereof Ann was married to George Seton, the second earl of Winton; Jane, to William Erskin, earl of Mar; Elizabeth, to Hugh lord Semple; Mary, to Walter Scor, earl of Bucclogh; and Sophia, to John viscount Meldrum. Francis, the tenth earl, dying at Bowness, in Buchan, his eldest son, WILLIAM HAY, succeeded in the honour, and assisted at the coronation of king Charles I. he being in great favour with that prince. He married Ann Lyon, daughter of Patrick, the first earl of Kinghorn, ancestor to the earl of Strathmore, and by her had Gilbert his heir, and a daughter Margaret, who was first married to Henry lord Ker, son of Robert earl of Roxburgh, and afterwards to John Kenedy, earl of Cassils.

GILBERT HAY, who was the twelfth earl of Errol, was very active and serviceable in the restoration of king Charles II. and in the following parliament gave great proofs of his loyalty and moderation, and was afterwards one of that king's privy council. He lady Catharine, daughter of James Carnegie, the second earl of Southesk; but dying at Slanes in 1674 without issue, we return to Sir George Hay, son of Andrew the ninth earl, whose son Sir Andrew Hay, married Margaret, daughter of Patrick, and sister of George the first lord Kinnaird, and had issue,

SIR JOHN HAY, who succeeding in the earldom, was the thirteenth earl of Errol, and the nineteenth high constable of Scotland of this family. He married Ann Drummond, daughter of James the third earl of Perth, and by her had Charles his heir, and two daughters; Mary, who succeeded at length to the honours, and Margaret, who continued the line.

CHARLES HAY, who succeeded, being one of the peers who in the parliament 1706, dissented to every article of the union, he entered a protestation as follows:

"I Charles earl of Errol, lord high constable of Scotland, do hereby protest, That the office of high constable, with all the rights and privileges of the same belonging to me heretably, and depending upon the monarchy, sovereignty, and ancient constitution of this kingdom, may not be prejudiced by the treaty of union between Scotland and England, nor any article, clause or condition thereof; but that the said heretable office, with all the rights and privileges thereof, may remain to me and my successors, intire and unhurt by any votes or acts of parliament whatever relating to the said union: and I crave that this my protestation be recorded in the registers and rolls of parliament."

In April, 1708, he was brought prisoner to London, with many other lords, on account of the French invasion; and dying unmarried in 1717, was succeeded in dignity and estate by his eldest sister,

MARY HAY, countess of Errol, who also dying (on September 19, 1758) without issue by her husband Alexander Hay, esquire, (which surname he assumed on his marriage) second son of Sir David Falconer, of Newton, baronet, who was president of the court of session, and also father of David, fourth lord Halkerton, the titles and estate, together with the office of lord high constable (which was the only heritable jurisdiction of that kingdom not abolished by act of parliament 1747) devolved upon

JAMES LORD BOYD, heir thereto by his mother Anne countess of Kilmarnock, only daughter and child of James Livingston, earl of Linlithgow and Calender, by his wife Margaret, second daughter of John, thirteenth earl of Errol, beforementioned.

Having thus brought down the offspring of Sir Gilbert, eldest son of Sir David Hay, and Helen, daughter of David earl of Strathern, we shall return to the second son

WILLIAM HAY, progenitor of this younger branch of the illustrious house of Errol, who obtained from Alexander III. king of Scotland, April 29, 1251, the second year of his reign, a charter confirming a grant of two carucates of land, &c. in Errol, which had been given him by his brother Sir Gilbert Hay. From this William we have no accounts of the lineal descendants in this branch of the family for above two hundred years, a chasm which must necessarily render the origin of the earls of Kinnoul doubtful. Tradition, however, adopted and communicated by a succession of genealogists, authorise us to suppose, that

SIR EDMUND HAY, of Melginen, who was a man of great eminence in Scotland in the fifteenth century, lineally descended from the last named William Hay. From this Sir Edmund, to the present earl of Kinnoul and baron Hay, we find no interruption in the pedigree. This knight is frequently mentioned in the charter of the family of Errol, of all whose affairs in Perthshire he had the principal management: being designed Edmundus de Haya de Melginck balious Comitis de Errol, in the year 1502. He was succeeded in his estate of Melginck by his son

SIR PETER HAY, who was also stiled balious Comitis de Errol, in the reign of king James V. from whom he obtained charters under the great seal, of the lands of Inchonane, between the years

1536, and 1542 on December 13, of which last year that monarch died. Sir Peter also got charters from queen Mary, the said king James's successor to the Scottish throne, of the lands of Mureage, of the kirk lands of Errol, &c. between 1552 and 1560. He married Margaret, daughter — Crichton, of Ruthven, descended from Sir William Crichton, who flourished in the reign of king David Bruce, beforementioned, and was chief of all the Crichtons in Scotland, and ancestor of the viscounts Frendraught, whose honours would be enjoyed by their heir male, James Crichton, late of Auchingowl, were it not for the attainder of Lewis, the sixth viscount, in 1690. Sir Peter, by the said Margaret, had three sons,

1. Sir Patrick Hay.

2. Sir James Hay, of Kinjask, who was in 1609 created lord Bewlie, and by Margaret his wife, daughter of John Murray, of Polmais, was father of James, lord Bewlie, in Scotland, lord Sawley, viscount Doncaster, and earl of Carlisle, in England, who had a great share of the favour of his sovereigns James I. and Charles I. kings of Great Britain; but his titles became extinct on the death of his son James, in 1660.

5. Edmund Hay, who was a gentleman of great knowledge and learning, professor of the civil and canon law, and rector of the Scottish college at Doway.

Sir PETER HAY, by the same lady, had also two daughters, viz. Catherine, married first to Robert Moncur, of Balumby, secondly to George Drummond, of Blair, esquire, and Janet, married to Sir Patrick Murray, of Auchtertyre.

The eldest son,

Sir PATRICK HAY, who succeeded his father at Melginck, was a man of great honour, loyalty, integrity, and worth, and high in the esteem of king James I. and VI. and by his wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Patrick Ogilvie, of Inchmartin, paternal ancestor to the earl of Finlater, was father of three sons,

1. Patrick Hay his successor at Melginck, whose male line is now extinct.

2. George Hay of Kinfauns, created earl of Kinnoul.

3. Peter Hay, ancestor to the present lord Hay.

Sir GEORGE HAY, of Kinfauns, the said second son of Sir Patrick Hay, of Melginck, had very good natural parts, which, by the care of his father, were improved by a liberal education at home, and in France, where he spent some years under the tuition of Edmund Hay, his uncle; and on his return, when about twenty-one years old, he was brought into the court by his kinsman, Sir James Hay, afterwards earl of Carlisle, with the character of a gentleman, well qualified by his breeding, and conversing with the muses, for any service his master should honour him with. By which introduction, and his fine accomplishments, he so far engaged the king's affections, that he soon raised him to be one of the gentlemen of his bed-chamber; and February 18, 1598, gave him the Carthusian priory at Perth: after which, his royal master, discerning his abilities, made him clerk register in 1616; which he held till 1622, when Alexander, earl of Dumferling, lord high chancellor of Scotland, died; whom he succeeded; and acquitted himself in that great and weighty employment with such integrity and honour, as recommended him to the favour of Charles I. who created him lord viscount Dupplin in 1627; also, as a further mark of his esteem, advanced him to the dignity of earl of Kinnoul in 1633, with limitation of those honours to Thomas, his brother. He enjoyed the chancellor's place with universal applause to his death, December 16, 1634, some months before he was sixty years of age. He lies interred at Kinnoul, under a sumptuous monument, with his statue, in full proportion, habited in chancellor's robes; and by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Sir James Haliburton, of Pitcur, in the shire of Forfar, had issue,

1. Sir Peter Hay, who died unmarried.

2. George Hay, his successor in the honour.

Also a daughter,

Margaret, wife of Alexander Lindsay, lord Spainzie. Which,

GEORGE HAY, his successor, was captain of the yeomen of the guards to Charles I. and one of his privy council. In the civil wars he shewed an unshaken loyalty to his sovereign, was constant in his service, often hazarding his person in the royal cause, and, adhering thereto, lost the greatest part of his estate. He died at Whitehall, Oct. 5, 1644, and was buried, on the 8th of the same month, at the east end of Waltham-abbey church, in Essex; leaving issue by Anne, his wife, eldest daughter of William Douglass, earl of Morton, lord high treasurer of Scotland,

William Hay, his successor.

And two daughters,

1. Mary, wife of William, earl-marshal.

2. Catharine, wife of Sir James Baird, of Auchmedden, in Buchan, Aberdeenshire.

WILLIAM HAY, third earl of Kinnoul, upon the death of his cousin James, 2d earl of Carlisle, without issue, 1660, as before related, became, as his heir male, proprietor of the island of Barbadoes, of which the first earl of Carlisle obtained a grant from king Charles I. This earl of Kinnoul sold it to king Charles II. 1661, after it had been in possession of the first grantee and his heirs above thirty years. His lordship had sepulture at the upper end of the chancel of the church of Waltham-abbey, on the 28th of March, 1677.

He married first Mary, daughter of Robert Brudenell, 2d earl of Cardigan, by whom he had no issue. He married secondly, Catherine, daughter of Charles, called viscount Cranborne, son of William Cecil, 2d earl of Salisbury, by whom he had issue George and James, successively earls.

GEORGE HAY, fourth earl of Kinnoul, died in Hungary 1687, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother,

WILLIAM HAY, fifth earl, who dying a bachelor, May 10, 1709, the honours descended, according to the limitation of the patent, to

THOMAS HAY, of Balhufy, near Perth, the next male heir, who became thereupon sixth earl of Kinnoul. He was the brother and heir of George Hay, of Balhufy, son of Peter Hay, of the same place, third son of Sir Patrick Hay, of Melginck, and brother of George, first earl of Kinnoul, and so succeeding, was elected one of the sixteen peers, in the 3d and 4th British parliaments. In 1715, he was committed to Edinburgh-castle, as a person concerned in the rebellion, but was released soon after without trial.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Drummond, first viscount of Strathallan; and by her had issue three sons, and two daughters. The latter were, Mary, married to John Erskine, the last earl of Mar; and Elizabeth, married to James Ogilvy, earl of Finlater and Seafield. The sons were:

1. George Henry Hay, his successor.
2. William Hay, who died without issue.
3. John Hay of Cromlich, who married Margery, the youngest daughter of David Murray, viscount Stormont. This gentleman attended the Pretender from Scotland in 1715, who, as a reward for his attachment, and what among the rebels was deemed loyalty, conferred upon him the title and dignity of earl of Inverness.

His lordship departed this life in January 1719, and was succeeded by his eldest son, (First Lord) GEORGE HENRY HAY, seventh earl of Kinnoul, who when a commoner, and bearing the title of viscount Dupplin, was returned member for Fowey in Cornwall, to the third parliament of Great-Britain, summoned to meet at Westminster, November 25, 1710; and the following year, his seat being vacated by his becoming teller of the Exchequer, a new writ issued, December 8, 1711, and he was rechosen. He continued, however, but a short time member of the House of Commons; for her majesty was graciously pleased to confer upon him the dignity of a peerage, by the stile and title of lord Hay, baron Hay of Pedwardin in the county of Hereford; the letters patent for this creation bearing date December 31, 1711 (10 Anne) and his lordship was the first of ten who received the same honour at this time. He was some time ambassador extraordinary to the Grand Seignior at Constantinople, from whence he returned at the latter end of 1737.

He married, in 1709, Abigail, youngest daughter of Robert Harley, earl of Oxford; and by her, who died at Broadsworth, near Doncaster, July 15, 1750, had issue six daughters:

1. Margaret, born January 6, 1712, who died in 1760.
2. Elizabeth, born February 3, 1714.
3. Anne, born September 21, 1715.
4. Abigail, born September 16, 1716.
5. Henrietta, born January 7, 1717, married July 30, 1754, to Robert Roper, of Trimden in Durham, L. L. D. and chancellor of that diocese.
6. Mary, born January 28, 1720, married August 5, 1751, to Dr. John Hume, then bishop of Oxford, but since translated to Salisbury.

Also four sons:

1. Thomas Hay, successor to the honours, &c.
2. Robert Hay, born November 9, 1711, who took the name and arms of Drummond, as heir of entail to his great grandfather William Drummond, viscount of Strathallan before-mentioned. In 1737, he was appointed one of his majesty's chaplains in ordinary; and in 1743, one of the prebendaries of Westminster. In 1748, he was consecrated bishop of St. Asaph. On the 30th of May, A. D. 1761, he was translated to the see of Salisbury; and on the 19th of September following, was again translated to the archiepiscopal see of York; and on the seventh day of the succeeding month, was admitted of his majesty's privy-council. In 1748, he married Henrietta, daughter of Peter Auriol, of London, merchant, by whom (besides two sons, William Auriol, and Henry Auriol; and two daughters, each named Henrietta Auriol, who died infants) he has had issue one daughter, Abigail, born March 23, 1750, who died August 1766, and six sons now living. 1. Robert Auriol, born March 18, 1751. 2. Thomas Auriol, born August 7, 1752. 3. Peter Auriol, born January 21, 1754. 4. John Auriol, born July 4, 1756. 5. Edward Auriol, born April 10, 1758. 6. George William Auriol, born March 13, 1761.

3. John Hay, A. M. of Christ-church, Oxon, rector of Epworth in Lincolnshire, by the king's gift pleno jure, born 1719. He died unmarried in 1751.

4. Edward Hay, born June 3, 1722. At thirty years of age he was appointed his majesty's consul at Cadiz, and about two years after consul-general in Portugal. In 1757, he was constituted envoy-extraordinary to his Portuguese majesty; and in 1762, plenipotentiary at the same court: from whence he returned on the 19th of September 1767. On the 8th of October, 1752, he married Mary, daughter of Peter Flower, of London, merchant, and by her has issue the following six children: 1. Henrietta, born August 20, 1753. 2. Mary, born July 25, 1754. 3. Margaret, born October 20, 1755. 4. Edward, born May 19, 1757. 5. Thomas, born April 14, 1759; and 6. William Robert, born December 3, 1761.

His lordship departed this life July 28, 1758, and was succeeded by his eldest son, (Second and present Lord) THOMAS HAY, eighth earl of Kinnoul, born 1710. In the life-time of his father he served in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh parliaments of Great-Britain (bearing then the title of viscount Dupplin, by courtesy) for the town of Cambridge, and in the two last was chairman of the committee of privileges and elections. In May 1741, he was appointed one of the commissioners of the revenue in Ireland, and in November 1746, a commissioner of trade and plantations. In 1754, he was constituted one of the lords of the Treasury; and in December 1755, joint-paymaster of the forces with the earl of Darlington. On January 24, 1758, he was constituted chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster, and three days after was sworn of his majesty's privy-council. In the same month he was chosen recorder of Cambridge; and on the 27th of November, was appointed ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the court of Portugal, from whence he returned to England in November following. In 1760, when his present majesty nominated his privy-council, his lordship was continued in the list, and he was permitted still to enjoy his post of chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster. But in November 1762, his lordship voluntarily resigned this employ, and has since resided at Dupplin-house in Scotland.

In June 1741, he married Constantine, daughter of John Kirle Ernley, of Whetham in Wiltshire, esquire; and by her ladyship, who died June 29, 1753, had issue one son, Thomas John Ernley, born August 12, 1742, who died an infant.

WILLOUGHBY, Baron MIDDLETON.

THIS younger branch of the Willoughby family claims descent from

THOMAS WILLOUGHBY, youngest of the five sons, which Margery, the daughter of Sir William Jennens, of Knotshall, in the county of Suffolk, bore to her husband Sir Christopher Willoughby, knight of the Bath. (See Vol. II. p. 401.) This gentleman applying himself to the study of the laws, was made serjeant at law in 13 Henry VIII. and, on the 28th of April, 22 Henry VIII. constituted king's serjeant; and, having received the honour of knighthood, was advanced to be lord chief-justice of the Common-pleas, on the 9th of October, 29 Henry VIII. He married Bridget, daughter and heir to Sir Robert Read, of Bore-place, knight, king's serjeant, and afterwards a justice of the Common-pleas, in 2 Henry VIII. and died on the 29th of September, in 37 Henry VIII. leaving

ROBERT WILLOUGHBY, his son and heir, then thirty-four years of age, who was seated at Bore-place in Kent; and marrying Dorothy, daughter to Sir Edward Willoughby, of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham, knight, had issue

THOMAS WILLOUGHBY, his son and heir, who, by Catharine, his wife, daughter to Percival Hart, of Lullingston-castle, in the county of Kent, knight, had seven sons and three daughters; whereof

PERCIVAL WILLOUGHBY, succeeded him in his estate. Attending king James in his passage through Nottinghamshire, on his accession to the crown of England, this gentleman received the honour of knighthood at Worksop, in that county, on the 20th of April, 1603. He married Bridget, eldest daughter and coheir of Sir Francis Willoughby, knight, (of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham) another branch of this ancient family of the Willoughbys, descended from Sir Richard Willoughby, lord chief-justice of England, the greatest part of that long and flourishing reign of king Edward the Third. And the said Sir Richard from William de Willoughby, younger brother of Sir Robert Willoughby, lord Willoughby, of Eresby, living in the reign of king Edward the First, and king Edward the Second, as we have before observed, under the title of lord Willoughby of Parham. Sir Francis Willoughby, before-mentioned, was the builder of that noble pile at Wollaton, which, together with the greatest part of his large inheritance, came to the said Sir Percival, who was elected knight of the shire for the county of Nottingham, in the first parliament called in the reign of king James I. and died about the beginning of the civil wars, leaving the estate to his eldest son Sir Francis Willoughby; but before we treat of him, it will be necessary to attend upon the descendants of

EDWARD WILLOUGHBY, younger brother of the afore-named Sir Percival Willoughby, and one of the seven sons of Thomas Willoughby, who married Catharine, the daughter of Sir Percival Hart. This Edward Willoughby was seated at Cossal in Nottinghamshire; and by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of John Atkinson, of Nottingham, gentleman, had issue three sons:

1. George Willoughby, of Cossal, who by Elizabeth, daughter of George Nevil, of Ragnall in Nottinghamshire, had issue two sons, Francis and Robert, who married two sisters, Catharine and Ursula, daughters of Thomas Cholmondely, of Brandsby in Yorkshire. Robert was seated at Radford, in Nottinghamshire; but we have no account of his issue, if he had any. Francis, the elder brother, was seated at Cossal, and served the office of sheriff for the county of Nottingham in 1687. He died on the 9th of February 1702, and was buried at Cossal. His widow, Catharine, already mentioned, survived him till January 17, 1733, when she departed this life. Their issue were three daughters and one son, Robert Willoughby, who was also seated at Cossal, and, dying unmarried June 23, 1721, was there interred. Of the daughters, Catharine, the eldest, died unmarried July 13, 1721, and was buried with her brother.

The

The other two, Elizabeth and Cassandra, are now (1768) living in Nottinghamshire, and unmarried.

2. Francis Willoughby, seated at Espley in Nottinghamshire. He died without issue, having for many years been an eminent practitioner at the bar.

3. Edward Willoughby, seated at Espley after the death of his brother Francis. He married Elizabeth, sister to Thomas Cholmondely, already mentioned, of Bransby in Yorkshire; and had issue a daughter, Elizabeth, who died without issue, and a son and successor, Francis Willoughby, of Espley, who marrying Mary, daughter of — Slack, of Wirksworth in Derbyshire, had issue two sons, Edward and Charles, of which the younger, born June 17, 1709, died unmarried, October 1, 1756, and was buried at Radford in Nottinghamshire. The elder, Edward Willoughby, now living, was originally seated at Espley; but since the death of Robert Willoughby, without issue, at Cossal, married Margaret, daughter of Francis Bird, of London, gentleman, and has issue, all now (1768) living, four sons and three daughters. 1. Robert, born November 1, 1737. 2. Mary, born October 13, 1738. 3. Edward, born October 6, 1740. 4. Cassandra, born January 1, 1741. 5. Richard, born January 4, 1748. 6. James, born July 10, 1750. 7. Frances, born February 6, 1755.

We now return to the only son of Sir Percival and Bridget Willoughby,

Sir FRANCIS WILLOUGHBY, who, dying in the year 1665, left issue by his wife Cassandra, daughter to Thomas Ridgway, earl of Londonderry in Ireland, one son, Francis Willoughby, esquire, and two daughters, Lettice, married to Sir Thomas Wendy, of Haslingfield in Cambridgeshire, knight of the Bath; and Catharine, to Clement Winstanley, esquire:

Which,

FRANCIS WILLOUGHBY, esquire, born 1635, was justly admired both at home and abroad for his eminent virtues and knowledge in all degrees of learning. He was, from his childhood, fond of study, and, when he came to the use of reason, so great a husband of his time, that he let slip no opportunities of improving himself, detesting no vice more than idleness, and, directing his studies chiefly to those sciences which were more abstruse, had a deep insight in the mathematics, and natural philosophy. Observing, in the busy and inquisitive age he lived in, that the history of animals had in a great measure been neglected, he made the study thereof his province, applying himself closely to the illustrating of it. And to that end, he made a voyage into foreign countries, to search out and describe their several species; and though he was not long abroad, yet he travelled over most part of France, Spain, Italy, Germany, and the Low-Countries: in all which places he was so diligent and successful, that not many sorts of animals, described by others, escaped his observation. He drew them out with a pencil, which afterwards, with great curiosity, were engraved on copper-plates, at the charge of his relict, Emma, daughter of Sir Henry Bernard, knight, and printed with this title: "Ornithologiae libri tres: in quibus aves omnes hactenus cognitae in methodum naturis suis convenientem redactae accurate describuntur, descriptiones iconibus elegantissimis et vivarum avium simillimis, aeri incisus illustrantur, Lond. 1676." Viewed, corrected, and digested into order, by John Ray, fellow of the Royal Society. Afterwards translated into English, with an appendix added to it, by the said Mr. Ray, Lond. 1678. He hath also written "Historiae Piscium libri quatuor, &c. Oxon. 1686." Which work was with great pains viewed, reviewed, made fit for use, and the two first books entirely compleated by the said eminent virtuoso, Mr. Ray, and adorned with very many cuts of several fishes, never before known in England. He had likewise published a letter, containing some considerable observations about that kind of wasps called Ichneumones, &c. dated August 24, 1671. See in the Philosophical Transactions, Numb. 76, page 2279. And another letter, about the hatching a kind of bee lodged in old willows, dated July 10, 1671. See in the said Transactions, Numb. 74, page 2221. He had, of the gift of Sir William Willoughby, the lordship of South Muscam in Nottinghamshire; and by his last will ordered a monument to be erected for the said William in Wollaton-church, Nottinghamshire, with the following inscription in black capitals, on a white marble.

This monument is here placed in memory of Sir William Willoughby, of Selston, in the county of Nottingham, baronet, who gave the lordship of South Muscam, in the county of Nottingham, to his kinsman, Francis Willoughby, of Wollaton, esquire. By whose order, in his will, this is here set up by Sir Thomas Willoughby, his son, that Sir William's kindness therein may be ever acknowledged by the family. He married Margaret, the sole daughter of George Abbot, esquire, by whom he left no issue. He died at Selston, February 10, 1670, in the 50th year of his age.

The said Francis Willoughby, esquire, was not only famed for his great learning, but was a gentleman of eminent humility, sobriety, temperance, exemplary chastity, justness, constancy, charity, and all other virtues that could adorn a man; and died, to the great reluctancy of all curious and inquisitive persons, especially those of the Royal Society, (of which he was a member and ornament) to his friends, and all good men that knew him, and the great loss of the commonwealth of learning, on the third day of July, 1672. He left issue by Emma, his wife, before-mentioned, two sons, Francis and Thomas; also a daughter, Cassandra, married August 4, 1713, to James, first duke of Chandos. She died without issue, July 18, 1735.

FRANCIS WILLOUGHBY, his eldest son and heir, was created a baronet, with remainder to Thomas, his brother, on the 7th of April, 1677; and dying unmarried in the twentieth year of his age, anno 1688, the title and estate devolved on the said

(First Lord) THOMAS WILLOUGHBY, who was afterwards created lord Middleton.

Whilst a commoner he served in several parliaments in the reigns of king William and queen Anne, as one of the knights of the shire for the county

TREVOR, Baron TREVOR.

ACCORDING to the Welch heralds, this noble family is descended from Rourd Wiedick, father to Eignian Yothe; which Eignian held the lands of Gaercinion, in Powysland, and was grandfather to Kariodock Urechfras, earl of Hereford and Marchiogien, in the time of prince Arthur, who began his reign anno 520.

But the first that bore this name was Tudor Trevor, earl of Hereford, son of Rheingar, grandson of Kariodock aforesaid. He married Aukaret, daughter of Howel Dha. ap Kadell, prince of North-Wales; and from him lineally descended, in succeeding ages, another Tudor, whose great grandson, Jerworth Hen. ap Owen ap Blethyn ap Tudor, had in marriage Aukaret, daughter and heir to Griffith ap Melior ap Ellidor, by Aukaret his wife, daughter and heir of Llu up Merrick ap Karadon ap Jestir ap Guergant, and had issue by her Jerworth, junior.

And although surnames were not fixed in those dominions till the reign of king Henry VIII. yet we find a like name, and of authority, in Ireland, in the annals of that kingdom, A. D. 1361, where Joane is mentioned as wife to Geffry lord Trevers.

Moreover, John Trevers, bishop of St. Asaph, was made chamberlain of Chester in 3 Richard II. A. D. 1301. and continued so to 6 Henry IV.

JERWORTH VICHAN, aforesaid, had issue four sons, and, probably, from one of them the family of Mostyn is derived; whereof, in the time of king Henry VIII. one of them took the name of Mostyn, from the place of his nativity and ancient inheritance, by advice of the judge, who disapproved the genealogical way of appellation used by the Welch, as tedious; this Mostyn at that time being called, at the panel of a jury, by the name of Thomas ap William ap Thomas ap Richard ap Howel ap Evan Vaughan, &c.

And branches of this family are some of the name of Jenkyns, and divers others, who bear the same coat of arms.

JERWORTH VOEL, another of the sons of Jerworth Vichan, married Gwladua, daughter and heir of Jerworth ap Griffith ap Brockwell, and left issue, EDNEVET GAM, who married Giolades, daughter and heir of Madoc Eignion ap Edwyn, by whom he had several sons, whereof Jevan, the fifth, was ancestor to the Howels and the Hosiers, both of Woodcote, in the county of Salop, and the Hosiers of Creakton, in the same county.

The second son was,

DAVID, who had issue,

EDWARD AP DAVID, who had two sons, John and Richard, progenitor to the Trevors of Oswaldstree, in the county of Salop.

JOHN TREVOR, the eldest son (as likewise his brother) took the name of Trevor, and was seated at Brynkynate, and died in 9 Henry VII. 1497, having had issue by his wife Agnes, daughter and heir to Peter Cambre, of Poole, five sons, which laid the foundation of as many several branches.

1. Robert Trevor, succeeded his father at Brynkynate, who married Catharine, daughter and heir of Llewellyn ap Ithele de Mauld, and had posterity:

2. Edward Trevor, who wedded Anne, daughter of Geffry Kyffin, and from him descended (probably) colonel Mark Trevor, a loyalist to king Charles I. and by him ennobled in Ireland; whence the late viscounts Dungannon proceeded. Which colonel Mark Trevor had to wife Anne, daughter and heir of John Lewis, esquire, and relict of John Owen, esquire, son and heir of Sir Hugh Owen, of Orielton in Pembrokeshire, knight and baronet.

3. Richard Trevor, of whom hereafter.

4. Roger Trevor, of Planckenwich, who married Gwerolla, daughter of Rose Lloyd ap Gruff ap Enion, of Gedroi, and left posterity.

5. Thomas Trevor, who married Margaret, daughter of John Hanmer, of Lightwood, and left issue.

RICHARD TREVOR, third son, married Matilda, daughter and heir of Jenkyn ap David ap Gruff de Allington, by whom he had

JOHN TREVOR, of Allington, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of David ap Rees ap Kenwrick de Kwm, and had three sons, John, Richard, and Edward.

JOHN TREVOR, as eldest son and heir, succeeded at Allington, and marrying Anne, daughter of Randal Broughton, of Broughton, in the county palatine of Lancaster, had issue John, Randal, David, and Edward.

JOHN TREVOR, the eldest, possessed his father's inheritance at Allington, and had in marriage Mary, daughter to George Bruges, of London, esquire; by whom he had four sons, who had all the honour of knighthood conferred on them:

1. Sir Richard Trevor, of Allington, knight, who married Catharine, daughter to Roger Puleston, of Emrall, esquire, but died without issue male, having had four daughters, his coheirs; Magdalen, wife first to Arthur Bagenhall, in the county of Stafford; secondly to ——— Teringham, of Teringham, in Bucks, esquires, and was buried at St. Margaret's, Westminster, in 1656; Mary, wife of Jever Lloyd, of Yale, esquire; Dorothy, to Sir John Hanmer, of Hanmer, in Flintshire, baronet; and Margaret, to John Griffith, of Lynn, esquire.

2. Sir

2. Sir John Trevor, of whom we shall hereafter treat.

3. Sir Sackvil Trevor, who was brought up in the sea-service; and having the command of one of those men of war, that were sent to Spain, to bring back Charles prince of Wales (after king Charles I.) That prince had been cast away in St. Andero's road in Spain, had not Sir Sackvil Trevor taken him up; after which, on that war with France, took one of their biggest ships called the Holy Spirit, on which Mr. Howel compliments him, saying, "It was one of the best exploits that were performed." He married Catharine, daughter of Sir John Savage, knight, and widow of Sir Henry Bagnal, knight, marshal of Ireland.

4. Sir Thomas Trevor, was born on July 6, 1586; a day memorable in this family for six successive principal branches, who had their birth thereon. He was observed to smile as soon as born, and was educated in the Inner-Temple, where he became autumnal reader, 18 James I. was afterwards knighted, and made solicitor-general to prince Charles; called to the degree of a serjeant at law; made judge of the Common-Pleas; and finally, chief-baron of the Exchequer; but was, with others, impeached 17 Charles I. 1641, from which he fairly disengaged himself. He married five wives; and by his first, —, daughter to William Hergest, of the county of Hereford, had issue Thomas, his son and heir, who was created a baronet on August 11, 1641, being then wrote of Enfield, in the county of Middlesex. This Sir Thomas Trevor, baronet, was made one of the knights of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles I. and married Anne, daughter and heir of Robert Jennor, of London, esquire; but, dying without issue male in the reign of king Charles II. the title became extinct.

We now return to

Sir JOHN TREVOR, the second son, before-mentioned. He was seated at Trevallin, in the county of Flint, and received the honour of knighthood at Windsor, on June 7, 1619. He married Margaret, daughter to Hugh Trevannion, of the county of Cornwall, esquire, by whom he had issue four sons and three daughters; John, his son and heir; Charles, William, and Richard, who, being bred at Merton-college, in the university of Oxford, afterwards travelled, was doctor of physick of Padua, and dying on July 17, 1676, was buried in the church of St. Dunstan in the West, in Fleet-street, London. His three daughters were, Anne, married to Robert Weldon, of the city of London, esquire; Jane, baptized in St. Margaret's, Westminster, August 31, 1635, married to Sir Francis Compton, fifth son of Spencer, earl of Northampton; and Elizabeth, the wife of William Masnam, Bart. ancestor to the present Lord Masnam.

His eldest son,

Sir JOHN TREVOR, was knighted by Charles the second, and constituted one of his principal secretaries of state, on his return from his embassy in France, in Oct. 1668, and sworn of the privy council. He died in the office of secretary of state, at the age of 47, and just a year before his father. In the Gazette of the 3d of June, 1672, the following account is given of his death: "On Tuesday the 28th past, at ten o'clock at night, died the Right Hon. Sir John Trevor, one of his Majesty's principal secretaries of state, and of his most honourable privy council, after six days distemper of a fever, in the 47th year of his age; and was yesterday honourably interred in St. Bartholomew's, in Smithfield."

He married Ruth, daughter of John Hampden, of Hampden, in the county of Bucks, esquire; by whom he had issue four sons:

1. John Trevor, seated at Trevallin and Placetage, married Elizabeth, daughter of — Clark, and widow of John Morley, of Glynd, in Suffex. By this lady, who after his decease married thirdly the lord viscount Cutts, he had issue two daughters, Elizabeth, married to David Polhill, of Cheapstead in Kent, esquire; and Arabella, married first to Robert Heath, of Lewes, in Suffex; secondly, to Edward Montagu, brother to the earl of Hailifax. Also two sons, of which the younger, Thomas Trevor, of East Barnet, died unmarried, but the elder, John Trevor, of Trevallin, Placetage, and Glynd, married Lucy, daughter of Edward Montagu, of Horton, in the county of Northampton, which lady bore to him a numerous issue, three sons, and nine daughters. Of the sons, the two eldest, John and Thomas, died infants, and the third, named also John, and seated also at Trevallin, Placetage, and Glynd, was appointed a lord of the Admiralty in 1742, but died unmarried in 1745. The nine daughters were: 1. Elizabeth, who died unmarried 1722. 2. Lucy, married to George Rice, esquire, of Newton, in the county of Carmarthen. 3. Grace. 4. Mary. 5. Anne, married to George Boscawen, esquire, third son of viscount Falmouth. 6. Margaret. 7. Ruth, died unmarried 1764. 8. Gertrude, married first to Charles Roper, first son of Henry lord Teynham, by his second wife, Anne, baroness Dacre, of the South. 9. Arabella.

2. Thomas Trevor, of whom hereafter.

3. Richard Trevor.

4. Edward Trevor.

(First Lord) THOMAS TREVOR, second son of Sir John Trevor, being bred to the study of the law in the Inner-Temple, made such a proficiency therein, that on May 4, 1692, he was made solicitor-general. On the accession of queen Anne, he was made lord chief-justice of the Common-Pleas; and on the first of January 1711, he was created lord Trevor, of Bromham, in the county of Bedford. On March 6, 1725-6, he was appointed by his majesty, in council, lord privy-seal; and, on May 31, 1727, was declared one of the lords justices of Great-Britain. On the accession of our late sovereign, he was again, June 15, 1727, sworn lord privy-seal; and on May 8, 1730, made president of his majesty's most honourable privy-council. His lordship was likewise fellow of the Royal Society, and one of the governors of the Charter-house; and departing this life on the 19th of June, 1730, in the 72d year of his age, was buried at Bromham before-mentioned. He married to his first wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheir to John Searle, of Finchley, in the county of Middlesex, by whom he had two sons, and three daughters:

1. Anne.

2. Letitia, married in 1720, to Peter Cock, of Camberwell, esquire.

3. Elizabeth.

And two sons:

1. Thomas

1. Thomas Trevor, } successively lords Trevor.
2. John Trevor, }

His lordship married secondly Anne, daughter of Robert Weldon, esquire, and widow of Sir Robert Bernard, of Brumpton, in the county of Huntingdon, baronet; and by her, who died December 7, 1747, had issue three sons:

1. Robert Trevor, the present baron.
2. Richard Trevor, D. D. who, in 1744, was consecrated bishop of St. David's; and from thence, on the 24th of October, 1752, translated to the see of Durham. His lordship is unmarried.
3. Edward Trevor, who died young.

His lordship, departing this life on the 9th of June, 1730, was interred at Bromham, in Bedfordshire. The honours of the family devolved upon the eldest son, (Second Lord) THOMAS TREVOR, who marrying Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Timothy Burrell, of Cuckfield, in Suffex, counsellor at law, had issue an only daughter, Elizabeth, married May 23, 1732, to Charles, duke of Marlborough. Her grace died Oct. 7, 1761. Her mother dying in August 1734, and her father March 22, 1733, for want of male issue, the barony fell to the next brother, (Third Lord) JOHN TREVOR, who was bred to the bar, and served in two parliaments for the borough of Woodstock. At the time his brother died, he was one of the judges for the principality of Wales.

On the 31st of May, 1731, he married Elizabeth, daughter to the celebrated Sir Richard Steele, of Carmarthen, knight; and by her ladyship, who is still living, had issue one daughter, Diana Maria, born June 10, 1744.

This nobleman died at Bath of the gout in his stomach, September 27, 1764, when he was succeeded by his half brother, (Fourth and present Lord) ROBERT TREVOR, who, pursuant to the last will of John Hampden, assumed the surname and arms of John Hampden, of Great Hampden, in Buckinghamshire, esquire. His lordship was several years envoy-extraordinary to the States-General; and on the 22d of November, 1746, was constituted one of the commissioners of the revenue in Ireland. He was appointed joint-postmaster with William earl of Besborough, June 2, 1759; and continued by a fresh grant, dated March 7, 1761, after his present majesty's accession. Afterwards, by a grant dated November 27, 1762, he enjoyed the same post in conjunction with John, earl of Egmont; and by a fresh grant, September 10, 1763, was joint-postmaster with Thomas Villiers, lord Hyde, but resigned in July 1765. His lordship is a fellow of the Royal Society.

In 1743, he married Constantia, daughter of Peter Anthony de Huybert, lord of Kruyningen, in Zealand; and by her, who died of the small-pox, June 15, 1761, had two daughters, Maria Constantia, born February 23, 1733-4, married May 26, 1764, to Henry, earl of Suffolk. Her ladyship died February 8, 1767; and Anne, born November 9, 1751, who died April 12, 1767. Also two sons:

1. Thomas Trevor Hampden, born September 11, 1746, was chosen member of parliament for Lewes, in Suffex, at the general election in 1768. He was married in St. James's-church in Westminster, on the 13th of June, 1768, to Catherine Groeme, only daughter and heir of David Groeme, esquire, major-general in his majesty's service.

THE COMPLETE COLLECTION OF
THE REV. JOHN HENRY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF CAMBRIDGE

M A S H A M, Baron M A S H A M.

IN the northern parts of England were seated the first men of eminence of this family, particularly Sir JOHN MASHAM, knight, who died in the 29th year of king Henry VI. and was buried in the church of Thorneham, in the county of Suffolk, as appears by his last will and testament, dated December 14, 1451, 29 Henry VI. and the probate thereof the third of March following: by which he ordains his body to rest in the chancel, before the high altar of our lady of Thorneham; and bequeaths, to the making of the choir of the said church, 40s. also 6s. and 8d. to every church within the deanery of Sutton; and to every parish priest of the said churches 4d. Likewise he gives to John Masham his house and lands, on condition he keep his obit once a year as long as he liveth; and appoints the said John, and John, who was a clerk, his cousins, executors; as also the parson of Oteham, overseer. From which John, cousin and heir to the said Sir John, descended

THOMAS MASHAM, seated at Badwell-Ash, in the county of Suffolk; where he was succeeded by

JOHN MASHAM, his son and heir; who, by Catharine his wife, daughter to ——— Cage, of the same county, had issue two sons:

1. John Masham, who succeeded his father in his estate, and was ancestor to the Mashams of the county of Suffolk.

2. William Masham, which

WILLIAM MASHAM, was one of the aldermen of the city of London, and sheriff of the said city in the 25th of queen Elizabeth. He died soon after, and left issue by his wife, a native of the states of Holland (whom he married in that country) a daughter, Catharine, married to Ralph Warcop, of the county of Oxon, esquire; and a son of his own name, WILLIAM MASHAM, who was seated at High-Laver, in the county of Essex; and by his wife, a daughter of ——— Calton (who survived him, and married to her second husband Sir ——— Castillion, knight) had issue William, his son and heir.

This

WILLIAM MASHAM, was created a baronet on the 20th of December, 1621, 19 James I. being then denominated of High-Laver; and was elected for the borough of Maldon, in Essex, to the last parliament called by king James I. as also in the first parliament of king Charles, his successor. He likewise was elected for Colchester to the two following parliaments which met in that reign; and was chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Essex to that parliament which met anno 1640. In 1642, in pursuance of an act of parliament "For the speedy reducing of rebels in Ireland," he subscribed 600 l. as a voluntary gift. In the year 1648, he was taken prisoner by the lord Goring, at his coming into Essex, and carried into Colchester: but the parliament set so great a value on him, that they presently exchanged him for Mr. John Ashburnham, one of the grooms of the bedchamber to the king. On his release, he was elected one of the council of state; as also in the years 1649, 1650, and 1651. He married Winifrid, daughter to Sir Francis Barrington, baronet, and widow of Sir James Altham, of Markshall, in Essex, knight. Her grandfather was Sir Thomas Barrington, of Barrington-hall, in the county of Essex, knight; who married Winifrid, second daughter to Henry Pole, lord Montagu, eldest son and heir to Sir Richard Pole, knight, by Margaret Plantagenet, his wife, daughter to George duke of Clarence, younger brother to king Edward IV.

By this lady, Sir William Masham had issue (besides other children)

WILLIAM MASHAM, his son and heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir John Trevor, knight, (sister to Sir John Trevor, knight, secretary of state to Charles II. father of the first lord Trevor) and, dying before his father, left issue four sons:

1. William Masham.

2. Francis Masham.

3. John Masham, who died unmarried.

4. Trevor Masham, who was secretary to the lord Lockhart, ambassador to France at the treaty of the Pyrenees, and attended the earl of Rochester to the king of Poland, and the earl of Essex, when he went lord-lieutenant of Ireland; but died unmarried.

And six daughters:

1. Joan, married to Mark Hildesley, of Lincoln's inn, esquire.

2. Anne, who died unmarried.

3. Elizabeth, married to ——— Knight, of Berkshire, esquire.

4. Mary, married first to ——— Brownsword, and secondly to ——— Hay, of Sussex, esquires.

5. Margaret, married to the Rev. Dr. Walker.

6. Jane, who died unmarried.

The eldest son,

Sir WILLIAM MASHAM, baronet, succeeded his grandfather; and, dying unmarried, was succeeded by his brother

Sir FRANCIS MASHAM, bart. who served in several parliaments in the reigns of king William and queen Anne, for the county of Essex, and was one of the commissioners of the Victualling-office.

office. Having survived seven of his sons, and both his ladies, he died at his seat at Oates, in Essex, on Sunday, the 3d of March, 1702-3, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. His last wife lies buried in the cathedral church of Bath, where a monument is erected to her memory with the following inscription:

Near this place lies Dame Damaris Masham, daughter of Ralph Cudworth, D. D. and second wife to Sir Francis Masham, of Oates, in the county of Essex, Bart. who, to the softness and elegance of her own sex, added several of the noblest accomplishments and qualities of the other.

She possessed these advantages in a degree unusual to either, and tempered them with an exactness peculiar to herself.

Her learning, judgment, sagacity, and penetration, together with her candour, and love of truth, were very observable to all that conversed with her, or were acquainted with those small treatises she published in her lifetime; tho' she industriously concealed her name.

Being mother of an only son, she applied all her natural and acquired endowments to the care of his education.

She was a strict observer of all the virtues belonging to every station of her life, and only wanted opportunities to make those talents shine in the world, which were the admiration of her friends.

She was born on the 18th of January, 1658, and died on the 20th of April, 1708.

Sir Francis had issue by this lady one son, Francis-Cudworth Masham, esquire, one of the masters of the high court of chancery, and accomptant general of the said court; also foreign apposer in the court of exchequer. He died on the 17th of May, 1731.

The said Sir Francis Masham, by his first wife, Mary, daughter of Sir William Scot, Bart. of Rouen, in Normandy, marquis de la Mezansene, in France, had issue eight sons; also one daughter, Hester, who died unmarried.

1. William Masham, who was a lieutenant in the earl of Oxford's royal regiment of horse-guards, and died without issue.

2. Henry Masham, who died in Ireland, unmarried.

3. John Masham, who died in Flanders.

4. Francis Masham, who married Isabella, daughter to — Burnet, a near relation to Gilbert Burnet, bishop of Salisbury, by whom he left issue Francis, his son and heir, who succeeded his grandfather in the title of baronet; but, dying without issue, the dignity and estate devolved on the late lord Masham.

5. Winwood Masham, died in the year 1709.

6. Richard Masham, died abroad with Sir Charles Wheeler.

7. Charles Masham, died without issue.

8. Samuel Masham.

Which eighth son,

(First Lord) SAMUEL MASHAM, succeeded to the title of baronet, on the death of his nephew, Sir Francis Masham.

He was first page of honour to Queen Anne, whilst princess of Denmark, and to his royal highness prince George, to whom he was also one of the equerries, and afterwards a groom of the bed chamber, in which post he attended at the funeral of that prince, November 13, 1708. He was preferred to the command of a regiment of horse, and advanced, May 10, 1710, to the rank of a brigadier general of her majesty's armies, in which year he was chosen member of parliament for Ilchester. He was likewise, by queen Anne, made cofferer of her household, in May 1711, when he was re-elected to parliament for Windsor, and on the 1st of January following created a peer of this realm by the stile and title of lord Masham, of Oates, in the county of Essex. And, having obtained a grant in reversion of the office of remembrancer of his majesty's court of Exchequer, he, on the death of Simon, lord Fanshaw, on October 23, 1716, succeeded thereto.

His lordship took to wife Abigail, daughter to Francis Hill, an eminent Turkey merchant, and sister to general John Hill, of Envil-green, near Egham, in the county of Surrey; by which lady, who died the 6th of December, 1734, and was interred at Oates, he had issue two daughters,

1. Anne, married April 11, 1726, to Henry Hoare, esquire, of Stourton-castle, Wilts, elder brother to Sir Richard Hoare, knight, lord mayor of London in 1745. She died on the 4th of March following.

2. Elizabeth, born 1710, and departed this life October 25, 1724.

And three sons,

1. George Masham, who died unmarried.

2. Samuel Masham, successor to the title, &c.

3. Francis Masham, died unmarried.

His lordship departed this life, October 16, 1758, and was interred at High-Laver.

(Second Lord) SAMUEL MASHAM, the only surviving son, succeeded to the peerage. In 1739 he was appointed groom of the bed-chamber to Frederic prince of Wales, in which quality he walked at his funeral procession, April 13, 1751, and in January 1745-6, was constituted deputy paymaster of the forces to Thomas Winnington, esquire, his brother-in-law.

In 1756 he was appointed auditor-general to his present majesty, then prince of Wales, in which post he continued till the death of the late king, in 1759. He succeeded his father as remembrancer of his majesty's court of Exchequer, and one of the registers for the county of Middlesex, and in April 1762, was appointed one of the lords of the bed-chamber to his majesty.

On the 16th of October, 1736, he married Harriot, daughter of Salway Winnington, esquire, and sister to Thomas Winnington already mentioned. By her, who dying July 1, 1761, was buried at High-Laver, he had no issue. He married secondly, February 4, 1762, Charlotte, daughter to John Dives, of Westminster, esquire, one of the maids of honour to the princess dowager of Wales, but has yet no issue.

BATHURST, Baron BATHURST.

THERE is great reason to presume, that this noble family was of great antiquity in Lunenburg, where their ancestors were seated. The spot of their residence was called Batters, whence they, according to the custom of those days, were denominated De Batters; and one or more of them coming into England in the time of the Saxons, gained a settlement in Sussex, which they named Batters Hurst (i. e. Batters Grove.) This appellation shared the common fate of surnames, and in length of time, by corruption, was called Bathurst; and the wood upon the spot still retains the name of Bathurst wood. To ascertain the precise time when this settlement was made, and consequently how long that estate had been in this family, is impossible. But from records now in Battle-abbey we find, that it suffered alienation in the beginning of the reign of Edward IV. when that prince, to punish LAURENCE BATHURST (whose father Laurence lost his life in the battle of St. Alban's, 1461) for the adherence of his father and himself to the then dethroned sovereign king Henry VI. deprived him of this ancient inheritance, and gave it to Battle-abbey, which was in the same neighbourhood.

After this, it is probable, he retired to Cranebrook, in Kent, where he had a seat, and enjoying lands in Staplehurst, and at Canterbury, which had been his father's, passed the remainder of his days in peace and tranquillity. He left issue three sons,

1. Edward Bathurst, ancestor to the lord Bathurst.
2. Robert Bathurst,
3. John Bathurst,

Robert of Horsmanden, second son, had issue by his first wife, a daughter of — Saunders, two sons, John and Paul Bathurst, who in right of his wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Edward Hordon, of Hordon and Finchcocks, in Kent, enjoyed the manor of Finchcocks, in the parish of Goudhurst, which descended to Edward his son and heir, who left issue four sons; Thomas Bathurst, of Finchcocks, esquire; Edward Bathurst, esquire, gentleman harbinger to king Charles; William Bathurst, merchant and alderman of London, whose son Sir Henry Bathurst, knight, of Edmonton, in Middlesex, married Catharine, daughter to Sir Thomas Wolstenholme, baronet, but had no issue; and Richard Bathurst. The rest were all married, and left issue.

John Bathurst, elder brother to Paul Bathurst, was of Horsmanden, in Kent, and left issue, by Mary his wife, Robert, his son and heir, who purchased the manor and town of Lechlade, in Gloucestershire, in the 4th of James I. and was succeeded by Edward Bathurst, his eldest surviving son and heir, born A. D. 1615, who was created a baronet the 4th of December, 1643; and, dying the 6th of August, 1674, was buried at Lechlade. His eldest son, Laurence Bathurst, esquire, died in his lifetime, leaving only two daughters, his coheirs.

The said Robert Bathurst, of Horsmanden, by his second wife, had issue John Bathurst, of Goudhurst, in Kent, whose second son, John Bathurst, was doctor of physick, and left issue five sons, from whom the Bathursts of the county of York are descended, possessing a fair estate.

John Bathurst, youngest son of Laurence Bathurst, left issue, by Elizabeth, his wife, Edward Bathurst, of Ockham, in the county of Southampton, esquire, who married Mary, daughter of George Holland, of Augmering, in Sussex, by whom he had Edward Bathurst, his son and heir; John Bathurst, an alderman of the city of London, in 1673; and Anthony.

It now remains to give an account of Edward, the eldest son of Laurence Bathurst.

Which

EDWARD BATHURST was seated at Staplehurst, and, among other children, had issue

LANCELOT BATHURST, who, in the beginning of queen Elizabeth's reign, was possessed of the manor of Francks, in the county of Kent, where he built a large mansion-house, and departed this life on the 27th day of September, 1594, aged 65. His wife was Judith, daughter of Richard Randolph, of London, who, surviving him, was married secondly to Sir Edward Kynaston, of the county of Salop. By her first husband she had issue three daughters;

1. Elizabeth, married to John Brown, esquire.
2. Mary, wedded to Edmund Peshale, esquire.
3. Susan, married to Robert Owen, esquire.

Also four sons.

1. Randolph Bathurst, of Francks, esquire, who married Catharine, daughter to Robert Argall, of East-Sutton, in Kent, esquire, by whom he had issue Sir Edward Bathurst, knight, who married married a daughter of — Wiseman, and had issue two sons, and six daughters; from whom the family of the Francks descended, which became extinct 1738.

2. Lancelot Bathurst, } died without issue.
3. Edward Bathurst, }

4. George Bathurst, which

GEORGE BATHURST, the youngest son of the said Lancelot, in the year 1610, married Elizabeth Villiers, daughter and coheir of Edward Villiers, of Howthorp, in the county of Northampton, grandson and heir of Edward Villiers, esquire, who died seized of the manor of Howthorp, &c. 26 June, 5 Hen. VIII. and was fifth son of Sir John Villiers, of Brookesby, knight, grandfather to Sir George Villiers, father of George duke of Buckingham.

He had with her the manor of Howthorpe, in Northamptonshire, where he settled, and had issue, twelve sons and four daughters; several of which sons died in the service of king Charles the First, during the rebellion; and the five that survived were,

1. Ralph Bathurst, born 1620, who had his academical education in Trinity-college, in Oxford, where he was bred a divine; but in those times of confusion, during the civil wars, studied physick, and hereupon was employed in the service of the state, as physician to the sick and wounded of the navy, which he managed with much diligence and success, to the full satisfaction both of the generals at sea, and also of the commissioners of the admiralty. He was created doctor of physick on the 21st of June, 1653; and, after the restoration of king Charles the second, he re-assumed his former function of a divine, and became fellow of the royal society, president of Trinity-college, and one of his majesty's chaplains. Also, on the 28th of June, 1670, was installed dean of Wells. In April 1691, he was nominated, by their majesties king William and queen Mary, to be bishop of Bristol, with liberty to keep his deanery in commendam; but, being fond of a collegiate life, and intending to re-edify the chapel of Trinity college, he refused to accept thereof. He died on the 14th of June, 1704, and was buried in the chapel of Trinity-college, Oxon, which he built at his own expence: having been highly esteemed for his great learning, and accounted (as Wood, in his Fasti Oxonienses, observes) a most celebrated Latin poet, which he manifested in several copies of verses, some of which were published.

2. Villiers Bathurst, had also his education in Trinity-college, and took the degree of master of arts on the 13th of December, 1677. He was judge advocate of the navy in the reigns of king Charles the second, king William and queen Mary, and died in the same post in the reign of queen Anne, on the 8th of September, 1711.

3. Henry Bathurst, another son, also lived to an advanced age, was attorney general of Munster, and recorder of Cork and Kinsale. He died without issue.

4. Moses Bathurst, married Dorothy, daughter of Dr. John Bathurst, of Leeds and Skutterkelf, in the county of York, Esq; but, dying without issue male, his estates no less than his brother Henry's, descended to their younger brother.

5. Sir Benjamin Bathurst; of whose descendants we are principally to treat.

Which

Sir BENJAMIN BATHURST, in the reign of king Charles the Second, was elected governor of the royal African company, under his royal highness James, duke of York; also governor of the East-India company, in the years 1688, 1689. He was afterwards treasurer of the household to the Princess Anne, of Denmark, upon the first establishment of her family; and, on her accession to the throne, he was constituted cofferer of her household. In 1702, attending on her majesty, when she visited the university of Oxford, the degree of doctor of laws was conferred on him on the 28th of August. And the year after, on the duke of Marlborough's being elected with George I. a knight companion of the most noble order of the Garter, Sir Benjamin Bathurst had the honour of being his proxy at the instalment, his grace at that time being beyond the seas.

He died on the 27th of April, 1704, and was buried at Pauler's perry, in Northamptonshire, leaving issue by Frances his wife, daughter of Sir Allen Apsley, of Apsley, in Suffex, knight, by Frances, his wife, daughter and heir of John Petre, of Bowkay, in Devonshire, esquire, of the family of the lord Petre. Which Sir Allen was falconer to king Charles II. and treasurer of the household, and receiver-general to James, duke of York, and died in St. James's square, October 15, 1683. Sir Benjamin had issue, by his said daughter, three sons, and one daughter, Anne, married to Henry Pye, of Farringdon, in Berkshire, esquire, who died of the small pox, October 6, 1729, at Farringdon. And to each of his sons he left very great fortunes.

1. Allen Bathurst, now lord Bathurst.

2. Peter Bathurst, } of whom and their de-

3. Benjamin Bathurst, } scendants distinctly.

The youngest son,

He was elected to parliament for the borough of Cirencester in the last parliament of queen Anne, and was chosen for the same borough to the two parliaments called by George I. He served for the city of Gloucester in the four parliaments convened by George II. and in the last which met 1754, he was chosen for Monmouth, which place he represented also in that parliament called 1761, upon the accession of the present king till his death, which happened on the 5th of November, 1767. He married first in 1714, to Finetta, daughter and coheir of Henry Pool, of Kemble, in Wiltshire; and by her, who died in February 1737-8, had a numerous issue, of which only six survived their infancy, four daughters.

10. Margaret, born November 9, 1737, yet unmarried.

We now return to the eldest son of Sir Benjamin Bathurst.

(Present Lord.) ALLEN BATHURST, born November 16, 1684, was immediately upon his coming of age in 1705, chosen member of parliament for the borough of Cirencester, and sat for the same, until queen Anne, in consideration of his own great merits, and the services of his then deceased father, was graciously pleased by letters-patent bearing date January 1, 1711-12, to advance him (with nine others) to the dignity of the peerage, by the stile and title of baron Bathurst, of Battlefden, in the county of Bedford. The part which his lordship bore in opposition to the ministerial measures of Sir Robert Walpole, particularly in the case of Dr. Francis Atterbury, bishop of Rochester, the South-Sea affair, continental connections, the convention with Spain, &c. &c. endeared him to his grateful country; and it was difficult to determine whether his integrity or his abilities were most the object of public commendation. In the 13th of July, 1742, when Sir Robert Walpole retired from the treasury, he was sworn of his majesty's privy council, and at the same time appointed captain of the band of gentlemen-pensioners, which place however, he resigned in 1744. In 1757, upon a ministerial revolution, he was appointed treasurer to the present king, then prince of Wales, and continued to act in that capacity till his majesty's accession to the throne, when he was continued of the privy-council, but declined any further employ.

In 1704, he married Catherine, daughter of Sir Peter Apsley, son and heir of Sir Allen already mentioned; and by this lady, who died June 8, 1768, he had issue five daughters.

1. Frances, born in July 1708, married August 5, 1731, first to William Woodhouse, (son and heir apparent of Sir John Woodhouse, of Kimberley, in Norfolk, baronet) who died knight of the shire for the county of Norfolk, March 31, 1735; and, secondly, she married James Whitshed, of the kingdom of Ireland, and of Hampton-court, in the county of Middlesex, esquire, member of the two parliaments summoned in 1761 and 1768 for Cirencester.

2. Catherine, born November 12, 1709, married in April 1737, to Henry Reginald Courtenay, (uncle to the present viscount Courtenay) who died 1763 member of parliament for Honiton, in Devonshire, which borough he had also represented in the preceding parliament called in 1754.

3. Jane, born 1717, married in April 1744, to James Buller, esquire, of Morvail, in Cornwall, who died in 1763, knight of the shire for Cornwall, for which county he had served in the parliament summoned in 1754, having sat in the two preceding parliaments for the borough of East-loe, in that county.

O N S L O W, Baron O N S L O W.

THIS noble family were antiently seated in Shropshire, and assumed their surname from the lordship of Andeslow (since, by corruption, written Onslow) in the liberty of Shrewsbury. Their possessions were very considerable, and the first proprietor specified upon record was

ROGER DE ONDESLOW, who lived in the reign of Henry III. the time when surnames first began to prevail. He had two sons,

1. Thomas.
2. William.

THOMAS DE ANDESLOW is mentioned in deeds 9 and 31 Edward I. and dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother and heir

WILLIAM DE ONDESLOW, who left two sons,

1. Richard.
2. Thomas.

RICHARD DE ONDESLOW is mentioned in deeds in 8 Edward II. and had issue a son,

THOMAS DE ONDESLOW, who died unmarried, whereby the estate devolved to his uncle,

THOMAS DE ONSLOW (with this gentleman the name began to be written thus in 10 Edward II.) who had issue two sons, William and Thomas: the eldest of which dying without issue, the younger,

THOMAS DE ONSLOW, became possessed of the lordship of Onslow, in 15 Edward III. and had issue five sons, John, Richard, Robert, William, and Thomas, living in the reign of Richard II. and had issue Roger, from whom the Onslows of Rodington, in the county of Salop, descended, which became extinct in the male line in the reign of Henry VII.

JOHN ONSLOW, the eldest son of Thomas de Onslow, was living in 8 Henry VI. and by Margaret his wife, daughter and heir of Madoc Kina-ton, had two sons, and a daughter, Elizabeth; whereof Robert was heir to his brother Thomas, who was married, but died without issue. Which

ROBERT ONSLOW married Catharine, daughter of Richard Corbet, of Morton-Corbet, in the county of Salop, by whom he left issue Edward Onslow, his son and heir; and a daughter, Bridget, married to William Cotton, of Cotton, in the said county of Salop, esquire. The said

EDWARD ONSLOW, of Onslow, married Anne, daughter of Richard Houghton, of Houghton, in the county palatine of Lancaster, esquire, by whom he had issue four sons,

1. Humphry Onslow, who had three wives, but had issue only by his first, Margaret, daughter of Richard Wrottesley, of Wrottesley, in the county of Stafford, viz. Edward Onslow, of Onslow, esq; who, by Jane, daughter of Roger Foulter, of Bromhill, in Norfolk, had five sons, and three daughters; whereof Roger, his eldest son, succeeding at Onslow, was living in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and had issue six sons and five daughters.

2. Roger Onslow, ancestor to the present lord Onslow.

3. Thomas Onslow, of whose last will and testament it is not improper to give the following abstract. It was dated the 10th of August, 1556, and the probate, May 15, 1560. He bequeaths to all the children of Thomas Onslow, his son and heir, two hundred marks, to be equally divided among them; and, if he have no children at the time of his decease, then to the said Thomas. To all the children of Isabel Onslow, his daughter, two hundred marks, with remainder to the said Isabel. To William Onslow, his brother, thirty pounds. To Arthur, son of the said William, six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. To Edward Onslow, son to Humphry Onslow, his brother, six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. To Fulk, son of Roger Onslow, his brother, ten pounds. To William Leighton, of Plashe, in the county of Salop, gent. four yards of fine black velvet, at twenty shillings per yard. He appoints Thomas Onslow, his son, executor; and Humphry Onslow, his brother, and Richard Onslow, son to Roger Onslow, his brother, supervisors. And bequeaths to the said Richard Onslow, for his pains taken in his affairs at divers times, one hundred marks. Also if his son Thomas Onslow, and his daughter Isabel, die before him, he then appoints the aforesaid Edward Onslow, and Richard Onslow, his executors.

4. William Onslow, progenitor of the Onslows of Cliff, in Shropshire.

The second son,

ROGER ONSLOW, resided at Shrewsbury, and by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Thomas Poyner, of the county of Salop, had issue Fulk, hereafter mentioned, and Richard.

Fulk Onslow, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was clerk of the parliament, and died on the 6th of the ides of August, 1602, aged eighty-eight, and was buried at Hatfield, in Hertfordshire, where a monument was erected to his memory. He married Mary, daughter of — Whetenhall, relict of — Scot. His brother,

RICHARD ONSLOW, esquire, was brought up to the study of the law in the Inner Temple, where he arrived to such proficiency, that he was chosen autumn reader in the 4th year of queen Elizabeth; and the same year, at a grand Christmas kept with the highest magnificence there, when the lord Dudley (after earl of Leicester) the great favourite of queen Elizabeth, had the title of Palaphilos, and was

was constable and marshal; the next chief officer was Mr. Onslow, who had the title of lord chancellor.

He was attorney of the duchy of Lancaster, also of the court of wards; and, in the 8th year of queen Elizabeth, being recorder of the city of London, was appointed, with others of note, one of the commissioners to hear and determine all manner of treasons, and other crimes committed within the verge of the court. In the same year, June 27, he was made solicitor general, and chosen speaker of the house of commons. In the reign of queen Mary he was elected in two parliaments for Steyning in Sussex; and afterwards served for the same in the next reign, till his decease. He had a grant of the Black-friers, in the city of London, wherein he resided, and is now a considerable estate to one of his descendants; as appears from his last will and testament. Which will shews he was a person of sincere piety, sound judgment and prudence, and of great integrity. Before he begun his will, he made these awful expressions: "The wyll of God the Father, the Sone, and the Holy Ghoste, three persons and one God, be done upon me, nowe and ever. Amen.

"In the name of God, Amen. The twentieth day of Marche, in the thirteenth yeare of the raigne of our most gracyouse sovereign lady, Elizabeth, by the grace of God, queene of England, Fraunce, and Irelande, defendoure of the faith, &c. and in the yeare of oure Savoure Christe one thousande fyve hundreth three skore and tenne. I Richarde Onslowe, of the late Black-friers, in the city of London, esquier, being in good healthe of bodye, and of whole and perfecte mynd and remembrance, (praise and thanks be therefore unto almighty God) yet remembringe and consydering that as nothing is more certayne than deathe to me and all men lyvinge, so ys not eny thyng more uncerteyne then the howre and tyme thereof; and therefore being fullye minded and determyned to order and dispose thos lands, tenements, hereditaments, good, and chattels, wherewith Almighty God, of his great goodnes, hath endowed me; for the better mayntenaunce and quyetenesse of myne entyerlye beloved wyfe, and of oure children, for whom I am bownde in consyence to provide; and to prevente and take away, as much as in me lyethe, all occasyons of dyscorde, varyaunce, and unkyndenesse, which myght otherwyse aryse, or be sturred amongst them, concernynge the same; and especyallye for the more quyetnesse of my mynde in the tyme of my sycknesse unto deathe, whensoever and how soon soever yt shall please God to send yt; and that then my whole harte and mynde may be occupied and employed in godlye and hevenlye things, &c." He orders his body to be buried in such place, and in such sort, as shall seem most convenient to his executors and overseers of his last will and testament, hereafter named; wherein he wills that funeral pomp be avoided, and comely order, according to his calling, observed. And first, he wills that all debts and duties, which he owed either in law or conscience, be first truly satisfied and paid. And manors and lands being conveyed to him for his sister-in-law, Helen Brown, by the name of Helen Knevet, widow, upon special trust and confidence in him reposed, he declares that he had no interest therein, and requires his executors to grant to the said Helen the term of years he had in the premises. He settles his manor of Awlmeare, with other lands in the county of Salop, on Edward, his second son; as also his lands in the parish of Holy-cross, near the town of Shrewsbury: and recites, that, by indenture dated January 11, in 9 Eliz. he had freely granted to Foulke Onslow, his brother, and Mary, his wife, the advowson and right of patronage of the parsonage and church of Bishop's-Hatfield, with the chapel of Tatrice, in the county of Hertford, for term of the lives of the said Foulke and Mary, and of the longer liver of them; remainder to the said Edward Onslow his son.

It further appears by his will, that he died possessed of divers lands in Buckinghamshire; and of lands and tenements in the town of Windsor, in Berkshire; the manor of Bramleigh, with the appurtenances, and view of frank-pledge, in the county of Surry; as also the manor of Knoll, with the appurtenances, and divers other lands and rents in Shalford, Womershe, Guilford, Craneley, and Hascombe, in the said county of Surry; and in Chellesfield, and Codeham, in the county of Kent: (which manors, and most of the said lands in Surry, are now in the possession of the present lord Onslow) all which he settled on Robert, his eldest son and heir; remainder to his second son, Edward Onslow. Likewise settles on them, as aforesaid, all his messuages, lands, tenements, &c. whatsoever, in the late Black-friers, in the city of London, and in the counties of Middlesex, Surry, Sussex, Gloucestershire, Wiltshire, Salop, or elsewhere within the realm of England.

And towards the end of his will he thus expresses himself: "Also, for the great experience which I have of the virtue, and godly disposition, and care of the said Catharine, my wife, I will and commit to her, the order, education, and bringing up of our children in virtue and learning, and more especially of our daughters, till they be married, or come to the age of one and twenty years. And I give to Catharine, my loving wife, two parts of all my lands and hereditaments, for the term of her life, to the preferment in marriage of my five daughters, at her discretion. Also I bequeath to every of my good and loving friends, Peter Osborn, John Mershe, William Leighton, of Plashe, esquires, a ring of gold, with a death's head. To Robert, earl of Leicester, my best standing cup with a cover. To the right honourable William, lord Burghley, my special good lord, my gilt bowl with a cover." And he appoints his loving wife, and Robert Onslow, his son, executors; and desires Peter Osborn, John Mershe, and William Leighton, esquires, to be overseers. The probate bears date the 25th of April, 1571.

He married Catharine, daughter and heir to Richard Harding, of Knoll, in the county of Surry, esquire, with whom he had that estate, which became the seat of his posterity. He departed this life of a pestilential fever, after five days illness, 1571, and lieth buried in St. Chad's church in Shrewsbury, between two pillars, on the south side of the chancel, towards our lady's isle, in a fair raised tomb, with the figures of him and his wife lying thereon; and on the sides and at the feet of the tomb are the figures of two sons, and five daughters, and this inscription:

Repaired 1742 by the right honourable Arthur Onslow, eſquire, ſpeaker of the houſe of commons lineally deſcended from this Mr. Onslow, who was ſpeaker of the houſe of commons in the eighth of queen Elizabeth, and was lineal anceſtor alſo to the right honourable Sir Richard Onslow, baronet, ſpeaker of the houſe of commons in the eighth of queen Anne, afterward lord Onslow.

Of the five daughters, Margaret was married to Richard Threll, of Drengwyke, in the county of Suffex, eſquire. Cecily, to Sir Humphry Winch, of Everton, in the county of Bedford, one of the juſtices of the Common Pleas; and Elizabeth, to Richard Hill, of Blackwall, in the county of Middleſex, eſquire; one of them, or at leaſt one of the name, was maid of honour to queen Elizabeth. His ſons were Robert, who ſucceeded his father; but, dying unmarried, Edward, his brother, became heir, was knighted by queen Elizabeth, and reſided at Knoll, in the county of Surry.

Of this

Sir EDWARD ONSLOW, though it does not appear that he was engaged in public affairs, yet Clark, in the life of Sedgwick, ſays of him, 'that he was eminent for his virtue, and ſanctity of life.' He married Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Thomas Shirley, of Preſton-place, in the county of Suffex, knight, by whom he had iſſue two ſons.

1. Thomas Onslow.

2. Richard Onslow.

Alſo three daughters.

1. Elizabeth, married to Chriſtopher Gardner, of Darking, in Surry, eſquire.

2. Jane, wedded to Edward Carre, of Hillingdon, in the county of Middleſex, eſquire; and ſecondly to Sir Gerard de Aungier, of Eaſt Clendon, in Surry, after lord Aungier, baron of Longford, in the kingdom of Ireland.

3. Mary, wife to John Duncombe, of Albury, in Surry, eſquire.

THOMAS ONSLOW, the eldeſt ſon, was under age at the death of his father, and having married Mary, daughter of Sir Samuel Lennard, of Weſt

Wickham, in Kent, knight, died without iſſue, in the fourteenth year of king James the Firſt; when

RICHARD ONSLOW, his brother, on the inquisition taken after his death, was found to be his heir, and of the age of fifteen years and a half.

He was knighted by king James the Firſt at Theobalds, on the 2d of June, 1624; and, in the reign of king Charles the Firſt, ſerved in three ſeveral parliaments for the county of Surry. He eſpouſed the party that were for redreſſing the grievances of the nation; and, many unforeſeen circumſtances having brought on a rebellion, he, by order of parliament, raiſed a regiment for their ſervice, which, in May 1664, was employed in the ſiege of Baſing-houſe; but it does not appear that he was active in the army. In 1646, being aſperſed in print by one Withers, the parliament took it into conſideration, and on the ſeventh of Auguſt, that year, came to the following reſolution:

"That a charge laid upon Sir Richard Onslow, a member of the houſe, by Mr. Withers, is not ſufficiently proved. That it was falſe and ſcandalous, and injurious to Sir Richard Onslow. That Mr. Withers ſhall pay five hundred pounds to him for damages, and his book to be burnt."

On the 6th of December, 1648, having voted, "that the king's answer to the propoſitions from both houſes was a ground for them to proceed upon to the ſettlement of the kingdom's peace;" the army, the next morning, ſeized on one and forty of the principal members, then ſitting; and Sir Richard Onslow being one of them, they were conveyed into their great Victualling-houſe, near Weſtminſter-hall, called Hell; where (ſays Dugdale) they were kept all night without any beds, and were after driven as priſoners (through ſnow and rain) to ſeveral inns in the Strand, and there confined under guards of the ſoldiers, who upbraided them in their paſſage.

He was no favourer of a commonwealth; nor do we find that he ever ſat in that parliament again; it is certain he was at none of their meetings for bringing the king to his trial, or that thoſe in power nominated him one of the judges on the mournful occaſion, or that he accepted of any employment. When Cromwell, in 1653, diſſolved the laſt parliament called by king Charles the Firſt, he and his officers made choice of a number of men, of about one hundred and twenty perſons, to meet, as a parliament, to ſettle the government of the nation; and, accordingly, by his letters ſent to each of them, they met on the 4th of July, 1653; but neither Sir Richard Onslow, or his ſon, Arthur Onslow, eſquire, ſat in that aſſembly, who, on the 13th of December following, reſigned their whole power to Cromwell, the general. After which, by the advice of his council of officers, he took on him the title of Lord Protector of the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, &c. and was inſtalled in Weſtminſter-hall on December 16, and took his oath that he would not violate any thing contained in the inſtrument of government adminiſtered to him; wherein there was an article, "That a parliament ſhould be ſummoned to meet at Weſtminſter, September 3, 1654, &c." In this parliament, Sir Richard Onslow, and his ſon, Arthur Onslow, eſquire, were returned for the county of Surry: but the ſaid parliament, which ſat to do buſineſs on the fifth of September following, following, being not so pliable to his purposes as he expected, he dissolved it on the 22d of January following, which was as soon as he could do it, by the instrument of government he had sworn to, and subscribed thereto.

On another parliament being called to meet at Westminster, September 17, 1656, he, and his son, Arthur Onslow, esquire, were again chosen for the county of Surry, and on the 9th of April, 1657, Sir Richard was appointed one of the select committee to attend the Protector to receive his doubts and scruples on taking the office of King. Whereupon, April 16, he delivered his opinion as follows:

"Every office ought to have a name adequate to the said office; and no other name than King can be suitable and comprehensive enough, to contain in it the common good to all intents and purposes. It is a rule, that the kings of England cannot alter the laws of England, ratione nominis, but are bound to govern according to the laws of England, but for any other name, there is no obligation lies upon it.

"That the very title is necessary, was declared in 9 Edw. IV. when the great controversy was betwixt king Edw. IV. and Henry VI. that sometimes one was in possession and then another; that it was necessary the realm should have a King, under whom the laws might be maintained and holden: for every action done by the King in possession was valid and good, as it was his jurisdiction royal. So likewise in 1 and 3 Hen. VII. the same opinion was held and declared, that a King de facto was necessary; and in all alterations from persons and families, yet our ancestors always retained the Title and the Name.

"There is a prius, and a primum. Another name may, in order and degree, be first, that is, before other men: but it was a King was primum, the first name that had its beginning with our laws. The customs of England are the laws of England, as well as our state's laws. The title of King and Custom are two twins born together, and have had continuance together; and therefore to say Protector, of which we know the date, with custom (of which no memory can speak) is a kind of contradiction to the original.

"Then there must be a law introductive, because Protector is a new name that our law doth not yet know. Now to ingraft a young science upon an old stock it will never grow; but there must be an eradication of the old root, and a new plantation must be made. And that all the old customs must be put into positive laws, will be a thing consisting of much time and great difficulty.

"The title of King is so incorporated, and in conjunction with our Customs, which do very much concern the people of England to be upheld; and then there is a rule quæque res in conjunctione pro bono conjunctionis, that ought to be done, which is for the good of the conjunction and benefit thereof; and if it be for the advantage of the single person and the people, it brings me to mind of another rule my old master Tully taught me, Communis utilitatis derelictio contra naturam est, it is not natural to decline that which is for a common benefit and utility.

"And therefore I shall say but this as to the Title, that as the patriarch Jacob joined together in his blessing upon Judah the law-giver and scepter; the parliament of the three nations desires to preserve the title King in and upon the law. Another argument your highness was pleased to draw from providence, &c."

The earl of Clarendon recites the perplexity Cromwell was in, on refusing to accept the government under the title of a King, and that many were then of opinion his genius at that time forsook him, and yielded to the king's spirit, and that his reign was near its expiration; and that others were as confident, if he had accepted it, he could not have lived many days after. However, on the 20th of December following, Cromwell sent writs of summons, under the great seal, to several members of the house of commons (and particularly to those of the committee that had attended him) to take their place in parliament as peers, the whole being in number sixty; of which were Robert, earl of Warwick, Edmund, earl of Mulgrave, Edward, earl of Manchester, with other noblemen; and Sir Richard Onslow, Sir John Hobart, general Monk, &c.

Being in principle for monarchical government, he did not accept of being one of the council of state either under Oliver, or his son Richard; but for the most part lived retired at his seat in Surry. He, and Sir Anthony-Ashley Cooper (after earl of Shaftesbury) were close friends, whereby he was in the secret for the restoration of king Charles the Second; and with him, and many other considerable persons, procured the repeal of the oath of abjuration of the king and royal family, and were of the council of state which preceded the restoration. He served for the town of Guildford in the convention which voted the return of king Charles; Arthur, his eldest son, being elected with him. He also served for Guildford in that which was called the Long Parliament, and departed this life in the year 1664. By Elizabeth, his wife, daughter and heiress of Arthur Strangeways, esquire, he had fourteen children, whereof six sons and five daughters lived to maturity.

1. Anne, was married to Sir Anthony Shirley, of Preston-place, in Suffex, baronet.
2. Catharine, to Sir Thomas Cobb, of Adderbury, in the county of Oxford, baronet.
3. Mary, to Sir George Freeman, of Betsworth, in the county of Surry, knight of the Bath.
4. Jane, to Sir George Croke, of Waterstoke, in the county of Oxford, baronet.
5. Elizabeth, to John Berney, of Swarston, in the county of Norfolk, esquire; and secondly, to Sir Francis Wyndham, of the county of Somerset, baronet.

Of the six sons,

1. Arthur Onslow, the eldest, born in 1622, succeeded his father.
2. Henry Onslow, seated at Warnham, and after at Drengwyke, in Suffex, was knighted by king Charles the Second on the 18th of May, 1664. He married —, widow of — Yates, of Warnham, in Suffex, esquire, and daughter of Sir Richard Stidolph, of Norbury, in the county of Surry, by whom he had one son, Richard, and a daughter. Which Richard left issue one son, named Denzil, of Drengwike aforesaid, and several daughters.
3. Richard Onslow, married Mary, daughter of Sir Abraham Reynardson, lord-mayor of London, but died without issue.
4. Thomas

4. Thomas Onslow, } died unmarried.
5. John Onslow, }

6. Denzil Onslow married Sarah, third daughter and coheir of Sir Thomas Foot, baronet, and widow of Sir John Lewis, of Ledston, in the county of York, knight and baronet, who died August 14, 1671. He served in parliament for the borough of Haselmeer, in Surry, in the 31st of king Charles II. and, during the reigns of king William and queen Anne, was a member for the same borough, or for Guildford; also, in the 7th year of king William, was chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Surry, with his nephew, Sir Richard Onslow, baronet. He was seated at Purford, in Surry; and, on the accession of George I. was again chosen for Guildford, and after elected one of the knights for the county of Surry; and was one of the commissioners for victualling the navy, from 1706 to 1721, when he died representative of the said county in parliament, leaving no issue.

ARTHUR ONSLOW, eldest son of Sir Richard, was, before he came of age, elected a member for Bramber, in Suffex, in the last parliament called by king Charles I. and served, with his father, for the county of Surry, in the parliaments held at Westminster in 1654 and 1656. He also served in the two first parliaments of Charles II. for Guildford, as beforementioned, and in the three last for the county of Surry. He had for his first wife Rose, daughter and heir of Nicholas Stoughton, of Stoughton, in Surry, esquire, who died without leaving any surviving issue by him; but taking to his second wife Mary, second daughter and coheir of Sir Thomas Foot, knight and baronet, lord mayor of London in 1649, who died in the ninety-sixth year of his age, on the 12th of October, 1687, he, on his decease, succeeded to the dignity of a baronet; the said Sir Thomas Foot (who was grandson of Robert Foot, of Royston, in Cambridgeshire) having a special clause in his patent, with limitation of that title to his said son-in-law, with the same precedency, viz. November 21 (12 Charles II.) 1660.

This Sir Arthur Onslow, baronet, died on the 21st of July, 1688, and was buried at Cranley; and by his second lady, before-mentioned, had issue four sons, and three daughters, who were,

1. Mary, married to Sir Robert Reeve, of Thwaite, in the county of Suffolk, baronet; and secondly to Thomas Vincent, of Fetcham, in the county of Surry, esquire.

2. Elizabeth, who died unmarried.

3. Catharine, wedded to Sir William Clark, of Shobington, in the county of Buckingham, bart.

His sons were,

1. Richard Onslow, his successor, eight years old in 1662.

2. Foot Onslow, esquire, born 1655, who served for Guildford in several parliaments in the reign of king William; particularly in the convention parliament in 1688; and, in 1694, was constituted one of the commissioners of the excise. He was first commissioner at that board, from 1699, to the time of his death, which happened on the 11th of May, 1710, and was buried at Woodford, in the county of Essex, where a tomb is erected to the memory of him and Susanna his wife, who survived him, dying on the 10th of June, 1715, aged forty-nine years. She was daughter of Thomas Anlaby, of Etton, in the East Riding of the county of York, esquire, and was first married to Arnold Colwall, of Woodford, esquire, by whom she had issue; and she had also issue by Mr. Onslow, two sons, Arthur and Richard, and five daughters, who survived him. 1. Mary, who died unmarried; 2. Susannah, married to — Cresswell; 3. Elizabeth, married to Francis Drake, esquire; 4. Gulielma-Maria, married to — Boswell; and 5. Lucretia.

Arthur, the eldest son, was seated at Embercourt, near Thames-Ditton, in the county of Surry. He was chosen a member of parliament for Guildford in the year 1719, as also in the succeeding parliament: of which town he was recorder. In the first parliament called by his late majesty, he was chosen again for the town of Guildford, as also one of the knights of the shire for the county of Surry; and, on the meeting of that parliament, was unanimously elected speaker of the house of commons. On the 25th of July, 1728, he was sworn one of his majesty's most honourable privy council; and on May 13, 1729, appointed her late majesty's chancellor, and keeper of her great seal. In April 1734, he was constituted treasurer of the navy; which post he resigned in May 1743. And in 1737, he was elected high steward of the town of Kingston upon Thames, in the county of Surry. He was again chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Surry, in the parliament first summoned to meet at Westminster, June 13, 1734: also was unanimously chosen speaker thereof, on the 14th of January, 1734-5. On the meeting of the parliament in 1741, he was again unanimously chosen speaker of the honourable house of commons, being then also one of the knights of the shire for the county of Surry; and likewise chosen one of the representatives for the county, in the parliament called in 1747, and unanimously elected speaker. In these four parliaments (says Brown Willis, an industrious searcher in antiquities) "He was elected speaker by as unanimous a concurrence of all the members in general, as any of them had been by their constituents in particular: and as he has enjoyed this eminent station a longer time than any of his predecessors, so he has executed this most important trust with equal, if not superior abilities, to any of those who have gone before him." In the parliament, which met May 31, 1754, he was again chosen for the county of Surry, unanimously elected speaker, and presented the next day, June 1; and two days before the close of the eighth and last session, on March 18, 1761, the following resolutions of a full and unanimous house of commons, did honour and justice to his zeal and assiduity in the service of the public. The first was,

"That the thanks of this house be given to Mr. Speaker, for his constant and unwearied attendance in the chair during the course of above thirty-three years, in five successive parliaments, for the unshaken integrity and steady impartiality there, and for the indefatigable pains he has, with uncommon abilities, constantly taken to promote the real interest of his king and country, to maintain the honours and dignity of parliament, and to preserve inviolable the rights and privileges of the commons of Great Britain."

Upon

Upon which Mr. Speaker expressed himself thus :

“ I was never under so great a difficulty in my life to know what to say, in this place, as I am at present—Indeed it is almost too much for me—I can stand against misfortunes and distresses : I have stood against misfortunes and distresses, and may do so again : but I am not able to stand this overflow of good-will and honour to me. It overpowers me ; and had I all the strength of language, I could never express the full sentiments of my heart, upon this occasion, of thanks and gratitude. If I have been happy enough to perform any services here that are acceptable to this house, I am sure I now receive the noblest reward for them ; the noblest that any man can receive for any merit, far superior to any, in my estimation, to all the other emoluments of this world. I owe every thing to this house : I not only owe to this house that I am in this place, but that I have had their constant support in it : and to their good-will and assistance, their tenderness and indulgence towards me in my errors, it is that I have been able to perform my duty here to any degree of approbation. Thanks, therefore, are not so much due to me for these services, as to the house itself, who made them to be services to me.

“ When I began my duty here, I set out with a resolution and promise to the house to be impartial in every thing, and to shew respect to every body. The first I know I have done : it is the only merit I can assume. If I have failed in the other—it was unwillingly—it was inadvertently : and I ask their pardon most sincerely to whomsoever it may have happened—I can truly say, the giving satisfaction to all has been my constant aim, my study, and my pride.

“ And now, Sirs, I am to take my last leave of you. It is, I confess, with regret because the being within these walls has ever been the chief pleasure of my life ; but my advanced age and infirmities, and some other reasons, call for retirement and obscurity. There I shall spend the remainder of my days, and shall only have power to hope and pray ; and my hopes and prayers, my daily prayers, will be for the continuance of the constitution in general, and that the freedom, the dignity, and authority of this house may be perpetual.”

In return, the house immediately resolved, nem. con. “ 1. That the thanks of this house be given to Mr. Speaker, for what he has now said to the house, and that the same be printed in the votes of the day. 2. That an humble address be presented to his majesty, humbly to beseech his majesty to confer some signal mark of his royal favour upon the right honourable Arthur Onslow, esquire, speaker of this house, for his great and eminent services performed to his country for the space of thirty-three years, and upwards ; during which he has, with distinguished ability and integrity, presided in the chair of this house : and to assure his majesty, that whatever expence his majesty should think proper to be incurred upon that account, this house will make good the same to his majesty.”

The next day, upon the presentation of the address, his majesty was pleased to reply, “ That he had the justest sense of the long services, and great merit, of Mr. Onslow, present speaker of the house of commons, and had already taken the same into consideration ; and that he would do therein what should appear to be most proper, agreeable to the desire of his faithful commons.”

On the 20th of the ensuing month, by letters patent, his majesty was pleased to grant to the right honourable Arthur Onslow, late speaker of the house of commons, and his son George Onslow, esquire, a pension of three thousand pounds per ann. out of the civil list revenue, to remain to the survivors of them. But as his majesty could not extend the effect of the said grant beyond the term of his own life, he recommended it to the house in the first session of the next parliament, to secure it effectually for the benefit of Mr. Onslow and his son ; and thereupon a bill was brought in, and having passed both houses, received the royal assent.

The city of London could not let so great a man retire from publick business, without testifying the approbation which his conduct throughout life, in his important station, had constantly met with in the metropolis of this country. Their thanks were, together with the freedom of their corporation, in a gold box of one hundred pounds value, presented to him by Sir Thomas Harrison, the then chamberlain of London, pursuant to a resolution made unanimously at a court of common-council, held at Guildhall, May 5, 1761. These marks of public respect he received with that modesty and satisfaction, which must ever accompany the great man, who does not over-rate, and yet cannot be unconscious of the services which his conspicuous station has enabled him to perform for the public weal.

He married Anne, one of the daughters of John Bridges, esquire, of Thames Ditton, and nieces of Henry Bridges, of Ember-court, in Surry, esq; and by her, who died on the 5th of June, 1766, had issue a daughter, Anne, who died December 20, 1751, and a son George : and dying February 17, 1768, was succeeded in his estate and pension by the said son ; who on May 13, 1754, had a grant of the place of out-ranger of Windsor forest, in the room of Peter, third lord King, deceased, which he enjoyed till May, 1763, when it was bestowed upon Benjamin Bathurst, brother to the present lord Bathurst. In the parliament, which met for the dispatch of business, May 31, 1754, he was returned member for Rye, in Sussex. At the general election, 1761, he was returned as knight of the shire for the county of Surry ; and being July 13, 1765, appointed one of the lords commissioners of the treasury, he was re-elected for the same county, which place of lord commissioner he still enjoys. In the present parliament, chosen 1768, he was again returned knight of the shire for Surry. He is also high-steward for Kingston. This George Onslow married, June 26, 1753, Harriot, daughter of Sir John Shelly, of Michael Grove, Sussex, baronet, by his wife Margaret, youngest sister of Thomas Pelham Holles, duke of Newcastle, and by her had issue a daughter, Henrietta, and two sons, John and Henry, which three died young, also two sons now living, (1768) Thomas, born March 15, 1755, and Edward, born April 9, 1758.

Richard Onslow, esquire, second son of the said Foot Onslow, has been elected member for Guildford ford in the five last parliaments. Being colonel of a regiment of foot, and adjutant-general of his majesty's forces, he was, February 20, 1741-2, constituted brigadier-general of his majesty's forces. In 1743, serving the campaign with his majesty, he was promoted at Hanau, July 13, to the rank of major-general; and April 30, 1745, resigning the command of the king's own regiment of foot, he was constituted captain of the first troop of grenadier guards. On October 10, 1747, he was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-general; and on February 15, 1752, appointed governor of fort William in Scotland. He died lieutenant-general of his majesty's forces, and colonel of the second troop of horse grenadiers, March 17, 1760. He married Rose, sister to the aforesaid Anne Bridges, who died in little more than a year after her marriage, without children. And he afterwards married Pooley, daughter of Charles Walton, of Little Bursted, in Essex, esquire, and niece of Sir George Walton, knight, one of the vice-admirals of his majesty's fleet, by whom he had issue three daughters, Mary and Anne, who died infants, and Elizabeth, married to the reverend George Hamilton, brother to the earl of Abercorn. Also three sons, 1. George. 2. Richard, born June 23, 1741, a captain in the royal navy, and unmarried. 3. Arthur, born August 31, 1746. The eldest son George Onslow, upon the decease of his father, 1760, was elected in his place member of parliament for Guildford, being then a captain in the first regiment of foot-guards. At the general elections in 1761, and 1768 he was elected for the same borough. He was appointed, 1765, out-ranger of Windsor forest for life. On July 20, 1752, he married Jane, daughter of the reverend Thomas Thorpe, of Chillingham, in Northumberland, by whom he has had issue two sons, Richard, born Jan. 13, 1754; George, born April 7, 1764, who died young; and a daughter, Pooley, born March 3, 1758.

We now return to,

(First Lord) RICHARD ON SLOW, (the eldest son of Sir Arthur Onslow) of whom we are principally to treat. He was born in the year 1654, and was a member for Guildford in the three last parliaments called by king Charles II. as also in that called by king James II. and, in the convention parliament, was one of the knights of the shire for the county of Surry; which he afterwards constantly represented, whilst he continued a commoner, except in the 9th of queen Anne, when, by a powerful interest made against him, he lost his election by a few votes, but was returned for the borough of St. Maw's, in Cornwall.

In the reign of king William he was one of the lords of the admiralty; and, November 16, 1708, was unanimously chosen speaker of the house of commons, and sworn of the privy council to queen Anne, on the 17th of June, 1710. He was also high steward of the borough of Guildford, and governor of the Levant company.

On the accession of George I. he was again sworn of the privy council, and constituted one of the lords of the treasury, and chancellor and under-treasurer of the exchequer. Also, on resigning those offices, in October 1715, was made one of the tellers of the Exchequer during life. And, in consideration of his great merits, and in particular for having on all occasions strenuously asserted the rights and liberties of his country, and been indefatigable in supporting the protestant interest, was, by letters patent bearing date the 25th of June, 1716, created a peer of Great Britain, to him and the heirs male of his body, by the stile and title of lord Onslow, baron of Onslow, in the county of Salop, and of Clandon, in Surry; with limitation, for want of issue male of his body, to his uncle, Denzil Onslow, of Pyrford, esquire, and the issue male of his body; and, in default, to the heirs male of the body of Sir Arthur Onslow, baronet, father of the said Sir Richard.

His lordship was constituted lord-lieutenant of the county of Surry, July 6, 1716, and died universally lamented, on December 5, 1717, being very much esteemed for his great humanity, affability, and other shining qualities; and lies buried at Merrow, in Surry. He gave the sum of two hundred pounds, in his life-time, for purchasing lands and tenements to be settled on the incumbent of the united churches of the Holy Trinity and St. Mary's in Guildford.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Henry Tulse, knight, lord-mayor of London, and by her (who died at Croydon, November 25, 1718) had two sons,

1. Thomas Onslow, his successor.
2. Richard Onslow, who died young.

Also two daughters,

1. Elizabeth, first married to Thomas Middleton, of Stansted Montfichet, in the county of Essex, esquire, (who died one of the knights of the shire for that county) and secondly to Samuel Baldwin, esquire. She died 1736.
2. Mary, married to Sir John Williams, of Stoke, in the county of Suffolk, knight, one of the aldermen of the city of London.

The eldest son,

(Second Lord) THOMAS ON SLOW, had, for several years, been chosen a member of the house of commons, first for Gatton, in the first year of queen Anne, and for the city of Chichester, in the fourth year of her reign; and afterwards, whilst he was a commoner, for the county of Surry, and the boroughs of Haslemere and Blechingley, in the said county. On the death of his father, he was, December 9, 1719, by king George I. appointed lord lieutenant of the county of Surry, and one of the tellers of the Exchequer, in which he was continued by his late majesty; and, in 1737, was made custos rotulorum of the county of Surry, and also high steward of the town of Guildford; he was also governor of the Turkey company. His lordship departed this life in June 1740, and was buried at Merrow.

He married Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Mr. Knight, of the island of Jamaica, and niece and heir of colonel Charles Knight, of the said island, with whom he had a great fortune; and by her (who died April 19, 1731, and was buried at Merrow) had an only son, Richard, his successor, born in the year 1713. Which,

(Third and present Lord) RICHARD ON SLOW was chosen a member for the borough of Guildford, and, succeeding his father, was constituted lord lieutenant of the county of Surry; and on January 29, 1740-1, his majesty being present in council, his lordship took the oaths appointed to be taken thereupon. This post he still enjoys. In 1752, his lordship was installed a knight companion of the most honourable order of the Bath.

His lordship, on the 16th of May, 1741, married Mary, daughter of Sir John Elwill, baronet, but has yet no issue. His lordship is doctor of laws.

MARSHAM, Baron ROMNEY.

THIS noble family took their surname from the town of Marsham, in Norfolk, where their ancestors were seated. We have not, however, any particular account of them till the latter end of the 15th century, when we find they had changed their place of residence; for at that time

THOMAS MARSHAM lived in the parish of St. Bartholomew's, in London, and was one of the aldermen of that city. He married Magdalen, daughter of Richard Springham, merchant of London, and had issue six sons, and four daughters. He was buried in Islington church, on the 12th of March, 1624.

Of which sons,

JOHN MARSHAM, the second, born in the said parish of St. Bartholomew's, August 23, 1602, was put to Westminster school, and from thence sent to St. John's college, in Oxford, where he was entered a commoner in 1619. He took the degree of master of arts in 1625, in which year he went into France, and staid the winter at Paris. The two following years he travelled into most parts of that kingdom, visited Italy, and some parts of Germany, and then returned to London, where he studied the common law in the Middle Temple. In 1629 he went through Holland and Guelderland to the siege of Bois-le-duc; and, leaving that place, took his rout by Flushing to Bologne, and Paris, to attend Sir Thomas Edmonds, ambassador-extraordinary to the court at Fontainebleau, to swear the French king to the peace. After his return home, he took to his former studies, and, in the beginning of the year 1637-8, was sworn one of the six clerks in chancery. On the breaking out of the civil wars, he followed his majesty and the great seal to Oxford, and therefore was put out of his place by the prevailing party, and was plundered in his estate, and lost to an incredible value. On the declension of the royal cause, he retired to his studies in London, and compounded for his estate. In 1660 he was returned to parliament by the city of Rochester, restored to his former post of master in chancery, and had the honour of knighthood conferred on him; being then wrote of Whorn's-place, in Kent, which he purchased; and, three years after, was created a baronet. He was an accomplished gentleman, and excellent historian; for which reason father Simon, in his writings, called him The Great Marsham of England. And Wood, in his history of the Oxford writers, observes, that "Monsieur Carcary, the king of France's library-keeper, and all the great and learned men of Europe, his contemporaries, acknowledged him to be one of the greatest antiquaries, and most accurate and learned writers of his time; as appears by their testimonies under their hands and seals, in their letters to him, which would make a volume in folio."

He wrote Diatriba Chronologica, Lond. 1649. Chronicus Canon Ægyptiacus, Ebraicus, Græcus, et Disquisitiones, Lond. 1672. The preface to the second volume of the Monasticon Anglican. which he called ΠΡΟΠΥΛΑΙΟΝ Johannis Marsham. And at his death he left other works unfinished; 1. Imperium Persicum. 2. De Provinciis et Legionibus Romanis. 3. De Re Nummaria; and others.

He died at Busby-hall, in Hertfordshire, on the 25th of May, 1685; and his body was buried at Caxton, near Rochester, in Kent. He left issue by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Sir William Hammond, of St. Alban's, in East Kent, two sons,

1. John Marsham, of Caxton, baronet.

2. Robert Marsham, of Busby-hall, in Hertfordshire, ancestor to the present lord Romney.

The eldest son,

Sir JOHN MARSHAM, baronet, was a studious and learned gentleman, and made a great progress in writing the history of England, in a more exact and correct manner than any extant. He was possessed of his father's library, which, tho' diminished by the fire that happened in London in 1666, yet was very considerable, and highly to be valued for

Mr. Robert Clarkson, of the City of New York, had the cabinet of Queen Victoria, and the Queen's own private collection, and was a leading member of the British Museum. He died in 1882, and his collection was sold to the British Museum. The British Museum is the largest and most important collection of the world, and it is the only one of its kind. It is the only one of its kind, and it is the only one of its kind.

for the exquisite remarks in the margin of most of the books. He was succeeded in dignity and estate by his only son, who dying unmarried, the estate and title of baronet devolved on his brother Sir Robert Marsham, of Busby-hall before-mentioned.

Which

Sir ROBERT MARSHAM, by the gift of his father, had his cabinet of Greek medals, more curious than any other private collection; and was also a studious and learned gentleman. He succeeded his father, as one of the six clerks in chancery; and, in July 1681, received the honour of knighthood. He served in three several parliaments in the reign of king William, and in the first of queen Anne. He died July 15, 1703, having had issue by his wife, —, daughter of —, four daughters.

1. Elizabeth, the wife of Sir Thomas Palmer, of Wigham, in Kent.

2. Margaretta, the wife of Sir Brook Bridges, of Goodnestone, in Kent.

3. Anne, died young.

4. Mary, the wife of Sir Thomas Hales, of Howlets, baronet.

Also three sons.

1. Robert Marsham, his successor.

2. John Marsham,

3. Ferdinando Marsham, } died young.

(First Lord) ROBERT MARSHAM, upon the death of his father, succeeded as baronet. He was chosen in the three last parliaments of queen Anne, as also in the first of George I. for the borough of Maidstone, in Kent. He had great merit with the house of Brunswic, and was in England, reputed so good a friend to the protestant succession, that he was chosen by the commons, one of the managers for looking into the conduct of the ministry for the four last years of the reign of queen Anne. By George I. the dignity of the peerage, with the title of lord Romney, in Kent, was conferred upon him; the letters patent for this creation bear date June 25, 1716. In the following year he was appointed governor of Dover castle.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of the unfortunate Sir Cloudesley Shovel, baronet, who was cast away upon the rocks of Scilly, October 22, 1707, when he was rear-admiral and commander in chief of the fleet. By this lady, (who, after his decease in September 1732, married John, lord Carmichael, afterwards earl of Hyndford, and died in November 1750) he had issue three daughters.

1. Elizabeth, born August 15, 1711, married in April 1741, Sir Jacob Bouverie, baronet, afterwards viscount Foulkstone.

2. Margaretta, born March 2, 1713, who died young.

3. Harriot, born May 11, 1721.

Also four sons.

1. Shovel Marsham, born October 15, 1709, who died young.

2. Robert Marsham, the present lord.

3. John Marsham, born November 14, 1715.

4. Thomas Marsham, born April 5, 1722. } died young;

His lordship departing this life November 2, 1724, was succeeded in his honours by his only surviving son, (Second and present Lord) ROBERT MARSHAM, born August 22, 1712. His lordship is colonel of the western battalion of the Kentish militia, and a doctor of laws, fellow of the Royal Society, president of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce; and vice-president of the Magdalen-house, in Goodman's-fields. To the acceptance of the latter, his lordship's benevolence and charity induced him; to the three preceding honours his abilities entitled him; and the first sets him forth as a friend to his king and country.

He married in August 1742, Priscilla, daughter and heir of Charles Pym, of the island of St. Christopher, by whom he has had a numerous issue, five daughters.

1. Priscilla, born December 20, 1745.

2. Elizabeth, born February 9, 1751.

3. Frances, born April 2, 1755.

4. Harriot, born May 28, 1760, who died young.

5. Charlotte, born November 12, 1761.

Also five sons.

1. Robert Pym, born April 27, 1743, died November 28, 1762.

2. Charles Marsham, born September 28, 1744.

3. John Marsham, born August 26, 1748.

C A D O G A N, Baron C A D O G A N.

THIS noble family is of ancient Welch extraction, both by the male and female line. In

THE MALE LINE

they claim descent from

ELISTAN DRUDD, (or the famous) son of Kuhdlyn, earl of Hereford. He was prince of the territories between Wye and Severn, in the time of the Saxon heptarchy, and was born in the ninth year of Athelstan, king of the Saxons, who was his godfather. In the year 933, he married Gladys or Laodicea, daughter and sole heir to Rhyn, the son of Edw-Owen. His son

KADWYN, married Joan, daughter of Brochwel ap Ardham, and was father of

LHEWELYN, lord of Bwyllt and Radnor, who, by his wife Joan, daughter of Rees ap Aaron, lord of Lhangathan, had issue

SISSYLLHT, lord of Bwyllt, who married Margaret, daughter of Eynon ap Sissyllht, of Machafam. Their son

HOWEL, lord of Pen Bwyllt, married Maud, daughter of Trahaern ap Gwgan, and had issue

MEREDITH BENGÔCH, lord of Bwyllt, who married Joan, daughter of Cadwallan, lord of Melienydd and Kerry, and by her was father of

LHEWELYN MOCLYN, lord of Bwyllt, who took to wife Cadwgan ap Thomas, ap Rodi, ap Owen, ap Gwyoneth, and their son

GRIFFITH ap Lhwelyn, of Bwyllt, esquire, married a lady and heiress not inferior to himself in nobleness of descent, having for her lineal ancestor, Tudor the Great, king of South Wales. The pedigree stands as follows, in

THE FEMALE LINE.

TUDOR the Great, king of South Wales, was father of

GRIFFITH, prince of South Wales, whose son

REES, prince of South Wales, in 17 Hen. II. took Caermarthen from the Flemings, and got Denavan-castle, and all Cardigan. He married Gwenllian, daughter of Madoc ap Meredith, prince of Powis, and dying May 4, 1199, was buried at St. David's. His son

GRIFFITH, prince of Cardigan, married Maud, daughter of William, lord Bruce, and had issue

OWEN ap Griffith, prince of Cardigan, whose wife, was daughter to Gwyon Sans, lord of Gwedegadah, and whose son

MEREDITH ap Owen, was lord of Ys y coed, and married Eleanor, daughter of Mac'gwn Vychan, and had a son

OWEN ap Meredith, lord of Ys y coed, who was married to Angharad, daughter of Lhwelyn, ap Meredith, lord of Coed-Owen. Their son

LHEWELYN ap Owen, lord of Ys y coed, married Eleanor, daughter of Henry, earl Barrie, in France, by Eleanor, eldest daughter of Edward I. king of England. The produce of this match was THOMAS LHEWELYN, lord of Ys y coed, who, by Eleanor, his wife, had an only daughter and heiress, the lady whom we have already mentioned as the wife of Griffith ap Lhwelyn of Bwyllt, esquire.

THIS JUNCTION

of two such noble and ancient families, could but prove an accession of honour to

RICHARD GRIFFITH, of Bwyllt, esquire, the son of Griffith ap Lhwelyn, last mentioned, and the ancestor to the present lord Cadogan. He married Angharad, daughter of Morgan ap Jevon, and had issue

REES ap Richard, of Dôl y gaer, in Brecknockshire, whose wife Gwenllian, bore to him

WILLIAM ap Rees, of Dôl y gaer, who married Jane, the daughter of William Barrie. Their son

WILLIAM KADWGAN or Cadogan, was the first who used this as a surname, which he has transmitted down to his posterity. He married Lucy, daughter and heir of John Gunter ap Jenkyn ap Gunter, and their son

GRIFFITH CADOGAN, married Jane, daughter of William Kamys, and had issue

PHILIP CADOGAN, whose wife Alice, daughter of John Glandon, of Uhandkewy, bore to him,

WILLIAM CADOGAN, who marrying Janet, daughter of John Evans Meyrie, had issue

WILLIAM CADOGAN, seated at Trostre, in Monmouthshire, who married Catharine, daughter of Howell ap Cemma, and was father of

WILLIAM CADOGAN, seated also at Trostre, who married Anne, daughter of George, son of Arnold, and had issue two sons, William, and Henry. Which

HENRY CADOGAN, was seated at Trostre, aforesaid, and also at Llanbeder, in the county of Pembroke; and having married Catherine, daughter of Thomas Stradling, a younger son of the Stradlings, of St. Donat's-castle, in Glamorganshire, had issue

WILLIAM CADOGAN, who was born at Cardiffe, February 5, 1601, and went over to Ireland with the earl of Strafford, where taking to a military life, he was in 1641, appointed captain of horse, and

and in 1649, being a major, was (according to Sir Richard Cox) sent from Dublin, with a party to discover the enemy, and to slacken their march, and did memorable service not only in destroying the country towards Teeroghan, but in cutting off a great many of the enemy. He likewise engaged those wicked traitors Phelim O'Neile, and Owen O'Rowe; and being very serviceable in the reduction of Ireland, was constituted governor of the borough and castle of Trim, in that kingdom: in which post he died, March 10, 1660-1, and was buried at Trim, where a monument is erected to his memory, with the following inscription:

Hic juxta conditæ sunt exuviae clarissimi viri Gulielmi Cadogan, armigeri, qui prænobili Thomæ Comiti Straffordiae, Hiberniæ sub auspiciis Caroli primi proregis, fuit a secretis; necnon ob eximias animi dotes acceptissimus, postea perduellione sæviante dirâ, pro religione, rege, patriaque, majori titulo decoratus, fortiter dimicavit. His son,

HENRY CADOGAN, who was a counsellor at law, died on the 13th of January, 1713-14, and was buried at Christ-church, in Dublin. He married Bridget, daughter to Sir Hardress Waller, knight, by whom he had two sons,

1. William Cadogan, late earl of Cadogan.
2. Charles Cadogan, now lord Cadogan.

Also a daughter,

Penelope, married to Sir Thomas Pendergast, baronet, colonel of a regiment of foot, who was killed at the battle of Tanniers, near Mons, A. D. 1709, leaving issue the present Sir Thomas Pendergast.

The eldest son,

(First Lord and only Earl) WILLIAM CADOGAN, took to a military life from his youth, and, by his merit, gradually rose to be general of his majesty's forces. He eminently distinguished himself in the wars under king William, both in Ireland at the battle of the Boyne, and in Flanders.

In 1701 he was made quarter-master general of the army, when, on the king of Spain's death, a new war threatened Europe, and king William, sensible of his own declining health, declared the earl of Marlborough general of the foot, and commander in chief of the forces in Holland.

In 1703, he was constituted colonel of a regiment of horse; and a brigadier-general on the 25th of August, 1704; having that year gallantly behaved both at Schellemburg, and at the battle of Hochstet. He was in the heat of the action at the attack of Schellemburg, wherein he had several shots in his cloaths, and was slightly wounded in his thigh. June 11, 1705, he was elected member of parliament for Woodstock. And the same year, at the forcing of the French lines near Tirlémont, July 18, he also behaved with remarkable bravery at the head of his regiment, which first attacking the enemy, had such success, that they defeated four squadrons of Bavarian guards, drove them through two battalions of their foot, and took four standards.

In 1706, he was in the battle of Ramelies; after which the duke of Marlborough sent from his camp at Meerlebeck, June 3 N. S. brigadier Cadogan, with six squadrons of horse, and his letter to the governor of Antwerp, to invite him and the garrison to the obedience of their lawful sovereign, king Charles III. who acquainting his grace that ten battalions were in the city and castle of Antwerp, who seemed inclined to surrender upon honourable terms, the duke thereupon sent him an authority to treat with them. And after some conferences, wherein they prayed they might have leave to go to the elector of Bavaria, to receive his directions upon the conduct they were to observe on the summons; which his grace did not think fit to grant. Thereupon finding his grace determined to reduce them, and that brigadier Cadogan, already posted near the city, had the duke's orders to give the garrison no more than four hours time to consider of the capitulation offered them, they complied therein; and the garrison, consisting of six French, and six Spanish regiments, were allowed to march out in three days, and be conducted to Quesnoy. But of the Walloon regiments, consisting of 600 men each, only 372 men marched out; the rest entering into the service of king Charles, except some few who were not in condition to serve; and returned to their respective dwellings. Afterwards, towards the close of the campaign that year, he was taken prisoner; of which our Gazette, No. 4252, gives this account, from the duke of Marlborough's camp at Helchin, before Menin, August 16: "The army made a general forage this morning within a mile of Tournay, with a guard of 6000 foot, and 800 horse. The foragers came home without loss; but brigadier Cadogan, as he was posting two advanced squadrons nearer to the town, had the misfortune to be taken prisoner, and was carried into Tournay." But he remained there only three days, the duke of Vendôme sending him, August 19, to the duke of Marlborough's camp, upon his parole; and five days after, he was exchanged for the baron Balavicini, a major-general in the French service, taken at the battle of Ramelies. And on January 1, 1706-7, he was promoted to the rank of major-general of her majesty's forces.

On Mr. Stepney's decease in 1707, he succeeded him as minister plenipotentiary in the government of the Spanish Netherlands; of which our Gazette, No. 4320, gives this account: "Brussels, December 5, 1701. Mr. Cadogan, major-general ral of her majesty's armies, arrived here on the 29th of the last month, where he is to reside with the character of envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the queen of Great Britain." And he soon after, in conference, brought to a conclusion the negociation for the speedy exchange of prisoners; and, having shared in the most difficult enterprizes throughout the war, was constituted a lieutenant-general on the 10th of January, 1708-9.

In 1709, the day before the battle of Tanniers, near Mons, when the two armies were in sight of each other, and an officer from the French having made a signal for a truce, several of both sides met in a friendly manner; and the French, inquiring for an officer of distinction, desired him to acquaint the duke of Marlborough that the Marshal de Villars had some affair of importance to propose to his grace, and that he would be pleased to send a trusty person to whom he might communicate the same. Whereupon his grace sent general Cadogan to know what marshal Villars had to offer, whereby being nearer the French army, than otherwise he could have been, he improved the opportunity so effectually, that, by viewing their intrenchments in the corner of the wood at Tanniers, he directed the colonel of the artillery, whom he took with him, to observe where he dropped his glove, and there, in the night, to plant his cannon; which, by enfilading their lines the next morning, greatly contributed to the forcing them, and was the principal means of obtaining that victory. Also on the siege of Mons, which ensued, being (as he ever had been) indefatigable in serving the common cause, and going voluntarily into the trenches to animate the troops that were in the attack of a ravelin, he received a dangerous wound in his neck, his aid de camp being also wounded by his side, of which he soon expired. In March 1711 he was at the Hague, at the desire of the council of state of the States General, to assist in consulting the operations of the ensuing campaign.

When the duke of Marlborough was disgraced, and went abroad, he resigned all his employments, chusing, as he had a share in his grace's prosperity, to be a partaker in his adversity.

On the accession of George I. he was made master of the robes, and colonel of the second regiment of foot-guards; also envoy extraordinary, and plenipotentiary to the States-general. In the year 1715 he was appointed governor of the Isle of Wight. And, having extinguished the remains of the rebellion in Scotland, he was elected a knight of the most antient order of St. Andrew; with which he was invested, together with the earl of Sutherland, on June 29, 1716; all the knights of the order, who were in town, being present at a chapter held at St. James's. And the next day he was created a peer of this realm, by the title of lord Cadogan, baron of Reading, the preamble to the patent reciting his great merits and shining character, as follows:

"It being the greatest concern to the grace and ornament of virtue, to the kindling in the minds of men a generous zeal for the public, to the glory of the commonwealth, as well as to the reputation of our own royal justice and favour; that those who have in a singular manner, either in peace or war, deserved well of their country, should be distinguished with singular marks of public honour; we have therefore thought fit to call up into the order of peers of this kingdom our dearly beloved William Cadogan, lieutenant-general of our forces; a person illustrious by his descent from the honourable and most antient stock of the Britons, but much more illustrious by his virtues. For, that which is truly his own, a certain nobleness of manners flowing from a soul adorned with the gifts of nature and of art, far excels all advantages of the most noble descent. In conversation, the most agreeable easiness, composed of all the sweetness of behaviour, and affability of discourse. In his regards to his friends, an untainted faithfulness, and an unwearied readiness to do all good offices. In his charity to those in want, an uncommon beneficence and liberality. In the difficulties of business and great affairs, such an unintermitted and unshaken perseverance, as if he never tasted what it was to indulge his own ease, or the pleasures of conversation; and yet in the entertainments of conversation, such an open and taking agreeableness, as if no thoughts of business could ever find admittance. In all his counsels and votes in the house of commons, a sacred regard to the public good, and the true liberty of his country. In the exploits of war, an undaunted bravery and a greatness of soul, have, upon every occasion, shone forth in the brightest light, particularly in the late war against France, conducted by the wisdom and magnanimity of the most illustrious JOHN duke of MARLBOROUGH; with a glory which hath made his name outshine all the heroes of antiquity, and will render it the wonder of posterity: a war, in which, through the course of ten years, the cause of true religion, of the universal liberty of our own countries, and the countries of our allies, of all right and law, contended against the open attempts of tyranny and slavery. A war prosecuted with so resolute and determined a zeal, that not only the summer, but even the winter itself was seldom free from action; and always attended with such unparalleled success, that, through that whole time, no one battle was fought which was not gained, no one town besieged which was not gloriously taken: in that war, carried on with so unequalled a glory, under the conduct and command of so consummate a general, he bore a faithful and unwearied part, both in the councils of the cabinet, and in the labours of the field.

"Afterwards, in the late war at home, against the madness of the most unnatural rebels and traitors, in the heart of winter, in the midst of the most piercing frosts and deepest snows, he shewed a conduct and an application in the highest degree faithful, and in the most signal manner successful.

"And lastly, in the late treaty for fixing such towns and fortresses, as might be truly a barrier to the United Provinces, our ever faithful and inseparable allies; he manifested such a constancy of attention, such a regard to right and justice, such a dexterity in business, as is very seldom equalled, never exceeded. And this with so good effect, that it may justly be said to have once more revived and established the antient friendship and intercourse of good offices between Great Britain, and not only the United Provinces, but also the most serene and august house of Austria. Upon all which accounts, moved by his own great merits, and assured of the approbation of all good men, we have resolved to promote him into the rank of our peers. Know ye therefore, &c."

His

His lordship soon after was again sent ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the States of Holland, and arriving at Brussels, Sept. 15, N. S. 1716; signed at the Hague the treaty of defensive alliance between Great-Britain, France, and the States-General. He set out for Utrecht Jan. 23, 1716, to wait on the king, expected there that afternoon; who was pleased to command his attending him to Great-Britain. And Mr. Leathes, his majesty's secretary at Brussels, was appointed to reside at the Hague, during his lordship's absence.

On his return, he was sworn of the privy council, the 30th of March, 1717; and in the month of July following, was constituted general of all his majesty's foot forces employed, or to be employed in his service. The following year he was again appointed ambassador extraordinary at the Hague, where he arrived Sept. 17, 1717; and, having brought his negotiations to a conclusion, embarked at the Brill for England, Nov. 7, and put to sea the same evening. On the 8th of May (1718) 4 Geo. I. he was advanced to the dignity of baron of Oakley, viscount Caversham, and earl of Cadogan (with remainder of the barony of Oakley to Charles his brother) the more to illustrate that employment, as the preamble to his patent sets forth:

"Whereas we thought fit, about two years since, to give the rank and dignity of a peer of this realm to William lord Cadogan, by the title of baron of Reading, in consideration of his great and eminent services; and particularly of those performed by him during the war in Flanders, and, after that, in the late rebellion in Scotland, as it is more fully set forth in the preamble of our patent for creating him baron of Reading; and we having great reason to be extremely satisfied with the services he has since done in several important negotiations transacted by him, as our ambassador extraordinary in Holland; and with his conduct and behaviour in his station of general of our foot, and commander of our forces next under the duke of Marlborough; and he having continued to give us upon all occasions, and in the most difficult times, singular and undoubted proofs of his zeal for our service, and of his steady, firm, inviolable, and unalterable affection to our person and government; and we having farther an intention to send him speedily into Holland, to negotiate with the States-General their entering into the alliance between ourselves, the emperor, and the French king; which is an affair of the utmost consequence to the good of these our kingdoms in particular, and of Europe in general; and we having likewise given him orders to make a publick entry, in quality of our ambassador extraordinary at the Hague, to assure the States, in the most solemn manner, of our constant friendship and affection to their commonwealth. For these reasons, and to give a greater lustre and dignity to the commission we now employ him in, we have thought fit to confer upon him a new degree of honour, and to create him earl of Cadogan in Denbighshire, viscount of Caversham, in Oxfordshire, and baron of Oakley, in Buckinghamshire. Know ye therefore, &c."

He set out for the Hague immediately after, where he arrived on the 15th of May, 1718, N. S. and on the 18th was visited by the publick ministers, and by the president of the States-General in the name of that body. Ten days after he was at Antwerp, where he conferred with the marquis de Prie, governor for the emperor in the Netherlands, for putting an end to the difficulties that had long obstructed the execution of the barrier treaty; and bringing him to comply with what was demanded, he returned to the Hague, 2 June following, and communicated to the States his transactions at Antwerp, who appeared sensible of his friendly offices, and of the great obligations they were under to his Britannick majesty. And having fixed for his publick entry the king his master's birth-day, it was the most splendid and magnificent appearance that had been beheld there, and judged by all to be of a noble and beautiful contrivance. He laboured with great diligence to adjust the difficulties which deferred the finishing of the convention for the entire execution of the treaty of barrier, and had frequent conference with the imperial ministers and the States-General for that purpose.

On Feb. 2, 1720, his Majesty's full powers were dispatched to his lordship, for signing, in conjunction with the ministers of the several allies, the treaty of quadruple alliance, and with the minister of the king of Spain, the proper instruments for receiving his catholick majesty's acceptance of the terms of peace stipulated in the treaty; and for treating of a cessation of arms between the several powers engaged in the war; which was not brought to a conclusion till June 7 following; when the ratifications were accordingly exchanged with the minister of Spain.

In 1722, on the duke of Marlborough's decease, he was constituted general and commander in chief of his majesty's forces, master general of the ordnance, and colonel of the first regiment of foot-guards. Also, June 23, 1723, was declared one of the lords justices of Great-Britain during his majesty's absence.

His lordship married Margareta-Cecilia Munter, daughter of William Munter, counsellor of the court of Holland, by his wife Cecilia Trip, of Amsterdam; and by her left issue only two daughters; Sarah, married to Charles duke of Richmond; and Margaret, married to Charles-John count Bentinck, second son to William earl of Portland, by his second wife. And dying on the 17th of July, 1726, was buried in Westminster-abbey, leaving his countess surviving. Her ladyship deceased in Holland, 1750, and was there interred. As they left no male issue, the titles of viscount and earl became extinct, and the barony of Oakley devolved on his brother.

(Second Lord) CHARLES CADOGAN, who whilst he was a commoner, served in parliament for the borough of Reading, as also for Newport, in the county of Southampton. His lordship was in the horse service, under his grace the duke of Marlborough, in Flanders; and, after having been colonel of a company in the second regiment of foot-guards, was constituted, by our late sovereign, colonel of his majesty's own regiment of foot; also, in June, 1734, colonel of a regiment of dragoons. On the 18th of December, 1735, he was promoted to the rank of a brigadier-general, and July 17, 1739, made major-general of his majesty's forces; also on April 30, 1743, colonel of the second troop of horse-guards, and constituted lieutenant-general; in Nov. 1749 governor of Sheerness;

Sheerness; and 13 June, 1752, governor of Gravesend and Tilbury. Upon the accession of his present majesty, 1760, he was continued in his military employs; and March 9, 1761, was raised to the rank of general of the horse. He is fellow of the Royal Society, and one of the trustees for the British Museum.

His lordship married Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Sir Hans Sloan, bart. president of the College of Physicians, and by her has an only son, CHARLES SLOAN CADOGAN, born Oct. 29, 1728, who was elected member of parliament Jan. 31, 1748-9, for the town of Cambridge. To the three succeeding parliaments, 1754, 1761, and 1768, he was returned for the same place. In April, 1764, he was appointed surveyor of the king's gardens and waters, and after that treasurer to his late royal highness Edward duke of York. On the 28th of May, 1747, he married Frances, daughter of Henry Bromley, lord Montfort, and has issue six sons:

1. Charles-Henry Cadogan, born December 10, 1749.
2. William-Bromley Cadogan, born January, 22, 1751.
3. Thomas Cadogan, born February 7, 1752.

4. George Cadogan, born December 1, 1754.
5. Edward Cadogan, born December 12, 1758.
6. Henry-William Cadogan, born March 25, 1761.

MORTON, Baron DUCIE.

THE paternal ancestors of this noble family, assumed their surname in the reign of Edward I. from Morton, in Staffordshire; which manor, together with several others, had been granted to one of them by that monarch, for signal services performed in Scotland. The first, however, from whom we can lineally deduce the present lord Ducie, flourished near the end of the fourteenth century, and was called MATTHEW MORTON, and was seated at Morton, which had then been the family-place of residence for about two hundred years. He married Isabel, daughter and heir of Robert Knightly, of Engleton, a younger brother of the house of Knightly. Their issue were three sons.

1. James Morton, from whom the Mortons of Flaxeyarde and Utkinton, in Cheshire, are descended.

2. Thomas Morton.

3. John Morton, a priest.

The second son,

THOMAS MORTON, was seated at Engleton, aforesaid, and marrying Margery, daughter of Sheppard, of Oakley, in Staffordshire, had issue four daughters, all married; and one son,

MATTHEW MORTON, who married Alice, daughter of Thomas Dicken, of Marchall, in Staffordshire, and dying before his father, left issue

EDWARD MORTON, seated at Engleton, who married Margery, daughter of Ralph Brown, of Carewall, in Staffordshire. Their son,

MATTHEW MORTON, of Engleton, married Sarah, daughter and heir of Francis Martyn, of Stafford, and had issue

EDWARD MORTON, of Engleton (Mr. Collins denominates this gentleman of Engleton and Morton; but that must be a mistake, the lordship of Morton having continued with the elder branch, descendants of James Morton, mentioned above.) He married Elizabeth, sole daughter and heir of Robert Ducie, esquire; and as their son upon his advancement to the peerage, chose the title of Ducie, in compliment to his maternal descent, it will not be foreign to our purpose to treat of the ancestors of the said Elizabeth Ducie.

Sir Robert Atkins, in his history of Gloucestershire, asserts that the Ducies are of Norman extraction, and that one of them having raised there a regiment, brought it over to England, to the assistance of queen Isabel, (consort to king Edward the Second) against the Spencers; and for his services had a grant of lands in Staffordshire, which his descendants enjoyed for many ages, till about the latter end of the reign of king Henry VIII. when the greatest part was sold by James Ducie, esquire, who had to wife first, Eleanor, sister to Edmund, lord Sheffield; and, secondly, Alice, sister sister to Sir Richard Piper, of Belston, in Derbyshire, knight, by whom he had issue Richard, his son and heir; and Henry, second son, who married Mary, daughter, and at length heir, of Robert Hardy, by whom he had, amongst other children, Sir Robert Ducie, knight and baronet, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Pyot, alderman of London.

Which Sir Robert was free of the company of merchants in London (commonly called merchant-tailors) and in 1628, 18 Jac. I. was one of the sheriffs of that city, whereupon he was knighted; and, being one of the aldermen of the city of London, was, in the fifth year of king Charles the First, advanced to the dignity of a baronet, by letters patent, bearing date November 28, 1629. He was lord-mayor of the city of London in 1631, 7 Car. I. and, being immensely rich, king Charles made choice of him for his banker; and, on the breaking out of the rebellion, owing him 80,000l. he lost all the money. Nevertheless, he is said to leave at the time of his death, to the value of 400,000 l. in land, money, &c. to his four sons, who were Sir Richard Ducie, baronet, Sir William Ducie, Robert Ducie, seated at Little Aston, near Shenston, in Staffordshire, who died June 2, 1654, having married Mary, daughter of Sir Gabriel Lowe, of Newark, Gloucestershire; and Hugh Ducie, knight of the Bath, 1661.

Sir Richard Ducie, the eldest son, was a great sufferer in the time of the rebellion against king Charles the First; and being taken prisoner by Waller, remained for some time under confinement; and, dying unmarried, was succeeded in dignity and estate by his brother, Sir William Ducie, baronet.

Which Sir William Ducie, baronet, was made one of the knights of the Bath, at the coronation of king Charles the Second. He had his principal residence at Tortworth, in the county of Gloucester, where he lies buried; but died at Charlton, in Kent, in the sixty-fifth year of his age, on the 9th of September, 1697; having been created, by king Charles the Second, lord viscount Down, of the kingdom of Ireland. He married Frances, daughter of Francis, lord Seymour, of Troubridge, grandfather of the late duke of Somerset; but leaving no issue, his estate descended to Elizabeth, daughter and sole heir of Robert Ducie, esquire, his brother.

Which Elizabeth, was married to Edward Morton, of Engleton, as already observed, in the county of Stafford, esquire, and left issue

(First Lord) MATTHEW DUCIE MORTON, her son and heir, who served under king William during the war in Flanders, till the conclusion of the peace of Ryswick. And, in the reign of queen Anne, was twice chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Gloucester; as also in the first parliament called by George I. who, in 1717, constituted him vice-treasurer and paymaster of Ireland, whereupon he was re-chosen for the said county; also, on the 13th of June, 1720, was advanced to the dignity of a peer of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Ducie, baron of Morton, in Staffordshire.

His lordship married Arabella, daughter and coheir of Sir Thomas Prestwich, of Holm, in the county palatine of Lancaster, baronet. By her, who died March 14, 1750, and was buried at Tortworth, he had issue three sons and four daughters.

1. Matthew Ducie Morton, his successor.

2. Rowland Lewis Ducie Morton, who was colonel of a company in the foot-guards, and, in November 1739, was appointed colonel of a regiment of marines. This gentleman died unmarried.

3. Charles Ducie Morton, esquire, who married Anne, daughter to — Wyat, of Windsor, in Berkshire, esquire, and had issue by her a son named Benjamin, who died young. He married a second lady, by whom he had one daughter, now living. The father is dead.

His daughters were,

1. Elizabeth, married to Richard Symms, of Blackheath, in the county of Kent, esquire, and secondly, on the 5th of February, 1729-30, to Francis Reynolds, of Strangeways, Esq; only son and heir of Thomas Reynolds, Esq; formerly a South-sea director.

2. Mary.

3. Arabella,

} died unmarried.

4. Penelope, married to Thomas Stourton, esquire. She died without issue.

The said Matthew, lord Ducie, departing this life at his house in Jermyn-street, the 2d of May, 1735, was buried at Tortworth, and succeeded by Matthew, his eldest son and heir. Which

(Second and present Lord) MATTHEW DUCIE MORTON, in the life-time of his father, was elected for the boroughs of Calne and Cricklade, in Wiltshire, in the last parliament of George I. and was a member for Tregony, in Cornwall, in the first parliament of George II. On February 14, 1754, he was appointed lord-lieutenant of and in the counties of Gloucester, and of Bristol, and of the city of Gloucester, and county of the same, and custos rotulorum of Gloucestershire. He was also appointed constable of St. Briavels, and keeper of the deer and woods in the said forest, and was likewise appointed vice-admiral of Gloucestershire. These offices his lordship resigned in November 1758, and they were immediately conferred on John Thinne How, second lord Chedworth.

His lordship, April 23, 1763, obtained a new peerage by the stile and title of baron Ducie, of Tortworth, in Gloucestershire, with limitation to his heirs male, and in default of such issue, to Thomas Reynolds, esquire, and the issue male of his body, and in default of such issue, to Francis Reynolds, esquire, brother of the said Thomas, and his heirs male. These are sons of his lordship's daughter Elizabeth, married as above. She died Sept. 4, 1755, and was buried at Manchester, leaving issue,

1. Thomas Reynolds, born October 26, 1733.

2. Francis Reynolds, born March 28, 1739.

And two daughters.

1. Mary, married to Thomas Leigh, of Adlington, in Cheshire.

2. Arabella.

K I N G, Baron K I N G.

THAT the dignity of peerage is not confined in England, as in most other countries, to those who can produce a long train of glorious and honourable ancestors, is no less evident than useful. This eminent reward of personal merit has frequently and judiciously been conferred by a succession of illustrious monarchs. To this discretionary exercise of the royal prerogative, we are indebted for many conspicuous personages, who have from time to time displayed their extraordinary abilities in the upper house of parliament to the satisfaction of their peers, the emolument of their country, and the honour of their sovereign. Few, if any, have been raised to this dignity from a private station, with more justice than (First Lord) PETER KING, the son of Jerome King, of Exeter, and his wife, who was sister to the great Mr. Locke. This connection probably laid the foundation of this gentleman's future good fortune; for Mr. Locke could not but observe the uncommon genius of his nephew, and observing, could not but endeavour to cherish it. The first proof of a public nature he gave of his talents, was a learned treatise, entitled an Enquiry into the Constitution, Discipline, Unity, and Worship of the primitive Church. This met with general approbation, and induced his uncle to wish that he was employed in some more beneficial study. He accordingly proposed the law, and the young gentleman was immediately admitted of the Inner Temple. He soon became an eminent council and pleader at the bar, insomuch that he was chosen recorder of the city of London, the 27th of July, 1708; and, on the 12th of September following, her majesty queen Anne conferred the honour of knighthood on him, as a particular mark of her royal favour; and, in that reign, he was a member of the house of commons for the borough of Beer-Alston, in Devonshire, in five several parliaments; as also in the two last parliaments called by king William, being first chosen in 1699.

In the first year of George I. (in Michaelmas term, 1714) he was made lord-chief justice of the Common-pleas; and, on the 5th of April following, was sworn of his majesty's most honourable privy-council. Also, in consideration of his great merits, was created, on the 29th of May, 1725, a peer of this kingdom, by the stile and title of lord King, baron of Ockham, in the county of Surry; and on the first of June following, declared lord high chancellor of England; and was one of the lords justices for the administration of the government during his majesty's absence. Also May 31, 1727, was again appointed one of the lords justices. And, on the demise of George I. his late majesty, June 15, 1727, was pleased to deliver him the great seals, and he took the oath of lord chancellor. And departing this life on Monday the 22d of July, 1734, at his seat at Ockham, in Surry, was interred in the parish-church there, on the 29th of the same month, where a monument is erected to his memory, with a fine marble statue of his lordship, and an inscription on a marble pedestal, relating these farther particulars.

He was born in the city of Exeter of worthy and substantial parents; but with a genius greatly superior to his birth. By his industry, prudence, learning, and virtue, he raised himself to the highest character and reputation, and to the highest posts and dignities. He applied himself to his studies in the Inner Temple; and to an exact and complete knowledge in all the parts and history of the law, added the most extensive learning, theological and civil. He was chosen a member of the house of commons in the year 1699; recorder of the city of London in the year 1708; made chief justice of the Common-pleas 1714; on the accession of king George I. created lord King, baron of Ockham, and raised to the post and dignity of lord high chancellor of Great Britain, 1725. Under the labour and fatigues of which weighty place, sinking into a paralytic disease, he resigned it November 29, 1733; and died July 22, 1734. Aged 65, a friend to true religion and liberty. He married Anne, daughter of Richard Seys, of Boverton, in Glamorganshire, esquire, with whom he lived to the day of his death in perfect love and happiness. And left issue by her four sons, John, now lord King, Peter, William, and Thomas; and two daughters, Elizabeth and Anne.

And his lordship afterwards, being in an ill state of health, was advised for change of air, to go to Portugal, and, in his voyage to Lisbon, departed this life, on board his majesty's ship the Ruby, the 10th of February, 1739-40, and was buried at Ockham.

MONSON, Baron MONSON.

SIR William Monson, the admiral, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, dedicating the account of his services to his son Sir William Monson, recites, that his ancestor had an antient house called after his name; and an old pedigree of this family derives the present lord Monson, of whom we are now to treat, from John Monson, Mounson, or Munson, as variously wrote in antient times. Which

JOHN MONSON, was living in the reign of king Edward the Third; and, in 2 Rich. I. 1378, was denominated of East Reson, in Lincolnshire. He left issue

JOHN MONSON, his son and heir, who was in the wars of France under that victorious monarch, king Henry the Fifth, in the fifth year of his reign, when he had letters of safe-conduct going into Normandy.

He left issue another

JOHN MONSON, who took to wife Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Hansard, knight, and had issue Sir John Monson, of South Carlton, in the same county, knight.

Which

Sir JOHN MONSON, lies buried in South Carlton church, under a marble tomb, whereon are the effigies, in brass, of a knight and his lady, and the arms of Monson impaling gules, three water-budgets ermine, for Meers, with this inscription:

Hic jacet Johannes Munson, Miles, qui obiit 26 die Maii anno dom. 1542, et Dorothea uxor ejus, &c.

He had by a former wife Beatrix, daughter of — Thurst, merchant, a son, Thomas (who was of South Kelsey, and had many children, but left no issue male.) By the lady mentioned in the inscription, daughter of — Meers, of the Marsh, he had three sons, William, Robert Munson, of Belton, and George, of Northorpe, in the county of Lincoln.

WILLIAM MONSON, the eldest son and heir, with his wife, lie buried at Carlton, with the following inscription to their memory :

Hic jacet Willielmus Munson, arm. qui obiit 15^o die Octobris; anno 1558, et Elizabetha uxor ejus, filia Roberti Tirwhit, militis, qui obiit 8^o die Octobris, anno domini 1546, &c.

They had issue four sons.

1. William Monson,
 2. Gilbert Monson,
 3. Edmund Monson,
 4. John Monson, of whom hereafter.
- Also a daughter, Anne, who died unmarried.
The youngest son,

JOHN MONSON, was wrote John Munson, senior, esquire, in 32 Hen. VIII. when he was possessed of lands in Bekyngham and Boyle, in the county of Nottingham. He married Mary, daughter to Sir Robert Hufsey, of Blankney, in the county of Lincoln, and coheir to her mother Anne, daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Say, knight, by whom he had issue two daughters, and four sons, viz.

1. Robert Monson, who died without issue.
2. Sir John Monson.
3. George Monson, of Southam, esquire.
4. William-George Monson, who, by Eleanor, his wife, had issue two sons, Robert, baptized at North Carlton, January 27, 1571; and George, baptized at the same place, June 29, 1578; in which year his father deceased, and was buried in North Carlton, March 21, 1578. A memorial in the church of South Carlton, gives this account of the death of John Monson, esquire.

Hic jacet Johannes Munson, filius et hæres apparens Willielmi Munson, arm. qui obiit 17^o die Novembris anno domini 1552.

Sir JOHN MONSON, second son of the said John Monson, succeeded in the inheritance at Carlton. He was knighted at Greenwich in 28 Elizabeth, and likewise lies buried at South Carlton, and a monument is erected there to his memory. The crest to his arms is a moon griping the sun, or; and his motto, Prest pour mon pays. The inscription is as follows :

Ob. 20 die Decembris, anno domini 1593.

By the inquisition taken at the castle of Lincoln, March 23, in 36 Elizabeth, he is said to de cease on December 20, in 36 Elizabeth, and that by Jane his wife he had issue John, his son and heir, who died in his life-time; Thomas, of the age of twenty-seven years at his father's death; William, John, Robert, and Anthony; and that he died possessed of the manor of South Ingleby, alias Ingleby-Dawbeny, in the counties of Lincoln and Nottingham, lands in Brauneby, and advowson of the church; Broxholm, with the appurtenances; lands in North Carlton; a capital messuage, and lands in South Carlton, called Read's lands; the manor of North Kelsey, called Monson's manor; the manor of Buxton juxta Lincoln, called Salfar's lands, and advowson of the church; the manor of Keelby, and lands in Caberne and Wilton; the manors of South Carlton, and Owsferby; the rectory of Kirby, and advowson of the church of Dunington upon Bane, all in the county of Lincoln; and the manor of Dunham, with the appurtenances, in Nottinghamshire: to all which the said Thomas, his son, was found to be his heir.

He had issue by Jane his wife, daughter of Robert Dighton, of Little Sturton, in the county of Lincoln, esquire, who survived him several years, and was buried at South Carlton, October 17, 1624, thirteen children, seven sons, and six daughters, as mentioned on his monument, whereof three sons died infants: the four surviving were Sir Thomas, Sir William, Sir Robert, and Anthony Monson, esquire; seated at Northrop, in the county of Lincoln. The six daughters were, Elizabeth, married to Sir Valentine Brown, of Lincolnshire; Joyce; Mary, married at South Carlton, on the 3d of June, 1588, to Thomas Reresby, of Thriberg, in Yorkshire, esquire; Anne, married to Sir Edward Dymock, of Scrivelsby, in Lincolnshire, knight; Jane, who died young; and Catharine, married to Sir Thomas Griffin, of Dingley, in Northamptonshire, knight.

Sir William Monson, second surviving son, was, from his youth, in the sea service, and served many years in several capacities, till merit raised him to the degree of an admiral, by commission from queen Elizabeth. In the expedition under the earl of Essex, on the Spanish coast, in 1596, when Cadiz was sacked and taken, he, with many more, for their valour, were knighted. The next year, being likewise in commission under the said earl, in order to intercept the Spanish plate-fleet, this Sir William, and the earl of Southampton, had their station on the west side of Gratiara, and were the first discoverers of that fleet; but the earl of Essex, and most of the ships, being at some distance, the Spaniards escaped into Tercera, all but three ships that were taken. He was afterwards employed in several stations; and in the year 1602, had, with Sir Richard Levison, the principal command of a royal fleet, to annoy the coasts of Spain. This service they performed so effectually, that, for many days together, no vessels dared to go in or out of their their harbours. But their chief glory was the taking a vast carack of 1600 tons, just arrived from the Indies at Sefimbra, a small city of Portugal, fortified with a castle of twelve great guns, under which the carack lay; and on the west side had eleven gallies, each of them with five guns, mounted, and their stems foremost. These advantages of the enemy did not deter the admirals from venturing on her; and, after seven hours dispute, the Marquis of Sancta Crus (who was on board with 300 Spanish gentlemen) capitulated, delivering the carack and cargo, worth a million of ducats.

These services recommended Admiral Monson to the favour of king James, and king Charles the First. In 1617, he was called to give his advice before the lords of the council, how the pirates of Algiers might be suppressed, and the town attempted; which he set forth, and is printed in the Collection of Voyages, Vol. III. p. 231. In 1635 he was vice-admiral of that fleet under Robert, earl of Lindsey, which departed from Tilbury-Hope the 26th of May, with direction and resolution to give no occasion of hostility, or to make any nation enemy to his majesty; only to defend his and the kingdom's honour, lavishly taxed by the vain boasting of French and Hollanders, which joined off Portland the last of May, to question his majesty's prerogative of the narrow seas. But this fleet made good our seas and shores, gave laws to our neighbour nations, and restored the antient sovereignty of the narrow seas to the king, as was due to his progenitors. He has recited (printed in the collection of voyages) the names of the ships he served in, during the reigns of queen Elizabeth, king James, king Charles, as follows: "In the Charles, whereof I had no command, in 1588, (the year of the Spanish invasion); in the victory, in which voyage I was vice-admiral to my lord of Cumberland, 1589; in the Garland, 1591; the Lion, 1593; the Rainbow, 1595; the Repulse, 1596; the Rainbow, 1597; the Defiance, 1599; the Garland, 1600; the Nonpareille, 1601; the Swiftsure, 1602; the Mary Rose, 1602; the Mere-Honour, 1602; the Mere-Honour, 1603; the Vengeance, 1604; the Rainbow, 1605; the Assurance, 1606; the Rainbow, 1607; the Vengeance, 1609; the Assurance, 1610; the Rainbow, 1611; the Adventure, 1612; the Assurance, 1613; the Lion, 1614; the Nonfuch, 1615; the James, 1635.

He lived till the civil wars, with an untainted reputation for conduct and bravery, dying in February 1642, and was buried in St. Martin's in the Fields, London. He was seated at Kinnerley, in Surry, and by his wife, Dorothy, daughter of Richard Wallop, had issue three sons, John, William, and Robert. and one daughter, Jane, married to Sir Francis Hayward.

Their father, Sir William Monson, compiled large tracts of naval affairs, in six books, published in a collection of voyages, printed it in 1703, and the third edition of it in 1745; wherein his capacity in maritime business, and the excellency of his natural parts, sufficiently appear; the whole being written with a true zeal for the publick, and without prejudice or affectation.

He dedicates them to Sir William Monson, his eldest surviving son; and the excellent advice he gives him, is likewise a good instance of his abilities, and virtuous inclination; and the small estate he declares he leaves him, after so many toils and dangers, plainly shews the honesty of his life. After commending his works to him, he says, "That so beholding the eighteen years wars by sea, which for want of years, you could not then remember, and comparing them with the eighteen years of peace, in which you have lived, you may consider three things: first, that after so many pains and perils, God has lent life to your father to further your education. Secondly, what proportion his recompense and rewards have had to his services. Lastly, what just cause you have to abandon the thoughts of such dangerous and uncertain courses; and that you may follow the ensuing precepts, which I recommend to your frequent perusal." He then mentions the small estate he leaves him, after so many toils and dangers of his life, and reminds him to rate his expences accordingly. After which, challenging his right to dispose of his interest in it, he thus concludes: "And because you shall know that it is no rare or new thing for a man to dispose of his own, I will lay before you a precedent of your own house, that so often as you think of it, you may remember it with fear, and prevent with care. Your grandfather's great-grandfather was a knight by title, and John by name; which name we desire to retain to our eldest sons. God blessed him with earthly benefits, as wealth, children, and reputation. His eldest son was called John, after his father, and his second William, like unto yourself and brother: but, upon what displeasure I know not (though we must judge the son gave the occasion) his father left him the least part of his fortune, yet sufficient to equal the best gentlemen of the shire; and particularly the antient house called after his name. His other son, William, he invested with what your uncle now enjoys, both the sons, whilst they lived, carried the port and estimation of their father's children; though afterwards it fell out, that the son of John, and nephew to William, became disobedient, negligent, and prodigal, and spent all his patrimony; so that, in conclusion, he and his son extinguished their house, and there now remain no memory of them. As for the second line and race, of whom your uncle and I descended, we live as you see, tho' our estates be not great, and of the two, mine much the least; which notwithstanding, is the greater to me, in respect I achieved it with the peril and danger of my life; and you will make my satisfaction in the enjoyment of it the greater, if it be attended with that comfort I hope to receive from you." After which he gives him excellent instructions and advice how to behave in all parts of life, and concludes with these words: "Let me, good son, be your pattern of patience; for you can witness with me, that the disgraces I have unjustly suffered (my estate being through my misfortunes ruined, my health by imprisonments decayed, and my services undervalued and unrecompensed) have not bred the least distaste or discontent in me, or altered my resolution from my infancy: that is, I was never so base as to insinuate into any man's favour, who was favoured by the times; I was never so ambitious as to seek or crave employment, or to undertake any that was not put upon me. My great and only comfort is, that I served my princes both faithfully and fortunately; but, seeing my services have been no better accepted, I can as well content myself in being a spectator, as if I were an actor in the world."

The first book of his tracts is chiefly a collection of every year's actions in the wars against Spain, on our own and the Spanish coasts, and in the West Indies. A brief narrative; for no more is said, but the force they were undertaken with, and the success of the enterprize; yet the design is to shew the reasons, either why they miscarried, or why so little advantage was made where they succeeded. In some he is more particular than in others; and what perhaps may be still of use, he at last sets down the abuses in the fleet, and the methods for redressing them. His second book continues somewhat of the method of the first, beginning with fatherly instructions to his son; whence he proceeds to the peace with Spain, which puts an end to the warlike naval actions, yet not to his command, being employed against pirates. He inveighs against the Dutch, shews the ill management of a design against Algier, and makes very notable remarks on the attempt upon Cadiz, by king Charles the First; proposing methods how Spain might have been much more endangered, with other particulars about the shipping of England, and sovereignty of the seas. The third book only treats of the admiralty; that is, of all things relating to the royal navy, from the lord high admiral, to the meanest person employed ashore, and to the cabin-boys at sea; and from a compleat fleet to the smallest vessel; and part of it, with instructions for all officers; the size of all sorts of guns, all sorts of allowances on board the king's ships, and excellent directions for fighting at sea; an account of all the harbours in these three kingdoms, with many more curious matters, accurately handled. The fourth book is of another nature from any of the rest, being a brief collection of Spanish and Portuguese discoveries, and conquests in Africa, Asia, and America, with some voyages round the world, and somewhat of English and French plantations. The fifth book is full of projects and schemes, for managing affairs at sea, to the best advantage for the nation. The sixth, and last, treats of fishing, to shew the infinite addition of wealth and strength it would bring to England, with all instructions necessary for putting such a design in execution.

Sir Robert Monson (third surviving son of Sir John) served in two parliaments for the city of Lincoln, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and was buried in the church of North Carlton, on the 15th of September, 1638, leaving issue five daughters, his coheirs; Jane, married to Roger Molineux, esquire; Catharine, to John Povey, esquire; Anne, on the 13th of August, 1635, at North Carlton, to Arthur Readhead, of Holden, in Yorkshire, esquire; Sarah, to Sir Vincent Corbet, of Morton Corbet, baronet, and was created (for life) viscountess Corbet, of Linchlade, in Buckinghamshire, by letters patent bearing date the 23d of October, 1679; and Mary, youngest daughter, was married on January 14, 1633, at North Carlton, to Molineux Disney, of Norton-Disney, in Lincolnshire, esquire.

Anthony Monson, esquire, the youngest son, seated at Northrop, in Lincolnshire, had by Faith, his first wife, daughter to Robert Smith, of the city of Lincoln, (who was buried at South Carlton, on the fifth of December, 1619) five sons: John;

Anthony, baptized 16 January, 1607; Thomas who died young in 1614; Christopher, baptized 5 November, 1615; and Stephen, who died young in 1618. Also several daughters; whereof Jane, born 22 November, 1632, was married to John Osbaldiston, esquire, and was buried at South Carlton, 29 May, 1624. John, the eldest son of the said Anthony, left issue Anthony, his son and heir, born in 1625; who, by Faith, his wife, daughter to Sir Philip Tirwhit, of Stainfield, in the county of Lincoln, had issue Anthony, and eight other children.

Sir THOMAS MONSON, (eldest surviving son and heir of Sir John) had his education in Magdalen-college, in Oxford; and served in parliament for Great Grimsby, in Lincolnshire, in 27 Elizabeth, and that being dissolved, September 14, 1586, and another called to meet October 29, the same year, he was returned for the same place; also in the next parliament, which met February 4, 1588, the memorable year of the Spanish invasion, and held to March 29 following, when it was dissolved. He was afterwards knighted, and in the 39th of that reign, served in parliament for the city of Lincoln. About the year 1605, when he took the degree of master of arts at Oxford, he was master of the armoury, and master falconer to his majesty king James the First; and, in truth (says A. Wood, my author) such a one, as no prince in christendom had the like. He had the dignity of a baronet conferred on him, 29 June, 1611, being the 27th in order of precedency. He was afterwards twice brought to his trial, on suspicion of being concerned in the poisoning of Sir Thomas Overbury; but his innocence clearly appearing, he was discharged. He was a person of fine breeding, and a great lover of music, which he much delighted in, being himself an excellent master in the profession. He lived to a very advanced age, even to the time of the civil wars, the sad effects whereof he very much lamented; and, during those troubles, wrote a book, by way of advice to his grandson, entitled An Essay on Afflictions, which was printed in 1661-2, with another (he had also written) concerning Adoration, Alms, Fasting, and Prayer. He was buried at South Carlton, May 29, 1641, having survived Margaret, his wife, more than ten years, who was daughter to Sir Edmund Anderson, (constituted lord-chief justice of the Common-pleas, 11 April, 1 Jac. I.) and was buried at South Carlton, August 3, 1630. He had issue by her three daughters.

1. Bridget, married to Sir John Read, of the county of Suffex.
2. Elizabeth, to Sapcot, lord viscount Beaumont.
3. Magdalen, to Thomas Cotton, of Gray's-Inn, esquire.

Also five sons.

1. Sir John Monson.
2. Sir William Monson, who was created by king Charles the First, viscount Castlemain, in the kingdom of Ireland; but unmindful of the favours of his sovereign, and his own allegiance, he sided with the rebels; for which he was degraded of his honours soon after the restoration. He married three wives; first, Margaret, daughter of James Stewart, earl of Murray, and widow of Charles Howard, earl of Nottingham; secondly, Frances, sister of Sir Thomas Alston, baronet, by whom whom he had a son, Alston; thirdly, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Reresby, knight, and widow of Francis Foliambe, by whom he had a daughter, Elizabeth.

3. John Monson, who married Ann Mayne.

4. Lodowic Monson, } died young.

5. Thomas Monson, }

Sir JOHN MONSON, baronet, (eldest son and heir of Sir Thomas) was born in the parish of St. Sepulchre's, London; and, spending some time in one of the Inns of Court, made such proficiency in the study of the law, that his opinions therein were much esteemed; and, had he thought fit to have been of the long robe, would have been much followed. He was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles the First, and served in the two first parliaments called by that king; in the latter as one of the knights of the shire for the county of Lincoln; and in the other for the city of Lincoln. On the breaking out of the civil wars, he retired to Oxford, and was there created doctor of the civil laws in the year 1642, being at that time universally esteemed; and Mr. Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, says of him, "That he was as wise a man as any of his contemporaries in Oxon, and assisted in all councils, and was at all treaties, particularly in that concerning the surrender of the garrison of Oxford to the parliament in 1646, and afterwards suffered much for his loyalty; but at length was permitted to enjoy a quiet retirement." Having married Ursula, daughter and heir of Sir Robert Oxenbridge, knight (by his wife Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Sir Henry Cock, of Broxburn, in the county of Hertford, knight) he became possessed (1645) of the manor of Broxburn, &c. at which seat he afterwards resided, for the most part of his life, having made a fair park about the manor-house, keeping a free and bountiful table, very hospitable to his neighbours, and very charitable to the poor; as Sir Henry Chauncey, in his Antiquities of Hertfordshire, says of him: also, "That he was qualified with excellent parts, both natural and acquired, which rendered him a great patriot to his country, being endowed with a rare spirit, a wise understanding, and a singular judgment, which naturally led him to a strict observance of all moral duties, but made him somewhat severe in acts of justice. He was exemplary in his devotions, firm to his church, and loyal to his prince;" and having lived to the age of eighty-four years, was buried with his ancestors in South-Carlton, on December 29, 1683. Ursula, his wife, (by whom he had issue an only son, Sir John Monson, who died in his life-time) surviving him, and having lived to an advanced age, was buried by her husband, December 10, 1692.

Which

Sir JOHN MONSON, born in 1628, served for the city of Lincoln, in the parliament that restored Charles II. was made knight of the Bath at his coronation, and was a justice of peace, and one of the deputy-lieutenants for Hertfordshire. "He was (says Sir Henry Chauncey) admired by all that knew him, being a gentleman of a cheerful temper, ready wit, quick apprehension, good elocution, free from partiality, of great prudence and moderation, and, in all things, well accomplished for business, which made him acceptable in all companies, and his death generally lamented." He deceased October 14, 1674, aged about forty-six years, in the life-time of his father (as before was said) and was buried at South-Carlton, on the 24th of the same month; having had, by Judith his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Pelham, knight and baronet, (great-grandfather to Thomas, the present duke of Newcastle) a numerous issue, ten sons; whereof five lived to men's estate, Henry, William, George, James, and Philip; the other five, John, Thomas, Robert, Charles, and Robert, died young. And a daughter, Bridget, was married to Sir Charles Barrington, of Hatfield Brad-dock, in the county of Essex, baronet. Of which sons, George was grandfather to the present lord Monson.

James Monson, who was the ninth son, died in his 28th year of his age, in 1683; and Philip Monson, tenth son, died the year after, at the age of twenty-two.

The eldest,

Sir HENRY MONSON, baronet, (successor to his grandfather) was elected for the city of Lincoln in the two last parliaments called by king Charles the Second, and in that parliament called by king James the Second. He was a gentleman much esteemed, all the good qualities of a christian, friend, and benefactor, being inherent in him. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Charles, lord Cheney, viscount Newhaven, and dying without issue on the 6th of April, 1718, was buried at South Carlton, leaving his lady surviving, who was buried near him, on the 29th of April, 1725.

Sir WILLIAM MONSON, his next brother, succeeded him in title and estate, and served in parliament for the city of Lincoln, in the reign of king William; also was elected for the borough of Aldborough, in Yorkshire, in the first parliament called by George I. He married Letitia, sister to the late earl Pawlet; and, dying on the 7th of March, 1726-7, without issue, was succeeded in the title of baronet, by (First Lord) Sir JOHN MONSON, knight of the Bath, his nephew, son and heir of George, his youngest surviving brother. And his lady, who survived him, died on the 25th of April, 1734.

Which George Monson, esquire, married Anne, daughter to Charles Wren, of the isle of Ely, esquire; and by her (who, surviving him, died in the 67th year of her age, on the 20th of June, 1732) had issue five sons.

1. John Monson.

2. George Monson, who served in parliament for Great Grimsby, in Lincolnshire, and died unmarried July 7, 1739.

3. Charles Monson, esquire, who was chosen a member for the city of Lincoln, in the parliament summoned to meet June 13, 1734; also in the next parliament summoned to meet June 25, 1741; and in the parliament, which sat first on business, November 12, 1747. In May 1737, he was appointed deputy-master of his majesty's forces, which he held till 1745, when he chose to resign it.

4. Henry, doctor of laws, and fellow of Trinity-hall, in Cambridge, and his majesty's professor of the civil law in that university, died unmarried August 26, 1764.

5. William Monson, esquire, who was several years at Madras, called Fort St. George, in the service of the East-India company; and, soon after his return to England, was appointed one of the commissioners of the revenue in Ireland, and died October 28, 1753, unmarried.

The eldest son John, first lord Monson, whilst a commoner, was chosen member for the city of Lincoln, in the parliament summoned to meet May 10, 1722. On June 17, 1725, he was installed one of the knights companions of the most honourable order of the Bath; and, on the decease of his uncle, Sir William Monson, baronet, March 7, 1726, succeeded to that title, and also to his estate. He was again chosen one of the members for the city of Lincoln, in the parliament which sat first on business, January 27, 1727-8. And, on the conclusion of the session, his late majesty, taking into consideration his attachment to his royal family, his great merits and abilities, was pleased to advance him to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by the stile and title of lord Monson, baron Monson of Burton, in the county of Lincoln, by letters patent bearing date the 28th of May, 1728, in the first year of his reign. On the 25th of June, 1737, his lordship was appointed first commissioner of trade and the plantations; and was sworn of the privy council at Hampton court, July 21 following. On May 7, 1745, on a new commission passing, he was continued first lord commissioner of trade and the plantations.

His lordship married Margaret Watson, third and youngest daughter to Lewis, earl of Rockingham, to whose memory, at her ladyship's expence, a stately monument is erected in the church of Rockingham. His lordship departed this life on the 18th of July, 1748, at his house in Piccadilly, and lies buried at South Carlton; and his lady, surviving him, died at her house in South-Audley-street, February 24, 1752, and was buried by his lordship.

They left issue three sons,

1. John Monson, successor to the honours.
2. Lewis Monson, created lord Sonds. See the account of his lordship.
3. George Monson, born April 18, 1730. In the two parliaments summoned, the one in 1754, and the other in 1761, he was elected member of parliament for the city of Lincoln. Being in the army, he was appointed a major in the 79th regiment, August 18, 1757; lieutenant-colonel, September 29, 1760; and soon after colonel commandant of the 96th regiment of foot, which was raised 1761. He served several years in the East Indies, was at the conquest of Manila, in Luconia, the principal of the Philippine isles; and at length, when peace was declared, returned to London, in 1764. He married Ann, daughter of Henry Vane, earl of Darlington, but has yet no issue.

The eldest son,

(Second and Present Lord) JOHN MONSON, born July 23, 1727, succeeded as lord Monson. On November 5, 1765, he was appointed warden and chief justice in Eyre of the forests south of Trent, in the room of John, earl of Bredalbane. His lordship is doctor of laws, and vice-president of the Lock-hospital, near Hyde park-corner.

June 23, 1752, he married Theodosia, daughter of John Maddison, of Harpswell, in the county of Lincoln, esquire, and has had issue,

1. John Monson, born May 25, 1753.
2. George-Henry Monson, born October 17, 1755.

G O D O L P H I N, Baron G O D O L P H I N.

THE surname of this antient and noble family was confessedly assumed, as most others were, from their possessions. In the county of Cornwall, before and since the conquest, we read of a lordship, called Godolphin; and at this day there is a hill famous for tin mines in that county, which bears the same name. This name, which was anciently written Godolgha, signifies in Cornish, a White Eagle, which will as easily account for the arms and supporters, as a play upon the word Dolphin will for the crest of this family.

We cannot positively ascertain how long their ancestors were seated in Cornwall before the conquest; but at that time we find

JOHN DE GODOLPHIN, who among other possessions was lord of the manor of Godolphin; and by his wife Margaret, daughter of Roger de Trewargon, of Trewargon in Cornwall, had issue

RICHARD his son and heir, father of

JAMES DE GODOLPHIN, whose son

THOMAS DE GODOLPHIN, whose successor

EDWARD DE GODOLPHIN, marrying Maud, daughter of William Boteler of Canerton, esquire; had issue,

WILLIAM DE GODOLPHIN, from whom proceeded

THOMAS DE GODOLPHIN, his son and heir, father of

EDWARD DE GODOLPHIN of Godolphin, esquire; Which Edward, by his wife Christian, daughter of Thomas Prideaux, esquire; had issue

ALEXANDER GODOLPHIN, esquire; who married Mary, daughter of Sir John de Fregour, and had WILLIAM his son and heir, father of

DAVID GODOLPHIN, of Godolphin, esquire;

Which David Godolphin, esquire; taking to wife Meliora, daughter of John Cowling, of Trewarnewith, Esq; left issue only

ELEANOR his daughter and heir, married to John Rinsley, esquire; of an antient family in the same county; but being a great heiress, it was covenanted, that his descendants should bear the name of Godolphin. They had issue

THOMAS GODOLPHIN, of Godolphin, Esq; who took to wife Isabel, daughter of — Benne, of Boskenna, in the county of Cornwall, esquire; and was succeeded by JOHN his son and heir, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Beauchamp, of Bennerton in the county of Cornwall, esquire; and by her was father of a son of his own name,

JOHN GODOLPHIN, esquire; who wedded Elizabeth, daughter of John Killigrew, esquire; and was succeeded by his son and heir, another

JOHN GODOLPHIN, esquire; who was sheriff of Cornwall in 19 Henry VII. and in 23 Henry VII. he and Sir Robert Willoughby, lord Brook, steward of the mines in Cornwall and Devonshire, had a pardon for all forfeitures, penalties, &c. relating to the tin-works and courts. He married Margaret, daughter of John Trenouth, Esq; and had issue a daughter Elizabeth, wedded to William Canell, esquire; as also two sons, William and John Godolphin, whose descendants were seated at Morewale and Trewarnewith, in the county of Cornwall.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, esquire, married Margaret, daughter and one of the three coheirs of John Glinne, of Moreval, and Lowewater, by whom he had issue two sons, Sir William Godolphin, and Thomas Godolphin, esquire; from whom the present lord Godolphin is lineally descended.

Sir WILLIAM GODOLPHIN was a person of great note in the reign of king Henry VIII. who, for his services, conferred on him the honour of knighthood, and constituted him warden and chief steward of the Stannaries. He lived to a great age, was several times chosen one of the knights of the shire for Cornwall; in the parliaments of king Henry VIII. and king Edward VI. was also sheriff of the said county in 21, 25, 30 Henry VIII. 3 Edward VI. and 10th year of queen Elizabeth. He likewise acquired much fame, by his conduct and intrepidity, in several military commands, particularly at the siege of Bologne. Mr. Carew, in his Survey of Cornwall, ranks this Sir William Godolphin among the principal worthies of that county, giving this account of him, "He demeaned himself very valiantly beyond the seas, as appeared by the scars he brought home, no less to the beautifying of his fame, than the disfiguring of his face." He took to wife Blanch, daughter of Robert Langden, esquire; by whom he had three daughters, Margaret, married to Sir Robert Verny; Grace, married to Sir John Sydenham of Brimpton in the county of Somerset; and Anne, wedded to Sir John Arundel, of Talvern in the county of Cornwall; but leaving no issue male, the estate devolved on his nephew Francis Godolphin, esquire, son and heir of his brother Thomas Godolphin, esquire,

Which THOMAS GODOLPHIN was at the siege of Bologne, with his brother Sir William Godolphin; and on Thursday, August 14, 1544, he, Mr. Harper, and Mr. Culpepper, were hurt with one shot from the town. He married — daughter of Edmund Bonithon, esquire; and left issue two sons, Francis, and William Godolphin, esquire, one of the members for Helston, in the parliament of the 28th of queen Elizabeth, and had to wife one of the two coheirs of Guarigan.

Sir FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, who succeeded his uncle Sir William, in the lordship of Godolphin, and his other estates, was knighted by queen Elizabeth at Richmond, on Sunday, November 20, 1580. He was thoroughly attached to a country life; but, at the same time, was in so much esteem among men of rank, that his name was perfectly well known at court, and he enjoyed several trusts and honours from his sovereign, which immediately concerned the county wherein he was feated. The opinion the county entertained of him, was exemplified by their electing him their representative in the parliament held in 31 Elizabeth. In the next parliament he was elected for the borough of Lestwithiel, which met at Westminster in the 35th of that reign. According to Carew, in his Survey of Cornwall, this knight was in the commission of the peace, and of the quorum; as also the first in the lieutenancy of that county; and colonel of a regiment of twelve companies armed with four hundred and seventy pikes, four hundred and ninety muskets, and two hundred and forty calivers. He was also a governor of Scilly, which (according to Carew) "was reduced to a more defensible plight by him, who with his invention and purse, bettered his plot and allowance, and so tempered strength with delight, and both with use, as it serveth for a sure hold and a commodious dwelling." It appears from Fuller, in his Account of Worthies, that this industrious knight kept in his service a Dutch mineral man, and taking light from his experience, built thereon far more profitable conclusions, practising a most saving way to make tin of what was before rejected for refuse. He likewise undertook the coinage of silver out of mines in Wales and Cornwall; and Charles I. for his encouragement and saving of expence, granted him the power of coinage at Aber-rusky, in Cornwall; and the pence, groats, shillings, and half-crowns, &c. of this silver, had the ostrich feathers (the cognizance of the prince of Wales) stamped upon them. Mr. Carew says further of him, that he distinguished himself in the defence of his country in July 1595, shewing the greatest courage and most approved conduct, in resisting the Spaniards who landed near Penzance, in Cornwall. We shall conclude our account of this gentleman with the character Mr. Carew gives him.

"Sir Francis Godolphin, knight, whose zeal in religion, uprightness in justice, providence in government, and plentiful housekeeping, have won him a very great and reverend reputation in his country: and these virtues, together with his services to her majesty, are so sufficiently known to those of highest place, as my testimony can add but little light thereto, but by his labour and invention in tin matters, not only the whole country hath felt a general benefit, so as the several owners have thereby gotten very great profit out of such refuse works as they had before given over for unprofitable; but her majesty hath also received increase of her customs by the same, at least to the value of 10,000*l.* Moreover in those works which are of his own particular inheritance, he continually keepeth at worst three hundred persons or thereabouts; and the yearly benefit that out of those his works accrueth to her majesty, amounteth communibus annis to 1000*l.* at the least, and sometimes to much more; a matter very remarkable, and perchance not to be matched again by any of his sort and condition in the whole realm."

He was twice married; first, to Margaret, daughter of John Killigrew, of Arnwick, in Cornwall, by whom he had three sons.

1. William Godolphin.

2. John Godolphin, who married Judith, daughter of Thomas Meredith, of Ashley-castle, in Cheshire, and had two sons; Sir William, and Dr. John Godolphin, who both married and had issue. The latter was grandfather of Mary Godolphin, who married Henry Godolphin, dean of St. Paul's, and was mother of the present lord Godolphin.

3. Francis Godolphin, died without issue.

Also six daughters.

1. Blanch, married to George Keckwith, of Catch-French, esquire.

2. Ursula, married to John Credye, esquire.

3. Thomasin, to Sir George Carew, afterwards earl of Totness.

4. Jane,

5. Elizabeth.

6. Margaret.

He married secondly, Alice, relict of Sir John Glanville, a justice of the King's Bench, who survived him. He was succeeded by

Sir WILLIAM GODOLPHIN, his heir, who signalized himself by his valour on the Spanish invasion in 1600, being intrusted by the lord Montjoy, lord-deputy of Ireland, with his own brigade of horse, at the battle fought near Kinsale, where he was wounded. In the first parliament called by king James I. he was elected knight of the shire for Cornwall, on the decease of Sir Jonathan Trelawney, and died in 1613. He married Thomasin, daughter and heir to Thomas Sidney, of Wrighton in Norfolk, esquire; and had three sons, and a daughter Penelope, born 1607, married to Charles Berkley, viscount Fitz-Harding. Of the sons which were Francis, Sidney, and William; the latter had the command of a regiment, and performed many signal services for king Charles I. in the West. Sidney, the second, lost his life at Chegford in the county of Devon, in behalf of king Charles I. 1642, and

Sir FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, the eldest, born 1605, succeeded his father. He was elected for the county of Cornwall in the first of king Charles I. and for St. Ives in the third; also to the parliament in 1640. He secured the island of Scilly for that king, and was made knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles II. He married Dorothy, daughter to Sir Henry Berkeley, of Yarlinton, in the county of Somerset, knight, and had sixteen children, of which we shall note five sons.

1. William Godolphin, who was created a baronet April 29, 1661, but died unmarried August 17, 1710, and was buried in the south isle of Westminster-abbey, on the 3d of September following. He bequeathed his fortune, which was very considerable, to his nephew, Francis Godolphin, afterward earl of Godolphin.

2. Francis Godolphin died unmarried in the year 1675.

3. Sidney Godolphin, whose line is now extinct, but of whom we must treat as he was first advanced to the honours of the peerage.

4. Henry Godolphin, father to the present lord.

5. Charles Godolphin, born 1651, was chosen member of parliament for Helston, which parliament ment met at Oxford March 21, 1680-1, and served in every parliament afterwards both in the reign of king James and that of king William; by which last monarch he was appointed one of the commissioners of the customs. To this office he had a re-appointment by queen Anne, January 23, 1711-12; and was also register-general of all the trading ships belonging to Great-Britain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Godolphin, of Coulston, Wilts. Against the wall, on the west side of the cloisters in Westminster-abbey, is a large neat marble monument erected to his memory, and within the pediment, the arms of Godolphin, impaling Godolphin, below which is the following inscription:

Here rest in hope of a blessed Resurrection, CHARLES GODOLPHIN, Esq; brother to the Right Honourable Sidney, Earl of Godolphin,

Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, who died July 10, 1720, aged 69,

And Mrs. GODOLPHIN, his wife, who died July 29, 1726, aged 63.

Whose excellent qualities and endowments can never be forgotten, Particularly the public-spirited zeal with which he served his country in parliament; and the indefatigable application, Great skill, and nice integrity, with which he discharged the trust of a Commissioner of the Customs for many years.

Nor was she less eminent for her ingenuity, wit, sincere love of her friends, and constancy in religious worship.

But as charity and benevolence were the distinguishing parts of their characters;

So were they most conspicuously displayed by the last act of their lives;

A pious charitable institution by him designed and ordered,

And by her completed, to the glory of God, and for a bright example to mankind.

The endowment whereof, is a rent charge of one hundred and eighty pounds a year, issuing out of lands in Somersetshire; and of which, one hundred and sixty pounds a year are to be applied for ever, from the 24th of June, 1726, to the educating eight young gentlewomen, who are so born, and whose parents are of the church of England; whose fortunes do not exceed three hundred pounds, and whose parents, or friends, will undertake to provide them with decent apparel. And after the death of the said Mrs. Godolphin, and William Godolphin, esquire, her nephew, such as have neither father nor mother; which same young gentlewomen are not to be admitted before they are eight years old, nor to be continued after the age of nineteen; and are to be brought up at the city of New Sarum, or some other town in the county of Wilts, under the care of some prudent governess, or school-mistress, a communicant of the church of England; and the overplus, after an allowance of five pounds a year, for collecting the said rent-charge, is to be applied to the binding out one or more poor children apprentices, whose parents are of the church of England.

In perpetual memory whereof, Mrs. FRANCES HALL, executrix to her Aunt Mrs. GODOLPHIN, has, according to her will, and by her order, caused this inscription to be engraved on their monument, 1727.

We now return to

(First Earl) SIDNEY GODOLPHIN, third son of Sir

Francis, who by his wisdom, unblemished integrity, and many rare accomplishments, rose to high honours, and left a shining example to posterity. He was from his youth in the service of king Charles II. who, when prince of Wales, coming into Cornwall, there took particular notice of him; and after his restoration made him one of the grooms of his bed-chamber. In the year 1663, being in waiting on the king at Oxford, he had the degree of master of arts conferred on him. He was returned for Helfton in Cornwall, in that called the long parliament, which began at Westminster the 8th of May, 1661, and served for that borough and St. Maws, in all parliaments whilst he continued a commoner. In February 1678, the French king having taken Ghent and Ipres, it gave such an alarm to Holland, as disposed them to a peace on any terms; whereof king Charles II. having notice by his ministers, he had that confidence in Mr. Godolphin's penetration and judgment in affairs of state, and the interests of his country, that he dispatched him immediately into Holland, to bring the last and surest account he could get of the States resolution on that grand affair, and to return with the greatest speed he could. He performed this commission so much to the satisfaction of his majesty and his ministry, that the king seeming resolved to go into a war against France, he again posted into Holland about the middle of April, to know the final resolutions of the States-General. He had been there but a very short time, before he wrote to court, that the Dutch absolutely desired the peace, even upon the terms proposed by France; and had resolved to send Monsieur Van Lewen to England, to dispose the king to be contented with them.

Soon after Mr. Godolphin's return, Sir William Temple was appointed to go into Holland, on the resolution of the king and council, to enter into a war against France, in case the French persisted in their refusal to evacuate the towns they were to deliver to the Spaniards by a time prefixed. And upon this dispatch Sir William Temple remarks, "That Mr. Godolphin, who had been so lately in Holland, told him, that if he brought the States to the treaty his majesty proposed on this occasion, he would move the parliament to have his statue set up." Thus heartily did Mr. Godolphin engage, to stop the growth of the power of France, which he then thought was dangerous to Europe. And Sir William Temple, in a letter to him from the Hague (July 29, N. S. 1678) after giving an account of his negotiation, makes this conclusion: "In short, the king is once more at the head of all the affairs in Christendom: what use he will make of it, is in his own hands, and those of his ministers and servants that are about him. Among whom, as I know no man that wishes better at heart to his majesty and his kingdoms than you do, so I am sure no man can wish better to you in all points than I do, nor more desire the occasions of expressing the sincere truth and passion as well as esteem, wherewith I am, and shall be always." On the dismissal of the earl of Danby from being lord high-treasurer of England, he was constituted (March 26, 1679) one of the commissioners of the treasury; and by his notable dexterity in business, and assiduity, was soon after considered as one of the ablest men belonging to the court, and and sworn February 4, 1679-80, one of his majesty's privy-council.

When the house of commons grew warm in the prosecution of the popish plot, and were often addressing the king, to bestow pensions on one or other of the evidences, without raising the necessary supplies for his majesty's service, he thought it became him to take notice of it, and among other particulars said, "That since they were so forward in their addresses to his majesty to give such pensions, he thought it would be necessary for them to consider the means to enable him to do it." By his prudent management he gained a great transcendancy in the council, and Sir William Temple informs us, "That the earl of Sunderland, Mr. Hyde, and Mr. Godolphin, were esteemed to be alone in the secret management of the king's affairs, and looked upon as the ministry."

In the year 1680, finding the parliament insisting on the exclusion of the duke of York, he declared openly for it; as at that time the interest of England, and affairs of Europe, made a league against France indispensibly necessary, which could not be done without a good understanding at home. And on the debate in council, concerning the duke's stay, or going back into Scotland before the parliament met, he joined absolutely in the reasons and advices of his going away; and tho' the rest of the council were of the contrary opinion, yet the king fell in with his and lord Sunderland's reasons. He excused himself from carrying his majesty's message to the house (January 4, 1680-1) "That he could never consent to the exclusion of the duke;" and thereupon Sir William Temple delivered it. But so far was it from giving satisfaction, that the house resolved and declared, "That until a bill be passed for the exclusion of the duke of York, they cannot give any supply to his majesty, without danger to his majesty's person, extreme hazard of the protestant religion, and unfaithfulness to those by whom they were entrusted."

On the resignation of Sir Lionel Jenkins, one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, April 14, 1684, he was sworn into that office on the 17th of April, in the council held at Hampton-court. But not liking his place of secretary of state, and desiring to be again in the treasury, where his management had given great satisfaction both to the king and his people, he was by his majesty declared first commissioner of the treasury, on the 24th of August following. And in consideration of his great merit and services, was, on the 8th of September, 1684, advanced to the dignity and title of a baron of this kingdom, by the name and stile of baron Godolphin, of Rialton in the county of Cornwall.

On the accession of king James II. to the throne, when the earl of Rochester was constituted lord high-treasurer of England, he was declared lord-chamberlain to the queen. But on the removal of the earl of Rochester, his lordship was again appointed one of the commissioners of the treasury, January 5, 1686-7.

On the landing of the prince of Orange, and king James being resolved to go in person to the West, his lordship was in the number of those, to whom he committed the administration of affairs in his absence. And on the king's return from Salisbury to London, the marquis of Halifax, the earl of Nottingham, and the lord Godolphin, were specially deputed by king James, to go to the prince, and to ask him what it was that he demanded; whereupon waiting on his highness at Hungerford, after conferring with the earls of Oxford, Shrewsbury, and Clarendon, they received the prince's answer, on Sunday the 8th of December 1688. On their coming to London, they were much surprised to hear of his majesty's sudden departure, who after his return from Feverham to Whitehall, and missing of Mons. de Zuylestein (who was sent to desire his stay at Rochester) he made choice of the lord Godolphin to wait on his highness, to propose his going back to Rochester.

In the debate on the vacancy of the throne, his lordship, and many other noble peers, of their tender regard to the succession, voted for a regency: nevertheless, when their majesties king William and queen Mary were proclaimed king and queen of England, knowing his great abilities and integrity, they constituted him one of the lord-commissioners of the treasury; and the management thereof seemed wholly to depend on his lordship, none of the other commissioners (who were Charles lord Mordaunt, afterwards earl of Peterborough, Henry lord Delamere, afterwards earl of Warrington, Richard Hambden, esquire; and Sir Henry Capel) having ever been employed in that intricate office before. He was also sworn of their majesty's privy-council, December 16, 1688; and in November 1690, on an alteration in the commission of the treasury, his lordship was constituted first lord-commissioner of it, the other four being Sir John Lowther, vice-chamberlain of the household, Richard Hambden, esquire, chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Stephen Fox, and Thomas Pelham, esquire, after lord Pelham.

In the year 1695, his lordship was declared one of the seven lords justices, for the administration of the government, during the king's absence beyond the seas; as he was the year following, as also in the year 1701, when he was again made first lord commissioner of the treasury, having been removed from that board in the year 1697.

On the accession of queen Anne to the throne of these realms, he was constituted May 6, 1702, lord high-treasurer of England, being truly qualified by a train of long experience in the treasury, which justly recommended him to her majesty's choice. And on the 12th of May 1702, his lordship being accompanied by a great number of the nobility, and other persons of quality, and attended by the officers of the exchequer, with several others of the revenue, went to Westminster-hall, where the usual oaths were administered to him, as well in the court of chancery, as the exchequer. Under his lordship's administration in this high office, public credit revived, which before was in a sinking condition, and the war carried on with success, and the nation entirely satisfied with his prudent management. He omitted nothing that could engage the subject to bear the burthen of the war with cheerfulness, and it was owing to his lordship's advice, that her majesty contributed 100,000*l.* out of the civil list, towards it. He was also one of those faithful and able counsellors, who advised her majesty to declare in council, "That she judged the selling of offices and places in her household and family, to be highly dishonourable to her, prejudicial to her service, and a discouragement to virtue and true merit, which could and should recommend persons to her royal approbation; and that her majesty was resolved to prevent such selling of the fame, &c." And so true a friend was his lordship to the established church, that considering how contemptible some of its clergy were by the poor allowance for their support, he likewise advised her majesty to settle her revenue of the first-fruits and tenths of the clergy to augment small vicarages.

His lordship was much concerned at the heats and animosities about the bill to prevent occasional conformity, thinking it an ill time for such disputes, when all parties ought to unite against the common enemy. At that time it was, there rose to a great height, the distinction of high and low church; and though his lordship voted for that bill, yet the party that espoused it, gave out that he made interest against it. But the esteem he had gained by his wisdom and counsels, was apparent in the addresses of congratulation to her majesty on the glorious victory obtained at Hockstet. In that from Fowey in Cornwall, presented by the honourable George Granville, esquire, afterwards lord Lansdown, complimenting his grace the duke of Marlborough, "That he had not only retrieved the reputation of the English arms, but raised it to a degree of glory greater than ever, and has his veins full of the blood of their countrymen;" it is further added, "Nor do we esteem it a less happiness, that the same providence furnished your majesty with a person from among us, to be entrusted with the management of the revenues, whose frugal and faithful administration has appeared to be such, both in that high station, and in your councils, that your people might almost believe themselves in full peace at home, were it not for the fame of the victories abroad."

The queen had so great a sense of his services, that at a chapter held 6th of July the same year (1704) at St. James's, her majesty, and twelve knights companions being present, his lordship was elected a knight of the most noble order of the Garter, and on the 30th of December was installed at Windsor, in the chapel-royal of St. George, within the college in the castle at Windsor, by George duke of Northumberland, constable of the said castle, and the earl of Pembroke, lord president of the council, commissioned by the sovereign; and a grand entertainment was made for the company in the guard-chamber of the castle. On the 16th of April 1705, he was constituted lord-lieutenant, and custos rotulorum of the county of Cornwall.

And his lordship so managed affairs before the end of the same year, that her majesty was impowered by the parliaments both of England and Scotland, to appoint commissioners to treat about an union. The commission for England bore date the 10th of April, 1706, and his lordship was the fourth nominated.

This grand affair was set on foot by king James I. but no prince before her majesty, nor any councils but hers, could effect it: for by the assiduity and dexterity of the lord Godolphin, all obstacles were removed, and the long desired union of the two kingdoms happily brought to bear. It is to his lordship's honour, that though he had a great share in the favours of our succeeding princes, he never sought new titles: but having done great services, her majesty now thought it highly necessary to advance such a faithful servant to the dignity of an earl, by the style and title of earl of Godolphin, and viscount Rialton, by letters patent bearing date the 29th of December, 1706.

On the incorporating of the two kingdoms, the treasury of Scotland being entirely determined, her majesty was pleased to constitute the earl of Godolphin, lord high-treasurer of Great-Britain. Yet soon after, some persons having endeavoured to lessen his lordship in her majesty's esteem, the house of commons in their address of the 13th of March 1708, expressed themselves to this effect: "That there could be nothing so dangerous and fatal to the safety of her majesty's person, and the security of the present happy establishment, as those persons who endeavoured to create divisions and animosities among her faithful subjects; or by any artful methods lessen her just esteem for those who so eminently, and in so distinguishing a manner, commanded her armies, and managed her treasure, to the honour and glory of her majesty abroad, and entire satisfaction of her people at home; and therefore they begged leave to beseech her majesty to discountenance all such persons and designs, in the most remarkable manner." To which address her majesty made answer, "That she thought all those who endeavoured to make divisions among her faithful subjects, must be her's and the kingdom's enemies; and that she should never countenance any persons who should go about to lessen the just esteem which she had for those, who had done, and continued to do her the most eminent services." And further to satisfy the nation, the queen removed from their offices several persons, who at that time were thought to be forming a party in opposition to the lord high-treasurer.

But such was the inveteracy of many of the clergy, on their mistaken notions of the church being in danger (by his lordship's bringing some into offices, who were known friends to the protestant religion and succession) that they continually maligned him; and Dr. Sacheverel's sermon and trial having spirited up the change among the people, her majesty August 8, 1710, was persuaded to remove his lordship from the office of lord high-treasurer of Great-Britain, to the great regret of all her majesty's allies, and of all who had at heart the true interest of their country.

His lordship laboured under an indisposition of the stone and gravel for some years, which growing more violent upon him, he departed this life, aged 67, at his grace the duke of Marlborough's house at St. Alban's, on the 15th of September, 1712; and on the 8th of the next month, was buried in Westminster-abbey, where his daughter-in-law, the duchess of Marlborough, erected a monument to his memory, against the south wall of the south isle, on which is his busto.

The character of this great man has been so truly described by several hands, that words cannot be more properly adapted, to leave a greater reverence to his memory. Dr. Burnet, bishop of Salisbury, in his Memoirs of his own Times, gives this account of him in the reign of king Charles II. "That he was considered as one of the ablest men that belonged to the court. He was the silentest and modestest man, that was perhaps ever bred in court. He had a clear apprehension, and dispatched business with great method, and with so much temper, that he had no personal enemies: but his silence begot a jealousy which has hung long upon him. His notions were for the court. But his sincere and incorrupt way of managing the concerns of the treasury, created in all people a very high esteem for him. He loved gaming the most of any man in business I ever knew; and gave one reason for it, because it delivered him from the obligation to talk much. He had true principles of religion and virtue, and was free from all vanity, and never heaped up wealth: so that all things being laid together, he was one of the worthiest and wisest men that has been employed in our time; and he has had much of the confidence of four of our succeeding princes."

And by another author, his lordship is thus characterised; "My lord Godolphin was useful to his friends, and inoffensive to his adversaries. His birth, his education, and good qualities, had fitted him to engage the favour and affection of his prince, which he obtained to a good degree, and used with great moderation: he was in many high employments, and was found equal to them all; he was made noble, and no one envied him, nor wondered at it, because they saw he was ambitious only to deserve that honour, without pretending to, or seeking it. After full forty years attendance on the court, and the great deservings from it, he received the treasurer's staff, not only with the expectation, but the wishes and the satisfaction of the whole kingdom. His great abilities, and long experience in all sorts of business; his general knowledge of all the branches of the revenue; his quick apprehension, wonderful dispatch, almost unerring judgment, together with his integrity and honesty, and his most plain and upright dealing; these things had so prepared his way, and gained him universal credit and esteem, that every body thought no place could be bestowed better, nor would be better filled. Thus he obtained his office without any enmity or ill-will. The great ones were not heard to wonder at his strange advancement, nor did the common people gaze upon him like a meteor, blazing and burning out upon the sudden, portending change, and threatening ruin. Nor did he use his office, or employ his power, to any one's offence or provocation. He was a man of few words, but great truth; few promises, but strict performance. He would not so much as by a kind look, an unusual familiarity, or any affected freedom of discourse or gesture, raise any hope or expectation of promotion, place, or office, where he intended no such favour; so that he deceived none, and disappointed few, whose hopes out-ran all manner of encouragement. And every body knows he kept no state; he had no ostentation, pride, insolence in his behaviour. He was by nature grave, reserved, and taciturn, but without arrogance or scorn of others: and when he most relaxed, and let himself into the greatest freedoms, they were such as might be told abroad, without any hazard of his fame or virtue." To which may be added, he was a great encourager of literature, and a good judge of poetry. He promoted Dr. Davenant for his ingenious essays on peace at home and war abroad: And having a sight of Mr. Addison's poem on the glorious campaign of the duke of Marlborough, when it was carried on as far as the applauded simile of the angel, he so far approved of it, that he bestowed on the author, in a few days after, the place of commissioner of the appeals, vacant by the removal of the famous Mr. Locke to the council of trade, which was also done by his lordship's interest.

He married Margaret, at that time maid of honour to Catherine queen of England, fourth daughter and one of the coheirs of Thomas Blague, esquire, (groom of the bed-chamber to king Charles I. and king Charles II. colonel of a regiment of foot, and governor of Wallingford during the civil war; colonel of a regiment, and governor of Yarmouth and Landguard fort, after the restoration) by whom he had issue Francis, his successor, of whom she died in childbed, and was buried at Breague, in the county of Cornwall, the 16th of September, 1678. And his lordship was so much affected with her death, that he ever after continued a widower.

Which

(Second Earl and first Baron of Helston) FRANCIS, earl of Godolphin, was born on the 3d of September, 1678, and in his younger years was bred at Eton school, and afterwards at King's college in Cambridge. As soon as his lordship came of age, he was returned to parliament for the borough of Helston, and was chosen one of the knights of the shire for the county of Oxford, in the parliament of the 7th year of queen Anne. In the year 1702, he was made one of the tellers of the Exchequer. On January 6, 1704-5, at the splendid entertainment made by the lord mayor and court of aldermen, for the entertainment of his grace the duke of Marlborough, after his glorious success against the enemy at the battle of Hockstet, his grace was accompanied in one of her majesty's coaches by his lordship, the duke of Somerset, and the prince of Hesse, followed by a great train of other coaches; and in 1705, was made lord-warden of the Stannaries in Cornwall. On his lordship's resignation of his place of one of the tellers of the exchequer, he was constituted cofferer to her majesty queen Anne, as he was likewise (on the 3d of October 1714) to George I; who, October 14, 1715, appointed him lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of Oxfordshire. On the 25th of May 1723, his lordship was declared groom of the stole, and first gentleman of the bed-chamber to George I. who, the next day, making known his intentions to his privy-council, that some affairs called him abroad for the summer, his lordship was appointed one of the lords-justices, and of the privy-council, during his majesty's absence: and was also one of the lords-justices, when the king went abroad in the years 1725, and 1727. On the accession of our late sovereign, he was again July 24, 1727, appointed groom of the stole, and first gentleman of his majesty's bed-chamber, and lord-lieutenant of Oxfordshire; which honour he resigned in January, 1734-5. On July 7, 1733, his lordship was appointed governor of the islands of Scilly, and on the 23d of January following (8 George II.) was created baron of Helston, in the county of Cornwall, and to his heirs male, with remainder to the heirs male of Henry Godolphin, doctor in divinity, late dean of St. Paul's and provost of Eton college, deceased. Likewise May 16, 1735, his lordship was sworn lord privy seal, which he resigned in a few years.

His lordship married Henrietta, eldest daughter and coheir of his grace John, duke of Marlborough, who for his unparalleled services to the nation, tion, and, the confederated powers of Europe, had his honours entailed by act of parliament on his daughters, and their heirs male, by virtue whereof she was dutchess of Marlborough, on her father's decease; and was one of the ladies of the bedchamber to her late majesty queen Anne. Her grace departed this life on the 24th of October, 1733. His lordship had issue by her,

1. William, marquis of Blandford, who had all the advantages of education at home, and travelled through most parts of Europe for his greater accomplishment. In April 1720, his lordship, accompanied by the lord Spencer, were at Geneva, and from thence passed into Italy. He was one of the representatives for the borough of Woodstock in the parliament summoned to meet November 18, 1727; and in the year 1730, was complimented by both the universities of this kingdom, with the degree of doctor of laws; that of Cambridge was conferred on him at their public commencement. His lordship on the 25th of April, 1729, married Maria Catherina, daughter of Peter de Jonghe, of the province of Utrecht, and sister to the countess dowager of Denbigh, by whom he had no issue, departing this life at Oxford, of an apoplectic fit, on the 24th of August, 1731. And his lady, on June 1, 1734, was married to Sir William Wyndham, baronet.

2. Henry Godolphin, died young.

Also three daughters.

1. Henrietta, married 1717, to his grace Thomas Pelham Holles, duke of Newcastle.

2. Margaret, died young.

3. Mary, married 1740, to Thomas, duke of Leeds, and died August 3, 1764.

His lordship departing this life on the 17th of January, 1766, was succeeded as baron Godolphin, of Helston (pursuant to the limitation of the patent already mentioned) by his first cousin

(Second and present Lord) FRANCIS GODOLPHIN, son of Henry Godolphin, which Henry Godolphin, fourth son of Sir Francis, had his education in All-Souls college, in Oxford, and took his degree of doctor of divinity the 11th of July, 1685. On the 30th of October, 1695, he was instituted provost of Eton college; and July 18, 1707, was installed dean of the cathedral church of St. Paul's. He died at Eton, near Windsor, January 29, 1732-3, in the eighty-fourth year of his age, and enjoyed the use of his faculties to the last. He was very exemplary for his piety and charity; a great encourager of learning and virtue, without distinction of party; and so careful in the choice of the persons he preferred, that he was hardly ever deceived in any instance. He has left many marks of his munificence at Eton College, of which he was provost thirty-seven years; and was a great benefactor to the bounty of queen Anne, for the augmentation of small livings, to which he gave at one time 4000l. The corporation of the sons of the clergy likewise partook largely of his bounty, having given twice, within a very few years, five hundred pounds; and to their collection on Thursday before he died, one hundred pounds, besides great sums given in private charity, for the relief of poor families, and single persons in distress. As he was dean of St. Paul's, in 1726, being desirous to retire, he resigned that dignity in favour of Dr. Hare, bishop of Chichester; so uncommon an instance of generosity and friendship, that nothing more need be added to compleat his character. He married Mary, daughter of Sidney Godolphin, esquire, and left issue one daughter Mary, married in 1730, to William Owen, of Porkington, a gentleman of very considerable estate near Oswestry, in Shropshire; and two sons, Henry and Francis, of which the elder, born 1706, died unmarried in 1722, and the younger is the peer of whom we treat.

His lordship was appointed governor of the islands of Scilly, 1766. In February 1733-4, he married Barbara, daughter of William Bentinck, earl of Portland; but that lady dying without issue, April 13, 1736, he married secondly, May 28, 1748, Anne, daughter of John, earl Fitzwilliam, but has yet no issue. He served in the four parliaments preceding his accession to the peerage for the borough of Helston, in Cornwall.

BROMLEY, Baron MONTFORT.

WE cannot trace the male line of this noble family farther back than to the great grandfather of the present lord,

JOHN BROMLEY, who came over to England from Barbadoes, and became seated at Horsfeth, in the county of Cambridge. By his lady (of whom we only know that her christian name was Dorothy, and that she was an heiress, and died on the 14th of July, 1709, in the sixtieth year of her age) he had issue two sons.

1. John Bromley,
2. William Bromley, born 1685, who died unmarried November 26, 1729, and was buried near his father at Horsfeth.

JOHN BROMLEY, was born in 1682, and took to wife Mercy, the eldest daughter and coheir of William Bromley, of Holt-castle, in Worcester-shire. Probably this John Bromley was descended from one common ancestor with his wife. Altho' this cannot be ascertained, yet as she was at length sole heir to the ancient and honourable family of her name, it will be necessary to give an account of them.

THE FAMILY of BROMLEY, anciently wrote Bromleghe, claim descent from Sir WALTER BROMLEGHE, of Bromleghe, in the county of Stafford, knight, who was living in the reign of king John, and whose issue for many years flourished in the counties of Stafford, Salop, and Chester. He married Alice, daughter of Warin de Burwardeslegh, lord of the manor of Estclegh, in Staffordshire, in the time of king John, and eldest sister and coheir of Roger de Burwardeslegh. The second sister was married to John de Ipstones, and had a son, John de Ipstones, who died without issue in 21 Edw. I.

This Walter, by the said Alice, had issue

GEFFRY DE BROMLEGHE, who was found to be heir to John, son of John de Ipstones, in 21 Edw. I.

He left issue two sons.

1. Richard de Bromlegh.
2. Robert de Bromlegh, who was knighted, and had the estate at Asteley. He died in 1 Edw. II. and had issue John de Bromlegh, of Asteley, who dying in 6 Edward III. left John, his son and heir; which John died in 23 Edw. III. leaving Alice, his daughter and heir, wife of John de Frodesham, of Frodesham, in the county of Leicester.

RICHARD DE BROMLEGH, the eldest son of Geffry, inherited the estate at Bromlegh. He was living in 25 Edw. I. as appears by deed, dated at Cnocton, on the feast of St. Gregory, whereby he conveyed lands in Cnocton, to Peter de Arderne, to which Sir Robert de Stawndon, and Sir Roger Swinerton, knights, were witnesses. By his wife, — daughter of Cnocton, he had issue, RANULPH DE BROMLEGH, who, in a deed, in 23 Edw. I. is called son of Richard; and left issue

RICHARD BROMLEGH, who is wrote son of Ranulph, in 11 Edw. III. in a deed, whereby he granted to John de le Delves a third part of Burlemore, within the fee of Cnocton; and had issue three sons.

1. Walter Bromley, who left issue only a daughter and heir, Lettice, married to John Cholmondeley, of Chorley.

2. William Bromley.

3. Roger Bromley, was of Barksford, and by Letitia his wife, daughter of Hugh Cholmondeley, by Isabel, his wife, daughter of Robert Harcourt, was ancestor to the Bromleys of Barksford.

WILLIAM BROMLEY, second son of Richard, was of Badinton; and in 35 Edward III. was summoned to be at Westminster, within three weeks of Easter, to attend Lionel, earl of Ulster, the king's son, into Ireland, who was appointed to repair thither with a great army, to oppose the incursions of his enemies in that kingdom; the king ordering all who had any estates in that realm, and resident in England, to go in company with his said son, Lionel, earl of Ulster. He married Anabella, sister and heir of William de Chettelon, son of Matthew, son of Sir William de Chettelon, son of Henry, son of Robert, (called Schirrard) son of William de Chetillon: by which marriage he had three sons.

1. John Bromley, of whom we shall further treat.

2. Richard Bromley, who married Anne, daughter and coheir of William Praers, of Badeleighe, by Letitia, his wife, one of the heirs of William Wettenhall, of Cholmeston, by whom he had John, his son and heir, who married Margery, daughter of Sir Thomas Massey, of Tatton, knight, by whom he had issue Thomas and William, who left three daughters his coheirs: the said Thomas, eldest son, died without lawful issue, but left a natural son, Thomas Bromley, from whom the Bromleys of Darford, in Cheshire, and others of the name are descended.

3. Robert Bromley.

JOHN BROMLEY, eldest son of William, rendered himself famous in the wars with France; and in 4 Hen. V. in that memorable battle of Le Corby, recovering the standard of Guienne, then gained by the French in a fierce charge on that wing which which Hugh Stafford, lord Bouchier, his near kinsman, then commanded, had for that signal service, not only the honour of knighthood conferred upon him, but lands of great value in the dutchy of Normandy, with offices of special power and trust in those parts; as also an augmentation to his arms, viz. the same standard of Guienne, for his crest.

In the said year he had also a grant, dated at Madeley, the 10th of March, from Hugh de Stafford, lord Bouchier, his kinsman, for his eminent service in defending and supporting the royal standard of Guienne, under the protection of the said lord Bouchier, of forty pound per annum, during his life, payable out of that lord's manors, lands, &c. in the counties of Stafford and Warwick, at the feast of Pentecost, and St. Martin, by equal portions. Also the king, at Baieux, 18 April, 6 Hen. V. in consideration of the good services of his beloved servant, John Bromley, granted to him the hotel of Molay-Bacon, in the province of Baieux, and all tenements, rents, hereditaments, and possessions in the duchy of Normandy, which were Allan de Beaumont's, a rebel; to hold to him and to his heirs male, of the king and his successors, by homage, &c. at the castle of Baieux, and giving every year a belt at that castle, on the feast of St. John Baptist.

On the 12th of August following, (6 Hen. V.) writing himself John Bromley, captain-general of Dampfronte, steward and great constable of Boffe le Rosse, and of the marches there, he gave to Walter de Audeley, for his good services to him in England, and against the French, a yearly rent of twenty pound, issuing out of his manor of Bromley, and all other his lands in England, during the life of the said Walter, with a clause of distress, &c. To this deed was appendant his seal of arms, viz. quarterly per fess indented, on an escutcheon of pretence, a griphon segreiant; and for his crest, a demi-lion issuing out of a coronet, holding the standard of Guienne and Aquitain between his fore feet. He married Agnes, daughter of John Trentham, and by her had issue,

WALTER DE BROMLEY, who took to wife Joan, daughter of Richard de Delves, by whom he had issue, ROGER BROMLEY, of Mitley, in right of Jane, his wife, daughter and heir of Richard de Mitley, of the county of Salop, by Ellen, daughter and heir of Sir John Hawkeston, knight, by Annabella, daughter and heir of Matthew de Chetillon. By this marriage he added to his possessions, and had issue two sons.

1. Roger Bromley.

2. Nicholas Bromley, whose posterity was of Hampton-Norbury, in Cheshire.

ROGER BROMLEY, eldest son and heir by — his wife, daughter and heir of David Browe, of Malpas, in Cheshire, had issue three sons.

1. William Bromley.

2. John Bromley, who left a daughter, Anne, that died without issue.

3. Roger Bromley, who married Jane, daughter of Thomas Jennings, and had issue William Bromley, of Stoke, and Thomas Bromley, second son, constituted lord chief justice of England in the first year of queen Mary, and left issue Margaret, his daughter and heir, wife of Sir Richard Newport, knight, who by her was ancestor to the earls of Bradford.

WILLIAM BROMLEY, esquire, eldest son of Roger aforesaid, was seated at Mitley, and married Beatrice, daughter of Humphrey Hill, of Blore and Buntingdale, by whom he had issue two sons,

1. George Bromley, esquire, who was seated at Hodnet, in Shropshire, and married Jane, daughter of Sir Thomas Lacon, of Willey, in the same county, knight, by whom he had issue Sir George Bromley, knight, appointed justice of Chester, in 1581, 23 Elizabeth, and Sir Edward Bromley, of Shifnal-grange, in the county of Salop, knight, who was constituted one of the barons of the exchequer, in 7 Jac. I.

2. Thomas Bromley. Which

THOMAS BROMLEY, rose to high advancement by the study of the laws. He was of the society of the Inner-Temple, of which he was chosen autumn reader, in 8 Eliz. being then recorder of the city of London. Also, on June 12, 1566, 8 Eliz. was commissioned, with the marquis of Northampton, William, earl of Pembroke, Robert, earl of Leicester, and others of the court, to hear and determine all treasons, felonies, riots, &c. committed within the verge of the court. On March 14, 1569, 11 Eliz. he was constituted solicitor-general. In 16 Eliz. he was chosen treasurer of the society of the Inner-Temple; and that year the great carved skreen in the hall was put up by his order. And, continuing solicitor-general, he was, on April 25, in 21 Eliz. constituted chancellor of England, in which high post he died, in 29 Eliz. He lies buried in Westminster-abbey, under a very magnificent monument of alabaster, with pillars of marble and lydian, gilt; between which is his effigy, in a chancellor's gown, lying on his back, his head resting on a pillow, his hands conjoined in prayer, and at his feet a cock; underneath are the figures of his four sons, and four daughters; on the cornice is, Justicia et Æquitate; on a compartment is a Latin inscription:

Which has been thus translated:

"Thomas Bromley, knight, remarkable for his wisdom, piety, and knowledge of the law, privy-counsellor to queen Elizabeth, and lord chancellor; when he had for eight years delivered equity with singular integrity and temper of mind, being snatched away, to the grief of all good men, was here buried. He lived 57 years, and died the 12th of April, 1587. He left by his lady Elizabeth, of the family of the Fortescues, eight children. Henry, his son has, to the best of fathers, erected this monument."

On the accession of king James I. a new parliament being called, which began March 19, 1603, he was again returned one of the representatives of the county of Worcester, being seated at Holt-castle in that county. And one daughter, Diana, born December 16, 1646.

And deceasing at Holt-castle, was buried in the chapel there, December 3, 1652.

HENRY BROMLEY, his eldest son, succeeded him at Holt-castle, and married May 16, 1654, Mercy, daughter of Edward Pytts, of Kieair, in the county of Worcester, esquire; by Mercy his wife, daughter of Sir Samuel Sandys, of Omberley, in the said county, knight, by whom he had two sons:

1. Henry, buried at Holt, May 6, 1658.

2. William, his successor.

His wife survived him, and lived to a good old age, and, having married a second husband, George Walth, second brother to Joseph Walth, of Abberley, in the county of Worcester, esquire; was buried at Holt, August 26, 1699.

The said Henry Bromley, esquire, represented the county of Worcester in the parliament of 12 Charles II. 1660; and, departing this life at Holt-castle, September 30, was buried October 6, 1670, in the chapel, where a monument is erected to his memory, with the following inscription:

M. S.

Near this place lies entered the body of Henry Bromley, esquire; late lord of this manor. He was a person eminent both for his natural and acquired qualifications in the learned languages; for his great proficiency to the distressed; for his compassionate humanity in his conversation; for his obliging affability; and towards his prince for his unspotted loyalty.

He married Mercy, daughter of Edward Pytts, of Kyer-Wyard, in this county, who (as a testimony of that tender affection she did bear to her deceased husband) erected this monument, in the year of our Lord, 1683. Changed this life for a better, 30th of September, anno salutis 1670, ætatis 38.

WILLIAM BROMLEY, his only surviving son, born June 26, 1656, married Margaret, daughter of Sir Rowland Berkeley, of Cotheridge, in the county of Worcester, knight, by whom he had two daughters, Mercy and Dorothy. He represented the city of Worcester in the reign of king James II, and part of the reign of king William; and served for the county of Worcester the remainder of king William's, and of queen Anne's reign to his death, being elected in the parliament that concluded the union of Great Britain. He departed this life at Horseheath, in the county of Cambridge, where he was on a visit, August 5, and was buried at the chapel at Holt, August 16, 1707. Margaret, his wife, died likewise at Horseheath, August 13, aged 50, and was buried at Holt, August 23, the same year.

MERCY, his eldest daughter, was married August 10, 1704, as we observed, to John, eldest son and heir of John Bromley, of Horseheath-hall, in the county of Cambridge, esquire, then representative of that county; Dorothy, the youngest daughter, was married to John Jennings, of Hayes, in the county of Middlesex, esquire, and died without issue: whereby the whole inheritance in Worcestershire, &c. devolved on John Bromley, and Mercy his wife. Their issue was a son, Henry, born August 20, 1705, of whom she died in child-bed at Holt-castle, August 29, and was buried there September 1, following.

The said John Bromley, husband to Mercy, succeeded his father in 1707, as one of the knights for the county of Cambridge. In the four succeeding parliaments, called in the years, 1708, 1710, 1713, 1715, he was returned for the same county, and dying of the small-pox, October 20, 1718, he was interred at Horseheath, on the first of November following. His only son, (First Lord) HENRY BROMLEY, not only became possessed of an ample patrimony from his father; but, in right of his mother, enjoyed the estates of the Bromleys, of Holt-castle, in the counties of Worcester and Salop. He was returned knight of the shire, for the county of Cambridge, to the two parliaments called in 1727 and 1734; and on the 9th of May, 1741, he was created a peer of Great-Britain, by letters patent, which conferred upon him the stile and title of lord Montfort, baron of Horseheath, in the county of Cambridge. He was also lord-lieutenant of the last named county, and high-steward of the city thereof.

Having married Frances Wyndham, (daughter of Thomas, and sister and sole heir of Sir Francis Wyndham, bart.) who died before his advancement to the peerage, February 11, 1733, and was buried in St. Margaret's church, Westminster, leaving him issue one daughter Frances, born January 15, 1728, who was married May 30, 1747, to Charles Sloane Cadogan, esquire, son and heir of Charles lord Cadogan; to whom she bore issue, as may be seen in the account of his lordship's family: and one son, (Second and Present Lord) THOMAS BROMLEY, who upon the decease of his father, January 1, 1755, (who was buried in South-Audley chapel, London) became lord Montfort, and was elected high-steward of Cambridge, which city he then represented in parliament. His lordship is Doctor of laws, and colonel of the Cambridge militia.

(TITLES.) Thomas Bromley, lord Montfort, baron of Horseheath.

(CREATIONS.) Lord Montfort, baron of Horseheath, in the county of Cambridge, May 9, 1741. (14 Geo. II.)

(ARMS.) Quarterly per pale dovetail, ruby, and topaz. His lordship also quarters the arms of Wyndham, in right of his mother, viz. Sapphire, a chevron between three lions heads, erazed, topaz.

(CREST.) Upon a wreath of the colours a demilion rampant, diamond, issuing out of a mural crown, topaz, holding a standard, emerald, charged with a griffin passant, topaz, the staff proper-headed pearl.

(SUPPORTERS) On the dexter side, an unicorn cream-coloured, gorged with a ducal coronet, thereto a chain reflexed over his back, horned and unguled, topaz; and on the sinister side an horse pearl, pelltied, collared, dovetail sapphire, thereon three lozenges, topaz.

(MOTTO.) Non inferiora secutus.

(CHIEF SEATS.) At Horseheath-hall near Cambridge, and Holt-castle, Worcestershire.

HOW, Lord CHEDWORTH.

THIS noble family is said to have been long seated in Somersetshire, Wiltshire, and Gloucestershire; but we have no authentic account of them till the 13th century, when we meet with

JOHN HOW, who, writes himself of Stanlighth, in the diocese of Bath and Wells, and makes his will March 26, 1529. Probably he was an ancestor of the family of whom we now treat, but no mention is made in the said will of any one relation. Among the witnesses indeed, we find two of the name, Henry and Richard How; yet what relation they bore to the testator does not appear. But, except some small charitable bequests, he left his whole substance to his wife Agnes. It is not however impossible, but that they were his sons, and purposely left dependant upon their mother. Be this as it may, there was one

HENRY HOW, about that time, who had a daughter, married to John Walsh, and two sons,

1. John.
2. Thomas.

This appears by comparing an old manuscript pedigree with the will of the eldest son,

JOHN HOW, which bears date January 24, 1573, 16 Elizabeth, wherein writing himself gentleman, he makes his will January 24, 1673, 16 Elizabeth. He leaves charities to the poor of St. Helen's parish, London, London, wherein he dwelt; and to twenty poor people, present at his burial, each of them a gown, to be chose by his executor; and also to such poor as shall resort to his burial, four-pence each, as far as four pound would extend. To the poor children of Christ's hospital, forty shillings; and the two compters, and the prisons of Newgate, Ludgate, King's Bench, and Marshalsea, to every of them twenty shillings.

He bequeaths to his son, John Howe, his best chain of gold, weighing sixteen ounces. To his brother Thomas Howe, twenty pound, and to Humphry his son, ten pound. He bequeaths to his son, John Howe, and to his daughters, Susan, and Judith, and to his daughter Hilliard, and her husband; to his cousin, Mr. alderman Bond, and his wife; to his brother Sharrington, and his wife; to John Lowen, and his wife; and to his cousin George Bond, and his wife; and to every of them, a black gown of cloth, of seventeen or eighteen shillings a yard. And to his cousin William Bowremam, of Wells, a black gown of like value, if he fortune to be in London at his burial; or, if he be absent, a ring of gold with a death's head, price forty shillings, desiring to receive his yearly rents from HunsPELL, and transmit to London, as heretofore he hath friendly done. He bequeaths mourning to every of his servants, dwelling with him at his decease; and that his executor reward every of them somewhat besides, according to his discretion, and their diligent service. — And he charges his executor, that all his debts, in right or conscience, be truly paid and satisfied.

He further bequeaths to the poor of the parish of Usculme, where he was born, six pound thirteen shillings and four-pence, within six months after his decease, by the discretion of the vicar and churchwardens there, for the time being, and of his brother Thomas, and brother-in-law, John Walshe.

To his son-in-law, William Hilliard, gent. and Anne his daughter, his wife, each of them a ring of gold with a death's head, price fifty shillings.

The residue of all his goods, &c. not bequeathed, he divides among his children, John How, Susan, and Judith,

He ordains John Howe, his son, sole executor; and overseers, Mr. alderman Bond, and his cousin William Walshe, and leaves to each of them a ring of gold with a death's head therein, of the value of three pounds each, with these words, Memento mori: desiring them to be aiding and assisting to his executor, more for old love and acquaintance, than for reward.

Sealed and delivered as aforesaid, and the seal annexed: a fess ingrailed, between three wolves heads, as now borne by his descendants.

As to the disposition of all and singular his lands, &c. in the counties of Somerset, Devon, Essex, and city of London, and in the suburbs of the same, or elsewhere within the realm of England, he disposes of them as follows. He settles on his son and heir apparent, John Howe, his heirs and assigns, for ever, all that his messuage, called the Rose in Smithfield, and all other his messuages in the parish of St. Sepulchre's, London, St. Giles's without Cripplegate, St. Thomas the Apostle, and St. Stephen, in Coleman-street, London. To his daughter Susan, and the heirs of her body, his two messuages, with the appurtenances, situate in St. Helen's-close, in the parish of St. Helen's, within Bishopsgate; in default, to his right heirs for ever. To Judith, his daughter, and the heirs of her body, his messuage in the said close of St. Helen, late in the tenure of Edmund Martyn, esquire, deceased; remainder to his right heirs, as aforesaid. To Anne Hilliard, his daughter, now the wife of William Hilliard, gent. his messuage, garden, and appurtenances, in the tenure of John Butler, gent. in the said close of St. Helen; the remainder as aforesaid.

To his son and heir, John Howe, all that his manor and lordship of HunsPELL de la Heies, with the rights, members, and appurtenances, in the county of Somerset; and all those messuages, lands, &c. in South-Wokingdond, in Essex; and also those messuages and tenements in the parish of St. John Zachary, in Foster-lane, London, to him, and the heirs of his body; in default, to his said three daughters, Anne, Susan, and Judith, and the heirs of their bodies lawfully begotten; in default, to his nephew, William Walshe, and the heirs male of his body; in default, to his brother, John Walshe, and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten; the remainder to his right heirs. Also to his said son, John Howe, all his lands and tenements in Kyttlesford, in the county of Somerset, and in Washfelde, in Devon; and in default of issue, to his brother, Thomas Howe, and the heirs of his body; in default, to his right heirs. In witness whereof, he sets his hand and seal, May 14, 1574, 16 Elizabeth.

He died on the 27th of May, in 16 Elizabeth, leaving issue,

JOHN HOWE, his son and heir, eighteen years of age at the time of his death, as appears by inquisition taken at Taunton, May 6, in 18 Elizabeth.

He took to wife Jane, daughter of Nicholas Grubham, of Bishop's-Lidiard, in the county of Somerset, grandson and heir to Robert Grubham, of the same place. And the said Jane, by the death of her brother, Sir Richard Grubham, of Wishford, in the county of Wilts, knight, who married Margaret, daughter of William Whitmore, alderman of London, and died without issue, in 1629, brought a very large fortune to her husband and children. Also George Grubham, brother to the said Sir Richard, dying without issue in 1496, left legacies by his will, bearing date the last of April, 38 Elizabeth, 1596, to his sister How, the wife of John How, as also to every of her children; and the residue of his estate to his brother, Richard Grubham, and appoints him sole executor.

The said John How, esquire, by Jane his wife before-mentioned, had issue three sons, John, George, and Laurence; also one daughter, Elizabeth, married to John Bainton, esquire.

George, second son, was seated at Cold-Berwick, in the county of Wilts; and at the restoration of king Charles the Second, was created a baronet, June 20, 1660, Charles II. but his son, Sir James, dying without issue, that branch became extinct.

JOHN HOW, the eldest son, had the manor of Compton in Gloucestershire; as also Wishford, and other estates in Wiltshire, by the gift of his uncle Sir Richard Grubham. He was created a baronet, September 22, 1660, 12 Charles II. and, by his wife, Bridget, daughter of Thomas Rich, of North-Cerney, in the county of Gloucester, master in chancery, had issue three sons,

Sir

1. Sir Richard-Grubham How.
2. John How, ancestor to the present lord Chedworth.

3. Sir Thomas How, who married Hester, daughter of Sir William Manwaring, and died without issue.

Sir RICHARD GRUBHAM HOW succeeded his father in honour and in the estate at Wishford, &c. He married Anne, daughter of John King, bishop of London, widow of John Dutton, of Sherbon, in the county of Gloucester, esquire, by whom he had issue one son, Richard, who succeeded his father.

Which

Sir RICHARD HOW, of Compton, in the county Gloucester, and Wishford, in the county of Wilts, was returned in several parliaments one of the knights of the shire for Wiltshire. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Henry-Frederick Thynne, of Kempsford, in the county of Gloucester, baronet, and dying without issue, on the third of July, 1730, his title of baronet became extinct, and his estates descended to the heirs of his uncle, John How, second son of Sir John How, and brother to Sir RICHARD GRUBHAM HOW, the father of the said Sir Richard, who died in 1730.

Which

JOHN HOW, esquire, taking to wife Annabella, natural daughter of Emanuel Scrope, lord Scrope, and earl of Sunderland, had, in her right, the manor and seat of Langar, in Nottinghamshire, with other estates. To this lady, king Charles the Second, by his letters registered in the office of arms, bearing date the first of June, 1663, in consideration, of the good and acceptable service done and performed by John Howe, of Langar, esquire, her husband; and for a mark of his special grace and royal favour, granted and ordained, that she, the said Annabella, should be had, taken, and esteemed, as the daughter of an earl of this kingdom of England; and that for and during her natural life, she have, hold, use, take, and enjoy, the stile, place, degree, precedency, and privileges thereof, in as full and ample manner, as if she had been the legitimate daughter of Emanuel, late earl of Sunderland; with a precept of obedience to all and every of his majesty's subjects.

She survived him, and died March 21, 1723-4, in the 74th year of her age, and lies buried at Stowell, under a handsome marble monument; having had issue by her said husband five daughters; whereof Bridget was married to John Bennet, lord Osulston, father, by her, of Charles, earl of Tankerville; Elizabeth, to Sir John Guise, of Rendcomb, and Elmore, in the county of Gloucester, baronet; and Diana, to Sir Francis Molineux, of Tiverfall, in the county of Nottingham, baronet.

They had also four sons:

1. Scrope How, born in November 1648, and educated in Christ-college, in Oxford, where he took the degree of master of arts, September 8, 1665. He was knighted by king Charles the Second, and was chosen one of the knights for the county of Nottingham, in 31 Charles II. also in the next parliament called the same year; and in the parliament held at Oxford in 32 Charles II. Before the arrival of the prince of Orange, to rescue us from popery, and arbitrary power, the earl of Devonshire (after duke of Devonshire) concerted with him the means for inviting him to England; and on the prince's landing in the west, he joined the earl at Nottingham, and united with him in a declaration of their sense and resolution, November 22, 1688, which was unanimously subscribed on this principle: "We own it a rebellion to resist a king that governs by law; but he was always accounted a tyrant that made his will the law; and to resist such a one, we justly esteem no rebellion, but a necessary and just defence." And when her royal highness the princess Anne was under a necessity of leaving London, and determined to go directly to Nottingham, he accompanied the earl with a good body of horse, who marched some miles from the town, to conduct her royal highness thither. In the convention parliament, he was one of the knights for the county of Nottingham, and voted for the supplying the vacancy of the throne with king William and queen Mary. Whereupon he was made one of the grooms of the bedchamber to the king, which he held to the time of his majesty's decease. And was created baron of Clenawly, in the county of Fermanagh, and lord viscount How, of the kingdom of Ireland, by letters patent bearing date May 6, 1701, 13 William III. He was chosen, in all the parliaments of king William, one of the knights for the county of Nottingham, and in two parliaments in the reign of queen Anne; which queen, in 1711, constituted his lordship comptroller of the excise; in which post he died, at his seat at Langar, in Nottinghamshire, January 16, 1712-13, and was there buried. He married, in the year 1674, Anne, daughter of John earl of Rutland, by whom he had issue only two daughters and one son, John Scrope How, born October 5, 1675, and died young. By his second wife, Juliana, (daughter of William lord Arlington, by Juliana, daughter of Baptist Noel, lord viscount Campden) who died September 10, 1747, he had Emanuel-Scrope, lord viscount How; and three daughters, Mary, who was one of the maids of honour to her late majesty, when princess of Wales, and in 1725 was married to Thomas Herbert, earl of Pembroke; after which she was one of the ladies of the bed-chamber to the queen; and was secondly married in 1735 to the honourable John Mordaunt, brother to Charles, earl of Peterborough: Judith, second daughter, was married to Thomas Page, of Battlesden, in the county of Bedford, esquire, second son to Sir Gregory Page, of Greenwich, in Kent: Anne, the third daughter, married, May 8, 1728, to colonel John Mordaunt. Their brother Emanuel, lord viscount How, was returned one of the knights for the county of Nottingham, in the parliament summoned to meet May 10, 1722, also in the parliament summoned to meet November 8, 1727; and, in May 1732, being appointed governor of Barbadoes, died there March 29, 1735. On April 25, 1719, his lordship married Mary-Sophia-Charlot, daughter to the baron Kielmansfage, and left issue by her three sons and six daughters. Of the sons, which were George-Augustus, Richard, and William, the eldest succeeded his father; but being killed near Ticonderoga, in North-America, July 6, 1758, the honours, &c. devolved upon his brother Richard, the present viscount, who is treasurer of the navy, and colonel of marines.

2. John How, of whom we shall hereafter treat.

3. Charles How, born in 1661, was seated at

6 Z

Gritworth,

Gritworth, in the county of Northampton, and left issue by his wife, the relict of Sir Edward Dearing, baronet, a daughter and heir, Leonora, married to Peter Bathurst, of Clarendon-park, in Wiltshire, esquire.

4. Emanuel How, took to a military life, and rose gradually, by his merit, to be colonel of a regiment of foot, and was one of the grooms of the bedchamber to king William, who conferred on him a grant of lieutenant of Alice-Holt and Wolmer forests, in Hampshire, after the term of colonel William Legg's grant of forty-five years, which he had surrendered to him for a valuable consideration. In the reign of queen Anne, 9 March, 1703, he was promoted to the rank of brigadier-general; and in 1705 was sent her majesty's envoy extraordinary to the elector of Hanover, afterwards king of England. He arrived at the Hague, and set out from thence on his journey to Hanover, October 17, 1705, where he arrived the 25th of the same month. On May 10, 1707, he was promoted to be major-general of her majesty's forces; and was after lieutenant-general of her forces. He died on the 26th of September, 1709; and by Ruperta, his wife, natural daughter of Prince Rupert, third son of Frederick, king of Bohemia, by the princess Elizabeth, only daughter of king James the First, had issue three sons, William, Emanuel, and James; also a daughter, Sophia, maid of honour to her late majesty queen Caroline, when princess of Wales, and died April 4, 1726.

JOHN How, esquire, the second son of the before-mentioned lady Annabella, remarkably distinguished himself by his speeches on several weighty affairs in the house of commons, whereof he was a member, till within a few years of his decease. In the convention parliament, which met at Westminster, January 22, 1688-9, he served for Cirencester, and was constantly chose for that borough; as also knight of the shire for the county of Gloucester in the three last parliaments of king William, and in the first, fourth, and seventh years of queen Anne. When king William and queen Mary were proclaimed king and queen of England, on the establishment of their court, he was made vice-chamberlain to queen Mary. In 1699, when the army was reduced, it was principally owing to Mr. How, that the house of commons agreed to allow half-pay to the disbanded officers. On the accession of her majesty queen Anne, he was sworn of her privy-council, 21 April, 1702; and June the 7th following, constituted vice-admiral of the county of Gloucester; also, before the end of that year, was constituted paymaster-general of her majesty's guards and garrisons, viz. the 4th of January, 1702-3. And a new privy-council being settled, May 10, 1708, according to act of parliament, on the union of the two kingdoms, he was, among other the great officers, sworn thereof. He continued paymaster of the guards and garrisons till after the accession of his majesty king George I. who appointed Robert Walpole, esquire, to succeed him, September 23, 1714; and the privy-council being dissolved, and a new one appointed to meet on the first of October following, he was also left out of the privy-council. Whereupon, retiring to his seat at Stowell, in Gloucestershire, he there died in the year 1721, and was buried in the chancel of the church of Stowell. He married Mary, daughter and coheir of Humphry Baskerville, of Pentryllos, in Herefordshire, esquire, widow and relict of Sir Edward Morgan, of Lanternam, in Monmouthshire, baronet, by whom he left issue John, his son and heir.

Which

(First Lord) JOHN How, of Stowell, on the decease of Sir Richard How, of Compton, in Gloucestershire, and Wishford, in Wiltshire, baronet, in 1730, without issue, succeeded to those estates; and was likewise elected in his place, one of the knights for Wiltshire. Also, on a new parliament being summoned to meet June 17, 1734, he was again chosen one of the knights for Wiltshire. And his majesty was pleased to create him lord Chedworth, baron of Chedworth, in the county of Gloucester, by letters patent, bearing date May 12, 1741, 14 Geo. II. His lordship married Dorothy, eldest daughter of Henry-Frederick Thynne, esquire, grandfather of Thomas, lord viscount Weymouth, by whom he had issue five daughters.

1. Mary, married in 1751, to Alexander Wright, of Bath, esquire.

2. Ann, died young.

3. Ann, married to Roderick Gwynne, of Brecknockshire; she died June 9, 1764.

4. Dorothy.

5. Lucy.

Also eight sons.

1. Richard How, who died young.

2. John Thynne How, successor to the honours.

3. Henry-Frederick How, the present lord.

4. Thomas How, born January 30, 1716, who entered into holy orders, and is now rector of Wishford and Kinstone Deverall, in Wiltshire. EDGE CUMBE, Baron EDGE CUMBE.

THIS family, denominated from the manor of Eggecomb, Egecomb, and Edgecomb, (as it has been variously written on records) in the parish of Cheriton Fitz-Pain, near Crediton, has been of great antiquity in Devonshire; and in that church is Edgecomb's isle, adorned with divers coats of arms belonging to the family. But in the reign of king Edward the Third,

WILLIAM DE EGGEComb taking to wife Hillaria, daughter and heir of William de Cotehele, of Cotehele, in the county of Cornwall, chiefly resided there. It is now wrote Cuttail, and is separated from Devonshire only by the breadth of the river Tamer. In 2 Rich. II. 1378 the said William de Eggecomb, writing himself of Cotehele, in Cornwall, granted lands in Middleton, to the convent of Tavistock, in Devonshire. He left issue by her

WILLIAM EDGEComb, esquire, who had a grant, in 6 Hen. V. with Robert Hethe, of the custody of the lead-mines, with the silver ore therein, which were in Devonshire. He left issue

PIERS EDGEComb, esquire, who, in 12 H. VI. was returned among the chief of the county of Devon, who made oath for themselves, and retainers, to observe the laws then existing. By his wife Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Richard Holland, esquire, he was father of Sir Richard Edgecomb, knight.

Which Sir RICHARD EDGEComb, was a person of great note in the reigns of king Edward the Fourth, Richard the Third, and Henry the Seventh. In 7 Edw. IV. he served in parliament for Tavistock, in Devonshire; and in the same year was escheator of the county of Cornwall; an office in those times of great trust. But when king Richard had put to death his nephews, king Edward the Fifth, and the duke of York, he, detesting his tyranny and cruelty, appeared in arms on that rising of the duke of Buckingham, who, not being able to join his friends in the West, (where an army was raised to assist him) and being forced to fly, was taken, and beheaded. After which, those forces in Devonshire and Cornwall dispersed; and king Richard causing divers to be apprehended, (some whereof were executed at Exeter) this Sir Richard Edgecomb very narrowly escaped. He concealed himself for some time in those woods that overlook the river Tamer, which belonged to his house at Cuttail; and being hotly pursued, and narrowly searched for, extremity taught him a sudden policy to deceive his pursuers. He put stones in his cap, and tumbling them into the water, those who were at his heels, hearing the noise, and seeing the cap swimming, supposed he had desperately drowned himself, and gave over the pursuit. He had the good fortune soon after to get into Brittany, to the earl of Richmond, with Peter Courtney, bishop of Exeter, Sir Edward Courtney, his brother, and others; and was among the chief of those, which the earl of Richmond consulted with, in order to his expedition into England; and behaving himself with great valour and intrepidity at Bosworth, August 22, 1485, where king Richard the Third was slain, he was knighted in the field of battle.

King Henry the Seventh by that victory obtaining the crown, he was not unmindful of Sir Richard Edgecomb, who had ventured his life and fortune in his service. He immediately made him comptroller of his household, and of his privy-council. Also in the first year of his reign, "In consideration (as expressed in the patent) of the good and acceptable services of his beloved and faithful servant, Sir Richard Eggecombe, knight, heretofore performed, as well in foreign parts as in England, and which he still continues to perform." grants to him and his heirs, the castle, honour, lordship, and manor of Totness; and the lordship and manor of Cornworthy; the manors of Huishe, and Lodeswelle, with their members and appurtenances; together with all rents, which were John, lord Zouch's, in Huishe, and Lodeswelle; and all the the messuages, lands, &c. which were the said John's, in Totness, Cornworthy, Huihe, and Lodeswelle, aforesaid; and in North-Moulton, in the county of Devon; together with the knights fees, adyowson, &c. And further grants to the said Sir Richard, the manor of Ridlington, in the county of Northampton, which was Francis viscount Lovel's, &c.

These accessions to his estate brought to his remembrance the providence of God, in his happy deliverance from the tyranny of king Richard the Third; whereby he was so piously disposed, that he built a chapel in the same place, where he concealed himself; the ruins whereof still remained, as is observed by Sir William Pole, a curious antiquary in Devonshire.

On December 5, 1485, 1 Hen. VII. the king, most fully confiding in the loyalty, care, and industry, of Sir Richard Edgecomb, knight, comptroller of his household, and of his privy-council, appoints him, with John Arundel, dean of St. Peter's church in Exeter, and of his privy-council, and John Baldifwell, L. L. D. clerk of the council, to meet and treat with all captains, lieutenants, officers, persons paying tribute, or inhabitants, in the tower of Calais, tower of Risebank, tower and castle of Guynes, castle of Hammes, and marches thereof, relating to all matters concerning the crown of England, in the said places, and to admit all persons therein to their allegiance.

In the statute of resumptions, made in the first year of king Henry the Seventh, there is an exception, that the same shall not extend to Sir Richard Edgecomb, knight, 'for the offices of feodary of the dutchy of Cornwall, the constablenesship of the castle of Launceston, in Cornwall, and of the castle of Hertford, and manor of Bushey, in the county of Hertford.'

In 2 Hen. VII. he was sheriff of Devonshire; and that year brought aid to the king at the battle of Stoke, near Newark, where John, earl of Lincoln, the lord Lovel, and their adherents were vanquished. After which the king removing to Lincoln, and from thence into Yorkshire, came about the middle of August to Newcastle upon Tyne; where, as Stow writes, he sent ambassadors into Scotland, Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, (lord privy-seal) and Sir Richard Edgecomb, knight, comptroller of his house, to conclude a peace, or truce, with James, king of Scotland. That the English ambassadors were honourably received by the king, who gladly would have concluded a perpetual peace, but his people would not agree thereto: so that in the end a truce was made for seven years, as the same author relates; and that the king staid at Newcastle till their return.

He was afterwards sent into Ireland, 'being a person of singular prudence,' (as Sir James Ware observes, in his annals of Ireland p. 10.) to take the oaths of allegiance and obedience, as well of the nobility, gentry, and prime officers, as of the commonalty of the realm; and brought over with him five hundred armed men.

He had only three hundred pounds sterling allowed him for his costs and expences into and from the said kingdom.

In 14 Hen. VII. 16 November, at a chapter held in the palace of Westminster, he was in nomination for a knight of the most noble order of the Garter, and had the suffrages of the duke of Bedford, the lord chamberlain, the lord Dawbeny, and the lord Denham; but Sir John Savage was chosen. The same year, he was, by commission, bearing date December 11, 4 Hen. VII. in consideration of his loyalty, industry, foresight, and care, appointed, with Henry Aynsworth, LL. D. secondary in the office of privy-seal, to treat with Anne, dutchess of Brittany, about a truce, cessation of arms, alliance, and trade. Also, on the 23d of December following, the king reciting, that by advice of his council, he was sending an army into Brittany for its relief, he therefore, in full confidence of Sir Richard's loyalty and care, was commanded, with Edward, earl of Devonshire, Robert, lord Willoughby, of Broke, and Thomas Greenville, esquire, to summon and examine what number of archers, armed and arrayed at the king's expence, the county of Cornwall could provide; and to article with them for the service, and to review them, and to commit to writing the names of the said noblemen, knights, and others, and the number of the archers they are to find, and to certify the king thereof before the Quindenes of Hilary next.

It is certain that he went over into Brittany, and before his voyage made his last will and testament, which bears date at Penryn, the Friday before St. John Baptist's day, in the fourth year of king Henry the Seventh; the preamble whereof is as follows, literatim: 'First, I bequeth my sowle to Almighty God, beseeching the blessedfull Virgin Mary, his moder, to be a meane unto his moost benygne grace, to shew his moest petyfull grace and mercy to my sowle. And myn in especiall good maister, Seint Thomas of Caunturbury, to be a rememberer unto hir for the same.' He bequeaths to his cousin Bowley's daughter and heir, in his keeping, an hundred marks to her marriage, in recompence of what he had of her father's; and forty marks to his sister, Elizabeth Tremayne. To every of his household servants, forty shillings; and that a priest be found to pray for him for the space of five years, in the church of Calstock.

The residue of his goods, chattels, &c. he bequeaths to Joan, his wife, Sir Reynold Bray, Roger Holland, and Fulk Prideaux, esquires, for his children; at the will and pleasure of his said wife, by the oversight of the bishop of Exeter, and John Arundel, dean of Exeter.

The probate of his will bears date the 29th of April, 1492, in the eight of king Henry the Seventh; but he died September 8, 1489, in Brittany.

Stow recites, that Sir Richard Edgecombe was also sent, with John, abbot of Abington, and Christopher Urswick, to the French king, to offer king Henry's mediation to compose the differences between the duke of Brittany and that monarch. They went first to the French king, and after to the duke of Brittany; in which service Sir Richard Edgecomb departed this life at Mortlaix, in that province.

It appears from writings in the custody of the present lord Edgecumbe, that John, the provost-prior of the friers preachers of Mortlaix, in Brittany, and the convent there, agreed with Joan, late the wife of Sir Richard Edgecomb, and Roger Holland, esquire, his executors, for his burial in the church of the convent of the said friers preachers, before the high altar in an honourable manner.

Accord-

Accordingly a monument is erected there to his memory, under the high altar, shewing a man in armour, kneeling upon a tomb, praying at a desk. And before him stands a prior, in his proper habit, holding in his left hand his staff, and the two fore-fingers of his right hand held up, as rebuking the said Sir Richard. At the feet of the pedestal, or bracket, on which he stands, are the arms and crest of Edgécumbe, viz. On a bend, between two cottises, three boars heads coupè. Crest, on a helmet, a boar's head coupè. On a label, between the figures of a knight and the prior, is this inscription, scilicet, 'Tho. ora pro me Richardo.' Behind the figure of the knight, and the aforesaid arms of Edgécumbe, impaling, a cheveron between three escallops; and under the said arms, on a scroll, is this inscription:

Memoriale Richardi Eggecumb, militis quondam contrarotulatoris, honorabilis, hospitij, illustrissimi Principis Henrici Septimi, Regis Anglie, cujus corpus restat humatum hic, coram altari autentico, qui obiit octavo die mensis Septembris, anno Domini mill^{mo} CCCC^{mo} 111^{ij} nono.

On the tomb is a cross, and round it this inscription, beginning at the head:

Ante hujus ecclesie sacratissime autentici altaris medium constat humatum corpus Richardi Eggecumb, militis, potentis ac honorabilis hospitii illustrissimi Principis Henrici, Regis Anglie, contrarotulatoris qui anno Domini millesimo CCCC 111^{ij} nono, et mensis Septembris die viii^o, fide plena ab hac luce migravit.

He had to wife Joan, daughter of Thomas Tremayne, of Collacomb, esquire, by whom he left issue Peirs Edgécumbe, his son and heir; and three daughters.

1. Margaret, married to Sir William Courtenay, of Powderham, Devonshire.
2. Agnes, married to William Trevanion, esquire, of Cornwall.
3. Elizabeth, married to Weymond Raleigh, esquire.

Which

Sir PIERS EDGE CUMBE, was made one of the twenty knights of the Bath, at the creation of prince Arthur, on the eve of St. Andrew, 5 Hen. VII. He was sheriff of Devonshire, in 9, 10, and 13 of Hen. VII. And in 2 Hen. VIII. he, with Robert Willoughby de Broke, knight, John Arundel, knight, and Richard Carew, knight, they, or any three of them, were impowered to array and review all men at arms, archers, and others, who were to accompany Sir Thomas Darcy, knight, captain of the castle of Berwick, in his expedition against the Moors and other infidels. And to certify to the king and his council, the number of men at arms, archers, and others. In 5 Hen. VIII. he was in the expedition against France, and was there made a knight banneret, for his gallant behaviour in the sieges of Thero-vene, and Tournay, and at the battle of Spurs.

He married first Jane, daughter and heir of Stephen Dernford, of East-Stonehouse, and of his wife, —, daughter and heir of — Rame, of Rame, esquire; and secondly Catharine, sister of Sir John St. John, knight, and widow of Sir Griffith Rice, knight; but by her, who died in December, 1553, left no issue.

Sir Piers Edgécumbe, with Jane his first wife, before-mentioned, had the town of East-Stonehouse, and the village of West-Stonehouse, in Devonshire, on the other side the river Tamer, which was the dwelling of Joel de Stonehouse, in 27 Henry III. The said Sir Piers had issue by her three sons, Richard, John, and James, who are mentioned in his will; also three daughters, Mary, wife of Sir John Arundel, of Lanhern, in the county of Cornwall, esquire; Jane, the wife of Thomas Pomeroy, esquire; and Anne, who was unmarried when her father made his will, who therein gave her a legacy of 300l. Which will being remarkable, it may not be unnecessary to give an extract of it.

It bears date the third of March, 1750, 21 Henry VIII. wherein he orders his body to be buried where it shall please God to dispose of it. He bequeaths to the parish church of Plymouth, three pounds, praying the curate thereof to pray for his soul; and in like manner, three pounds to each of the churches of Calstocke, and of Bodmin; and to every chaplain present at his exequies, and there doing service for his soul, at the time of his obit and burial, twelve pence. And that his executors cause, incontinently after his decease, a trental of masses to be said for his soul, in such convenient place and time, as to them shall be thought most expedient. Also that they provide an honest priest to sing mass daily for his soul, in the parish church of Mewye, in the county of Devon, for the space of five years, to whom he bequeaths for his salary and wages, fifty marks. Likewise another honest priest, to sing for his soul in the parish church of Calstocke, in the county of Cornwall, for the space of five years, with like salary and wages. He further orders his executors to distribute ten pounds, in penny-dole to poor folks; and cause an obite, or anniversary, yearly to be holden for his soul, in the parish of Plymouth, during ten years after his decease, expending on every such obite, twenty shillings.

He bequeaths to every of his household servants a year's wages. And whereas Sir John Arundel, and William Courtney, knights, infeoffed, by the name of esquires, with Andrew Hillersdon, John Wise, Thomas Tremayne, esquires, and Stephen Trevyllian, to the use of him, and the performance of his last will, and of his heirs, in the honour and borough of Totness, and in the manor of Corneworth, in Devonshire, dated May 3, 12 Henry VIII. Also, whereas he had infeoffed Andrew Hillersdon, John Wise, Thomas Tremayne, esquires; George Tanner, and Stephen Trevyllian, in the manors of Brodrogan, and Wother, in Cornwall, April 14, 13 Henry VIII. for the performance of his will, he now bequeaths to them his tin works in the said manors, in the counties of Devon and Cornwall, as also all his plate, &c. for the performance of his said will, and for the payment of his debts. And after his will and testament is fully performed, his debts truly paid, and restitution made of wrongs by him done, or by his commandment, if any such be, and can be proved; then he wills, that his said feoffees shall release all their right and title to the heirs heirs male of his body, and that his tin works in Devonshire, shall wholly remain to his son John, and the heirs of his body; and his tin works in the county of Cornwill, to his son James, and the heirs of his body.

He bequeaths to dame Catharine his wife, for her own use and behoof, all that plate in her keeping, which was Sir Griffith Rice's, her late husband, with all her other apparel, and stuff of household, left her by him. And in case his son and heir do trouble, or take from her any parcel of lands he has given her in jointure, or attempt to procure to be done, any thing to the least breach, or accomplishment of this his will, or any part thereof; or disallow any grants, passed by him, either of dame Jane his mother's inheritance, or of his own by indentures, copies, &c. for which upon their oaths, they may prove I have made grants, and am paid fines. And in case it may, by any manner of due proof, appear that he had taken fines of any of his tenants of his own inheritance, or of the inheritance of dame Jane, sometime his wife, and the parties have not their writing, according to his promise, I will and require my son and heir, for that time being, to make them grants according to his promise, as my said heir will answer God, to both our discharges. And for this I require him on my blessing, and for the contrary at his peril, and never to have any part of my goods. And this to be done and performed, my son Richard hath bound himself, by his writing and seal of arms in my life-time. Also I will, that my daughter, Anne Edgecomb, have 300*l.* towards her living, and marriage. And the residue of all my goods, moveables, &c. after my debts paid, my burial done, and this my testament, and last will, entirely fulfilled, I give to dame Catharine my wife, during her natural life; and, after her decease, to Richard Edgecumbe, my son and heir, or any other being my heir, if God call him to his mercy from this world. So as the said Richard, or other, being my heir, be conformable to every article of my will, as far as in him may lie, &c. And I make and ordain my executors, dame Catharine my wife, and Richard Edgecumbe, my son. The probate bears date September 15, 1539, and the inquisition taken after his death, shews that he died on the 14th of August, in 31 Henry VIII. leaving Richard, his son and heir, forty years of age.

Which Sir RICHARD EDGECUMBE was knighted at the creation of Edward Seymour, earl Hertford, October 18, 1536. He was sheriff of Devonshire in 35 Henry VIII. and in the first year of queen Mary. He built that stately house, at East-Stonehouse, called from him Mount-Edgecumbe, the most beautiful seat in those parts, as Mr. Carew has observed, who gives this account of it. "Upon the south shore, somewhat within the land, standeth Mount-Edgecumbe, a house builded and named by Sir Richard Edgecumbe. It is built square, with a round turret at each end, garreted on the top; and the hall rising in the midst, above the rest, yieldeth a stately sound, as you enter it. The parlour and dining room give you a large and diversified prospect of land; and overlooks St. Nicholas island, (lying in the mouth of the harbour) the royal citadel, Plymouth town, Stonehouse, Milbrook, and Saltaish. It is supplied with a never-failing spring of water, stored with timber, wood, fruit, deer, and conies. A little below the house, in the summer evenings, sail-boats come and draw their nets for fish. Both sides of the aforementioned narrow entrance, with the passage between the whole town of Stonehouse, and a great circuit of the land adjoining, appertain to this inheritance. These sides are fenced with blockhouses, and that next to Mount-Edgecumbe was formerly planted with ordnance, which, at coming and parting, greeted such guests as visited the house. This curious and noble mansion so affected the duke of Medina Sidonia, admiral of the Spanish armada in 1588, (though beholding it at a distance of the sea) as to reserve it for his own possession, in the partage of this kingdom, which, in hopes and expectation, they had already conquered. This stately house is within the compass of the county of Devon; as is all that tract, anciently called West-Stonehouse, although it be in the parish of Maker, which lieth in the county of Cornwall."

Richard Carew, esquire, who wrote the survey of Cornwall, was the son of Thomas Carew, esquire, by Elizabeth, daughter of this Sir Richard Edgecumbe; and, from his knowledge of him, has left his character in manuscript, intitled, "A Friendly Remembrance of Sir Richard Edgecomb."

"Among many his virtues (saith he) I will rehearse only these, namely, his knowledge, courtesy, and liberality.

His knowledge consisted in learning and wisdom. Touching his religion, his upright dealing bears witness, "That he had the fruits of a good conscience." Besides, in his life-time he kept a chaplain in his house, who daily and duly said service; and, at his death, he had the grace to call upon God.

"His learning in the arts he attained by his study in the university of Oxford, where he spent some part of his youth; not idly, nor only whilst he baited his horse (as the scholarly minister answered the bishop's ordinary) but both orderly and profitably; for he could tell what any man's errand was, that came to him. And in inditing of letters was so skilful that being on a time at the quarter sessions, where was some difference about the form of one to be sent up to the lords of the council, he stepped down from the bench, and at a sudden penned it so well, and to all their likings, as, without farther amendment, they allowed, and sent it forth. Yea the lord Cromwell, in this point, gave him especial commendations. He had also a very good grace in making English verses, such as in those days passed for current; which flowing easily from his pen, did much delight his readers. The sharpness of his wit was also seen in his apophthegms; of which, though I have heard many, I only remember two; the one, "That Ingratus was Latin for a priest," (understand him, reader of them of those times) and the other, "That where the good man did beat his wife, there Cupid would shake his wings, and fly out of doors."

"For his wisdom, I will only give a taste or essay thereof, that by some parts the whole may be guessed: for he that would take upon him to discourse of every point, must needs be a wise man himself. He used, what occasion soever he had of expences, to keep always one hundred pounds in his chest untouched, [a good sum in those days] and yet he would never be long indebted to any man, neither break promise of payment. He was also also very careful to have provision made beforehand, of all things belonging to the household, for two years at least; and would very willingly bestow his money that way, whenever any good pennyworths were to be had, though he did not presently need it. Besides, he was so careful for his posterity, as, at his death, he left 400*l.* of old gold in his chest, for the suing of his son's livery.

"It was moreover noted in him, that whatsoever he did, he would be always girt with a sword, at least with a hanger. His reason thereof was, as I have heard, that some part of his oath of knight-hood did bind him thereunto. Another point of his wisdom was, that he continually maintained one in London, to be a solicitor of his causes; and to send him advertisement with the soonest of all occurrences from the court, and elsewhere; wherein, if orders were given him of any business, concerning the service of his prince or country, or that his help were craved in behalf of his friend, he would not slack any time, nor overslip any fit occasion for dispatch thereof. For his friend, he would deal as advisedly, and follow it as effectually, as if the matter were his own. In his prince's service, he was ready with the foremost to execute her commandments; and prepared with the soonest, to return answer. And whensoever he was to meet at any place, for his country's affairs, he would always come with the first, and part with the last, saying, "It were better that one man should tarry for many, than many for one."

"He was in speech very fair, and in council very secret; and yet was not his secretness towards his friends so close, but that he would lovingly impart to them whatsoever was convenient; nor his silence in speech so great, but that he could entertain every one with courteous words, according to their calling; using to his betters reverence; to his equals kindness; and to the meaner sort, affability. And as he was naturally given to believe the best of every one, so could he scarcely be drawn to dislike any, of whom he had once been well persuaded.

"Yea even to such as were his enemies, being in distress, he rather lent a hand to take them up, than a foot to tread them down, as by this story following may plainly appear. There was a knight (Trevanion) dwelling in the same shire, with whom, for divers causes in king Edward's days he had had sundry quarrels; which, as at first they bred inward misliking between them, so at last they break forth into open hatred. This knight, in the troublesome change in queen Mary's reign, partly for religion, and partly for other causes, was clapped into prison; and though the matters discovered against him were heinous, and his enemies (at that time bearing great sway) very grievous, yet he obtained so much favour, as to be tried by certificate, from the gentleman of the chiefest authority in his country, for his behaviour therein. According to whose report to the council, he was either to be delivered, or more strictly to be dealt with. This granted, he conceived very good hope of every other's friendly advertisement; and feared only the hard favour of our Sir Richard Edgecomb, who he doubted would use the sword of revenge, (then put in his hands) to his enemy's destruction. It happened, that upon return of their answer he was delivered; and being at liberty, to the end he might know how his countrymen's minds were affected towards him, he, by means, procured a copy of all these advertive letters; in perusing of which, he found that such as bore him fairest countenance, wrote most against him; and that Sir Richard Edgecumbe's certificate made most for him: so as in all likelihood, his greatest enemy in shew, was the chiefest cause of his deliverance in deed.

"I would stay here, in praise of his noble mind, who shewed his valour, in conquering his own affections; his virtue, in abstaining from revenge, being offended; and his christianity, in doing good for evil; but that I am carried forth with no less wonder at this knight's thankfulness; who pretending, as though he wist not of this courtesy, to the outward shew, continued his wonted enmity, until the next Christmas after. At which time, on a night, word was brought to Mount-Edgecumbe, that a company of armed men were lately landed from Plymouth, marching up to the house. Sir Richard having heard before, that this knight was in that town, and mistrusting he had picked out this time to come and set upon him unawares, resolved to shew himself neither discourteous to them he knew not, through fear; nor yet to lie open to his enemies, if they pretended any such practice, through heedlessness; he therefore caused his gates to be set wide open, and placed his servants on both sides the gate, and hall, where they must pass, with swords and bucklers; but they coming in; turned this doubt into pastime, for their armour and weapons, were only painted paper, as by nearer approaching was perceived; and instead of trying their force, with blows in fighting with men, they fell to make proof of the ladies skill in dancing.

"These pastimes at last being ended, they were led into another room to be banqueted, where this knight taking off his vizard, and disclosing himself to Sir Richard Edgecomb, uttered, "That having the great courtesy shewn him in his trouble, besides his looking, and contrary to his deserving, he was come thither to yield him his most due thanks for the same; assuring him, that he would from thenceforth rest as faithfully his friend, as ever before he had shewed himself a professed enemy." In witness of which his true meaning, and to strengthen the friendship, so newly begun in good will, into a fast knot of alliance, he there presented him a young gentleman, his nephew, a ward, and the heir of his house, (who being of fair possessions, came amongst the other company, masked in a nymph's attire) to match with one of his daughters; which marriage afterwards came to pass. And here I should also run out into commendation of this rare thankfulness, save that this knight's many other shews of his right noble mind are so well known, that they need not; and so great, that they be praised enough. I will therefore let them pass, and shut up this part of Sir Richard's courtesy, when I have spoken a word or two of his soft nature; the rather, because I have heard some discommend this his mildness, who were themselves sooner to be pitied for their ignorance, then to be answered for any weight of their frivolous reasons.

"His liberality rested chiefly in housekeeping, and gifts. What provision he made for housekeeping, is before shewed; which being carefully procured, was both orderly and bountifully spent: and as he wanted wanted not store of meat, so had he a sufficient company of servants to attend him at his table; the most part gentlemen by birth, and all of them both trained in service, and courteous to such strangers as haunted the house; who, when they came, found themselves so well entertained, that this good knight was seldom or never unvisited. Yea, if he understood of any strangers come into the country, of any calling, either by sea or land, he would freely invite them home. And these, by reason of Plymouth, his neighbour town, were not a few; so that at one time, besides many other great personages, he received into his house the admirals of England, Spain, and Flanders. And this he did for some good space. A passage the more remarkable, for that the admirals of those nations never met before so amicably at one table.

"Neither could these great guests cause him to forget the poor, who were daily as duly served as himself. Moreover, whosoever (either servant or otherwise) had brought him word of any thing to be bought at a reasonable price, or had done any errand or service for him, was sure of a liberal reward. Strangers arriving in the haven, were presented with such things as he had; and the poor, whom he met, received whatsoever came first to hand. It happened once, that a beggar craved an alms of him, to whom, instead of a shilling, he gave a piece of gold of ten; the beggar perceiving that he was mistaken, and doubting his displeasure, came crouching, and began to tell how he was deceived, offering him the gold again. But Sir Richard, loth to have his alms known, said to him, 'Away, knave, and if I catch thee any more here, &c.' So the poor fellow, shrewdly hurt by this repulse, quietly departed.

"But to draw this discourse to an end, he resembled the emperor Titus, called for his good disposition, The Delight of the World; who sitting on a night at supper with his acquaintance, and remembering he had bestowed nothing on any man that day, cried out on a sudden, 'Friends, I have lost a day.' Sir Richard's virtues procured him the favour of his prince and the council, who, in times of danger, chiefly committed to him, and a very few others, the government of the shire where he dwelt. They got him love among his neighbours, who counted nothing too dear for him; and coming home in their shipping from far countries, would hale his house with two or three pieces of ordnance; and present him with the best things they had. And lastly, they purchased him credit among strangers, who would commonly call him, The good old Knight of the Castle. These few things I have touched among many, which in him were worthy the noting.' Thus far that worthy author.

His last will bears date the first of July, 1560, in the second of queen Elizabeth; and he departed this life on the first of February, in the fourth year of her reign, as appears by inquisition taken at Plimpton, May 30, 4. Eliz. which shews that he died possessed, in Devonshire, of the castle and honour of Totness, and 28 knights fees, anciently belonging to that castle and honour, which descended to him from his grandfather, Sir Richard Edgecomb, knight, who had a grant thereof, 7 June, 1 Hen. VII. to hold of the king in capite by knight's service. Also, that he died possessed of the manor of Corneworth, with the appurtenances, and the manor of Drew-Staynton, and the advowson of the church; and that Peter Edgecumbe, was his son and heir, and of the age of twenty-six; and that he had three other sons, Richard, Henry, and Edward; also daughters, Catharine, wife of Henry Champernon, of Modbury, esquire; Anne, married to William Trevanion, esquire; Honor; and Elizabeth, another daughter, was married to Thomas Carew, of Anthony, in the county of Cornwall, esquire, beforementioned. He lies buried in Maker church, under a gravestone, with this inscription, which differs from the inquisition, as to the time of his death:

Hic jacet Richardus Edgcumbe, miles, filius Petri Edgcumbe, militis, obiit primo die Decembris, 1561.

This gentleman married first, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Arundel, banneret, and she dying without issue, he married secondly, Winifred, daughter of William Essex, esquire, of Berkshire, who was the mother of his children.

His eldest son,

PETER EDGECUMBE, succeeded to the estate, and was sheriff of Devonshire in the 9th of queen Elizabeth. He served in the same reign in four several parliaments, for the county of Cornwall, viz. in 14, 28, 31, and 35 Eliz. and for Devonshire in 13 Eliz. In the other parliaments of that queen, he served for Lestwithiel and Lesceard, in Cornwall. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Andrew Lutterell, of Dunster-castle, in the county of Somerset, knight, by whom he had issue five sons.

1. Sir Richard Edgecumbe, knight.
2. Peirs Edgecumbe.
3. Edward Edgecumbe, of Brodringham, in Cornwall.
4. John Edgecumbe.
5. Andrew Edgecumbe, buried in the church of Maker, March 17, 1640.

Also four daughters.

1. Margaret, who was one of the maids of honour to queen Elizabeth, and wife of Sir Edward Denny, of Waltham-abbey, in Essex, knight.
2. Catharine, of Edmund Prideaux, of Nether-ton, esquire.
3. Elizabeth, of Sir John Speccot, knight.
4. Anne, of Richard Trefusis, esquire.

He died on the 4th of January, 1607, aged seventy, and was buried in Maker Church, where a monument is erected to his memory, with the following inscription:

Hic jacet Petrus Edgcumbe, armiger, Richardi equitis filius et pater, qui vixit annos LXX, obiit 4^a die Jan.

MDCVII.

Lief Tenant to my Queen long Time,
And often for my Shire a Knighte;
My Merit did to Credit clime,

Peacefull I liv'd, hopeful I diede.

SIR RICHARD EDGECUMBE, eldest son, knighted by king James the First, served in parliament for Totness, in 31 Eliz. and for Grampound, in Cornwall, wall, in 35 Eliz. also in the reign of king James the First; and for Boffiney, in the reign of king Charles the First. He married Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir Thomas Coteele, of London, knight, who died eighteen years before him, and was buried at Maker, where remains this inscription to her memory:

Hic jacet Domina Maria uxor Richardi, Edgumbe, militis; filia et hæres, Thomæ Coteele, de civitate Londini militis; quæ sepulta fuit 25^o die Julii, anno Domini 1620^o.

He had issue by her two sons.

1. Peirs Edgumbe.
2. Richard Edgumbe, who died unmarried November 5, 1655, and was buried at St. Gorrons. The said

PEIRS EDGE CUMBE, of Mount-Edgumbe, served in parliament for Newport, and Camelford, in Cornwall, in the reign of king Charles the First. He was, as the inscription on his monument (hereafter mentioned) sets forth, a pattern to posterity, and an honour to the age. "A master of languages and sciences; a lover of the king and church, which he endeavoured to support in the time of the civil wars, to the uttermost of his power and fortune." Sir Alexander Carew, baronet, was tried by the parliament for holding intelligence with colonel Edgumbe, and Major Scawen, of the king's party, not only by letters, but by personal conference several times, at midnight, in their own quarters; for which he was beheaded December 23, 1644.

He married Mary, daughter of Sir John Glanvil, of Broad-Hinton, in the county of Wilts, knight, and died in the 56th year of his age, on the 6th of January, 1660, leaving two sons, Sir Richard Edgumbe, and Francis Edgumbe, esquire, who lies buried at Calstock, with this inscription to his memory:

Hic repositum est corpus Francisci Edgumbe, armigeri, filii junioris Pearsei, de Monte-Edgumbe, armigeri, qui obiit 27^o die Aprilis, anno Domini 1668, ætatis suæ 21^o.

Also two daughters, the eldest of which was married to Sir Baynham Throgmorton, baronet, and the youngest, Winifred, became the wife of Thomas, earl of Coventry.

The said Peirs Edgumbe, esquire, was buried at Calstock, where a monument is erected, with this inscription:

Exemplum posteris, et præsentis ævi decus, scientiarum qui fuit et linguarum magister, Regis et ecclesiæ cultor, quorum causam (heu nimis civili bello labentem) summis viribus et proprioq; sumptu fulcire conatus est Pearseus Edgumbe de Monte-Edgumbe, armiger, filius Richardi Edgumbe, militis (claro admodum stemmate) qui Mariam uxorem duxit filiam Johannis Glanville, militis, de Broad-Hinton, in comit. Wilts. Ex qua binos filios et totidē natas genuit relicto hærede Richardo milite Balnei animam Deo resignavit (depositis hic prope exuviis) 6^o die Jan. an. Dom. 1660^o. Et ætatis suæ 56^o.

His eldest son,

Sir RICHARD EDGE CUMBE, was made, in his father's life-time, one of the knights of the Bath, against the coronation of king Charles the Second; who attended that grand solemnity in their purple robes, from the court of requests, to the abbey-church, where they sat, to see the ceremony, &c. He was born at Mount-Edgumbe, where he was baptized February 13, 1639; and was chosen for the borough of Launceston, in the first parliament of king Charles the Second; and in three other parliaments served as one of the knights of the shire for the county of Cornwall. He married Anne Montagu, the second surviving daughter of that great and brave nobleman, Edward, earl of Sandwich, by whom he had issue two sons.

1. Piers Edgumbe, who died at the university of Cambridge, aged 18, and was buried at Maker, April 9, 1674.

2. Richard Edgumbe, the first lord Edgumbe, born at Mount-Edgumbe, and baptized April 23, 1680.

Also six daughters.

1. Anne, baptized April 16, 1672, and buried at Maker, May 26, 1674.

2. Mary, baptized January 29, 1673, and buried at Maker, July 3, 1674.

3. Elizabeth, baptized April 22, 1675, married to — Atkins, esquire.

4. Catharine, baptized January 25, 1677, and buried at Maker, May 9, 1681.

5. Anne, baptized June 11, 1679, who died unmarried.

6. Margaret, baptized May 26, 1681, married to — Pine, esquire.

This Sir Richard was buried at Maker, April 3, 1688, his lady surviving him, till March 14, 1729, when she died, and was buried by him; but was secondly married to Christopher Montagu, elder brother to Charles, earl of Halifax.

Their only surviving son,

(First Lord) RICHARD EDGE CUMBE, soon after he came of age, was chosen one of the representatives of the county of Cornwall, on the decease of the right honourable Hugh Boscawen, esquire, May 13, 1701, then one of the knights of the shire for that county. In the next parliament 13 Will. III. he served for the town of St. Germans, and for Plympton, in the first year of queen Anne; and was constantly elected to every parliament, whilst he was a commoner. His lordship was constituted one of the lords commissioners of the treasury, June 22, 1716; also June 11, 1720; and April 3, 1724, with Hugh Boscawen, lord viscount Falmouth, had the offices of vice-treasurer, receiver-general, treasurer of war, and paymaster-general of his majesty's revenues in Ireland. He was created lord Edgumbe, April 20, 1742; and on December 22, 1743, he was constituted chancellor of the duchy of Lancaster; and on January 5, 1743-4, was sworn of his majesty's privy-council; and was also lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Cornwall. On the breaking out of the rebellion in 1745, he raised a regiment in Cornwall, for his majesty's service.

By Matilda, his wife, (daughter of Sir Henry Furnese, of Waldershare, in Kent, baronet) who died in March 1721, and was buried at Waldershare, he had issue three sons.

1. Richard Edgecumbe, his successor.
2. Henry Edgecumbe, who died an infant.
3. George Edgecumbe, the present lord.

His lordship departing this life, November 22, 1758, aged 79, was buried at Maker, in Devonshire, and succeeded in his honours, &c. by his eldest son, (Second Lord) RICHARD EDGECUMBE, who was returned to the 10th parliament of Great Britain for Lestwithiel, and Plympton, but made his election for the first; in the next parliament he sat as member for Penryn.

In December 1755, he was appointed one of lords of the admiralty, but resigned his place at that board, in November 1756, on being appointed comptroller of his majesty's household, at which time he was admitted of the privy-council.

His lordship was also lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Cornwall, and departing this life unmarried, May 10, 1761, his remains were deposited at Maker, and the honours devolved upon his brother (Third and present Lord) GEORGE EDGECUMBE, then clerk of the council for the duchy of Lancaster, which office he resigned in June 1762. He was returned to the three parliaments chosen in the several years 1747, 1754, and 1761; but succeeding to the peerage in the last mentioned year before the parliament, then chosen, sat for the dispatch of business, a fresh writ was issued.

His lordship having passed through the inferior posts in the sea-service, was appointed a captain in the navy, August 19, 1744; and in November 1762, was constituted rear-admiral of the blue. Upon the decease of his brother, he was appointed lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Cornwall, and has continued in this and his maritime posts to the present time (1768).

On the 6th of August, 1761, this nobleman married Emma, only daughter and heir of John Gilbert, L. L. D. archbishop of York, and by this lady, has issue one son, Richard Edgecumbe, born September 14, 1764.

S A N D Y S, Baron S A N D Y S.

WE are indebted to Hervey, clarencieux, king of arms, for an account that the ancestors of this noble family were seated at St. Bees, in Cumberland. For he certified the same, under his hand, to Edwin Sandes, of whom we shall have occasion to treat, as bishop of Worcester, and archbishop of York, upon a dispute between that prelate and Sir John Bourne, high-steward of the church of Worcester. The authenticity of which certificate can scarcely be called in question, as it was laid before the privy-council, and received their sanction.

It appears that in 1377, the two knights of the shire for Cumberland, were Richard del Sandes, and Robert Mowbray, chevalier. It further appears, that they received twenty eight pounds for their attendance upon parliament seventy days, and that this money was by the sheriff levied upon the constituents. In 1391 and 1395, the knights for the county were Thomas del Sandes, and William de Stapleton, their attendance each of those years was thirty-six days, and the money levied for their expences each time, was fourteen pounds and eighteen shillings. We have no records whereon to found any conjecture what relation these two gentlemen, Richard and Thomas del Sandes, bore to each other, or what relation either of them bore to Robert Sandes, who flourished in the reign of Henry IV. But from their being seated in the same county, and being all men of the first consideration, we can have no doubt but that they were of the same family, and probably very nearly allied. Perhaps Richard was the father of Thomas, and he of Robert: or Richard and Thomas were brothers, and Robert was the son of one of them. Be this as it may,

ROBERT SANDES, (for so the name was then wrote) seated at St. Bees, in Cumberland, in the reign of Henry IV. had issue two sons.

1. John Sandes.

2. ——— Sandes, ancestor to the families of Sandes in Cumberland, the eldest son.

JOHN

JOHN SANDES, was seated at Furnes Fells and Hawkshead, in Lincolnshire; and marrying Margaret, daughter and heir to William Rawson, of Yorkshire, esquire, had issue one daughter, Margaret, who became the adopted heir to her maternal grand-father, William Rawson, and the wife of Sir Richard Bray, knight: also a son, WILLIAM SANDES, who married Margaret, daughter of William Garret,* or as some pedigrees set forth, daughter and heir of — Gerard, of Turvey. Their issues were five sons.

1. John Sandes, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Richard Cavendish, of Suffolk, from which match the families in Essex, that bear the same name descend.

2. William Sandes, seated in Cumberland, who married and left issue four daughters.

3. Oliver, } of whom we only know the

4. Robert, } names.

5. George.

The youngest son,

GEORGE SANDES, married Margaret, daughter of John Dixon, of London, and had issue six sons.

1. George Sandes, who died in his father's lifetime.

2. William Sandes, who died without issue.

3. Anthony Sandes, who married Annie, daughter of Robert Man, of Bullingbroke, in Lincolnshire. From this match the family of Sandes, of Graithwaite-hall, in Hawkshead, Lancashire, derive their descent.

4. Edwin Sandes, ancestor to the present lord Sandys.

5. Miles Sandes, of whom presently.

6. Christopher Sandes, who married a lady of the name of Carees, and after her decease married a daughter of Miles Curwen.

Miles Sandes, the fifth son, being bred to the law, was one of the society of the Middle-Temple, and master of the King's-Bench office. He left issue by Hester his wife, daughter of William Clifton, of Brimpton, in the county of Somerset, four sons, Sir Edwin Sandes, of Latimers, in Buckinghamshire, who married Elizabeth, daughter, and at length sole heir, of William Lord Sandys, of the Vine, in the county of Hants, by Catherine his wife, daughter of Edward lord Chandos, and had issue by her colonel Henry Sandys, killed in the service of king Charles the First, anno, 1644, who had four sons, William, Henry, Miles, and Edwin; also six daughters, Hester, married to Humphry Noy, esquire, son to William Noy, attorney-general to king Charles the

* In Mr. Collins's peerage a different account is given of the marriages, and issue of the ancestors of this noble family. And as that ingenious gentleman seems to support his pedigree in a manner that deserves our attention, we cannot but give his words to the public, and let them have their weight, observing only, that where he mentions George Sandes as the brother, not the father of the archbishop, he should have considered that, as the reader will find above, there were two of that name, according to the most ancient manuscripts; the one the father, the other the brother of that prelate.

"The said William, by his wife, daughter of — Bouham, had issue William Sandes, who married Margaret, daughter and heir of William Rawson, of the county of York, and cousin and heir to Rawlinson, abbot of Furnes, in the county and palatine of Lancaster. This William Sandes writes himself of Eastwaite-Furnese, in the county of Lancaster, in his last will and testament, which bears date April 23, 1548, 3 Edward VI. And by the preamble, he appears to be a protestant; his words are, "Considering the uncertainty of my life, I commit my soul into the custody and hand of our Saviour Jesus Christ, trusting surely, that through the sprinkling of his blood, I shall be partaker of the inheritance prepared for the faithful."

"The rest of his will shews him to be a person of sound reasoning and judgment, and he made an equal disposition of his estate among his children, which, as therein appears, were George Sandes, who died in his life-time, and left a son, Roger Sandes, to whom he bequeathed half of Watfide-park, &c. Which George was slain at Muselborough-field, in battle against the Scots; and, in some pedigrees, is erroneously said to be the father of archbishop Sandes; but by several authorities and by this will, it is certain he was brother to the said archbishop.

"To his son Christopher he left his estate at Graithwaite, in Lancashire, with other lands, after the death of his mother. He died without issue male, leaving only two daughters.

"To William his son, jointly with his brother Christopher, he bequeaths his lease of Hawkshead-church, and three bloom smiddyes, with all the ore which he had in Mitheland and Low-Furnese, paying to Miles and Anthony, his sons, and their brothers, a hundreds pounds. This William died without issue.

"He further wills to his said sons, Miles and Anthony, equally, and jointly, all his rights in Loufon-park, Parkamore, and the one half of Watfide-park; also divers other lands and leases, to William and Christopher, before-mentioned; and legacies to his daughter Anne; and to his granddaughters, Agnes, Margaret, and Elizabeth, daughters of George Sandes. Then follows:

"I will also, that my son, Edwin Sandes, vicar of Haversham, shall have of my goods, &c. twenty pounds, desiring him heartily, upon my blessing, to see this my last will and testament fulfilled, and good rule, and loving order, to be had among his mother's brethren, and sisters, and children of my said son George. Moreover, it is my will and mind, that in case any of my sons, or others, be not contented, lovingly and jointly, to fulfill this my last will, that then they which offend and break this my said will and testament, shall forfeit all such possessions, &c. bequeathed to them; and the same to be at the sight of John Preston, esquire, and other supervisors of this my said last will and testament."

He constitutes his sons, William, Christopher, Miles, and Anthony, his executors; and John Preston, esquire, his son, Edwin Sandes, vicar of Haversham, William Dixon, Miles Dixon, Thomas Benson, Richard Mackerith, William Sawrey, Miles, Sawrey, and Richard Sandes, of Lancaster, supervisors; appointing, that if his estate be not sufficient to discharge the legacies, that they should then be lessened at the discretion of Mr. Preston, and Edwin Sandes, his son, vicar of Haversham. He was buried in the parish church of Hawkshead, in Lancashire, and has a table-monument there, with two figures lying at length upon it, representing him and his wife, with their arms lifted up, in a praying posture; and round the verge thereof is the following inscription:

Conditur hoc tumulo, Gulielmus Sandes et uxor,
Cui Margareta, nomen et omen erat.
Armiger ille fuit percharus regibus olim
Illa sed exemplar religionis erat.
Conjugij fuerant æquali forte beati,
Felices opibus, stemmate, prole, fide.
Quos amor et pietas læto conjunxit eodem.
Hos sub spe vitæ continet iste lapis.

Mr. Burton, who wrote the antiquities of Leicestershire, Englished it in these lines:

Here lie intomb'd a happy pair;
William Sandes and Margaret fair,
His virtuous wife, a jewel rare.

He an esquire belov'd by kings,
She an exemplar of religious things;

Both blest alike in marriage state,
Renown'd for riches and an equal fate,
In honour, issue, faith, inviolate;

Whom love and piety conjoin'd in one,
In hopes of life; both these contains this stone.

First;

First; Alathea, to Francis Grafton, esquire; Mary, to Dr. Henry Savage, master of Baliol-college, Oxon; Jane, to John Hain, esquire; Margaret, to Sir John Mill, of Tachbury, in the county of Southampton, baronet; and Margery, to Sir Edmund Fortescue, of Follow-Pit, in the county of Devon, baronet.

William, eldest son, (on the death of his uncle, William lord Sandys, only son of William lord Sandys, by Catherine, daughter of Edward lord Chandos, who died without issue on November 12, 1629) inherited the title of lord Sandys, in right of his Grandmother, Elizabeth, before mentioned, and had summons to parliament accordingly. He married Mary, youngest daughter of William earl of Salisbury, and dying without issue in 1668, was succeeded in the honour by Henry Sandys, his brother and heir, who dying unmarried, as did also his brothers, the title lies dormant.

The second son of Sir Miles Sandys before-mentioned, was Sir William Sandys, of Flatbury, in Worcestershire, and of Missenden, in Gloucestershire, from whom the family at Missenden, and Brimsfield, in Gloucestershire, descend. Sir George, the third son, died without issue; but from Henry, the fourth son, who was of Harwood, in the county of Bucks, and married Mary, daughter of Sir Richard Conquest, of Houghton-Conquest, in the county of Bedford, knight, a progeny is yet remaining.

We now return to

EDWIN SANDYS (the fourth son of William) of whom, and his descendants, we are principally to treat. As he was distinguished for his great learning, and eminent abilities, and one of the first reformers of our religion from Popish superstition and idolatry, divers authors have given some account of him, without a due consideration or examination of facts, particularly as to the place of his birth: It is said by some to be at London; by others, at Cornisby, in Yorkshire; but by the famous Mr. Dodsworth, the antiquary, it is positively asserted to be at Hawkhead, within the liberty of Furness, in Lancashire; who alledges, that in token thereof, he built a free school there, and endowed it with thirty pounds per annum, for a master and usher out of lands in Hawkhead, and several tenements in Yorkshire. It is governed by trustees, according to statutes given them by the said archbishop; and over the door of the school is placed a fine stone, on which are engraved his arms, and the following inscription:

*Memoriæ reverendissimi doctoris divinitatis
Edwini Sandys, eboraci olim archiepiscopi.
Scholæ hujus fundatoris Daniel Rawlinson, civis Londoni, Graisdale com. Lancastriæ oriundus, posuit anno Domini 1675.*

He was one of the first who conformed to the protestant religion, and for the constant profession of that faith, chose a voluntary exile in Germany, where he lived all the reign of queen Mary. His troubles and imprisonment are reported at large by Mr. Fox, in his book of martyrs, out of which we shall recite some particulars, which shew him to be a person of courage, honour, and integrity. He was educated in Catharine-hall in Cambridge, and took his degree of doctor of divinity in that university, before the month of September, 1552, when he had a grant of a prebend within the church of Carlisle, vacant by the death of Bellows.

In the third of king Edward the Sixth, he was master of Catharine-hall, and vice-chancellor of the university of Cambridge; and so truly zealous for the reformation, that fearing an alteration in religion, he shewed himself of the party of the lady Jane. Francis, bishop of Hereford, gives this account of him: "Having, by Northumberland's command, in the pulpit impugned queen Mary's cause and defended that of the lady Jane, he behaved himself with such wisdom and moderation, although upon the short warning of some few hours, that he abundantly satisfied the duke, and yet did not so deeply incur the displeasure of the adverse party, but that his friends prevailed with the queen for his pardon; so that after a year's imprisonment he was set at liberty, and presently fled over into Germany. After the death of queen Mary, returning from voluntary exile, he was consecrated bishop of Worcester, from which See he was translated to London, and thence again to the archbishoprick of York. A man for his learning, virtue, wisdom, and extract, very famous; but more especially happy in his issue, whereof many were admirable for their endowments, both internal and external, and of whom we have, in our age, seen three honoured with knighthood."

July 25, being St. James's day, he was brought prisoner from Cambridge, and committed to the Tower, with the duke of Northumberland, and others of quality. Queen Mary, before king Edward's laws were repealed, and particularly that act for the communion service, procured John Young (who had made himself famous for contesting with Martin Bucer, in Edward the Sixth's time) to be chosen vice-chancellor of the university of Cambridge: and the noted Gardiner, bishop of Winchester, and chancellor of the university, having wrote to the society of Catharine-hall, recommending Mr. Cofin to be chosen their master, in the room of Dr. Sandys, because he was married, they, for their own safety, thought it convenient to comply.

The same author observes, that after about a year's imprisonment he was discharged, and observing the fury coming on all that were resolved to stick to the true religion, and would not comply with the newly introduced papal superstitions, he made his escape out of England, and took up his residence at Strasburg, where the gospel was professed, and where he openly declared himself a protestant. He had for his companions, J. Ponet, bishop of Winchester, Edmund Grindal, after archbishop of York, and Canterbury, successively, with others of the clergy; and these learned knights, Sir John Cheek, Sir Richard Morison, Sir Anthony Cooke, Sir Peter Carey, Sir Thomas Wroth, and many more, mentioned by Bale.*

When the news of queen Mary's death arrived, he and Dr. Grindal immediately repaired to their native country, and arriving in London on the day queen Elizabeth was crowned, they met with a gracious reception at court.

* The following anecdotes concerning his sufferings in prison, and escape, may not prove unentertaining.

The duke of Northumberland, after he came to Cambridge with his army, sent for Dr. Sandys, the vice-chancellor. Dr. Parker, Dr. Bill, and Mr. Leaver, to sup with him; and among other speeches, said, "Masters, pray for us, that we speed well," &c. and required Dr. Sandys, to preach on the morrow. The warning was short for such an auditory, yet he did not refuse, but went into his chamber, and so to bed. He rose at three o'clock in the morning, took his bible in his hand, and earnestly

Soon after he was one appointed by queen Elizabeth, and her council, to manage a conference before the lords and commons at Westminster, against the bishops of Winchester and Lincoln, popish bishops, &c. on these three propositions: "First, It is against the word of God, and the custom of the ancient church, to use a tongue unknown to the people, in common prayer, and administration of the sacraments.

"Secondly, Every church hath authority to appoint, take away, and change ceremonies, and ecclesiastical rights, so the same be to edification.

"Thirdly, It cannot be proved by the word of God, that there is in the mass offered up a sacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead." On the conference it was agreed, to put all questions and answers in writing; but the popish bishops, Winchester, and Lincoln, departing, (as Holinshed recites) from all order, and manifestly varying from their own, were committed to the Tower; and the conference came to no effect.

Cambden, in his History of queen Elizabeth, has observed, that on the deprivation of the popish bishops, in the second year of queen Elizabeth, the most learned that could be found among the protestant divines, were recommended to the vacant sees; and that Richard Pate, bishop of Worcester, having left the kingdom of his own accord, archbishop Parker consecrated Edwin Sands, a fluent and eloquent preacher, bishop of Worcester.

His conge d'elire bears date November 13, 1559, and he was elected the 25th of the same month. On the 17th of December, 1559, 2 Eliz. the queen signified to Matthew [Parker] archbishop of Canterbury, that having granted her conge d'elire to the dean and chapter of Worcester, they had elected Edwin Sands, D. D. to the said see; she therefore commands him to consecrate him. And by another commission, she commands the escheators of the counties of Worcester and Salop, and marches of the said counties; William Huytt, mayor of London, earnestly prayed to God that it might fall open where a most fit text should be for him to treat of. The Bible fell open upon the first chapter of Joshua, where he found a text for that time, the most convenient he could have chosen. "Respondentque Josue atque dixerunt omnia quæ præcepisti nobis faciemus; et quocunque miseris ibimus: sicut obedivimus in cunctis Mose, ita obediemus et tibi tantum sit Dominus Deus tuus tecum sicut fuit cum Mose; qui contradixerit ori tuo, et non obediit cunctis sermonibus quos præceperis, ei moriatur tu tantum confortare et viriliter age." This text most fitly served for the purpose; and as God gave the text, so (saith my author) gave he such order and utterance, as drew many tears from the audience.

In the time of his sermon, one of the guard lifted unto him, in the pulpit, a mass book, and a grail, taken the night before by Sir George Howard, with certain of the guard, out of Mr. Hurleston's house, where lady Mary heard mass, and had not been long gone. The duke, with the rest of the nobility, required Dr. Sandys to put his sermon in writing, and appointed Mr. Leaver to go to London, and get it printed. Dr. Sandys required one day and a half for writing it, and at the day appointed, Mr. Leaver came ready booted to receive it of him. As he was delivering of it, Mr. Adams, one of the beadles, came weeping, and prayed him to shift for himself, the duke being retired, and queen Mary proclaimed. Dr. Sandys shewed no concern at what was said, but delivered the sermon written. The duke of Northumberland that night sent for Dr. Sandys, to proclaim queen Mary in the market-place at Cambridge, and told him she was a merciful woman, and that he had sent to know her pleasure, and looked for a general pardon. The doctor replied, "My life is not dear unto me, neither have I said or done any thing that urgeth my conscience; for what I have spoke of the state, I have instructions warranted by the subscriptions of sixteen counsellors; neither yet have I spoke further than the word of God and the laws of the realm do warrant me; come of me what God will; but be you assured you shall never escape death, for if she should save you, those that now rule will kill you."

That night the guard apprehended the duke, and certain grooms of the stable were as busy with Dr. Sandys; but Sir John Gates, laying in his house, sharply rebuked them, and drove them away. The next day he advised the doctor to walk in the fields; and in the mean time, the university, contrary to all order, had met together in consultation, and ordered Dr. Mousie, and Dr. Hatcher, to repair to Dr. Sandys' apartments, and fetch away the statute book of the university, the keys, and such other things as were in his keeping, which they did. Dr. Mousie had been an earnest protestant the day before, but was now turned papist; and though Dr. Sandys had done much for him, he was now his great enemy. The bell ringing for their meeting, Dr. Sandys returned out of the fields, and sending for the beadles, required them to wait on him to the schools, according to their duty. No sooner was the doctor (the beadles going before him) come into the regent house, and had taken his chair, but Dr. Mitch, with a rabble of unlearned papists, went into a by-school, and conspired to pull him out of his chair.

Dr. Sandys began his oration,—expostulating with the university, charging them with great ingratitude; declaring he had said nothing in his sermon, but what he was ready to justify; and their case was the same with his, they having not only concealed but consented to that which he had spoken. And as he was remembering them how beneficial he had been to their university, and their unthankfulness to him, Dr. Mitch came in again with his conspirators, about twenty in number. One laid hand on the chair, to pull it from him; another told him that was not his place; and another called him traitor: but being of great courage, and perceiving they used violence, he drew a dagger, and had dispatched some of them, if Dr. Bill, and Dr. Blith, had not fallen upon him, and prayed him for God's sake to hold his hands, and patiently bear that great offered wrong. By their persuasions he was contented, and the tumult ceasing, he ended his oration; and having mony of the university's, he there delivered the utmost farthing. He gave up the books, reckonings, and keys, and surrendered his office, "Praying God to give the university a better officer, and to give them more thankful hearts," and so repaired to his own college.

The day after there came to him Mr. Gerningham, and Mr. Thomas Mildmay; Gerningham told him it was the queen's pleasure that two of the guards should attend on him, and that he must be carried prisoner to the Tower of London, with the duke of Northumberland. Mr. Mildmay said, he marvelled that a learned man would speak so unadvisedly against so good a princess, and wilfully run into such danger. Dr. Sandys replied, "I shall not be ashamed of bonds, but if I could do as Mr. Mildmay can, I need not to fear bonds: for you came down against queen Mary, and armed in the field, and now return for queen Mary; before a traitor, and now a great friend. I cannot, with one mouth, blow hot and cold after this sort."

On this, his stable was robbed of four excellent geldings, and an inventory taken of all his goods by Mr. Moor, beadle of the university. He was set on a lame horse, that halted to the ground, which a friend of his perceiving, prayed that he might lend him a nag, to which the yeoman of the guard consented. At the end of the town some papists resorted thither to jeer him; and some of his friends, who mourned for him, to take their leave of him.

He was guarded, with the duke, and others, to London, and coming in at Bishopsgate, one, like a milk wife, hurled a stone at him, which hit him on the breast, so as like to have made him fall from his horse; to whom he mildly said, "Woman, God forgive it thee." As he came through Tower-hill-street, another woman standing in her door, cried, "Fie on thee, thou knave, thou knave, thou traitor, thou heretick! whereat he smiling, she said, Look, the desperate heretick laughs at this jeer." On which a woman, on the other side of the street, answered, "Fie on thee, neighbour, thou art not worthy to be called woman, railing upon this gentleman, whom thou knowest not, neither yet the cause why he is thus treated. Then she said, good gentleman, God be thy comfort, and give thee strength to stand in God's cause, even to the end. Thus he passed into the Tower, the first prisoner on

London, and her escheator there; as also her escheator of the county of Middlesex, to restore the temporalities of the said see to Edwin Sandes, D. D. elected bishop of that see, by the deprivation of Richard Pate, the late bishop.

On the second of June, 1570, he was elected to the see of London; and the queen, the first of July, 1570, 12 Eliz. commands Matthew, archbishop of Canterbury to confirm him: and likewise her escheators in the counties of Middlesex, Essex, Hertford, Suffex, Worcester, Huntingdon; and Alexander Avenon, her escheator in the city of London, and mayor thereof, to restore the temporalities in the said counties, to Edwin Sandes, elect-bishop.

The same year he was in commission to inquire, by a jury, into all treasons, misprisions of treason, insurrections, murders, felonies, burglaries, manslaughter, riots, escapes, contempts, unlawful assemblies, and oppressions, but more especially into all conspiracies, confederacies, meetings, &c.

contrary to an act of parliament, passed in the first year of the queen's reign, intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of Common-Prayer and Service in the Church, and Administration of the Sacrament. And to hear and determine the same, according to the laws of the land.

In 18 Eliz. the queen, 14 Feb. 1576, commissions Edwin, bishop of London, Robert, bishop of Winchester, and other bishops, to confirm Edmund, archbishop of York, in the archbishoprick of Canterbury, to which he had been elected by the dean and chapter of the said see.

On 19 January, 1577, 19 Eliz. the queen granted her conge d'elire to the dean and chapter of York, to elect an archbishop to the said see; vacant by the translation of Edmund Grindall to Canterbury; who thereupon, January 25, elected Edward Sandys, bishop of London, to that see: and the queen, March 8, 1577, 19 Eliz. commissioned Edmund, archbishop of Canterbury, and other bishops, to confirm Edwin, archbishop of York.

Also,

St. James's day. The yeoman of the guard took from him his borrowed nag, and what else soever he had. His man, Quinting Swainton, brought after him a bible, and some shirts, and such like things; the bible was sent into him, but the shirts, &c. the yeomen of the guard kept.

After he had been in the Tower three weeks, in a bad prison, he was put into Nun's-Bower, a better prison, and with him Mr. John Bradford. On the day of queen Mary's coronation their prison door was set open, (ever shut before) and Mr. Mitchell, his old acquaintance, who had been prisoner in the same place, came in to him, and said, "There is such a stir in the Tower, that neither gates, or prisoners, are looked to this day. Take my cloak, my hat, and my rapier, you may go out of the gates, without being questioned; save yourself, and let me do as I may." A rare friendship, but he replied, "I know no just cause, why I should be in prison! and thus to do, were to make myself guilty; I will expect God's will; yet must I think myself most bounden to you." On which Mr. Mitchell, finding him resolute, departed.

Whilst Dr. Sandys, and Mr. Bradford, were in close prison twenty-nine weeks, Mr. John Bowler, a very perverse papist, was their keeper; yet by often conference with him, at length began to dislike popery, and to favour the gospel, so that on a Sunday, when they had mass in the chapel, he brought the service-book, a manchette, and a glass of wine; and Dr. Sandys ministered the communion, according to the reformed religion, to Bradford and to Bowler.

When Wyatt was in arms against queen Mary, Dr. Cranmer, Dr. Ridley, and Mr. Bradford, were cast into one prison; and Dr. Sandys, with others, were sent into the Marshalsea. And Wyatt coming into Southwark with his army, he sent two gentlemen into the Marshalsea to Dr. Sandys, to let him know he should be glad of his company and advice, and that the gates should be set open to all the prisoners; but the doctor desired them to tell Wyatt, "If this rising be of God, it will take place, if not, it will fall: for his part, he was committed by order, and would be discharged by the like order, or would never depart."

Thomas Way, the keeper of the Marshalsea, appointed unto every preacher a man to lead him in the street for the air, but he himself walked with Dr. Sandys; and discoursing very familiarly with him, the people took notice of him, and prayed to God to comfort him, and strengthen him in the truth; on which the keeper said to the doctor, I perceive the vain people would set you forward to the fire; you are as vain as they, if you, being a young man, will stand in your own conceits, and prefer your own knowledge before the judgment of so many worthy prelates, ancient, learned, and grave men, as be in this realm; if you do so, you shall find me as strait a keeper, as one that utterly disliketh your religion. Dr. Sandys replied, "I know my years young, and my learning small; it is enough to know Christ crucified; and he hath learned nothing, that seeth not the great blasphemy that is in popery. I will yield unto God, and not unto man. I have read in the scriptures of many godly and courteous keepers; God may make you one; if not, I trust he will give me strength and patience, to bear your hard dealing with me." On which the keeper said, "Do you then mind to stand to your religion." "Yea, (said the doctor) by God's grace." "Truly, saith the keeper, I love you the better, I did but tempt you. What favours I can shew you, ye shall be sure of, and I shall think myself happy if I may die at the stake with you." And he ever after shewed Dr. Sandys all friendship. He laid him in the best chamber in the house, and would not suffer the marshal's men to lay fetters on him, as others had. He sundry times suffered him to walk alone in the fields; and permitted his wife, Mr. Sandys's daughter of Essex, a gentlewoman beautiful both in body and mind, to resort to him; they had the communion there three or four times, and a great resort of communicants, who offered Dr. Sandys money, but he would receive none. He was then in the prime of life, and admired for his learning, eloquence, sobriety, and other virtuous morals. His exhortations to the people were delivered with that energy, as drew tears from many, and made them abhor the mass.

After he had been nine weeks prisoner in the Marshalsea, he was set at liberty, by the mediation of Sir Thomas Holcroft, the knight marshal. Sir Thomas sued earnestly to Dr. Gardiner, bishop of Winchester, for his deliverance, but could not prevail, except Dr. Sandys would be one of their sect; and then he said he should want nothing. He wrung at last out of the bishop, that if the queen could like of his deliverance, he would not be against it; which was Sir Thomas's last request. Thereupon he made interest with two ladies of the privy-chamber to move the queen to it, who was contented, if the bishop of Winchester approved of it. Sir Thomas watched his going to speak with the queen, and followed him with a warrant, for setting him at liberty; and prayed the two ladies to put the queen in mind of Dr. Sandys. On which she said, "Winchester, what think you of Dr. Sandys, is he not sufficiently punished?" and Gardiner, remembering his promise, said he was not against it, if her majesty liked to discharge him." Saith the queen, "Then truly we would he were set at liberty." On which Sir Thomas Holcroft immediately offered the queen the warrant, who signed the same, and caused Winchester to subscribe his name thereto. The warrant was given to the knight marshal again; but as the bishop went out from the queen, he called to Holcroft, commanding him not to set Dr. Sandys at liberty, till he had taken sureties of two gentlemen, bound in a bond of five hundred pounds each, that he should not depart the realm without licence.

Holcroft also made it his business to find sureties for him; and having discoursed with two gentlemen of the North, friends and cousins of Dr. Sandys, they agreed to be bound in body, goods, and lands, for him. He then sent for the doctor to his apartments at Westminster, requiring the keeper to accompany him. He came accordingly, and found Sir Thomas Holcroft in his garden alone, who immediately imparted to him his long suit, with the whole proceeding, and what effect it had; much rejoicing he was so fortunate to procure him his liberty; and that nothing remained for him to do, but to enter into bonds, with his two sureties, not to depart the realm. The doctor answered, "I give God thanks, who hath moved your heart to mind me so well, and I think myself most bound to you; I hope God will requite you, and I never shall be found unthankful; but

Also, on the 16th of March following, the queen commanded her escheators in the counties of York, Lincoln, Surry, Middlesex, Northumberland, Gloucester, and marches of Wales, Nottingham, and the mayor of the town of Nottingham, her escheator in the said town; her escheators in Westmorland, Cumberland; her chancellor in the county palatine of Lancaster, to command the escheator in that county; the mayor of the city of York; the mayor of Kingston upon Hull, her escheators there; to restore the temporalities of the see of York, to Edwin Sandys, elect-archbishop.

On 14 May, 1578, 20 Eliz. he was in commission with Henry, earl of Huntingdon, president in the North, Richard, bishop of Durham, and others, to visit the church of Durham, which had undergone great damages, by the insolvency, neglect, and injuries, done by the dean, canons, and other officers of the said church; and they were empowered to inquire into the management of the revenues thereunto belonging, &c.

This good prelate continued archbishop of York about twelve years, and, as bishop Goodwin relates, departed this life August 8, 1588, and was buried at Southwell. But Sir Gilbert Dethick, garter king at arms in the reign of queen Elizabeth, has left an account of the funerals of those persons of quality that he buried; wherein he recites, that Edwin Sandys, archbishop of York, late bishop of London, and before bishop of Worcester, died at Southwell, near Newark, in Nottinghamshire, Wednesday, the 10th of July, 1558, and was buried there the 15th of August following, with great solemnity.

The antiquities of Worcester, printed in 1717, p. 107, recites, that though Godwin, and others, assert he was buried at Southwell, they are mistaken, whereas he lies buried at Hawkeshead, in Lancashire, among his ancestors; and has, in honour of him, in the north isle, appropriated to his family, an inscription to his memory, the same as was at Southwell. But this is an error, for he was indisputably but as you have dealt friendly with me, I will also deal plainly with you. I came a freeman into prison, I will not go forth a bondman. As I cannot benefit my friends, I will not hurt them; for if I am set at liberty, I shall not stay six days in this realm, if I may get out. If therefore I may not get forth free, send me to the Marshalsea again, and there you shall be sure of me."

Holcroft was much displeased with this answer, and told him a change would shortly come; the state was but a cloud, and would soon shake away; that his cousin, Sir Edward Bray, and his wife, would gladly receive him into his house, where he never need come at church; and that lady Bray hated popery: adding, that he would not so deal with him, to lose all his labour. But no persuasions could prevail with him to enter into bonds. Which Holcroft perceiving, generously said, "Seeing you cannot be altered, I will change my purpose, and yield unto you. Come of it what will, I will set you at liberty. And seeing you mind to go over sea, get you gone quickly as you can. One thing I require of you, that while you are there, you write nothing to come hither, for you may undo me." He friendly kissed Dr. Sandys, bid him farewell, let me answer Winchester as I may; and commanded the keeper to take no fees of him.

Returning with the keeper to the Marshalsea, he staid there that night, and the next day gave a dinner to all the prisoners, taking his farewell of them with many tears, particularly of Mr. Saunders, who, at his own request, was permitted by the keeper to be his bedfellow. Their parting was very sorrowful, with many tears, the one falling on the other's neck; and so he departed, clearly delivered, without examination, or bond. From thence he went to the Bench, and there talked with Mr. Bradford, and Farrer, bishop of St. David's, then prisoners. He comforted them, and they praised God for his happy deliverance. He went by Winchester's house, and there took boat, and came to William Banks, his friend in London, with whom he remained one night, and the next night shifted to another friend's house; and there he learned that search was made for him.

Dr. Watson, and Mr. Christopherson, coming to the bishop of Winchester, chancellor of England, told him, he had set at liberty the greatest heretick in England, and one, who, of all others, had most corrupted the university of Cambridge. Whereupon the bishop sent for all the constables of London, commanding them to watch for Dr. Sandys, then in the city; and whoever of them should bring him to him, should have five pounds for his labour. The doctor, on knowledge of this, for greater safety, conveyed himself by night to Mr. Bertie's house, a stranger, who had been a little time in the Marshalsea prison with him, and was a good protestant, and dwelt in Mark-lane. There he was six days, and one or two of his friends repaired to him. He afterwards went to Mr. Hurleston, a skinner, dwelling in Cornhill; where he caused his man Quinting to provide two geldings for him, in order to ride into Essex, to Mr. Sandys, his father-in-law, where his wife was.

At his going to bed in Hurleston's house, he observed a pair of hose too long for him, made whilst he was in the Tower, by one Benjamin, a protestant, dwelling in Birching-lane. He was not permitted to speak to him, or take any measure of him, but only look on his legs, whereby they were not made fit for him: these hose, he prayed the mistress of the house to send to some taylor, to cut them two inches shorter. She sent them by her boy to the next taylor, who chanced to go to Benjamin that made them, and was then a constable, and acquainted with the lord chancellor's orders. The boy required him to cut the hose; on which he said, I am not thy master's taylor: whereunto the boy replied, My master's taylor dwelling far off, I came to you, as our next neighbour; for it is far night, and he wants them early in the morning. Benjamin knew his own work, and said, These are not thy master's hose, but Dr. Sandys's, which I made for him in the Tower. Saith he, Go to thy mistress, pray her to fit up till twelve of the clock, and then I will bring the hose, and speak with the doctor to his good.

At midnight, the mistress of the house, and Benjamin, the taylor, went into Dr. Sandys's chamber, but prayed him not to be afraid of their coming. He answered, "Nothing can be amiss, what God will, that shall be done." On which Benjamin told him, "He made his hose, and by what chance they came into his hands, God used the means, that he might admonish him of his peril, and advise him how to escape it." He then acquainted him, that all the constables of London, whereof he was one, had orders to watch for him; and some were so greedily set, that they prayed, if he took him, to let them have his carriage to the bishop of Winchester, and he should have the five pounds. He further told him, that it was known his man had provided two geldings, and his intentions to ride out at Aldgate in the morning, where he would surely be taken. "Follow my advice (said he) and, by God's grace, you shall escape their hands. Let your man walk all the day in the street where your horses stand, booted, and ready to ride; the good man's servant of the house shall take the horses, and carry them to Bethnal-Green, and his master shall be booted, and follow after, as if he would ride. I will be here with you tomorrow, about eight of the clock. It is both term and parliament time; and when the streets are full, we will go forth, look wildly, and if we meet your brother in the streets, know him not."

Accordingly Dr. Sandys, clothed like a gentleman, in all respects, looking as one who had been long kept in prison, was conducted by Benjamin through Birching-lane, and from one lane to another, till he came to Moor-gate, and from thence to Bethnal-green. He there found the horses were ready, and Mr. Hurleston ready to ride with him as his man. The doctor pulled on his boots, and taking his leave of Benjamin, would have given him great part of that little he had, but he refused it. However, Dr. Sandys, on his return to England, remembered him thankfully. He rode the same night to his father-in-law's, Mr. Sandys, where his wife was; but he had not been two hours there, before Mr. Sandys was acquainted that two of the guards would that night apprehend his son-in-law. Thereupon he was immediately guided to an honest farmer near the sea, and took up his abode with him two days and two nights in a chamber without stirring out of it. After which

Which inscription is recited in Sir William Dugdale's History of the collegiate Church of Southwell, p. 50; and there never was any monument for archbishop Sandys, at Hawkshed, in Furnes, in the county of Lancaster.

He made his last will and testament † a year before his death, when he was in sound health and perfect memory, as he expresses himself.

The

which he shifted to one James Mower, a ship-master, who dwelt on Milton shore, and was to sail with the first wind to Flanders. Whilst he staid in expectation of a fair wind, Mower brought to him forty or fifty mariners, to whom he gave an exhortation, which they liked so well, that they promised to die for it, before he should be apprehended.

The sixth of May, being Sunday, the wind served, and at the shore Dr. Sandys met Mr. Isaac, of Kent, with his eldest son, who, from the good opinion he had of the doctor, sent his son with him; and Dr. Cox also embarked in the same ship. Cockerill commander. They were within sight, when two of the guard came thither, to apprehend Dr. Sandys; but they happily arrived at Antwerp, and were immediately invited to dinner by the famous Mr. Lock. Before they had dined, George Gilpin, secretary of the English house, and kinsman to Dr. Sandys, came and whispered in his ear, "That king Philip had ordered search to be made for him, and to apprehend him." Hereupon they rose from dinner in a very great shower, and went out of the gate toward the land of Cleve: they had the good luck to light in a waggon, and halting away, came safe to Augsburgh, on Cleveland, where Dr. Sandys staid fourteen days, and then set out for Strasburgh; where, after he had lived one year, his wife came to him. During his abode in that city, he fell sick of a flux, which kept on him nine months, so that his recovery was doubtful. He had a child, which died there of the plague; and his wife, after some time, fell sick of a consumption, and died in his arms.

† The preamble being so very remarkable, and shewing his rare virtues, and wisdom, we shall, for the satisfaction of the curious, insert it, as truly worthy of being known.

IN DEI NOMINE, AMEN.

I Edwin Sandys, minister of God's holy word and sacraments; archbishop of York, although most unworthy; often minding the frailty and uncertainty of man's life in general, and withal, feeling mine own manifold infirmities in particular, both by my years, and for my sins; and also remembering, that when the Lord God shall say, Redde, rationem villicationis tuæ, I, amongst others, shall appear before the tribunal seat of Christ, to receive in this body according to that I have done, be it good or evil. I reckon that in myself a christian duty, with Ezechias, Disponere mea. And considering, that as I brought nothing into this world, for naked I came out of my mother's womb, so can I carry nothing thereout, but naked I must return again, even earth to earth, and carcase to worms, the way of all flesh. While the Lord God hath lent me the leisure, being presently in sound health of body, and of perfect memory, I humbly thank him for both, even thus I discharge myself of those talents, which the Lord hath committed unto my charge, and make my last will and testament in such sort as followeth: First, and above all, my soul and spirit I commend, with David, and Stephen, into the merciful hands of my gracious God, and loving father; assuredly believing, by faith, and certainly trusting, by hope, that he, in the fulness of his good time, best known unto him, and least unto me, will receive the same unto himself; not in respect of any my deserts, for my righteousness is but a very dunghill, and defiled cloth, but of his own free mercies, and for the alone merits of his only son, mine only saviour, Jesus Christ: who being without any sin, was made a curse and sacrifice for all my sins, that I might be made the righteousness of God in him; who, in his own body, bare all my transgressions upon the tree, that by smart of his stripes, and blood of his wounds, I might be healed; who hath cancelled upon the cross, the whole hand-writing that was against me, that I might not only be entertained as a servant, or reconciled as a friend, but adopted as a son, and accepted as an heir, with God the Father; and an heir together with Jesus Christ, who is also made unto me wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. And as in this faith, and full assurance of my perfect redemption, by the death and only deserts of Jesus Christ, the true lamb of God, and very lion of the tribe of Juda, I have and do live; so in the same firm and stedfast faith, and hope, I end my sinful life, and gladly yield up, with all immortal and mortal bodies. Secondly, Although this body of mine is but a clod of clay, a prison of my soul, my will is, that it shall be buried, neither in superstitious, nor superfluous manner; yet for that it hath been, and as I trust, not only the vessel of the gospel, but likewise a temple of the Holy Ghost, I require that the same be so decently and conveniently brought to ground, as appertaineth to a christian, a servant to Almighty God, and a man of my calling; putting no doubt, but that I shall see my Redeemer with my own eyes, and be covered with mine own skin, and that the Lord Jesus make this my vile body like unto his glorious body, whereby he

The probate bears date the 22d of May, 1590, and administration granted to Cicely, his lady, the executrix. She was his second wife, and sister to Sir Thomas Wilford, and died in the year 1610, as appears by the probate of her will, administration being granted to her eldest son, Sir Samuel Sandys, the twelfth of February that year, whom she appointed her only and sole executor; and makes overseers, Sir Thomas Wilford, her brother, her son Sir Edwin Sandys, and her son, Sir Miles Sandys. The preamble to her will, and the prudent disposition she made of her estate, shews she was a pious and ingenious lady.

Ita est Edwinus London.

George Sandys born the second day of March, at six of the clock in the morning, in 1577: his god-he is able to subdue all things unto himself, Reposita est hæc mihi spes in sinu meo. Thirdly, because I lived an old man in the ministry of Christ, a faithful disposer of the mysteries of God, and, to my power, an earnest labourer in the vineyard of the Lord, I testify before God and his angels, and men of this world, I rest resolute, and yield up my spirit in that doctrine, which I have privately studied, and publickly preached, which is this day maintained in the church of England; both taking the same to the whole council of God, the word and bread of eternal life, the fountain of living water, the power of God unto salvation, to all them that do believe; and he seeking the Lord besides, to turn us unto him, that we might be turned, lest, if we repent not, the candlestick be moved out of his place, and the gospel to a nation, that shall bring forth the fruits thereof. And further protest, in an upright conscience of mine own, and in the knowledge of his majesty, before whom I stand, that in preaching of the truth of Christ, I have not laboured to please man, but studied to serve my master, who sent me; to flatter either prince or people; but by the law, to tell all sorts of their sin; by the spirit, to rebuke the world of sin. Of righteousness, and of judgment, by the gospel, to testify of that faith, which is in Jesus Christ, and in him crucified. Fourthly, Concerning rites and ceremonies, by political constitutions authorized amongst us. As I am and have been persuaded, that such as are set down by publick authority in this church of England, are no way either ungodly or unlawful, but may with good conscience, for order and obedience sake, be used of a good christian; for the private baptism to be ministered by women, I take neither to be prescribed, or permitted; so have I ever been, and presently am persuaded that some of them be not so expedient for the church now; but in the church reformed, and in all this time of the gospel, wherein the seed of the scripture hath so long been sown, they may better be disused by little and little, then more and more urged. Howbeit, I do easily acknowledge our ecclesiastical policy, in some points, may be bettered; so I do utterly dislike, even in my conscience, all such rude and indigested platforms, as have been more lately, and boldly, than either learnedly, or wisely preferred; tending not to the reformation, but to the destruction of the church of England. The particulars of both forts, reserved to the discretion of the godly; which of the latter I only say thus, That the state of a small private church, and the form of a large christian kingdom, neither would long like, nor can at all brook, one and the same ecclesiastical governments. Thus much I thought good to testify concerning these ecclesiastical matters, to clear me from all suspicion of double and indirect dealings, in the house of God; wherein, as touching mine office, I have not halted, but walked sincerely, according to that skill and ability, which I received at God's merciful hands. Lord, as a great sinner, by reason of my frail flesh, and manifold infirmities, I fly unto thee for mercy. Lord, forgive me my sins, for I acknowledge my sins, Lord, perform thy promise, and do away all my iniquities; hasten the coming of thy Christ; and deliver me from the body of sin. Veni cito Domine Jesu, cloath me with immortality, and give me that promised crown of glory. So be it.

And as concerning those worldly things, which God of his bountiful goodness hath given for our use; thus a steward of the same, for the discharge of my duty in that behalf, I dispose of them.

First, therefore, I will, ordain, and appoint, that my funerals, and debts whatsoever, be payed, and discharged by mine executrix, hereafter to be named, out of my whole goods.

After which he recites, that by indentures, bearing date the fourth of June, in 18 Eliz. between him, the said Edwin, on the one part, and Miles Sandes, of Latimers, his brother Francis Wilford, Edward Fenner, and Robert Brigges, esquires, on the other part; they the said Miles, Francis, Edward, and Robert, did severally covenant and grant to him, his executors, and assigns, that such person or persons, as he should nominate and appoint, should, and might hold, &c. and take the issues, profits, &c. of one messuage and a lodge, and land and pasture, called Curswold park, alias Crudewood park, within the county of Kent; which the said Miles, Francis, Edward, and Robert, had of the grant of Henry Leonard, esquire, &c. as by the same indenture, more at large appeareth; he now, by his last will and testament, appoints and assigns the said issues, &c. to his well-beloved wife, Cicely Sandys.

godfathers, George, earl of Cumberland, William, lord Ewer; his godmother, Catharine, countess of Huntingdon.

Before we treat of Sir Samuel Sandys, the eldest son, ancestor to the present lord Sandys, we shall give some account of the archbishop's younger sons.

Edwin, the second son, was sent to the university of Oxford, in September 1577, at the age of about sixteen, and was admitted probationer-fellow of Corpus Christi college, January 23, 1579, being then bachelor of arts. In 1581 he had conferred on him the prebend of Westwang, in the church of York; but after the death of his father, he left his fellowship, and travelled into France, Germany, Italy, and other parts, for the space of three years; and at his return, grew famous for his learning, prudence, and virtue. A little before the death of queen Elizabeth, he resigned his prebend, and on king James's accession to the crown, he had the honour of knighthood conferred on him, viz. 11 May, 1633; after which he was employed by his majesty in several affairs of great trust, and was very dexterous in the management, as Wood writes. He was a leading man in all parliamentary business, and esteemed an excellent patriot, faithful to king and country: but in that parliament, held in 1621, speaking in defence of the liberty of the subject, he, and the famous Selden, were committed to the sheriff of London, the 16th of June, and not delivered till the 18th of July following; which was voted by the house of commons, on the 8th of November ensuing, a great breach of their privileges. He was treasurer to the undertakers for the western plantations, which he effectually advanced, and as my author saith, "was a person of great judgment, of a commanding pen, and a solid statesman." He wrote while he was at Paris, anno 1599, Europæ Speculum: or, A View of the State of Religion in the Western Parts of the World. Wherein the Roman religion, and the policies of that church to support the same, are notably displayed, and confuted, &c. He left fifteen hundred pounds to the university of Oxford, for the endowment of a metaphysick lecture; and dying in October 1629, was buried in the church of Northbourn, in Kent, where he had a seat, and a fair estate, which descended to Richard, his grandson, who was created a baronet by king Charles the Second, January 23, 1684. The title in this branch is now extinct.

Miles Sandys, third son, was also a gentleman of polite parts and learning; possessed of a fair estate at Wilberton, in the Isle of Ely, and received first knighthood from king James, and afterwards the dignity of a baronet, November 25, 1612. He served in parliament as one of the representatives for the university of Cambridge, in 12 Jac. I. and in 3 Car. I. was elected, with Sir John Carleton, baronet, knight of the shire for the county of Cambridge. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Edward Cooke, of North-Cray, in the county of Kent, gent. by whom he had issue seven sons, and a daughter; and died in the latter end of 1644. This branch of the family is also extinct.

Of William, the fourth son, we do not find any thing remarkable. Thomas, the fifth son, was of London,

He further declares, that if it should please God, that Elizabeth Norton, daughter of John Norton, late of Rippon, in the county of York, esquire, deceased, and George Sandys, his youngest son, shall hereafter fortune to marry together, that then Thomas Spencer, and Thomas Porter, their heirs and assigns, shall assure, and convey, all such messuages, lands, &c. as John Samond, gent. and Anne his wife, did heretofore convey to them, and their heirs, unto the aforesaid George Sandys, and Elizabeth Norton, and the heirs of their two bodies, lawfully begotten; and for the default of such issue, the remainder to the said Elizabeth Norton, and her heirs. And if the said George Sandys, and Elizabeth Norton, do marry together, he then wills that the said Elizabeth Norton be discharged of her wardship, and value of her marriage, which belongeth unto him, and of all charges and expences he has disbursed about the same.

He further wills, that his wife Cicely Sandys shall have the custody and bringing up of his children, Thomas Sandys, Henry Sandys, and George Sandys, so long as she continues a widow; and all that time to have in her hands, as well the annuity, granted out of the manner of Omberley, to the said Thomas, Henry, and George, as all other portions, patents, leases, &c. till they come to their full age; but if his said wife, Cicely Sandys, should marry before his children come to full age, that the several annuities, &c. be committed to his sons, Samuel Sandys, and Edwin Sandys, on sufficient bonds entered into by them, to see the same, and every part thereof, truly employed to the uses of his said sons, Thomas, Henry, and George.

And whereas, according to his ability, he had sufficiently preferred and advanced all his children, viz. both his daughters, Margaret Awcher, and Anne Barne, by marriage, to his great charges; as also his sons, viz. Samuel, Edwin, Miles, Thomas, Henry, and George, by leases, patents, annuities, and otherwise; whereby they ought, by reason of the custom of the province of York, to claim their filial portions of his good, and chattels; he declares, that his said sons and daughters should hold themselves contented, and not make any claim of his executrix, &c. And albeit that he had so provided for his children, according to his ability as aforesaid, yet, for a further declaration of his fatherly good-will towards them, and that they may continue in their hearts and minds a thankful memory of the same, he bequeaths to his eldest son, Samuel Sandys, one bason and ewer of silver, double-gilt, one salt, double-gilt, and one dozen of silver spoons; with feather-beds, &c. therein mentioned, three geldings, &c. also his black armour of proof, made for his own body, with five other armours, at the discretion of his executrix. He bequeaths to his second son, Edwin Sandes, one bason and ewer, parcel-gilt, one silver salt double-gilt, one dozen of spoons, and one nest of small bowls, double-gilt, with a cover; also feather-beds, &c. and two geldings, and one armour. To his third son, Miles Sandys, a big square salt, double-gilt, a dozen of silver spoons, and a standing cup of silver, double-gilt, feather-beds, &c. two geldings, and one armour. To his fourth son, Thomas Sandys, one silver bowl double-gilt, with a cover, marked with the letter M; feather-beds, &c. one gelding, and one armour.

To his fifth son, Henry Sandes, besides his own plate, given him when he was christened, one small round salt of silver, double-gilt, with a cover, one gelding, one nag, and one armour, &c. and thirty pounds current money. To George Sandys, his youngest son, besides the plate given him at his christening, one nest of silver pinked bowls, double-gilt, with a cover, a small square salt double-gilt, a gelding, a nag, one armour, &c.

To his eldest daughter, Margaret Awcher, one great salt of silver, with a cover, and furniture, &c. To his daughter, Anne Barne, one great salt of silver, double-gilt, with a cover, a dozen of silver spoons, and one ambling nag, fit for her own saddle; all at the appointment of his executrix.

He bequeaths to his brother, Christopher Sandys, ten pounds, and thirty pounds that he oweth him. To his brother, Anthony Sandys, ten pounds, and to his daughter Cicely, ten pounds. To his servant and kinsman, David Sandys, twenty pounds, and one good gelding, at the assignment of his executrix. To every one of his household servants, at his decease, half a year's wages; and meat and drink for two months after. He moreover wills, that Dr. Toby Matthews, dean of Durham, and his son Edwin Sandys, should dispose of all his books of learning, except those in English, which he leaves to his wife, Cicely, to dispose of among his children; reserving

London, and had a numerous issue, but we do not find any remaining. George, youngest son, was a most ingenious gentleman, and is famous for his travels and poems.

We now return to

Sir SAMUEL SANDYS, the eldest son of the archbishop. He inherited from his father, the manor of Ombersley, in the county of Worcester, and other estates, and was sheriff of that county, in 16 Jac. I. and in the 12th and 18th Jac. I. was elected one of the knights of the shire for the county of Worcester. He married Mercy, only daughter of Martin Cullpepper, esquire, and by her had four sons and seven daughters.

1. Edwin Sandys, his eldest son.
2. Martin, of Scrobie, in the county of Nottingham, born in 1597.

3. John Sandys, born in 1604, of Loveline, in the parish of Feckenham, in the county of Worcester; and from him the Sandys of Hillmorton, in the county of Warwick, descended.

4. William Sandys, born in 1607, who died without issue.

The daughters were,

1. Cecilia, married to John Brace, of Hill-court, in the parish of Dodderhill, in the county of Worcester, esquire.

2. Mary, born in 1592, wedded to Sir Francis Wyatt, of Kent.

3. Anne, born in 1594, the wife of Sir Francis Wenman, of Carswell, in Oxfordshire.

4. Margaret, born in 1595, married to Richard Humphrys, of Rattenden, in the county of Essex.

5. Mercy, born in 1598, married to — Ewbank.

6. Joyce, born in 1599, wedded to John Dingley, of Charlton, in the parish of Cropthorn, in the county of Worcester, esquire.

7. Elizabeth, born in 1602, to Edward Pytts, of Kyre, in the county of Worcester, esquire.

The said Sir Samuel Sandys died on the 18th of August, 1623, 21 Jac. I. as appears by the inquisition taken after his death, (then customary) at Worcester, the second of September, 22 Jac. I. when the jury found that he died possessed of the manor of Wickwanteford, with the appurtenances; the manor of Ombersley, and rectory of the church, and three water-mills there, called Squinte-mill, Tyre-mill, and Pig-mill, and divers messuages, lands, &c. there, and in Worcestershire. Also, in the county of Essex, the manor of Edwards, with the appurtenances, and six messuages, and two hundred and sixty acres of land in Woodham-Ferrers. In Yorkshire, of the prebendary of Stelton, and five messuages in Hailgate, in Howlden; with other lands, &c. leaving Sir Edwyn Sandys, knight, his son and heir, who died on the 6th of December, after the decease of the said Sir Samuel; and that Samuel, son and heir of Sir Edwin, was in ward to the king, and of the age of eight years, and two months, the said sixth of September.

Sir Samuel, and his lady, who died in 1629, are both buried at Wickamford, (as now wrote) and, on the north side of the chancel, have a double monument of alabaster, supported by five pillars of touch stone; where lieth the portraiture of an armed knight, with his hands lifted up in a praying posture, and at his feet a griffin. By his side lays his lady, her hands as joined in prayer; at her feet, on a wreath argent and azure, an harpy's head armed, main and beard, or. Over these arms, on an escutcheon, or, a fess dancette between three cross crolets fitchee, gules, quartering party per fess, gules and azure, a tower or castle argent.

On a tablet, near the monument, were the following inscriptions, viz.

to the said Edwin, such as the said Dr. Matthews shall think fittest for his study.

The residue of his goods and chattels, not before bequeathed, his funeral debts (and dilapidations, if any should happen to be) being first discharged, he gives to his loving and faithful wife, Cicely Sandys, in full satisfaction of that her third part of his goods due by the custom of the province of York, and makes her sole executrix: requiring her, as she will answer in good conscience before Almighty God, to see this his last will and testament truly performed.

He constitutes supervisors, his trusty and well-beloved friends, Sir Christopher Wrey, knight, lord chief justice of England, Dr. Toby Matthews, dean of Durham, his loving brother, Miles Sandys, Francis Palmes, and his son, Samuel Sandys, esquires, heartily praying them for all the good-will they have borne him, to give their best advice, and assistance, to his said executrix; and bequeaths to each of them ten pounds. And if any doubt, question, or ambiguity, should happen to arise of this his last will, he desires it may be decided by his supervisors, or three of them; whose declaration he wills, that as well his said wife, and children, all others, having interest in his will, shall stand and abide, without any contradiction, on penalty of losing their several legacies, &c. He concludes:

"This is the last will and testament of me, Edwin Sandys, archbishop of York, written this first of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand, five hundred, fourscore, and seven, and in the nine and twentieth year of the reign of our sovereign lady, queen Elizabeth, by the grace of God, queen of England, &c. Whereunto I have subscribed mine own hand, my name, and set my seal, requiring the same inviolably to be observed of my wife and children, and of all others, that have any interest therein, as they will answer me before God."

"Here

"Here, in hopes of a joyful resurrection, resteth the body of Sir Samuel Sandys, knight, eldest son to that famous prelate, Edwin, archbishop of York; for piety, and excellent endowments of his mind, deserving justly to be remembered by posterity; especially for his singular wisdom, integrity, and industry, in the affairs of the commonwealth, of whom the great and frequent assemblies of parliament were approving witnesses, being also to this country, that challengeth his birth, a principal ornament. He changed this life for a better, in his climacterical year, (a year for the most part fatal to excellent men) having almost attained to sixty-three. The wife of his youth, and his age, was Mercey, descended of the antient family of the Cullpepers, and the only daughter of her mother; a wise and prudent woman, who, together with her husband, was a great advancer of her family; with whom he lived thirty-seven years, in exemplary concord; and had by her eleven children, all of them (an extraordinary blessing) at his death surviving: but she having honourably interred her husband, together with her eldest son, Sir Edwin Sandys, a young gentleman of great virtues, who hardly twenty-one days outlived his father; a most sorrowful widow, and mother, erected this monument to their memories, as a lasting testimony of her love and affection; and hath commanded her children, after her death, to inter her by the body of her dear husband; that so her ashes may be mingled with his, from whom, in her life, her desires and affections were inseparable, which is since accordingly accomplished; for she having piously breathed out her soul unto God, here resteth in peace, and assured expectation of the second coming of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ."

Sir EDWIN SANDYS, his eldest son, as before mentioned, was knighted in his father's life-time. He married, in 12 Jac. I. Penelope, daughter of Sir Richard Bulkeley, of the isle of Anglesey, by whom he had four sons, and three daughters, viz.

1. Samuel Sandys, born in 1615.
2. Richard Sandys, born in 1616, killed at Edgehill fight, October 13, 1642.
3. Edwin Sandys, born in 1617.
4. Martin Sandys, born in 1624, after his father's death.

The three daughters were

1. Catharine, married to Stephen Anderson, of Eyeworth, in Bedfordshire, esquire.
2. Mercey, and another, who died young.

His lady died in 1680, and was buried by her husband at Wickamford.

SAMUEL SANDYS, his eldest son, inherited his estate, and being young, it was very much increased by the care of his guardians, until he came of age; but, upon breaking out of the civil war, in 1641, he left the parliament and sided with the king, and had first the command of a troop of horse; with which he was in the engagement at Wickfield, near Worcester, and at Edgehill; and in the march to Brainford, under the command of the earl of Bristol. He then raised a regiment of foot, and armed it at his own charge; and in the same year a regiment of horse, consisting of seven troops; and a good part of a regiment of dragoons. These, after some time, were scattered and broken for want of pay; but shortly after he recruited both his regiments of horse and foot, without the least charge to the king, and kept them in constant pay to the end of the war. He was, in 1642, made governor of Evesham; in 1644, lieutenant-governor of Worcester, under prince Maurice, general of his majesty's dominions of Wales, &c. He was engaged in most of the considerable designs, and undertakings, which were on foot during the war, for the king's service; was frequently imprisoned, and under restraints, and his estate sequestered, for which he was obliged to compound. He had six troops of horse, some months before the king's landing at his restoration, ready to be drawn together. By these means, the greatest part of his estate was spent, having never received any pay or reward for his services; and upon the restoration, he had only six thousand pounds allowed him out of the excise of Devonshire, for all his trouble and charge. He served often in parliament for the borough of Droitwich, and county of Worcester; and first married Mary, only daughter of Dr. Hugh Barker, dean of the arches, a younger son of the Barkers, of Great Harwood, in Buckinghamshire, by whom he had two sons and one daughter, viz.

1. Samuel Sandys, who succeeded to the estate.
2. Edwin Sandys, who was chosen fellow of New College, in Oxford, being by his mother related to the founder, William of Wickham, bishop of Winchester, and lord high chancellor of England. He died at New-college, January 8, 1684, and was buried in the cloisters there, and has there a mural monument erected to his memory.

Mary, died in 1681, unmarried, and was buried at Wickhamford.

Their mother died in 1651, and was buried at Wickhamford. He afterwards married Elizabeth, widow of colonel Henry Washington, daughter of Sir John Packington, of Westwood, in the county of Worcester, baronet, by whom he had no issue. He died in 1685, and was buried at Ombersley, where he has a monument erected to his memory, with the following inscription:

And on his grave are the following verses:

Upon a Pattern (Reader) cast your Eye,
 Of suffering yet unconquer'd Loyalty:
 None greater Courage shew'd to serve the Crown
 And Church, when haughty Rebels cry'd them down;
 To both he faithful was, Life and Estate,
 'Tis known, he priz'd not at so great a Rate,
 As to spare either for the Publick Good;
 So little valued he his dearest blood.

To his King and Country he was always just,
Nothing could tempt him to betray his Trust;
For Prudence, Valour, and a generous Mind,
Tho' equal'd, not excell'd, amongst Mankind.
He was the Clergy's Friend, the Poor's Relief,
Our Heart's Joy once, but now his Death's our Grief.
Here now he lies, in Hopes to rise again,
When Doom'sday Trumpet sounds, with Christ to reign.

She died in 1698, and was buried at Wickhamford.

SAMUEL SANDYS, his eldest son, succeeded him. He served often in parliament for Droitwich, and married Elizabeth, only daughter of Sir John Petrus, of Cheston-hall, in the county of Suffolk, knight, by whom he had three sons and four daughters, viz.

1. Edwin Sandys, of whom hereafter.
2. Henry Sandys, who died young.
3. Martin Sandys, fellow of New college Oxford, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John Burton of the city of Worcester, gent. by whom he had five children. 1. Samuel, who died unmarried. 2. Edwin, who married a lady of the name of Offley, and has issue a son, Samuel, married to Miss Smith.
3. Elizabeth, died unmarried. 4. Mary, married to Thomas Brocas, of Beau Repair, in Hampshire. And 5. Catherine, married to John Wall, M. D.

His four daughters were,

1. Elizabeth, who died young.
2. Penelope, married to Henry Townshend, of Elmly-Lovett, in the county of Worcester, esquire, but died without issue.
3. Mary, wedded to Price, lord viscount Hereford, and had by him one son, Price, lord viscount Hereford, and one daughter, married to William Price, of Rulace, in the county of Merioneth, esquire.
4. Frances, married to Samuel Pytts, of Kyre, in the county of Worcester, esquire, to whom she bore one son, who died an infant.

He died in 1701, and she in 1714. They were both buried at Ombersley, and have a monument erected to their memory, with this inscription:

H. S. E. Sandys.

EDWYN SANDYS, his eldest son, died before him in 1699, and was buried at Ombersley. He represented the county of Worcester in the parliament called in 1695; and married Alice, daughter of Sir John Rushout, of Northwick, in the parish of Blockley, in the county of Worcester, baronet, and by her, (who died in 1701, and was buried by her husband) had one daughter, Alice, and two sons:

1. Samuel, now lord Sandys.

2. Edwin Sandys, who was bred to the sea, and died young.

(First and only Lord) SAMUEL SANDYS, after having spent some time at New-college, in Oxford, and in foreign parts, was chosen to represent the city of Worcester in parliament, March 4, 1717; which city he continued to represent, till he was called to the house of peers. On February 12, 1741, he was made chancellor, and under-treasurer of his majesty's exchequer, and one of the commissioners for executing the office of treasurer of the exchequer; and five days after, February 16, was sworn of his majesty's most honourable privy-council, at St. James's, and took his place at the board accordingly. On resigning those places, December 20, 1743, he was created a peer of Great Britain, by the stile of lord Sandys, baron of Ombersley, in the county of Worcester, and made cofferer of his majesty's household; from which he was removed December 22, 1744.

He married Letitia, eldest daughter and co-heir of Sir Thomas Tipping, of Wheatfield, in the county of Oxford, baronet, by Anne, his wife, daughter, and at length heir, of Thomas Cheek, of Pyrge, in the county of Essex, esquire, (lineally descended from Sir John Cheek, preceptor and secretary of state to king Edward the Sixth) by Letitia, his wife, daughter, and at length heir, of the honourable Edward Russel, brother of William, the first duke of Bedford, and sister and heir to Edward, earl of Orford.

By her ladyship he had seven sons, and three daughters.

In that which met 1754, for Boffiney, in Cornwall; and in 1762, he was chosen member for Westminster in the room of the honourable Edward Cornwallis, whose seat was vacated by his acceptance of a place; and in the parliament which met this year 1768, was re-chosen for the same city. In April 1757, he was appointed a lord of the admiralty, but soon after resigned that post.

BRUDENEL BRUCE, Baron BRUCE.

FOR the male ancestry of this noble lord, we must refer our readers to the account already given of his grace the duke of Montagu, his eldest brother. But as his lordship inherits his barony, by virtue of a special limitation, in the patent granted by his majesty king George II. to the late earl of Aylesbury, his maternal uncle, and as pursuant to the will of his said uncle, his lordship has assumed the surname of that family, it seems necessary, that we should insert a brief account of the Bruces, so far back, as we can lineally and uninterruptedly trace the ancestors of the late countess of Cardigan, mother to the present lord Bruce, and sister to the said earl of Aylesbury.

This family is undoubtedly of the same lineage as the kings of Scotland, being descended from ROBERT DE BRUS, a noble knight, in Normandy, who attended William the Conqueror into England: from whom he obtained no less than ninety-four lordships, in the county of York, among which, was the barony of Skelton, which he made his chief residence.

ROBERT DE BRUCE, his son, was also one of the commanders for king Stephen, in the English army, which defeated the Scots at the battle of the Standard, near Northallerton, in Yorkshire, in 1138. He likewise obtained from David, first king of Scotland, all the land of Annandale, and dying in 1141, left issue by Agnes, his wife, daughter of Fulk Pagnel, two sons, Adam and Robert, and one daughter, Agathe, married to Ralph lord of Middleham, in Yorkshire.

ADAM DE BRUCE, who was heir to his father, succeeded him in the barony of Skelton, and the other large possessions thereunto belonging; but after the fourth generation, the male issue of that line failing, the estate was divided among four sisters, co-heirs, Agnes, married to Walter de Fauconberg, who had for her share, the barony of Skelton, and the castle thereof, with several manors. Lucie, the wife of Marmaduke Thweng, who had other large possessions, whose lineal heirs are the present earl of Scarborough, and Sir Charles Hotham. Margaret, married to Robert de Rofs, lord of the castle of Warke, and in her right, had the barony of Kendal, whose son was William lord Rofs, of Kendal. Laderina, the youngest, was married to John de Bellew, and had for her share the lordship of Cerleton, and divers other manors.

ROBERT DE BRUS, who was younger brother to Adam, marrying the heiress of Annandale, in Scotland, and Cleveland, in England, had a son, William, the father of another Robert, called The Noble, and Barnard; from whom descended the Bruces of Exton, in the county of Rutland, a lordship derived to them from Judith, niece to William the Conqueror: and the said Judith being married to Walteof, earl of Northumberland, he, in her right, had the title earl of Huntington, which title his daughter Maud or Matilda, being married to David I. king of Scots, brought to Henry, their eldest son; and David, their grandson, marrying Maud or Matilda, daughter and heir to Hugh earl of Chester, had two daughters, Margaret and Isabel; whereof the latter being married to Thomas earl of Carrick, by him had an only daughter Martha, who being married to Robert Bruce the Noble, as aforesaid, by him was mother of king Robert II.

From this original descended Edward Bruce of Kinlofs and Blairhall in Elginshire, who had a younger brother George, from whom descended the earl of Kincardin, and the said

EDWARD BRUCE, who was ambassador with the earl of Mar to queen Elizabeth at London, where he was greatly instrumental in the peaceful succession of king James to the throne of England,

His eldest son, Robert, lord Bruce, born August 6, 1679, died young; as did Thomas, third son, and Henry, the youngest.

His second son, Charles, lord Bruce, was called up to the house of peers in the life-time of his father, as will be shewn hereafter.

She was the first descendant in blood from Mary queen of France, younger daughter to king Henry VII. being grand-child to William duke of Somerset, who was grandson to Catharine countess of Hertford, daughter and at length sole heir to Henry Grey, duke of Suffolk, by the lady Frances his wife, eldest daughter and coheir to Charles Brandon, duke of Suffolk, and Mary, the French queen, his wife, youngest daughter of king Henry VII. as aforesaid; from whose eldest, Margaret, queen of Scots, the present royal family is descended.

His lordship having obtained king William's leave to reside at Brussels, he there married, secondly, Charlotte, countess D'Essenu, of the ancient and noble house of Argenteau, in the dutchy of Brabant, and by her, who died at Brussels, July 23, 1710, N. FORTESCUE,

F O R T E S C U E, Baron F O R T E S C U E.

Genealogists in general derive the origin of this family from Sir Richard le Forte, a distinguished soldier of extraordinary strength and courage, under William, duke of Normandy, in his expedition into England. He bore a strong shield before the duke at the battle of Hastings, against king Harold, and thereby contributed greatly to his preservation; from which signal event, his posterity assumed the name and motto of the family; the word scutum in Latin, or escu, in French, (a shield) being added to Forte, composing the name, and the motto is, Forte scutum, salus ducum. Sir Richard returned to his family in Normandy, and his posterity remained there in great repute. But he had a son, Sir Adam, a principal commander with his father, to whom it is asserted the Conqueror gave Wymondeston, Wimstone, or Winston (as it is now written) in the hundred of Armington, in Devonshire.

This said Sir Adam assumed the name of Fortescue, and was father of another

ADAM FORTESCUE, who had issue three sons.

1. Sir John Fortescue, his successor at Winston.
2. Sir Richard Fortescue.
3. Sir Nicholas Fortescue.

} both knights of St. John of Jerusalem, who attended king Richard I. in the Holy Land.

It appears from Sir William Pole's manuscripts of charters, (the great antiquary of Devonshire) that Wymondeston, now Wimston, in the parish of Modbury, was the most antient seat of the family, in whose possession it continued from the days of king John to the reign of queen Elizabeth, when it came to Strowbridge, from him to Champerton, and from about the year 1690, to Jephson.

King John, by his letters patent dated in the tenth year of his reign, enfeoffed therewith

JOHN FORTESCU, after whom it came to his son

Sir RICHARD FORTESCU, and after him to

ADAM FORTESCU, who was dead in 31 Ed. I. for then it was specified he held Wymonstun by one knight's fee of the honour of Tremeton. His son and heir was another

ADAM FORTESCU, who grants to Henry Loperigge, seven shillings annual rent, which Richard, the son of Philip Gretun, used to pay him for his tenement of Wymonstun, witnesses, Sir Andrew Trelesk, Peter de Brideaux, &c. dated at Wymonstun, Friday next following the feast of St. Ambrose, in the 30th of king Edward, son of Henry. To the deed is an oval seal affixed, whereon was the badge of a star, and circumscribed Sigillum Adæ Fortescu.

To him succeeded his son and heir, another

ADAM FORTESCUE, who married Anne, daughter and coheir to William Delaport, of Old Port, in the county of Devon, by whom he had three sons.

1. William Fortescue.
2. Nicholas Fortescue.
3. Richard Fortescue. Which

WILLIAM FORTESCUE, at making the king's eldest son, a knight in 19 Edw. III. paid for one knight's fee in Wymondeston, held of Tremeton, which Adam de Fortescue held. In 28 Edward III. he is witness to a deed of Walter de Strechlegh, whereby he enfeoffs his lands in Strechlegh, Forfan, Cokesland, Broke, Dunstan, and Tamerton, on the daughter of the said Walter named Alice, whom this said William Fortescue married, and had issue by her William; and in 48 Edw. III. William Coffin, son and heir of Walter Coffin, grants lands in Strechlegh, Forfan, Cokesland, Broke, Boraton, Tamerton, and Dunstan, to Walter de Strechlegh, and his heirs, in default to William Fortescue, son of William Fortescue, and Alice, daughter of the said Walter de Strechlegh, and to the heirs of their two bodies. In 50 Edw. III. William Fortescue, and Walter Strechlegh, grant to William Yearle, vicar of the church of Valhamton, an annual rent of forty shillings sterling, to be received out of their lands on the feast of St. Michael the Archangel, for the term of twenty-one years, sealed with three seals of arms annexed, the middlemost being the arms the Fortescue family bears. The said William, in 2 Rich. II. being wrote William Fortescue, senior, had a grant with Sir Philip, and Sir Peter Courtney, knights, from Richard Mauldit, called Sommaister, of lands in Smytheson, Wimpell, and Thurverton. By the said Alice, his wife, he had issue his son and heir,

WILLIAM FORTESCUE, who married Elizabeth, sister and coheir to Thomas Beauchamp, of Kyme, widow and relict of Richard, son of Adam Brunscumb, by which Richard she had no issue; and in 18 Rich. II. there is an assignment of dower, made at Over-Aller, the Tuesday next after the feast of St. Martyn that year, to the said William, styling him junior, and Elizabeth, his wife, of all lands, &c. which were the said Richard Brunscumb's, husband of the said Elizabeth, in Over-Aller, being sealed with the Fortescue's arms and a crescent for difference. He had issue by his said wife Elizabeth, two sons, William, his successor, at Winston, who married Mabel, daughter of John Fowel, (which branch terminated in an only daughter and heir,) and

Sir JOHN FORTESCUE, one of those heroes who signalized themselves under that victorious king, Henry

Henry V. in the course of the wars when the great battle of Agincourt was fought in 1415, and merited knighthood for his valour and conduct, upon the reduction of Meaux, in France, the metropolis of La-Brie, in 1421, 10 Hen. V. when he was made governor and captain thereof. He married Joan, daughter and heir of Henry, son of William Norreis, of Norreis, in the parish of North-Hays, in the county of Devon, by whom he had amongst other children,

Sir HENRY FORTESCUE, appointed lord chief justice of the Common-pleas, in Ireland, 25 June, 1426, 4 Hen. VI. from whom by his first wife, Joan, daughter of Edmund Bosum, heir to the family of Wood, in Devonshire, descended the first Fortescues of Wood, which ended in an heir female, married to Fortescue of Preston. And by his second wife, daughter and heir of Fallopit, he had three sons;

1. Richard Fortescue, the eldest, his successor there, from whom the first race of the Fortescues of that place descended; whose heir female conveyed it away by marriage to a younger son of Fortescue of Sprindellston.

2. Sir John Fortescue, of whom hereafter.

3. Richard Fortescue, returned among the gentry in the county of Devon in 12 Hen. VI. and from him, by Alice, his wife, daughter and co-heir to Walter de Windsor, are derived the Fortescues of Potesborne, in the county of Hertford, Fulborn, in Essex, and those of Souldon in the county of Bucks, and those of Suffolk.

We now return to

Sir JOHN FORTESCUE, knight, second son, educated in Lincoln's-Inn. He was first in the reign of king Hen. VII. 1430, called to the degree of serjeant at law, and in the 19th of that reign, constituted king's serjeant. The next year, 1442, he was made lord chief justice of England, being a particular favourite of king Henry VI. to whom he was lastly lord chancellor. He was a person of great abilities, excellent virtues, industry, and very exquisite learning, as several books he wrote testify, particularly De Laudibus Legum Angliæ; but faithfully adhering to his master Henry VI. after the king's overthrow at Tewksbury, he retired to his house at Ebrington, in Gloucestershire, where he died in discontent, and was buried there, being supposed to be ninety years old when he died; and in the chancel of that church a monument was erected against the north wall, with his effigies at full length in his robes, adorned with coat armour, over which was fastened a table of marble by colonel Robert Fortescue, of Filley, with the following inscription:

The eldest son,

HUGH FORTESCUE, seated at Filleigh, &c. in Devonshire, died November 25, 1719, and was buried at Filleigh. This gentleman was twice married; first, to Bridget, sole daughter and heir of Hugh Boscawen, of Tregothan, in Cornwall, (by Margaret, his wife, fourth daughter, and at length coheir to Theophilus, earl of Lincoln, and baron Clinton, the elder sister of whom, Margaret, was married to Robert Rolle, of Heanton, in Devonshire, and dying 1667, had issue Samuel Rolle, whose sole daughter and heir Margaret, in 1724, married Robert, lord Walpole, late earl of Orford, and had issue the present earl. The barony of Clinton by this means was in abeyance.) His issue were three sons and two daughters.

1. Hugh Fortescue, of whom presently.

2. Boscawen Fortescue died unmarried, December 1, 1719, } buried at Filleigh.

3. Theophilus Fortescue died unmarried, March 12, 1745. }

The daughters were,

This gentleman married secondly, Lucy, daughter of Matthew, lord Aylmer, and by her, who died February 18, 1767, aged eighty, and was buried at Filleigh, had issue a daughter, Lucy, married to George Lyttleton, afterwards created baron Lyttleton, and a son,

The eldest son,

(First Lord, and only Earl) HUGH FORTESCUE, on whom his majesty George I. conferred the ancient barony already mentioned, as in abeyance, by writ of summons to parliament, March 16, 1721, took his seat in the house of peers as the ancient barons Clinton, who by several summons had enjoyed the honour from February 6, 1298, 26 Ed. I. On April 11, 1721, he was constituted lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of Devonshire. In 1723, he was appointed one of the lords of the bed-chamber to the king; and on the 27th of May, 1725, elected a knight of the most honourable order of the Bath. LIDDELL, Baron RAVENSWORTH.

THIS family were anciently lords of Liddell-castle, and had the barony of Buff: and have been proprietors of considerable coal works, from the time of their infancy in the counties of Durham and Northumberland.

The first we find, is Thomas de Liddell, who married Margaret, daughter of John de Leyburne, by whom he had issue two sons,

1. Thomas Liddell.
2. George Liddell, who married Eleanor, daughter of John Burn, and had one son, who married a daughter of Robert Barker, esquire, and died without issue.

The eldest son,

THOMAS LIDDELL, espoused Barbara, daughter and coheir of Richard de Strangeways, by whom he had four sons, and two daughters:

1. Francis Liddell, who married Anne, daughter of William de Seagrave; but his line terminated in his son and heir, Bertram, who married Barbara, daughter of Thomas Cramlington, and died issueless.

2. Thomas Liddell, of whom presently.

3. Robert Liddell, } who both died without issue:
4. Percival Liddell, }

The daughters were,

1. Alice, married to Oswald Carr.
2. Barbara, who died young.

The second son,

THOMAS LIDDELL, continued the line: he purchased the manors of Ravensworth, Lamesly, and Eighton, of Sir William Gascoigne, in 1607. He was twice married, first, to Margaret, daughter to John Watson, esquire, by whom he had Thomas Liddell, his son and heir.

And three daughters,

1. Elizabeth, married to William Sherwood, of the county of Middlesex.
2. Alice, to Gawen Salkeld.
3. Eleanor, to Timothy Draper, of Newcastle in Northumberland, gentleman.

His second wife was Jane, daughter of Henry Milford, esquire, by whom he had,

1. Henry Liddell, married to Elizabeth, daughter of William Jennison, esquire, by whom he had a son, Thomas Liddell, his heir.
2. Roger Liddell, married to Grace, daughter of James Clavering, esquire.
3. Barbara, married to Samuel Sanderfon, gentleman.
4. Jane, to Robert Sanderfon, esquire.

The above Thomas dying in 1615, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir THOMAS LIDDELL, who was much esteemed, and had a great interest in the county of Northumberland, which he exerted in defence of Charles I.

defending Newcastle against the Scots; and his majesty, as a mark of his favour, conferred on him the dignity of a baronet, by letters patent, bearing date November 2, 1642. In the time of the rebellion he was taken prisoner, as Whitlock relates, and February 13, 1645, upon a petition of Sir Thomas Liddell, a prisoner, he was admitted to compound. And it appears, that he paid four thousand pounds to the sequestrators for his estate. He was also so obnoxious to the then power, that Sir Thomas Liddell, senior, is mentioned among those in the propositions from the parliament, who were demanded to be removed from his majesty's councils, and to be restrained from coming within the verge of the court; and not, without advice or consent of both houses of parliament, to bear any office or employment. He did not survive those troublesome times, departing this life in 1650; and having married Isabel, daughter of Henry Anderson, esquire, (by a daughter and coheir of ——— Morland) by her he had six sons, and three daughters, viz.

1. Sir Thomas Liddell, knight, who died in 1627, in his father's life-time, leaving issue by Bridget, (who was maid of honour to the queen of Bohemia) daughter of Edward Woodward, of Lee, near Windsor, esquire, one son, Sir Thomas, hereafter mentioned. (She was secondly married to Thomas Heneage, of Battersea, in Surry, Esq; nephew of Sir Thomas Heneage, knight).

2. Francis Liddell, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Tonge, of Denton, in the county of Durham, knight, and had issue Francis.

3. William,

2. Mary, married to Nicholas Cole, of Brancepeth-castle, in Durham, esquire, (afterwards created a baronet).

3. Isabel, who died unmarried.

Sir THOMAS LIDDELL, baronet, (only son of Sir Thomas Liddell, knight) succeeded his grandfather in dignity and estate, in 1650. He was knighted by Charles I. and lived to be very aged, departing this life in the year 1697, leaving issue by Anne his wife, daughter of Sir Henry Vane, the elder, of Raby-castle, in Durham, knight, five sons, and three daughters, viz.

1. Sir Henry Liddell, his successor.

2. Thomas Liddell, who died unmarried.

The eldest son,

Sir HENRY LIDDELL, baronet, who succeeded his father, married Catharine, daughter and heir of Sir John Bright, of Carbrook, in Derbyshire, and Badsworth, in the county of York, baronet, by Catharine, his wife, daughter of Sir Richard Hawksworth, of Hawksworth, knight, and relict of William Lister, of Thornton, esquire, by whom he had issue five sons, and one daughter, viz.

1. Thomas Liddell, who died in 1715, in his father's life-time, having issue by Jane, eldest daughter of James Clavering, of Greencroft, in the county of Durham, esquire; Sir Henry Liddell, successor to his grandfather, now lord Ravensworth; James Liddell, who died aged fourteen; Catharine, who died at twelve years old; ——— Liddell, third son, who died very young; Thomas Liddell, fourth son, seated at Newton, in the county palatine of Durham, who married Margaret, sister of George Bowes, of Gibside, in the said county, and has issue one son, Henry-George Liddell, born November 25, 1749.

2. John Liddell, esquire, who being adopted heir to his grandfather, Sir John Bright, assumed that name, and was possessor of Badsworth. He married Cordelia, daughter of — Clutterbuck, of Hides, in the county of Essex, esquire, and died October 6, 1737, at Badsworth, having had four sons, and three daughters; Thomas, the eldest, married Margaret Norton, niece and heir of the late John Lowther, of Ackworth, esquire, member for Pontefract, in the last parliament of king George I. and left only a daughter, Mary, married to Charles Watson Wentworth, marquis of Rockingham. Henry, Stephen, and John, died without issue; and the three daughters were Ann, Catherine, and Cordelia.

His lordship married, in April 1735, Anne, only daughter of Sir Peter Delme, knight, alderman and lord-mayor of London, by whom he hath issue one daughter, named Anne, married January 29, 1756, to Augustus-Henry, duke of Grafton.

A R C H E R, Baron A R C H E R.

THE ancestor of this noble family came out of Normandy, where some of the name, bearing the same arms, are yet existing. Among the attendants of William the Conqueror * we find,

FULBERT L'ARCHER, and his son

ROBERT L'ARCHER, who was in such estimation for his learning, that the said king appointed him to instruct his son king Henry, (then prince). How well he was rewarded by him, when he came to be king, the following grant fully shews:

"Henricus, Dei gratia, &c. Sciatis nos dedisse & concessisse Roberto L'Archer Magistro meo & hœered suis, &c. Maner. de Aldermanston, Fynchampsted, Coletrope, Spereholt, Chewlewe, &c. in com. Berks." Which manors and lands thereunto belonging, king Henry II. confirmed to his son.

He married Seliit, daughter of Henry de Villiers, sewer to William de Newburgh, earl of Warwick, and had by way of portion a grant of the said Henry's whole lands in Amberflade, in wood and in plain, except the lands that William de Wistancroft held of him, paying two marks of silver and six pennies yearly to him, at the feast of Michaelmas, for all services thereunto belonging. To which deed are witnesses, Roger de Hulehale, William de Hulehale, and others. Also William, earl of Warwick (who died before Henry II.) granted to Roger de Hulehale, the land which Fulque held of him and his heirs in Omberflade; and the said Roger, by his deed (without date) grants the said lands to Seliit, the wife of Robert L'Archer; also his lands that Fulque held in Omberflade, granted to him by William, earl of Warwick. Whereby it is probable that Fulk L'Archer, who came in with the Conqueror, had possession of Omberflade, and that Hulehale and Villers (who were witnesses to several grants of William, earl of Warwick) settled it on Seliit and Robert L'Archer, as aforesaid, and their heirs; for it does not appear how they were related. But by the deed, it is evident the said Robert L'Archer had three sons,

1. William L'Archer, his successor.
2. Richard L'Archer, of Taneworth (as then wrote) voluntarily came into the court of Walleran, earl of Warwick, and abjured and quitted claim to William his brother, of all his right to the whole lands in Taneworth, which Robert L'Archer his father held.

3. John, writing himself son of Robert L'Archer, releases to John, son of William L'Archer, an annual rent which he owed him.

The eldest son,

WILLIAM L'ARCHER, had a confirmation from Henry II. of the manors, lands, &c. granted to his father, Robert L'Archer, by Henry I. and from the deeds of the family, now possessed by lord Archer, it appears that this William obtained several very valuable grants from Walleran de Newburgh, earl of Warwick. By Margery, his wife, he had issue (as appears by deeds) two sons, and two daughters,

1. John L'Archer.
2. Thomas L'Archer.

The daughters were,

1. Joan, wife of Walter, son of Simon de Cherlecote, who survived him, as appears by her deed, writing herself relict of Walter de Cherlecote, of the parish of Tanworth.

2. Isabel, was the wife of William, son of Ralph de Lee, as appears by a deed, wherein her father gives her, in free marriage, lands in Thaneworth.

The eldest son,

JOHN L'ARCHER, being champion to Thomas, earl of Warwick, obtained a special charter from the said earl to himself and his heirs, for freedom to hunt and hawk every where within the territories of Tanworth, except the park; and to exer-

* In Stow's Annals, printed in 1615, is a copy, taken from a table anciently in Battle-abbey, of those who came into England with William, duke of Normandy, in which the name of Archer is inserted; also in an ancient roll, cited by Stow, of the names of the chief noblemen, &c. that accompanied William the Conqueror into England, collected by Thomas Scriven, esquire, the name of Archer occurs. It likewise appears by another antient roll, that one of this family was among those persons of note that were summoned to attend the Conqueror to the reduction of the isle of Ely, when Morcar, earl of Northumberland, and other revolvers, in conjunction with the Danes, had retired thither; where, after a long siege he said earl was taken and committed to prison.

Edward Gwynn, esquire, a learned antiquary in the reign of James I. demonstrates very clearly, that Fulbert L'Archer, with his son Robert, came into England with William the Conqueror; and that the said Fulbert was in England, and of eminent degree, is apparent; by his being witness to several concessions of Geffery de Clinton; a Norman, who was lord treasurer and lord chamberlain to king Henry I. and founder of the monastery of Killingworth, in Warwickshire. And Mr. Gwynn likewise cites several donations of the said Geffery, to which the said Fulbert was a witness, and from them argues that he was near and well acquainted with him. Among other evidences to support his opinion, is the following grant:

"Gaufridus de Clinton, omnibus hominibus amicis suis, Francie et Anglie Salutem, sciant omnes, &c. quod sancte moniales, viz. Seburra et Noemia mea petitione et meo assensu, donaverunt Deo et Ecclesie Sancte Mariæ de Chenilworda, et Canonicis ibi Deo servientibus, Bretford et terram circumjacentem, &c. Test. Fulberto Sagitario, cum aliis, &c." On which it is proper to observe, that the most antient deeds are generally not dated, cise all other liberties belonging to the earl, within Monkspath and Ombrellade; paying unto him and his heirs twelve broad arrow heads, and a couple of capons yearly, at Whitsuntide, as an acknowledgement.

He died in 35 Henry III. as is evident from the inquisition taken after his decease, and he had by Christian his wife (as appears by the deeds of the family) four sons and two daughters; and she survived him: for Richard Warin de Swarnunto releases to William Barnville, and Christian his wife, his whole right that he had in Overton Sancye.

1. John l'Archer.

2. Thomas l'Archer, lord prior of St. John's of Jerusalem, in England, in 14 Edward II. and in 18 Edward II. as lord prior of St. John's, he grants to Sir Ralph de Cobham, knight, and Mary his wife, the manor of Dartford in Kent, dated in Domo Fontis Clericorum juxta London; now called St. John's, Clerkenwell.

3. William l'Archer, was rector of the church of Pilardinton.

4. Robert l'Archer, was rector of the church of Queinton.

The daughters were,

1. Alice.

2. Elie, married to Ralph de Erscote, of Erscote, in Warwickshire.

The eldest son,

JOHN ARCHER, was, at the time of his father's decease, of the age of twenty-one years and upwards. He purchased of William de Olenhale, the manor of Monkspath, adjoining to Ombrellade; and in the deed, which is without date, he is wrote John, son of John l'Archer, of Tane-worth. Which manor was confirmed to him by Robert, son of the said William, dated at Monk-path, in 25 Edward I. It also appears by the deeds, that he married Margery, daughter of Sir William Tracy, of Todington, in Gloucestershire, (ancestor to the present lord viscount Tracy) and that she survived him. In 10 Edward II. writing herself Margery, late wife of John l'Archer, of Tane-worth, she gives to Thomas l'Archer, her son, the custody and marriage of John de Brentone, during his minority, whereof she had a grant on the death of John de Brentone, his father. And it also appears, that she was his widow in 38 Edward I. for then writing herself relict of John l'Archer, she, with John her son and heir, grants to William l'Archer twenty shillings rent per annum; who, by other deeds, appears to be her youngest son. And of the before-mentioned Thomas, I find, that having been in that rebellion with Thomas, earl of Lancaster, in 15 Edward II. his uncle, the prior of St. John's, obtained the year after his pardon from the king.

The eldest son,

JOHN ARCHER, succeeded his father in his estate, before the 28th of Edward I. as by deed appears. In 19 Edward II. Thomas l'Archer, prior of St. John's, styles him his beloved nephew John l'Archer, and releases and quits claim to him, all his right of the wood, with the appurtenances in Gilbertland, in Thaneworth, dated apud Domum nostram Fontis Clericorum, die Mercurii proxima post Festum Sancti Edwardi, fil. Regis Edwardi, decimo nono. He died in the 22d of Edward III. and by Isabel his wife, daughter of Ralph Erscote, of Ercote, in the county of Warwick, esquire, left issue two sons,

1. Thomas le Archer.

2. John Archer.

The said

THOMAS ARCHER, in 25 Edward I. styling himself son and heir of John l'Archer, gave to Elene de Fauconere, and Julian his sisters, one messuage in Thaneworth, which William l'Archer, his uncle, lately held. By his will, bearing date the Thursday next after the feast of St. Thomas the Martyr, 1372, he gave all his cattle and moveable goods to John Charnels, lord of Snakeston, and Margaret his wife (probably his daughter) and bequeathed his manor of Overton-Sancye to Margaret his wife, during her life. She was one of the daughters and coheirs of John Malley, of Malley, in the parish of Mortimers-Cleobury, in the county of Salop; and had by her good possessions in Malley, and other places in the said county, as is evident by the deeds of the family. His issue by her were Thomas his son and heir, Gilbert, second son, and a daughter Joan, married to William Shelly. The said Gilbert Archer, wrote of Tane-worth, had in 16 Richard II. licence from the king to give to the prior and convent of Kenilworth in Warwickshire, one messuage, with divers lands at Hitchenden, in the county of Buckingham, to them and their successors for ever.

THOMAS ARCHER, his eldest son and heir, succeeded his father in 46 Edward III. and rendered himself very conspicuous, as will hereafter appear. For the year after he came to the estate, 47 Edward III. 1373, he was one of the commanders of that army under John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster, which landing at Calais, the duke on the 20th of July, marching from thence with the duke of Bretagne in his company, traversed a great part of France, with intent to draw the French king to send an army against him, whereby the fate of the two kingdoms might be decided in open field; but that politic monarch (as observed by Mr. Barnes) gave strict orders to the constable of France, and other his officers, not on any account to engage with the whole power of the English, but only follow closely to keep them short of provisions. Thereupon one morning the English army having passed Soissons, a city between Picardy and Champagne, six-score English spearmen that were foraging, fell into an ambush of Burgundians and Frenchmen: and thereupon sending advice to the army not far behind, some who were nearest to them advanced to their assistance, when being out-numbered by the French, though the English fought very valiantly, they were over-powered, and most of them taken or slain, very few escaping; and these English commanders were taken prisoners: Sir Matthew Redmayn, Sir Thomas Spencer, Sir Hugh Brudenel, Sir John Bouchier, and ten other knights. And of esquires, the said Thomas Archer, William Dautrey, William St. Quintin, John Meinel, and eight others, all particularly mentioned. Which rencounter happened near to Ouchy le Chasteau, not far from Soissons, on the 20th of October, 1373. And afterwards the duke caused his forces to keep closer together, and sent out stronger parties to forage.

How long this Thomas Archer, esquire, remained a prisoner with the French, does not appear; but he returned to his native country before, or in 49 Ed. III. when meditating on his danger and delivery; he (according to the custom of those times) by his deed, bearing date the Monday next after the feast of the purification of our lady in the said 49 Ed. III. did, for the reverence he bore to the blessed Virgin, as also to St. Thomas the Martyr, and all saints; and for the health of his and his wife's souls, and of the souls of Thomas Archer his father, Margaret, his mother, his ancestors, and heirs, and all the faithful deceased, grant licence to Richard de Mountfort, and others, to amortize certain lands lying in Tanworth, and held of him, for the founding of a chantry in the chapel of our lady, and St. Thomas the Martyr, within the church of Lapworth. In the same year, being in great confidence of Thomas Beauchamp, earl of Warwick, he was again with him in the wars of France, in that expedition on the behalf of John de Montfort, duke of Brittany; where they had great success in taking several castles, till recalled by the king, on a truce concluded with the French. And the said earl, by his grant, bearing date at Worcester, 20 Martij, 1 Rich. II. styling him Dilecto nobis Scutifero Thomæ le Archer, pro bono et laudabili Servitio, quod nobis impendit, et impendet in futurum (as are the words of the charter) conferred on him a yearly rent of C. 1 s. iii d. issuing out of several tenements, of the said earl's, in Worcester, to enjoy, during his life.

This Thomas l'Archer obtained a special pardon, bearing date June 8, 21 Rich. II. for all manner of transgressions, and for whatever he had acted contrary to his allegiance, &c. in behalf of Thomas, late duke of Gloucester, Richard, late earl of Arundel, and of Thomas, earl of Warwick, &c. After which, the same year, he was in commission for assessing and collecting a fifteenth and tenth, then granted to the king in parliament. He wedded Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Cokesey, of Cokesey, in Worcestershire, son of Hugh Cokesey, and of Dionis his wife, one of the four sisters and coheirs of Edmund le Boteler. The said Thomas Archer had a special indulgence from pope Boniface the Ninth, dated the 17th of June, in the fourth year of his pontificate, (which was about the fourth year of our king Henry the Fourth) for such a confessor, as he and his wife should approve of, that might pronounce plenary remission to them of all their sins, whereof, with contrite hearts, they should make confession at the time of their deaths. He, for about three years lay bed-ridden, and died on the feast of Pentecost in 1425, 4 Hen. VI. and was of the age of eighty-four years, at the time of his decease.

He had three sons.

1. Thomas Archer, who died at full age unmarried, in 14 Hen. IV.
2. Richard Archer, who was his heir.
3. Henry Archer, third son, as appeareth by several deeds.

Which

RICHARD ARCHER, was one of those persons of note in Warwickshire, who, in 7 Hen. V. had command to serve the king in person, for defence of the realm; all those then required so to do, being such (as the words of the writ import) that did bear ancient arms from their ancestors. It is not improbable that he was with the king in the 6th year of his reign, when he took Roan, and subdued the dutchy of Normandy, the earl of Warwick being there; and from the connection between the earl and him, it may well be suggested that he was with him; as also in 7 Hen. VII. when he had the aforesaid summons. He took to his first wife, in 3 Hen. V. (being in the thirtieth year of his age) Alice, daughter of William Hugford, of Hugford, and Middleton, in Shropshire, by whom he had issue John Archer, his son and successor. She was heir to William Hugford, her brother, and was first married to Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlecote, knight, and from this lady the families of Archer, and Lucy are both descended. She dying in 8 Hen. V. the said Richard Archer married secondly Margaret, the relict of Thomas Newport, of Ercall, in Shropshire, esquire, ancestor to the earls of Bradford; and thereupon was sheriff of Shropshire, in 19 Hen. VI. He married thirdly, Joan, daughter and heir to William Ley, of Stotfold, in Staffordshire, whereby, in 20 Hen. VI. he was constituted sheriff of that county. In 7 Hen. VI. he had summons to attend the king in France, to be present at his coronation there, Sir Ralph Bruce, knight, Sir Edward Dodingself, and Nicholas Burdet, with others, of the county of Warwick, being likewise summoned at the same time. In 35 Hen. VI. being to attend the king's service at Berwick upon Tweed, under the command of Henry Percy, earl of Northumberland, then captain of the said town and castle, he had a patent of protection, dated June 8, but the king being advertised of his not going on that service, revoked his protection. He lived at Stotfold, in Staffordshire, toward the latter end of his life, as appears from his last will and testament, bearing date January 18, 1469; two years after which he died, aged eighty-five years; the probate of his will bears date June 21, 1471. It appears by the inquisition taken after his decease, that he died possessed of the manors of Bodystockton, and Huggeford, in Shropshire; and of divers messuages, &c. in Middleton, Huggeford, and Bridgenorth, in the same county; the manor of Wylden, the honour of Peverel, the manor of Runcelden, otherwise called Trayles, the manor of Hoe, juxta Bedford; and the manor of Charltons called Pabenhams, in the county of Bedford; and was succeeded in his estate by John, his grandson, viz. son and heir of John Archer, esquire.

Which

JOHN ARCHER, son and heir of Richard, married in 25 Hen. VI. Christian, the widow of Henry Sewal, of London, and sole daughter and heir of Ralph Blacklow, of London, by his wife Joan, the sole daughter and heir of Thomas Coke, alias Mallings, of West-Mallings, in Kent; who was son of Robert Coke. His father, Richard Archer, settled on them his manor of Malley, in Shropshire, and Overton-Sarcy, in Leicestershire. King Henry VI. by his letters patent, dated May 12, in the 8th year of his reign, retained John Archer, esquire, by himself, his factors, or attorneys, to convey in ships all manner of victuals and provisions, for the victualling and safe-keeping of the town and fortress of Calais. Taking part with the earl of Warwick, against king Edward the Fourth, he was slain in battle 1463, aged about forty six years, leaving an only son, John, who succeeded to the estate of his grandfather, as before-mentioned. His wife, surviving him, was married in 3 Ed. IV. to Henry Beech, esquire.

JOHN

JOHN ARCHER, esquire, succeeding his grandfather, married Alice, daughter of Sir Baldwin Mountfort, of Colehill, in the county of Warwick, knight, and sister to Sir Simon Mountfort, knight, who articed with Richard Archer, esquire, for the marriage of his grandson with his said sister, on Saturday after the feast of St. Michael, in 7 Ed. IV. The said John Archer, esquire, was born in 1449.

On the last day of February, in 14 Ed. IV. he covenanted with the high and mighty prince George, duke of Clarence, (as the indenture specifieth) to be retained by the said duke to serve the king, and the same duke, in his retinue, in the dutchy of Normandy, in the realm of France, for a whole year; with three archers well and sufficiently armed and arrayed, taking eighteen pence a day for himself, and sixpence a day for every of his archers, to be paid quarterly by the said duke, or by such as he shall assign, the first quarter on the 19th of March next coming; on which day he was to have notice to make musters of his said archers, and to be ready with them at the time the king made his musters, &c. And the said duke covenants to find sufficient shipping for him and his said archers, their horses, harness, and victuals; and in consideration thereof, to have the third part of the prisoners taken by them; also the preys, goods, and cattle, they should take, except the king adversary to the king of England, and all kings, and kings sons, his adversaries of France.

Before he went over, he, on the 29th of May following, 15 Ed. IV. made his last will and testament; however he lived to return to England; and in 4 Hen. VII. was one of the commissioners concerning the tenths granted to the king by parliament; but further we know not of him, than that he died in his manor-house at Umberlade, aged seventy years and more, on the 4th of December, 1519, 11 Hen. VIII. leaving

JOHN ARCHER, his only son, heir to his estate, who was then thirty-three years of age, and upwards. He married Margaret, daughter of Humphry Stafford, of Bletherwik, in the county of Northampton, esquire; and by her had issue four sons.

1. Richard Archer.
2. Robert Archer.
3. John Archer.
4. Edward Archer.

Also a daughter, Elizabeth.

Edward, his fourth son, was buried in the church of Tamworth, under a flat free-stone, on which is the following inscription:

Here lyeth the body of Edward Archer; whilst he lived, was a friend to the poor. He died the xviith of February, anno Dni 1592. He was of the age of 60 years and 7 months.

The said John died April 16, 12 Hen. VIII. the year after his father's decease, when RICHARD ARCHER, esquire, his eldest son, was sixteen years of age on the feast of Pentecost, in 13 Hen. VIII. and was married in 7 Hen. VIII. before the feast of the purification of our lady, to Maud, second daughter of Nicholas Delamere, of Little Hereford, in the county of Hereford, esquire, who had a son, Edmund Delamere, esquire, that died December 18, in 14 Hen.

VIII. leaving his two sisters his heirs, Susan, of the age of thirty years, the wife of John Dansey, esquire; and Maud, of the age of twenty-six, after married to Richard Archer, of Tanworth, as the inquisition shews, taken on his decease. He had issue by her,

1. Anne, born at Reading, on the vigil of the assumption, 1526.
2. Humphry Archer, born on the day of the invention of the cross, 1527.
3. Miles Archer, born the Monday after the feast of St. John Baptist, 1530.
4. Fulk Archer, born April 14, 1532.
5. Edward Archer, born on Saturday before the feast of Mary, the Virgin, 1533 died unmarried.
6. Francis Archer, born on the feast of St. Matthew, the Apostle, 1534.
7. Winifrede, born on the feast of St. Mark, 1535.

The said Richard Archer, esquire, was escheator of the county of Warwick, in 22 Hen. VIII. He was also in the commission of the peace for the said county; and on the 11th of November, in 32 Hen. VIII. the king reciting by his patent, that in consideration of the good and faithful services of his beloved servant, Richard Archer, one of the esquires of his body, before done to him (who in that age attended on the king's person, as the lords of the bedchamber do at this time) grants to his said servant the office of steward of his manor of Knoll, in the county of Warwick, &c. and in the 34th year of his reign sent his letters to him, to take the musters of all able men, as well horsemen as footmen, that he could furnish both of the king's tenants, inhabiting upon farms whereof he had the stewardship; as also his own servants and tenants dwelling on his own lands, &c. He died on the 5th of October, 1544, aged thirty-nine years and three months, and was buried in the body of Tanworth church. Maud, his wife, surviving him, died at Umberlade, August 24, in the 5th and 6th of Philip and Mary, 1558, and was buried by him.

HUMPHRY ARCHER, esquire, his eldest son, was sixteen years of age on the death of his father; and was married on the 6th of October, in 4 Ed. VI. in the church of Ludlow, to Anne, daughter of Sir Robert Townshend, knight, chief justice of the marches of Wales and Chester, third son of Sir Roger Townshend, of Reynham, in Norfolk, one of the justices of the peace of the Common Pleas, and ancestor to the now lord viscount Townshend. Which Sir Robert was buried in the church of Ludlow, near the high altar, where a noble monument is erected for him, reciting his marriage and issue, whereof Anne, married to the said Humphry Archer, esquire, is said to be his fourth daughter; and was secondly the wife of Edmund Coles, of Leigh, in the county of Worcester, esquire. The said Humphry Archer, esquire, had issue by her four sons, Humphry, who died at the age of eight years; and Arthur, third son, who died an infant. The other two were Andrew Archer, esquire; and John Archer, esquire, who took to wife Eleanor, daughter and heir of Richard Frewin, of Handley, in the county of Worcester, esquire. Also four daughters, whereof one died an infant; Bridget was married to John Bancroft, of Hanbury, in the county of Worcester; Margery, to John Colles, of Hatfield, in Hertfordshire, esquire; and Elizabeth, to John Hereford, of Sulton, in the same county, esquire.

The said Humphry, their father, deceased in the thirty-fourth year of his age at his house at Umberlade, the 24th of October, 1562, in the 4th year of queen Elizabeth, and was buried in the church of Tamworth, leaving his son, Andrew, heir to his estate, who was then but eight years and two months old.

Which

ANDREW ARCHER, esquire, purchased several estates in the reign of queen Elizabeth, and king James the First. He was sheriff of Warwickshire, in 7 Jac. I. and departed this life on the 23d of April, 1629. He was married in November 1580, in the church of Farnborough, to Margaret, daughter of Simon Raleigh, of the said place, in Warwickshire, esquire, who died before him. She lies buried at Tanworth, where on a plate of brass, fixed in a frame of wood, on the north wall of the said church, is her figure in the dress of the times, kneeling in prayer, on a cushion before a desk, with a book opened, and the following inscription:

MEMORIÆ SACRUM.

Margaretæ Archer filiæ Simonis Raleigh de Farnbrough armigeri, quæ fuit mitissima Conjux Andree Archer de Tanworth armigeri, nec non adjutrix pauperum, et ægrotantium dum vixit quæ obiit decimo tertio die Augusti An. 1614.

They had issue three sons,

1. Thomas, who died of a fever, July 24, 1612, in the twenty-fourth year of his age.
2. Simon Archer, who succeeded his father in his estate.
3. Richard Archer, of Neithropp, in the parish of Banbury, in the county of Oxford, esquire, which estate he acquired in right of his wife, Mary, daughter and sole heir of Rowland Bull, esquire, and had issue Rowland Archer.

SIMON ARCHER, esquire, eldest son and heir, born September 21, 1581, was knighted by king James, August 21, 1624. He was sheriff of Warwickshire in 3 Car. I. and served for the borough of Tamworth, in that parliament, which met April 13, 1640, 15 Car. I. He was distinguished for his great learning and accomplishments; and Mr. Dugdale (after Sir William) in his Antiquities of Warwickshire, p. 581, acknowledges his generous assistance in the following lines:

"Sir Simon Archer, knight, being a gentleman much affected to, and very well versed in antiquities, besides the view of his own private evidences (whence what I have expressed of his own family is faithfully asserted) with great freeness and courtesy, imparted unto me very many rarities for the furtherance of this present work; which, through his public respects to this county, having with no small industry and cost been got together, I have, in acknowledgment of the favour, and to his lasting honour, cited in all places where they are made use of." Also Wood, in his Athenæ Oxonienses, Vol. I. p. 504, recites, "That chiefly from the collections of Sir Simon Archer, of Umberlade, in Warwickshire, a person naturally qualified with a great affection to antiquities, William Dugdale, gent. (after knighted) laid a large foundation of that elaborate work, The Antiquities of Warwickshire, &c. London, 1656." Also in his Fæsti Oxonienses, Vol. II. p. 700, in the life of Sir William Dugdale, recites, "The foundation of this book [Antiquities of Warwickshire] was laid on the collection of divers antiquities for the said county, made and gathered by Sir Simon Archer, who dying at Warwick about the beginning of 1668, was gathered to the graves of his fathers in Tanworth church." He married Anne, daughter of Sir John Ferrers, of Tamworth-castle, in the county of Warwick, knight, by whom he had issue

1. Thomas Archer, his son and heir.
 2. Humphry Archer, who died unmarried.
- Also three daughters,
1. Ann, married to Philip Young, of Keneton, in Shropshire.
 2. Elizabeth.
 3. Penelope, wife of Erasmus de Ligne, of Harlaxton, in Lincolnshire, esquire.

Which

THOMAS ARCHER, at the beginning of the troubles of king Charles the First, was a colonel in the parliament army, and raised a troop of horse at his own expence; but afterwards discerning that their proceedings tended to endanger the constitution, he retired from his command, and going beyond seas, did not return till the restoration of king Charles II. when he was elected for the town of Warwick; and in 1685 departed this life, aged sixty-seven. He married Anne, daughter of Richard Leigh, of London, esquire, and by her, who died in 1685, aged fifty-two, had issue three sons.

1. Andrew Archer.
 2. Thomas Archer, on February 7, 1704-5, was appointed groom porter to queen Anne, in which place he was continued by king George I. also by his late majesty; and died without issue May 22, 1743.
 3. Leigh Archer, died unmarried.
- Also two daughters,
1. Elizabeth, wife to Sir Herbert Croft, of Croft-castle, in Herefordshire, baronet.
 2. Frances, wife to Sir Francis Rous, of Rous-Lench, in Worcestershire, baronet.

ANDREW ARCHER, was one of the knights of the shire for the county of Warwick, in the parliaments called in the second of William and Mary, the seventh of William the Third, the three last parliaments of queen Anne, and in the first of George I.

July 7, 1711, he was appointed one of the commissioners to enquire into the numbers and quality of the forces, in her majesty's pay in Spain and Portugal, and to examine the state of the payments and accompts relating to the said forces, and to the garrisons of Portmahon and Gibraltar; and also the accompts of the agents-victuallers, and commissioners of stores in those parts. On which he, together with the others in commission, proceeded to Lieghorn, where they embarked for Portmahon, and from thence to Gibraltar and Portugal: and having executed their commission with great integrity and honour, returned to England in 1713. On their report made to the house of commons of their proceedings, it was referred to the commissioners of the public accounts, to examine amine them, and make their report; and with them it rested, notwithstanding the continual application of the said commissioners to them to make their report. On May 25, 1715, a motion being made in the house of commons that leave be given to bring in a bill to appoint commissioners for taking, examining, and stating the public accounts of the kingdom, Mr. Archer, who then sat in the house as one of the knights for Warwickshire, opposed it; and shewed the inutility of such commissioners, mentioning particularly the behaviour of the former ones, to whom the house of commons had referred the report of the commissioners sent into Spain and Portugal for their observations thereupon; who, notwithstanding the said report contained as great discoveries of embezzlements of public money as ever appeared before the house, yet let them pass in silence; whereupon the motion was rejected by a great majority. On the dissolution of that parliament, March 10, 1720-21, Mr. Archer contenting himself with the honour of having been elected for the county of Warwick in six parliaments, and with the satisfaction of having shewn a steady zeal for the service of his country whilst he sat in parliament, and also in the faithful execution of the commission that he was entrusted with, he then chose to retire from public business, and resided chiefly at his family seat at Umberlade, which he had rebuilt in an elegant manner, according to the modern taste, and there died on December 31, 1741, aged eighty-two. He had also such a regard to the memory of his father, that he erected on the north wall of the chancel in the church of Tanworth, over the family-vault, an handsome monument of black marble, having natural veins and branches of gold colour all over it, with a ball at the top; and at the bottom are figures mourning, and other emblems of mortality, in statuary marble. On the table below is this inscription:

His late majesty, by letters patent bearing date July 14, 1747, 21 Geo. II. was pleased to create him a peer of this realm, by the name, stile, and title, of lord Archer, baron of Umberlade, in the county of Warwick; and on January 14 following, he took his seat in the house of peers.

His lordship in April 1750, was appointed custos rotulorum of the county of Flint, in North-Wales, but resigned soon after the accession of George III. In May 1757, he was elected recorder of the city of Coventry.

Having married Catherine, daughter (and co-heir with the present lady Sandys) of Thomas Tipping, of Wheerfield, Oxfordshire, baronet, (by Ann, his wife, daughter and heir of Thomas Cheke, esquire, by Letitia, his wife, daughter and at length sole heir of Edward Russel, brother of William, first duke of Bedford of that name, and sister and heir of Edward Russel, earl of Orford) he had issue two daughters.

1. Catharine, married August 11, 1750, to Other Lewis Windsor, earl of Plymouth.

2. Ann, married March 15, 1756, to Edward Garth Tournour, of Shillingley-park, in Suffex, created lord Winterton, in Ireland.

Also a son,

THIS noble family were originally from Picardy, and their common ancestor accompanied William the Conqueror into England, 1066. His posterity settled at Haugh-Heale, in Cumberland; where they took the name of Ponsonby from the lordship of Ponsonby, and had the office of barber to the king of England conferred on them, (at the same time as the earl of Arran's ancestors had that of butler) to which office the arms of the family allude. The first entered in the visitation of the aforesaid county, by the heralds is,

JOHN PONSONBY* of Haugh-Heale, who had issue

SIMON PONSONBY, of the same place, whose son

HENRY PONSONBY, by Dorothy, a daughter of — Sandys of Rottenden, Cumberland, had issue two sons,

1. John Ponsonby.

2. Henry Ponsonby, who together, with his elder brother went over to Ireland, during the distressed condition of the protestants, by the popish rebellion, in the reign of Charles I. where in 1649, on Oliver Cromwell's being appointed to reduce the rebels in that kingdom, they engaged in the service, as officers, under his command. This gentleman having lands assigned to him, for his services in the county of Kerry, had the same confirmed to him under the acts of settlement, June 16, 1666, and became seated at Stacktown, and Crotto, in that county. He married Rose, daughter to Thomas Weldon, of St. John's Bower, near Athy, in the county of Kildare, by whom he had seven sons, and eleven daughters, dying in 1681, in the sixty-first year of his age. Three of his sons, and seven daughters, lived to maturity. His eldest son, John Ponsonby, esquire, married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Holmes, brother to Sir Robert Holmes, of the Isle of Wight, but left no issue; and Henry, his third son, died unmarried. Thomas, his second son, was seated at Crotto, and ancestor to the family there.

Sir JOHN PONSONBY, the elder brother, aged 59, in 1665, by his conduct and valour in the suppressing of the rebellion, gained not only the preferment of colonel of a regiment of horse; but his other qualifications rendered him worthy the friendship of several noble persons. Being a widower, and having several children, he settled his estate in Cumberland upon them he left in England, from whom the present family in Cumberland is descended. After the reduction of the kingdom of Ireland, he was one of the commissioners for taking the depositions of the protestants concerning the murders committed by the Irish, during the course of the war; and was sheriff of the counties of Wicklow, and Kildare in 1654. When king Charles II. was restored, he was appointed, March, 19, 1660, a commissioner for executing his majesty's declaration of the 30th of November for the settlement of Ireland. He represented the county of Kilkenny in the first parliament, called May 9, 1661; had two grants of lands under the acts of settlement; and on the 15th of July, 1679, an abatement was made of the quit-rents, imposed on his estate by the said acts; and by acquiring many debentures, and making other purchases, he left a considerable estate. He lies buried in the church of Fidowne near Belsborough, with this memorial:

Here lieth the body of Sir JOHN PONSONBY of Belsborough, who departed this life A. D. 1678, in the 60th year of his age.

His wife was Elizabeth, eldest daughter to Henry lord Folliott, of Ballyshannon, widow of Richard, son and heir to Sir Edward Wingfield, of Powerscourt, and also relict of Edward Trevor, brother to viscount Dungannon, by whom he had

* Mr. Collins observes, "some particulars in the last will and testament of Sir Roger Ponsonby, clerk, parson of the church of Chekinden, in Oxfordshire, who mentions several of his brethren, and by the date of his will, October 28, 1554, were of course living in the reigns king Henry VIII. and Edward VI. He was seized of the moiety of the manor of Chekinden, which he orders to be sold for each performance of his will: he mentions his being sick when he made it, but of sound mind, &c. and the probate shews he died soon after. He orders his body to be buried in the church of Chekinden, and leaves to the parishioners theretwenty pounds, and twenty pounds for a yearly dirge, and the mass of five wounds to be said in the church where his father and mother lie, and that a stone be laid over his father's grave. He had several servants to whom he leaves legacies; and was a benefactor for the mending of highways, and gave several charitable bequests. He bequeaths to his brother, Sir Matthew Ponsonby, thirteen pounds six shillings and eight pence. To his brother Edmund Ponsonby, ninety-six pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. To six of his brother John Ponsonby's children twenty pounds each. He constitutes his brother Edmund Ponsonby, and two others, his executors, to whom he leaves the residue of his fortune; and in witness thereof set his seal and sign manual, the day and year aforesaid.

These he mentions, as it is probable Sir Matthew Ponsonby was the head of the family; and being possessed of an estate, he left him the smallest legacy as an acknowledgment.

two sons, Sir Henry, and William; and a daughter Elizabeth, married in 1673 to Richard Boyle, lord viscount Shannon.

Sir HENRY PONSONBY, knight, the eldest son, October 1, 1674, married Dorothy, daughter to captain Shaw, of Drogheda; but dying without issue, in the reign of king William, the estate devolved on his brother.

WILLIAM PONSONBY, of Bessborough, esquire, who served in parliament for the county of Kilkenny during the reign of queen Anne, and to the time he was created a peer. In September 1715, he was sworn of the privy council, and by privy seal dated at St. James's, July 28, and by patent at Dublin, September 11, 1721, was created lord Bessborough, baron of Bessborough, in the county of Kilkenny; and took his seat on the 23d of that month in the house of lords. The preamble to his patent sets forth his own and his father's services, and the cause of their coming into Ireland, as follows:

"Whereas ancientness of extraction, valour, unshaken loyalty, and personal qualification, do justly claim favour and esteem of good and equitable princes: and we having with pleasure observed, that our trusty and well-beloved William Ponsonby, esquire, is deservedly recommended to us by all these titles, being descended of noble ancestors of Picardy in France, who at the Norman invasion came into Great-Britain, and established themselves in the county of Cumberland; whence his father removed about eighty years ago, into the kingdom of Ireland, during the distressed condition of the protestant interest there, occasioned by the popish rebellion and their cruel massacres: in the suppressing of which, his valorous actions did not only gain him the preferment of a colonel, and the honour of knighthood; but his other personal qualifications rendered him worthy the alliance of many peers of the realm. Nor are the qualities of the son less eminent than those of the father: with the same good disposition has he, from his tender youth, rose up an assertor of the liberties, and legal government, of his native country; signalled himself early, and for many years, in the army; particularly in the resolute defence of Londonderry, when the common cause was at the last gasp. Having attended that whole war, he was raised to the rank of a colonel, and afterwards served constantly in parliament, strenuously asserting there, not only the publick good, and the established religion, but likewise our succession to the crown, against all the attempts made to obstruct it; which laudable example, six of the sons and grandsons, at once, virtuously imitated in the same senate.

"Now, that so many good and eminent services may not remain unregarded, and that others may be encouraged to gain the rewards due to merit, we are resolved to raise him, who has so well deserved of us, and the commonwealth, to the dignity of a peer. Know, &c."

He was further advanced by privy seal, dated December 30, and by patent, February 28, 1722, to the dignity of viscount Duncannon, with the annual creation fee of twenty marks. He married Mary, sister to Brabazon Moore, of Ardee, in the county of Louth, esquire, and both are buried in the church of Fidowne, with these inscriptions to their memory:

BEAUCLERK, Baron V E R E.

WE refer our readers to Vol. I. p. 183, & seq. for an account of the ancestry of (Present Lord) VERE BEAUCLERK, third son of Charles Beauclerk, duke of St. Albans; he was born July 14, 1699, and entered early into a maritime life, and distinguished himself in several commands.

In 1721, his lordship was captain of the Lyme man of war, and, after touching at Lisbon, sailed to Gibraltar, which he left September 31, 1722, and from thence sailed to Leghorn for intelligence; also, after being at Genoa, departed from thence on the 7th of December, O. S. to cruize in the Mediterranean, and the Streights. On the 11th of January, N. S. 1723, his lordship entered the harbour of Lisbon; and the same year returned into the Mediterranean; where cruizing for some time, and leaving Portmahon, he arrived from thence at Lisbon, February 19, N. S. 1724. He afterwards sailed again up the Mediterranean to Genoa, from whence he returned to Lisbon the 5th of July, 1724; also, having his station in the Mediterranean, he came from Portmahon, October 21, the same year; and continuing on that station, sailed from Lisbon for Genoa in January N. S. 1726, from whence he returned after several cruises to Lisbon, August 6, 1726. On the 12th he put to sea again for Gibraltar: and on the first of September following, joined Sir John Jennings's squadron, cruizing with him off cape Stellary. After continuing in the mouth of the Streights in October and November, he arrived at Lisbon the 8th of December from Gibraltar. We have this further account of his lordship, in our Gazette, No. 6596: "Whitehall, July 8, 1727. Yesterday arrived the lord Vere Beauclerk, commander of his majesty's ship the Lyme, dispatched the 18th instant from Gibraltar by Sir Charles Wager, with an account count that he having received advice from Mr. Vaneermeer, at Madrid, of the signing of the preliminaries, had ordered the ships under his command to forbear all acts of hostility; the Spaniards at Cadiz, and in the bay of Gibraltar, having done the like. With the lord Vere arrived also the lord Henry Beauclerk, and the lord Charles Hay; the latter being sent by the earl of Portmore, governor of Gibraltar, with advice that a cessation of arms had been agreed on between the said governor and the conde de las Torres, general of the Spanish army." His lordship after commanded the Hampton-court, one of the squadron under Sir Charles Wager, that sailed from Spithead, July 14, 1741, to introduce the Spanish garrisons into Tuscany. Before Sir Charles left Leghorn he sent lord Vere to the grand-duke of Florence, with his compliments of excuse to him for not waiting on him in person, on account of the advanced season's making it necessary to hasten his departure home. And on the 10th of December, 1731, Sir Charles, with part of his squadron (amongst which was the Hampton-court) arrived in twenty days at St. Helen's, from Gibraltar.

His lordship having been one of the commodores of his majesty's navy, he resigned it, when on the 7th of March, 1737-8, he was constituted one of the commissioners for executing the office of lord high admiral of England and Ireland. He continued in the office of commissioner of the admiralty, with some intermissions, till he voluntarily resigned in July 1749. After gradual promotions, his lordship was constituted admiral of the blue squadron of his majesty's fleet in 1748. In 1727, he was elected member for the borough of New-Windfor, in the first parliament called by George II. In the ensuing parliament, called in 1734, he sat for the same place. In that called 1741, which was the ninth of Great Britain, he was returned for Plymouth; for the same place also in 1747. By letters patent, bearing date March 28, 1750, he was created a peer of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Vere, of Hanworth: which title his lordship chose in memory of his maternal ancestors, Vere, earls of Oxford, of which his grandfather was the twentieth. His lordship took his seat in the house of lords two days after his patent was signed.

His lordship in 1761, was appointed lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum for the county of Berks, in the place of his nephew, George, duke of St. Albans, who resigned.

In April, 1736, he married Mary, eldest daughter and coheir of Thomas Chambers, of Hanworth, Middlesex, by his wife, Mary, sister of James, earl of Berkeley, and by her ladyship has had issue four sons.

1. Vere, born 1737,
2. Chamber, born 1738,
3. Sackville, born April 21, 1739,
4. Aubrey.

} died young.

Also two daughters, Elizabeth, born July 7, 1741, died young; and Mary, born December 4, 1743, was married October 2, 1762, to Charles Spencer, brother to his grace George, duke of Marlborough.

His eldest son,

AUBREY BEAUCLERK, was born June 3, 1740, and in 1761, was returned member of parliament for Thetford, in Norfolk; and in 1768, for Aldborough, in Yorkshire; and on May 4, 1763, married Catharine, eldest daughter of William Ponsonby, earl of Bessborough, by whom he has issue

MURRAY, Baron MANSFIELD.

WE refer our readers, for the ancestry of this noble lord's family, to Vol. II. pages 429 and 430, in the latter of which, they will find that

Sir WILLIAM MURRAY, who died 1509, had four sons, and that the third of them

Sir ANDREW MURRAY, from whom issued this younger branch of that noble family, was seated at Arngosk. He had that estate with many others, as Balvaird, Kippo, &c. in right of his wife Margaret, daughter, and sole heir of James Berclay, of Kippo, &c. She bore to him a daughter, Elizabeth, married to Sir Archibald Douglas, of Kilspeindie; and two sons; the youngest, John enjoyed the estate at Conland, to him and to his heirs; but it afterwards reverted to the elder branch. The eldest son,

Sir DAVID MURRAY, succeeded to the estates of Arngosk, Balvaird, &c. and marrying Janet, daughter of John, lord Lindsay, of Byres (ancestor to the present earl of Crawford) by Helen his wife, daughter of John Stuart, earl of Athole, by her had three sons,

1. Sir Andrew Murray, whose male line became extinct, in his grandson, A. D. 1624.
2. Sir William Murray, of whom presently.
3. David Murray, of Airdith.

He dying 1559, was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir ANDREW MURRAY, who died 1576, having been twice married, first to Margaret Ross, daughter of Ninian, second lord Ross, of Halhead, but by her had no children; and secondly to Janet Graham, daughter of William, second earl of Montrose, by Janet Keith, his wife, daughter of William, third earl marshal.

Sir Andrew Murray, by his last lady, had four sons,

1. Sir Andrew Murray, his heir.
2. Sir David Murray, of Gospitrie, of whom afterwards, as lord Scoon and viscount Stormont.
3. Robert Murray, who, being bred an ecclesiastic, was presented to the deanry of Dunkeld, by king James VI. and died 1604, without issue.
4. Sir Patrick Murray, of Byn and Drumcain, who was lieutenant of king James VI's guard; but being a gentleman of extraordinary talents, and extensive genius, he displayed likewise the capacity of a churchman and politician, as well as a soldier, and always with merited applause. This Sir Patrick died A. D. 1604, and leaving no issue by Isabel, his wife, daughter of ——— Blair, of Balthyock, in Perthshire, his estate devolved on Sir David Murray of Gospitrie, his brother aforesaid.

Sir ANDREW MURRAY, the eldest son, succeeded at the death of his father, in 1576, to the estates of Arngosk, Balvaird, Kippo Park, &c. and was one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber to king James VI. by whom he was highly respected. Between the years 1572 and 1588, he obtained divers charters, under the great seal of Scotland, and entailed his lands to himself in life-rent, and to Andrew his son, and his heirs male, in fee; which failing, to Sir David Murray, of Gospitrie, his brother, and the heirs male of his body; which failing, to his brother, Robert and Patrick, respectively, and their male heirs; and in default of such, to his uncle, David Murray, of Airdith, and his heirs male, omitting Sir William Murray, of Letter-Bannachy, the said David's elder brother, who was, however, by a subsequent deed, put in his proper place of succession. This Sir Andrew Murray's wife was Margaret, daughter of John Crichton, of Strathurd, lineally descended from James Crichton, of Cairns, son, by the first marriage, to George Crichton, who was created earl of Caithness, in 1450, and acted as admiral of Scotland under king James II. but, dying in 1455, the peerage became extinct, as it was limited to his issue male by his second wife, who only bore him a daughter, Janet Crichton, wife of Robert, third lord Maxwell, ancestor to the earls of Nithsdale. Sir Andrew, by his said wife, Margaret Crichton, was father of a son and heir, another Sir Andrew Murray; and of a daughter, Anne, married to Sir Mungo Murray, of Drumcain, fourth son of John, first earl of Tullibardin, of whom afterwards, as second viscount Stormont.

Sir Andrew Murray departed this life in the year 1604, and was succeeded by his only son,

Sir ANDREW, who was the fourth of that name, and and the first of his family who designed himself of Balvaird, instead of Arngosk. By charter dated May 4, 1604, he entailed his land of Balvaird, Arngosk, Pitlochrie, Conland, &c. to himself and the heirs male of his own body; which failing, to his uncle Sir David Murray, Gospitrie, and the issue male of his body; which failing to his uncle, Mr. Robert Murray, and the heirs male of his body; which failing, to his cousin, David Murray, of Balgonie, son and heir of Sir William Murray, of Letter-Bannachy, and the heirs male of his body; and in failure thereof, to William Murray, son to David Murray, of Airdith, his uncle, and the issue male of his body. Sir Andrew wedded Margaret, daughter of Sir William Mentieth, of Caris: but dying without issue, 1624, his estate according to the said entail, devolved upon his uncle, and next heir male.

Sir DAVID MURRAY, of Gospitrie, aforesaid, who was bred at the court of king James VI. and being a man of uncommon capacity, and of strict honour and integrity, was in great favour with his sovereign, who first made him cup-bearer, then master of the horse, and captain of the guard; and, having conferred on him the honour of knighthood, appointed him comptroller of the revenue, in 1599. He attended the court from the royal palace of Falkland to Perth, on the memorable fifth of August, 1600, and was very instrumental in saving the king from the horrid and audacious attack made by John Ruthven, third and last earl of Gowrie, and his brother Alexander, upon his majesty's sacred person. He was likewise very active with his cousin, William Murray, second earl of Tullibardin, in quelling the townsmen of Perth, who, understanding that the said earl of Gowrie, their provost, was killed in his traiterous attempt, rose in a tumultuous manner, threatening destruction to the authors of his fall; but were pacified by the prudence and resolution of this Sir David, who thereupon returned with the king to Falkland. His majesty, soon after, bestowed upon him the estate of Ruthven (now called Huntingtower) forfeited to the crown by the earl of Gowrie's treason. King James likewise granted him all the lands appertaining to the abbey of Scoon, of which Gowrie had been commendator; and erected the same into a temporal barony, to be called the lordship of Scoon, with a seat and vote in parliament thereunto annexed. Sir David was solemnly invested therewith, on April 7, 1604, pursuant to a commission directed for that purpose to Alexander Seton, first earl of Dunfermline, and chancellor of Scotland; William Douglas, tenth earl of Angus, John, sixteenth earl of Sutherland, George Keith, fifth earl marshal, Alexander Livingston, first earl of Linlithgow, John, sixth lord Fleming (afterwards created earl of Wigtown) James, fourth lord Drummond (in the sequel promoted to the dignity of earl of Perth) and John Maitland, second lord Thirlestane (afterwards honoured with the title of earl of Lauderdale) being witnesses to the ceremony. The said erection was confirmed by act of parliament, 1606; about which time his lordship got a grant of the office of Ranger of the Lowmounds, the forestry of the woods, and the old castle-stead of Falkland. His lordship, having some time after that made a new entail of his estate and titles, obtained a charter of ratification from king James VI. dated October 14, 1616; according to which the succession was thus established,

1. To the said David, lord Scoon, and the heirs male of his body.
2. To Sir Andrew Murray, of Balvaird, his nephew, and the heirs male of his body.
3. To Sir Mungo Murray, of Drumcarn (before-mentioned) and the heirs male of his body.
4. To Sir John Murry, of Lochmaben (afterwards earl of Annandale) and the heirs male of his body.
5. To Gilbert Murray, eldest lawful son of David Murray, of Balgonie, and the heirs-male of his body.
6. To Mr. Andrew Murray, second lawful son of the said David Murray, of Balgonie, and the heirs male of his body.
7. To William Murray, son of Sir William Murray, of Clermonth, and the heirs male of his body (now represented by Sir James Murray, receiver-general of the customs in Scotland.) And,
8. In failure of male issue of the said persons aforesaid, to the lawful and nearest heirs of the said David, lord Scoon, they bearing the surname and arms of Murray, of the family of Balvaird.

His lordship was several times the king's commissioner to the general assembly of the Scottish church, and, by his prudence and sagacity, got several things passed there, relating to a nearer conformity of the church of Scotland with that of England (which his majesty very much desired) notwithstanding the opposition of the more rigid members of the assembly. He likewise exerted himself in getting those tenets (commonly called *the five articles of Perth) ratified in parliament, A. D. 1621; and being dispatched by James Hamilton, second marquis of Hamilton, and first earl of Cambridge, to London, with an account of the proceedings thereon, king James was so well satisfied with his services, that on February 22, 1622, he created him viscount Stormont, with limitation of that dignity to him and the heirs male of his body; and in failure thereof, to the several persons respectively mentioned in the aforesaid charter of ratification, dated October 14, 1616. Sir Andrew Murray, of Balvaird, the second person, and Gilbert Murray, the fifth person, in the foregoing act of entail, both dying without issue, in or about 1624, the viscount of Stormont, in 1625, entailed the lands of Stormont and Scoon (acquired by himself) upon the aforesaid Sir Mungo Murray, of Drumcarn, and the heirs male of his body; which failing, upon the beforementioned John, earl of Annandale, and the heirs male of his body; and in default thereof, upon Mr. Andrew Murray, aforesaid, then minister at Abdie in Perthshire, his own heir male, upon whom he immediately settled the estates of Balvaird and Arngosk, the ancient inheritance of the family. This eminent nobleman, who acted in his several offices and trusts with great circumspection and fidelity, wedded Elizabeth, daughter of Sir David Beaton, of Creich in Fifeshire, but by her had no issue; and departing this life, on August 27, 1631, had sepulture in the church of Seoon, where a marble monument, of curious workmanship stands erected to his memory, with his effigies in full proportion.

The titles of viscount Stormont and lord Scoon, with the lands thereunto belonging, devolved, according to the two last deeds of entail, upon his nephew-in-law, the before-mentioned

Sir MUNGO MURRAY, of Drumcairn, who, during the life of his predecessor, was stiled master of Stormont, as if he had been his son instead of presumptive heir, and in 1626 got a charter, under the great seal, Kentigerno Murray, Magistro de Stormont, terratum baronia de Balwhidder, &c. This Mungo, second viscount Stormont, &c. was twice married; first to Anne, only daughter of Sir Andrew Murray, of Arngosk Balvaird, &c. by Margaret Crichton, his wife (as already taken notice of) and, secondly, to Anne, second daughter of John, first earl of Wemyss, and widow of Alexander Lindsay, of Edzell. However, he died about May, 1642, without children; and the peerage, with the estate, devolved upon

James Murray, second earl of Annandale, son of John Murray of Lochmaben (who in 1640 died) first earl of Annandale, mentioned before in the deeds of entail. This James Murray enjoyed the honours and estate of Stormont, &c. till December, 1658, when he departed this life without issue, and the titles of viscount Stormont, and lord Scoon, went, according to the settlements, to Andrew Murray, before-mentioned, the undoubted heir male, as being lineally descended from Sir William Murray, of Letter-Bannachy, second son of Sir David Murray, of Arngosk, Balvaird, &c. by Janet, his wife, daughter to John, sixth lord Lindsay, of Byres.

The said

Sir WILLIAM MURRAY, of Letter-Bannachy, in the county of Perth, obtained that estate, in 1553, from his brother, Sir Andrew Murray, of Arngosk, Balvaird, &c. father of Sir David Murray, the first viscount of Stormont, &c. and also, in 1574, was seized of the lands of Auchloy, &c. This Sir William Murray, married —, daughter of — Pitcairn, of that ilk, and by her was father of two sons, viz. Andrew Murray, who died before him without issue, and David Murray, his heir. By the same lady he had also three daughters,

1. —, who was wedded to — Balcanguel, of Balcanguel, and had issue.

2. —, who was married to — Murray, younger, of Ochertyre, and had children.

3. —, the wife of — Kinross, of Cambusnethan, in Strathallan, now part of the estate of Cromlix.

Sir William was succeeded by his second but only surviving son,

DAVID MURRAY, who, in the before recited settlement of October 14, 1616, is stiled of Balgony, and on other occasions was also designed of Kippo, and Byn. Of the latter he got a charter under the great seal, A. D. 1626, wherein he is denominated David Murray, late of Kippo, which he had acquired from the family of Balvaird, but sold, 1623, to David Philip, M. D. He wedded Agnes, daughter of — Moncrief, of Moncrief, and by her (besides a daughter, Catharine, who was married to John Arnot, of Pittorvie, and left issue) had four sons,

1. Gilbert Murray, his heir.

2. Andrew Murray, continuator of the line.]

3. William Murray.

4. David Murray.

GILBERT MURRAY, the eldest son, succeeded his father, and was the fifth person mentioned in the entail of October 14, 1616; but dying without issue, his next brother,

ANDREW MURRAY, (afterwards lord Balvaird) the sixth person, whose name occurs in the said entail, became heir. This Andrew Murray, being a younger son, was bred to the church, and in 1618, was presented to the parsonage of Abdie, in the county of Fife. According to the settlement made by his cousin, David, the first viscount Stormont, A. D. 1625, he succeeded to the lands of Balvaird and Arngosk, at his death, in 1631: and got a charter, under the great seal of Scotland, dated July 14, 1632, entailing his estate (which was then very considerable) upon himself, and the heirs male of his own body; which failing, upon his next brother, William, and the heirs male of his body; and, in default thereof upon his youngest brother, David, and the heirs male of his body. He received the honour of knighthood at the coronation of king Charles I, at Edinburgh, in June, 1633; and in 1636, got a charter, under the great seal, of the lands of Pitlochrie, &c. As he was a man of great piety, prudence, and discretion, he was thought a proper person to be a member of the general assembly at Glasgow, in 1638, where he exerted his utmost endeavours to allay the heats and animosities that were so vehemently agitated against episcopacy. His conduct was so much approved of by king Charles I. that, when his majesty, in hopes of cementing all differences, went, in 1641, to hold a parliament in Scotland, he created him lord Balvaird, by letters patent dated November 14, 1641. He was, in May, 1642, found heir of entail and provision to Mungo, second viscount Stormont, aforesaid, in the lands of Stormont. His lordship married lady Elizabeth, fifth daughter of David Carnegie, first earl of Southesk: and by her was father of five sons,

1. David Murray, his heir, afterwards viscount Stormont.

2. Sir Andrew Murray, of Pitlochrie, ancestor to the Murrays of Murray-hall, in Perthshire.

3. James Murray, an eminent physician, whose daughter and heir was wife to Robert Carmichael, of Balmblae in the county of Fife, esquire.

4. Sir John Murray, of Drumcairn, a gentleman of great parts and learning, who being bred to the law, and eminent for his knowledge and integrity, was made one of the lords of session, or senators of the college of justice; in which station he continued till the revolution in 1688-9, having faithfully discharged the duties of a magistrate and judge, while he sat on the bench; and at his death left a daughter, Elizabeth, married to Francis Stewart, eighth earl of Murray.

5. William Murray, who also made a great figure as a lawyer, being reckoned one of the best advocates of his time.

Lord Balvaird had also, by the same lady, three daughters,

1. Catharine, who died unmarried.

2. Barbara, wedded to Patrick, ninth lord Gray, of Foulis.

3. Marjory

3. Marjory, the wife of Sir Alexander Gibson, of Durie, whose only daughter was married to John Murray, of Polmaise, in the county of Stirling, esquire. This Andrew Murray, lord Balvaird, died on September 24, 1644, and was succeeded by his eldest son, DAVID MURRAY, second lord Balvaird who adhered to the interests of the royal family, with inflexible fidelity, in the worst times: and therefore suffered great hardships, and in 1654, was fined by Oliver Cromwell in the sum of 1,500l. sterling. Upon the death of James Murray, (second earl of Annandale) third viscount Stormont, before mentioned, 1658, he succeeded to the dignities of viscount Stormont, and lord Scoon, according to the charter of ratification granted in 1616, and the patent in 1622. He was found heir of entail to Mungo Murray, second viscount Stormont, aforesaid, in the lands of Scoon; the seizin obtained by James, third viscount Stormont, already mentioned, as heir to the said Mungo, having been declared void by a decree of the court of Session, on account of his contracting debts contrary to the provisions in the entail made by David, first viscount Stormont; and those debts were also declared void and null, by the said decree dated February 27, 1662. In 1663, he got a charter, under the great seal, of the lands of Reidpark: and on August 22, 1666, got another charter, under the great seal, containing a novo damus, of his whole estate and lands, in the counties of Perth, Fife, and Dumfries, and erecting them into an entire and free viscounty, to be called the viscounty of Stormont, lordship of Balvaird, Cockpool, Lochmaben, &c.

This David, second lord Balvaird, and fourth viscount Stormont, married lady Elizabeth, eldest daughter of James Carnegie, second earl of Southesk, and relict of James Murray, third viscount Stormont aforesaid. By that lady, he had a son, David Murray, his heir.

Also two daughters,

1. Catharine, who was wedded to William Keith, second earl of Kintore, (grandson to William Keith, sixth earl marischal) and by him was mother of two sons, John, third earl of Kintore, who died without issue, and William, fourth earl of Kintore, at whose death, also without issue, the title became extinct; and likewise of two daughters, viz. lady Catharine, married to David Falconer, fourth lord Halkerton, by whom she had a numerous issue; and lady Jane Keith.

2. Amelia, who died unmarried.

His lordship departed this life, in July, 1668, and was succeeded by his only son,

DAVID MURRAY, fifth viscount Stormont, and third lord Balvaird, a nobleman of excellent natural and acquired endowments, strict honour, and unstained probity. He wedded Marjory, daughter of David Scot, of Scotstarvit (heir male of the noble family of Buccleuch) by Nichola his wife, eldest daughter of Sir John Grierson, of Lag, whose mother, Margaret, was eldest daughter of Sir James Murray, of Cockpool, elder brother of John, first earl of Annandale, already taken notice of; in consequence of which match, the present viscount Stormont is heir of line to the Murrays of Cockpool, earls of Annandale, &c. By the said Marjory, he had six sons,

1. David, his successor.

2. James, who served in the fourth parliament of Great Britain, and last of queen Anne, for the boroughs of Inverary, Kintore, &c. and was returned for the next, being the first called by king George I.

3. John, who died young.

4. William, now lord Mansfield, of whom more fully.

5. Charles, } who both died without issue.

6. Robert, }

His lordship by the same lady, had likewise Eight daughters,

1. Catharine, who died unmarried.

2. Elizabeth, who also died unmarried.

3. Marjory wedded to colonel John Hay, of Cromlix, third son of Thomas, sixth earl of Kinnoul, and brother to George-Henry, first lord Hay, of Pedwardin, and seventh earl of Kinnoul.

4. Emelia, married to Sir Alexander Lindsay, of Evelick in the county of Perth, baronet.

5. Margaret.

6. Jane, who died unmarried.

7. Nichola.

8. Mary, who died unmarried.

This David, viscount Stormont, died in November, 1731, and was succeeded, in dignity and estate, by his eldest son, David, sixth viscount Stormont, who distinguished himself by his extensive learning and knowledge, as well as by his great integrity. This noble peer espoused Anne, daughter and sole heir of John Stuart, of Innernytie, esquire, and by her ladyship had two sons, and two daughters, viz. David, now viscount Stormont; James; Anne, and Marjory.

David, the eldest son, abovementioned, succeeding his father in 1748, became seventh viscount Stormont. In the reign of George I. he was envoy extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the court of Poland; and after the accession of his late majesty, he was nominated one of the ambassadors to the proposed congress at Augsburg; and, after the conclusion of the peace, was sworn of his majesty's privy-council, and constituted ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the court of Vienna.

His lordship married Henrietta-Frederica, daughter of Henry, count Bunnan (of the ancient family of the Bunnans of the branch of Puchem, privy counsellor to the elector of Saxony, and Saxon envoy at the courts of London and Vienna) by his lady, a daughter of Gustavus, baron of Ragknitz, by his lady, mademoiselle Schonberg, descended of the same family with the famous Frederick Schonberg, created duke of Schonberg, marquis of Harwich, &c. in England, A. D. 1689: and by her ladyship had two daughters, Elizabeth-Mary, and Henrietta-Anne. Her ladyship died at Vienna, on March 16, 1766; leaving Elizabeth-Mary, her only surviving child, Henrietta-Anne having died before.

Having thus deduced the account of the family of the viscount Stormont, it now remains to treat of William, lord Mansfield, fourth son to David, the fifth viscount.

(Present Lord.) WILLIAM, lord Mansfield, was educated at Westminster-school. After going through the usual course of study there, he went, in 1724, to Christ-church college in the university of Oxford. He continued a student in that house for several years. In 1728, he made a celebrated lebrated exercise in verse, to which the first prize was adjudged; which shewed, that he might have excelled in poetry, if he had not applied to better employment, which Mr. Pope alludes to in some lines.

He travelled abroad; and afterwards studied the law in Lincoln's-Inn, London, of which society he was a member: and in 1731, he was called to the bar. In September, 1738, he married Elizabeth Finch, one of the daughters of Daniel, sixth earl of Winchelsea, and second earl of Nottingham; but has no issue.

In November, 1742, he was appointed solicitor general.

In 1743, he was chosen member for Borough-bridge, in the room of major-general Tyrrel, deceased, and continued to serve for the same place from that time, till he went to the house of peers; and took a principal and most distinguished part in all the debates of consequence.

In April, 1754, he was constituted attorney-general.

On November 8, 1756, he was nominated lord-chief justice of England; and immediately after he was sworn (the same day) into that office, the great seal was put to a patent (which had before passed the proper offices) creating his lordship baron of Mansfield, in the county of Nottingham, with limitation to the heirs male of his body; and his lordship was sworn of the privy-council, in a day or two after he was constituted chief-justice.

His lordship was also called to the cabinet council of the late king, and of his present majesty.

He resisted every temptation in the state, rather than quit the line of an independent profession. He was called to all the offices, which he has executed, without a competitor; rather for the sake of others than his own. He never took any grant or emolument from the late king, to himself or any person belonging to him. He has never taken any favour from his present majesty. His office is for life; and, it is well known, he might have changed it.

In April, 1757, he was appointed for some time chancellor of the exchequer; and also to the same office for a short time in 1767.

In November, 1758, his lordship was elected a governor of the Charter-house, in the room of Charles Spencer, duke of Marlborough, deceased; and he is also one of the trustees for the British Museum.

H I L L, Baron H A R W I C H.

OF this family, which in the reign of queen Elizabeth were of great note, was

Sir MOSES * (frequently written Moyfes) HILL, ancestor to lord Harwich, who, during the commotions of Shane O Neile in the north of Ireland, one of those gentlemen who were associated, in 1573, under Walter Devereux, first earl of Essex, to suppress them. After that nobleman's disappointments, and death (which happened on September 22, 1576) he served under his son Robert, second earl of Essex, who, on March 12, 1598, was declared lord lieutenant of Ireland by queen Elizabeth, and sent over with a considerable army against Hugh O Neile, earl of Tir-Oen, or Tyrone, then in open rebellion. The earl of Essex returning to England in September, 1599, Sir Moses continued in the army under Charles Blount, lord Mountjoy, his lordship's successor as lord lieutenant; and was by him constituted governor of Oldersfleet-castle, an important fortress in those times, as it guarded the harbour of Larne from the invasion of the Scots.

After the accession of king James I. to the crown of England, Sir Moses was, by that monarch, in consideration of his sufficiency, valour, skill, and long experience of his service in Ulster, constituted, on December 15, 1603, the first provost-mareschal of the forces of Carrickfergus, and allowed a fee of six shillings a day. He served under Arthur, lord Chichester, many years lieutenant of Ireland: and king James, for the reasons mentioned in the patent, viz. "forasmuch as the multitude of malefactors, and other loose and idle persons, within the province of Ulster, required that his majesty should correct and repress them by some speedier and sharper means, than by the ordinary course of common laws; and considering the martial law and orders thereof to be very necessary for the reformation of such loose vagrants; and, having had good experience of the circumspection, industry, knowledge of Sir Moyfes Hill, knight," was pleased, on April 14, 1617, 15 Jac. I. to appoint him provost-mareschal of the whole province of Ulster, for life, with full power to try and examine all disorders and offences, and, upon conviction, to proceed by martial law to judgment, and punishment by death, or otherwise, according to the nature of the offence.

This Sir Moses Hill, of Hillsborough, departed this life in the seventy-sixth year of his age, in the month of February, 1629-30, 5 Car. I. being then possessed of divers estates in the counties of Downe and Antrim, for which last he served in parliament, A. D. 1613.

He was thrice married; by his first lady, he had Peter his heir; by his second, Arthur Hill, esquire, who afterwards succeeded to the estate: and likewise two daughters, 1. —, the wife of Sir James Craige, of Carrickfergus, knight. 2. —, who was wedded to Arthur, son and heir apparent of Charles Wilmot, viscount Wilmot, of Athlone, and dying on October 31, 1632, was buried in the church of St. Nicholas, Dublin; and by his third wife, had one daughter, Penelope, who had two husbands; first, Sir William Brook, knight of the Bath, son of George, brother to Henry, lord Cobham; and, secondly, the honourable Edward Russel, fourth son to Francis, fourth earl of Bedford, and by her, father of Edward, earl of Orford, and other children.

PETER HILL, the eldest son and heir of Sir Moses Hill, of Hillsborough, before-mentioned, was sheriff of the county of Downe, and provost-mareschal thereof, A. D. 1641; and being in Dublin (as he sets forth in his deposition) when the Irish massacre began, he was sent, from that city, in a vessel, by the lords justices, and privy-council, to the said county, with directions, that, if possible, a quarter-session might be held, within the same, for indicting the rebels. He was so alert and expeditious on that occasion, that, without regard to the hazard to which he exposed himself, he got a session to be convened at Killileagh, where many of the audacious insurgents were legally indicted; and about one hundred more at another session: but he, with his soldiers and servants, whom he kept at a great expence, were in extreme danger of their lives, at the proclamation of the writs of outlawry against those rebels. Moreover, when

* Amongst many others, who were ornaments to their country, as well as their name, was Sir John Hill, of Hill's-court (the place of his birth) in the suburbs of Exeter, and county of Devon; who, having been bred to the law, was advanced to the degree of a serjeant, on the Monday after the Purification, 1382-3, 6 Rich. II. and on September 30, 1400, 2 Henry IV. was constituted one of the judges of the court of King's Bench.

Cotemporary with this Sir John Hill, lived Sir Robert Hill, of Shilston, in the said county of Devon, who, being likewise brought up to the law, was appointed serjeant to king Henry IV. in 1400; and about nine years after was advanced to the office of one of the justices of the court of Common-Pleas, in which he was continued by the two succeeding monarchs, Henry V. and Henry VI. Sir Robert possessed a great estate, which his posterity enjoyed about nine generations, till it was wasted and disposed of by Robert Hill, esquire, and his son Edward; the family then dispersed.

he had first notice of the general rising of the Irish in the said county of Downe, and how the protestants were robbed and plundered, and many of them put to the sword, he furnished himself, at Dublin, with arms for ninety-four men, having only match, powder and shot, out of his majesty's stores, which he shipped for Strangford; and landing there, raised and armed a company, some horse, some foot, whom he maintained at his own expence for about a year and a half, during which time he drove many rebels out of those parts. He did other acceptable services to the English government: but about the month of May, 1644, he and his family were driven from his habitation by detachments of the Scottish army (in the service of the parliament of England) who plundered his house and stock, and obliged him to fly to Dublin for safety.

He married —, sister to Randal Macdonnell, the first earl of Antrim; and by her was father of two sons.

1. Francis Hill, his heir.
2. Randal Hill, who died a bachelor.

FRANCIS HILL, the eldest son, was seated at Hill-hall, in the county of Downe: and having wedded Ursula, daughter to Sir Francis Stafford, of Portglenone in the county of Antrim, knight, privy-counsellor to king James I. left issue by her two daughters, his coheirs.

1. Anne, the wife of Moses Hill, esquire, eldest son of Arthur Hill, esquire, beforementioned, as will be taken notice of afterwards.
2. Rose, married to Sir Robert Colvil, of Newton in the county of Downe, knight.

At the death of the said Francis, without issue male, the family estate devolved upon his uncle

ARTHUR HILL, of Hillsborough, younger son of Sir Moses Hill, aforesaid. This Arthur, being colonel of a regiment, which he raised in 1641, by direction of the government, for king Charles I. against the Irish, was one of those officers, who were deputed in 1644, by the army in Ireland, to apply to the king and parliament of England for succours against the rebels; and was also one of those, who gallantly refused to take the Solemn League and Covenant, which general Monro endeavoured to introduce by force into the northern army. After Ireland had submitted to the English parliament, in 1647, he continued to serve against the Irish; and had an order, dated at Cork, June 17, 1652, to receive the sum of one hundred pound towards defraying his charges in coming from Ulster to the head-quarters, attending at Kilkenny and other places, and for special service done by him touching the forces and stores, and other public affairs. He was, in the last-mentioned year, nominated one of the commissioners of the revenue for the precinct of Belfast; and on November 21, 1653, was appointed a commissioner in the same precinct for examining the delinquency of the Irish. He had also an order, dated August 6, 1656, ("in consideration of his many public and eminent services, together with his sufferings, both in and after the rebellion, to the great furtherance and advancement of the public interest") to receive 1000*l.* in full satisfaction for his said services and sufferings.

This Arthur Hill, esquire, though he submitted to the prevailing powers, yet was amongst the first who came into the measures for the restoration of king Charles II. and heartily concurred with other loyalists towards effecting it: after which, he was on March 19, 1660-61, constituted one of the commissioners of the court of claims, for putting in execution his majesty's declaration, of November 30 preceding, for the settlement of Ireland, and satisfaction of the several interests of adventurers, soldiers and others. As he had signally manifested his zeal for the re-establishment of the constitution, even at the hazard of his life and estate, by his endeavours in Ireland to restore the king, he was sworn a member of his majesty's privy-council in that kingdom: and got a pardon, dated at Westminster, November 18, 1661, for all the crimes, &c. committed by him during the course of the rebellion; an expedient which was judged necessary and convenient by many persons who had been concerned in the transactions of those times.

He built, during the scenes of confusion, at his own charge, and on his own ground, for the encouragement of English planters, and security of the country, a considerable place of strength, called Hillsborough, which was fortified with four bastions, and commanded the chief roads in the county of Downe, leading from Dublin to Belfast and Carrickfergus: but his majesty, considering that the surprize thereof, upon any insurrection, might prove very prejudicial to his service, and how much a guard therein would conduce to the safety of the country, granted, on December 20, 1660, a patent for erecting it into a royal garrison, by the name of Hillsborough fort, with a constable, or officer, to command it, and twenty warders to be nominated and chosen by him; the constable to have an allowance of three shillings and four pence a day, and the warders six pence each; and conferred the office of constable on Mr. Hill, and his heirs and assignees, for ever. King Charles, likewise, being truly sensible (as his majesty expresseth himself) of Mr. Hill's eminent services and faithfulness to him, amply testified in his industrious labours and endeavours towards his restoration to his crown and kingdoms, confirmed to him, by patent dated December 19, 1662, his estates of Hillsborough, Culcary, Cromlyne, &c. in the lower barony of Iveagh, and county of Downe, which were anew erected into the manor of Hillsborough, with a demesne of fifteen hundred acres, and liberty to impark one thousand more, or a greater number, for deer; power to hold courts, &c. with a weekly market on Thursday, at Hillsborough, and a fair there on every Wednesday of every month between March 1, and November 30; and a Wednesday market, with a fair, at Anesbury. His majesty, moreover, in order to encourage English people to reside at the before-mentioned Hillsborough Fort, and for the more speedy planting of the said manor, as well as for the better securing the said fort, allotted one hundred acres, in the town and lands of Hillsborough, to be a free borough and corporation, consisting of a sovereign, twelve burgeses and free commoners, and to have, among other considerable privileges, that most valuable one of sending two members to parliament.

He sat in several Irish parliaments, particularly in that of 1641, when he shewed himself a rigorous prosecutor of Thomas Wentworth, earl of Strafford, for his proceedings, when deputy of Ireland; and in that, called by Oliver Cromwell, to meet at Westminster, in 1656, to represent the commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, he sat for the counties of Downe, Antrim, and Armagh. He was returned for the county of Downe to the parliament of 1661.

The king's revenue having fallen many thousand pounds short of the estimate value of the customs and excise, his majesty appointed one of the members of his privy-council to sit constantly with the commissioners of those revenues, and assist in the ordering of those affairs; and on October 21, constituted Mr. Hill his agent and commissioner for inspecting into his customs and excise.

This eminent statesman and warrior was twice married, first to Anne, eldest daughter of Sir Richard Bolton, knight, (recorder of Dublin, chief baron of the exchequer, and lord high chancellor of Ireland) by his wife Frances, daughter of Richard Walter, of Stafford, esquire; and, second, to Mary, daughter of Sir William Parsons, one of the lords justices of Ireland, and ancestor to the earls of Rosse.

His first lady (who was buried at St. Bride's, Dublin, on January 7, 1636) bore him three sons, viz.

1. Moyse, or Moses Hill, his heir.
2. Edward Hill, }
3. Francis Hill, } who both died without issue.

By his second lady he was father of three sons.

1. William Hill, esquire, who in the sequel inherited the estate.
2. Conway Hill, esquire, who commanded an independent troop of horse during the war; served for the county of Antrim in the parliaments of 1661 and 1665; and died without issue by his wife ———, daughter of ——— Jones, esquire.
3. Arthur Hill, who did not arrive to the years of maturity.

By the same lady he had likewise three daughters.

1. Penelope, married to Richard Coote, of Tullaghmaine, esquire.
2. Jane, wedded to Gilbert Ormsby, of Tobbervaddy, in the county of Roscommon, esquire.
3. Dorothy, the wife of colonel Richard Eustace, of Dowdingstown, in the county of Dublin.

The aforesaid Arthur Hill, esquire, their father, departed this life in April, 1663, being then in the sixty-third year of his age, and possessed of a large estate in the counties of Antrim, Downe, &c. and was buried in St. Malachias's church, at Hillsborough, a well contrived edifice, which he built, in 1662, at his own cost, in form of a cross, on a rising ground, as more convenient for the inhabitants than the old parish church. He was succeeded by his before-mentioned eldest son, MOSES HILL, esquire, who, after the rebellion began in 1641, was a lieutenant-colonel in the army; and in 1661, was member of parliament for the town of Drogheda. He wedded his cousin, Anne, eldest daughter and coheir of Francis Hill, of Hill-hall, before-mentioned: and by her (who died in July 1683) left at his death (which happened on April 19, 1664) three daughters.

1. Frances, the wife of Thomas Coote, of Coote-hill, esquire,
2. Penelope, married to Sir Walter Plunket, knight.
3. Mary, married to Arthur Parsons, of Tomdiffe, in the county of Wexford, esquire. Dying thus without issue male, his next surviving brother,

WILLIAM HILL, esquire, succeeded to the estate, and being a gentleman much esteemed in his country, was returned one of the knights for the county of Downe to parliament in 1665. On June 9, 1669, he had a grant of a Monday market, and two fairs, viz. on April 15 and 16, and September 21 and 22, at Carquillin, otherwise Eight Miles Bridge. On May 29, 1671, 23 Car. II. in virtue of the acts of settlement, he passed patent for the lands of Liffstullycurreran, Tough-blane, and others in the barony of lower Iveagh, at the rent of ten pound and a halfpenny, during the unexpired term of a lease, made on March 8, 1636, for ninety-nine years; the rents and reversion of which, having been purchased by his father before the rebellion of 1641, were not to be liable to the said rent after the expiration of the said term.

In 1676, he, with Sir James Shaen, and others, farmed the revenue of Ireland at a great yearly rent; and having, by unavoidable accidents, become much in arrear, his estates in the counties of Downe and Drogheda were seized, and the rents paid into the exchequer, until he obtained a release and discharge thereof by patent, dated at Westminster, January 5, 1686-7, 2 Jac. II.

On November 13, 1678, he was made lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the counties of Downe and Antrim; and was of the privy-council to king Charles II. and king James II. But being in England in 1689, when king James called a parliament at Dublin, he was among the number of absentees attainted by that furious assembly, contrary to king James's desire and remonstrances, and his estate, together with his mother's jointure, lay under sequestration, until restored on the reduction of Ireland by king William, of whose privy-council he was sworn a member on December 1, 1690.

He had two wives, first, Eleanor, daughter to Dr. Michael Boyle, archbishop of Armagh, lord high chancellor of Ireland, and one of the lords justices of that kingdom, in the reign of Charles II. and by her was father of an only son, Michael Hill, esquire, his heir: and, secondly, Mary, eldest daughter to Marcus Trevor, first viscount Dunganon; and by her (who died at London on July 9, 1711) had two sons, viz. Arthur Hill, esquire, who, at his death in the twenty-first year of his age, was a cornet in the duke of Ormond's regiment; and Marcus Hill, esquire, who was educated at Oxford, and resided at Holt-Forest, in Hampshire, where he died on April 6, 1751, unmarried, and left the bulk of his fortune to the present lord Harwich.

The said William Hill, esquire, father of the last-mentioned persons, made, on July 7, 1692, his will, the probate whereof is dated at London, on November 20, 1693, in which year he died, being then in the fifty-second year of his age, and had sepulture in the church of Kensington, in Middlesex, in a vault under the communion-table, made for that purpose, in which are also deposited the bodies of his second wife, and his son Marcus. By his said will, he confirmed all his family settlements; bequeathed ten pound to the poor of Hillsborough, and two pound to those of the parish where he should die, which happened to be Chelsea, in the aforesaid county of Middlesex.

MICHAEL

MICHAEL HILL, esquire, eldest son and heir to the aforesaid William Hill, of Hillsborough, esquire, was of the privy council to king William; served for the borough of Saltash in the English parliament, as he did also in the Irish for Hillsborough; and was lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Downe. In 1690, he married Anne, daughter of Sir John Trevor, of Brinkinall, in the county of Denbigh, knight, master of the rolls in England, speaker of the house of commons, and first lord commissioner of the great seal; and by her had two sons, Trevor, created viscount Hillsborough, and Arthur Hill, esquire, of whom afterwards; and a daughter, Anne, who wedded the honourable St. John Brodrick, eldest son of Alan, first viscount Middleton, lord high chancellor of Ireland, and by him was mother of five daughters.

This Michael Hill, esquire, died, A. D. 1699, in the 27th year of his age, and was interred, in the family vault at Hillsborough. His lady survived him, and was the third wife of the aforesaid Alan, viscount Middleton, and died his widow on January 5, 1747, having had no issue by him. She built the church of Breda, in the county of Downe, at her own expence; and bequeathed 500l. to the Blue-coat hospital, in Dublin, to which she had given the like sum in her life-time; 300l. to the Charter-schools; 200l. to the Infirmary on the Inns-quay; 100l. to Mercer's hospital; 200l. to discharge prisoners; and 50l. to the poor of each of the parishes of St. Paul, in Dublin (wherein she resided) Hillsborough, Breda (before-mentioned) and Middleton, in the county of Cork.

Arthur Hill, esquire, the younger son of Michael Hill, esquire, was seated at Belvoir; and on July 11, 1719, was invested with the place of keeper of the records in Birmingham Tower. He resigned that post in December, 1734, and on March 8 following, was with Laurence Brodrick, esquire, (pursuant to a reversionary grant made to them on March 27, 1718) appointed to the office of joint register of the memorials of all deeds, conveyances, &c. in Ireland; which office was instituted by act of parliament sixth queen Anne, and was granted solely to him on October 2, 1736; but he gave it up in May, 1749. He served for Hillsborough, in the parliament summoned in 1715, was returned one of the knights for the county of Downe in 1727, and sworn of his majesty's privy council on August 20, 1750, 24 George II.

He married two wives, 1 Anne, third daughter and coheir of Joseph Deane, esquire, chief baron of the exchequer in Ireland; but she dying in childbirth, about a year after marriage, he, on January 12, 1737 wedded, 2. Anne, daughter and heir to Edmund-Francis Stafford, of Brownstowne in Meath, and of Portglenone in the county of Antrim, esquire, and by her had a son, Arthur, born on December 24, 1738, and three daughters, Anne, married to Garret-Colley Westley, earl of Mornington; Prudence, married to Charles Leslie; and Jane, who died unmarried. Their brother Arthur married a daughter of Henry, viscount Mountmorris, and has issue two sons, Arthur Trevor, and Henry-John Trevor.

TREVOR HILL, esquire, afterwards viscount Hillsborough, eldest son and heir of Michael Hill, esquire, was born in 1693, and had his education in England, where he was returned member for Aylesbury in Buckinghamshire, to the parliament, which met at Westminster on March 17, 1714-15, 1 George I. He likewise served for the county of Downe, until king George I. was pleased, by patent bearing date August 21, 1717, to create him a peer of the kingdom of Ireland, by the stiles and titles of baron Hill, of Kilwarlin, and viscount of Hillsborough, both in the county of Downe, with limitation of those dignities to the heirs male of the body of his father, and the annual creation fee of twenty marks. His lordship took his seat in parliament on the 27th of the same month; and on September 3, that year, was admitted a member of the privy council, in the said kingdom. He was also called to the privy council, at the accession of king George II, in 1727; and in 1729, was constituted lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Downe.

His lordship wedded Mary, eldest daughter and coheir to Anthony Rowe, of Moswell-hill in the county of Middlesex, and of North-Aston in the county of Oxford, esquire, and widow of Sir Edward Denton, of Hillesden in Buckinghamshire, baronet. His lordship departing this life on May 3, 1742, was buried at Hillsborough: and by his said lady (who died on August 22, 1742, on her journey to Bath, and was interred, near her first husband, at Hillesden) had four sons,

1. Charles, born June 3, 1717, who died young.
 2. Wills, his successor, now lord Harwich, &c.
 3. Arthur,
 4. Anthony,
- } who both died young.

By the same lady, he was also father of a daughter, Anne, born July 5, 1716, who on December 23, 1746, was married to Sir John Rawdon, baronet, afterwards created lord Rawdon, and earl of Moynagh, but departed this life, without issue by him, on August 1, 1751, and was buried at Moynagh.

(Present Lord) WILLS HILL, now lord Harwich, only surviving son of Trevor, viscount Hillsborough, was appointed lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Downe, in 1742, in room of his father; was sworn a member of the privy-council in Ireland, on August 25, 1746; and created viscount of Kilwarlin, and earl of Hillsborough, by patent dated October 3, 1751, 25 George II. with limitation of those honours, in default of heirs male of his body, to his uncle, Arthur Hill, esquire, aforesaid, and his male issue. His lordship was a member of the British privy council in the reign of king George II. to whom he likewise executed the office of treasurer of the chamber: but gave up that place, and was succeeded therein by the honourable Charles Townsend in 1756; in which year, he was, by letters patent, bearing date November 20, 30 George II. created a peer of Great-Britain, by the stile and title of lord Harwich, baron Harwich, in Essex. His lordship, at the accession of the present king, was continued a privy counsellor in both kingdoms, and in September, 1763, was constituted first commissioner of trade and the plantations, in place of William Petty, lord Wycombe, earl of Shelburne, &c. but resigned in August, 1765, and was succeeded by William Legge, earl of Dartmouth. In 1767, his lordship secretary of state for the colonies.

This noble peer (who is enrolled among the fellows of the royal society) was at the general election, in 1741, returned one of the knights of the shire for the county of Huntingdon, and also one of the burgesſes for Warwick, to the ninth parliament of Great-Britain; but choſe his ſeat for the latter, by which he was alſo choſen to the next parliament in 1747, and ſat for the ſame borough in the eleventh parliament of Great-Britain, till he was advanced to the Britiſh peerage, as before related.

His lordſhip, on March 1, 1747-8, wedded lady Margaretta Fitz-Gerald, only ſurviving ſiſter of James, marquis of Kildare, now duke of Leinſter, and by her ladyſhip (who was born on July 2, 1729, and died January 15, 1766, at Naples, whither ſhe had gone with his lordſhip, in hopes of recovering her health) had two ſons, 1. Marcus, viſcount Kilwarlin, born on February 21, and baptized March 21, 1752.

LYTTELTON, Baron LYTTELTON.

IT can be incontestably proved that in the reign of Henry III. there were many families that bore the name of Luttelton, Lutulton, or as it is now written Lyttelton, in the ſeveral counties of Dorſet, Somerſet, Bedford, Buckingham, and Worceſter. Whether they had one common anceſtor of the ſame name or not, antiquaries have not been able to determine. Conjectures have been formed, and not without reaſon, that thoſe in the county of Worceſter, anceſtors to the noble family we now treat of, aſſumed their name from South Lyttelton, in the vale of Eveſham, where

THOMAS DE LUTTELTON, was ſeated in the 19th of Henry III. His poſſeſſions in that county were not inconfiderable, and the abbey of Perſhore, and that of Eveſham, were made to bear teſtimony to his liberality. This gentleman married Emma, ſole daughter and heir of Sir Simon de Franckley, lord of Frankley, and by her had iſſue an only daughter, Emma, who died 1298, having been twice married; firſt to Sir Augenes de Tatlington of Tredington, in the aforeſaid county, and he dying lord of Franckley, in right of his wife, 1255, ſhe married ſecondly, Nicholas de Weraſtede. To the former huſband, only, ſhe bore iſſue a ſon, Thomas de Tatlington, who died without iſſue. This lady appears to have been a benefactreſs to the abbey of Haleſowen, in the neighbourhood of Franckly. Her father married ſecondly, Aſſelm, daughter and ſole heir to William Fitzwarin, of Upton, in Worceſterſhire, grandſon of Fulke Fitzwarin, lord Marcher, of Wales, in the time of Henry I. and by her had iſſue three ſons,

1. Edmund de Luttelton, ſeated at Couleſden, in Worceſterſhire, who married Lucia, daughter of Robert de Bois, (or Atwood) of Franckley, in the ſame county, but died without iſſue.

2. Thomas de Luttelton, of whom preſently.

3. John de Luttelton, became a benefactor to Eveſham-abbey, to which he gave by deed, dated 8 Edward II. an houſe with three virgates of land, and eight acres of meadow ſituated at Lyttelton, in the vale of Eveſham. He died unmarried.

The ſecond brother,

THOMAS DE LUTTELTON, ſucceeded his elder brother, and in the 9th of Edward II. was knight of the ſhire, for the county of Worceſter, and twenty-five years after, was joint commiſſioner with Richard de Lench, and others, to collect the tenths and fifteenths throughout the ſaid county.

He married Julian, daughter and heir to Robert de Someroy, a younger brother to the baron of Dudley, and by her had iſſue two ſons,

1. Thomas, of whom hereafter.

2. John Lyttelton, who was in the commiſſion of

of array with others, in the first of Henry IV. and had to wife, Beatrix Frevill, or Frecheville, of a noble family in Warwickshire, by whom he had issue an only daughter, the wife of Jeffery Frere: which Jeffery sat in parliament for the city of Worcester, in Richard II. and Henry IV.

Thomas Lyttelton the elder brother, recovered the manor of Frankley, by a writ of right, on failure of issue to his cousin, Thomas de Tatlynton. He was esquire of the body to three successive kings, viz. Richard II. Henry IV. and Henry V. and was rewarded with several grants of money, timber, &c. from each of them, pro bono & gratuito servitio, as expressed in the grants. He sealed with the cheveron, between three escallops, as now used by his posterity, but bore a different crest, viz. a grey-hound's head, collared. About the close of king Henry the Vth's reign, he served the office of sheriff of Worcestershire, under R. Beauchamp, earl of Warwick titular and hereditary high sheriff of Worcestershire: and in the first year of Henry the VIth. he departed this life, leaving issue by Maud, his wife, (who survived him, and married Thomas Massey, esquire, and was daughter and sole heir of Richard Quatermain, of Ricote in the county of Oxford; by Catharine, daughter and heir of Guy de Breton, by his wife Joan, the daughter and heir of Thomas Grey, of Rotherfield in the same county) an only daughter named Elizabeth, who was his heir.

This

ELIZABETH LYTTELTON married Thomas Westcote,* esquire, the king's servant in court, a gentleman of Devonshire antiently descended; but she being fair, and of a noble spirit (to use lord Coke's own words) and having large possessions and inheritances from her ancestors de Luttelton, and from her mother, the daughter and coheir of Quartermain, and other her ancestors, resolved to continue the honour of her name, and therefore provided, by Westcote's assent, before marriage, that her issue inheritable should be called by the name of Luttelton.

On this marriage, Westcote settled at Frankley in Worcestershire, and served the office of escheator there, the 29th of Henry VI. 1450. Soon after which he died, leaving issue four sons, and as many daughters, 1. Thomas, of whom hereafter; 2. Edmund. 3. Guy,† who married —, the daughter of — Grenville, of Gloucestershire (a younger branch of the Grenvilles, of Kilhamton in Cornwall) from whom descended the Westcoats of Somersetshire, and of Radon in Devonshire. 4. Nicholas, who married Agnes, daughter and coheir of Edmund Vernon, of Handsacre, in Staffordshire, by Joan, the daughter and sole heir of William Handsacre, of Handsacre, from whom the Westcotes of that county descended: which three last retained the name of Westcote, though often solicited by their mother, to call themselves Luttelton. It is said, she once expostulating with them, whether they thought better of themselves than their elder brother? they answered, "that he had a fair estate to alter his name; and if they might share with him, they would do the like."

Of the daughters we find but one married, viz. Anne, the wife of Thomas Porter, esquire, of Barston in Warwickshire.

Elizabeth, the widow of Thomas Westcote, survived him many years, and remarried Thomas Hewster, of Lichfield, esquire, who was chose knight for Worcestershire, the 9th of Henry VI. she died at the age of seventy-nine; and was buried at Halesowen.

THOMAS, her eldest son, who bore his father's christian name, and his mother's surname, Luttelton, or Lyttelton, as he wrote it, studied at one of the two universities; afterwards removed to the Inner-Temple, where he read learnedly on the statute De Donis conditionalibus. Anno 1454, he was called to the degree of serjeant at law; and afterwards appointed steward of the Marshalsea of the king's household. The year following, he was appointed king's serjeant, and rode justice of the assize in the northern circuit. Anno 1447, 26 Henry VI. he served the office of high sheriff of Worcestershire; having before been Escheator thereof. In 1453, he had a general pardon under the great seal; and two years after, was in commission with Humphry, duke of Buckingham, and William Birmingham, esquire, to raise forces in the county of Warwick.

On the coming of king Edward IV. to the crown, he sued out another general pardon. He appears to have been in favour with both kings, and the latter gave him particular marks of royal favour; for, anno, 1464, the fourth year of his reign, he appointed him one of the judges of the Common-pleas, and granted him out of the customs of London, Bristol, and Hull, one hundred and ten marks yearly, ultra consuetum foedum, ut statum suum decentius tenere & expensas sustinere valeret; and moreover the sum of five pounds six shillings and ten-pence halfpenny, for a robe and furs, and three pounds six shillings and sixpence, for a summer robe, called linura. In the fifteenth year of this king, the prince of Wales was created a knight of the Bath, at which time several persons of the first distinction, and in the highest favour at court, were advanced to this honour, as the earl of Lincoln; Grey, the queen's son; Byran, chief justice of the Common-pleas; and Lyttelton, that learned father of the law, as Mr. Habington, in his history of that reign, expresses it.

He wrote his famous treatise on Tenures when he was a judge, after the fourteenth year of king Edward IV. Lord Coke thinks, not long before his death, because it wanted his last hand, notwithstanding he makes this great encomi-

* Mr. Prince, in his Devonshire Worthies, tells us, that this gentleman was born at Westcote, in the parish of Marwood, near Barnstable, and flourished anno 1414; that he was of a martial disposition, and addicted himself to feats of arms, which at length brought him to the knowledge of, and endeared him to, those puissant princes, king Henry IV. and V. which, saith our author, is no mean argument of his worth.

† It seems probable that some of the children of Guy Westcote above-mentioned, who settled at Raddon in Devon, assumed the name of Luttelton, and removed into Cornwall; for in the fifth of Henry VII. one of that name, bearing the antient Lyttelton arms, without difference, occurs lord of Lan-hiderick, near Bodmyn; who, by marrying the heiress of Gerrard of Polsoth, got a large estate in that county, and had at the same time no inconsiderable one in Devonshire. On failure of issue, it passed soon after, by marriage, to the Trenances of Laffilian, and they were in possession, circa ann. 1622.

um upon it, "that it is the ornament of the common law, and the most perfect and absolute work that ever was wrote in any human science." To this may be added what Dr. Holland, in his additions to Camden, saith of it, "that the students of the common law are no less beholden to Lyttelton's Tenures, than the civilians are to Justinian's Institutes."

He married Joan, widow of Sir Philip Chetwin, of Ingeltre, in the county of Stafford, one of the daughters and coheirs of William Burley,* of Bromsicroft castle, in the county of Salop, esquire, (by his wife, the daughter and heir of — Grendon, of Grendon in Staffordshire) with whom he had large possessions.

By her Sir Thomas Lyttelton had three sons, and two daughters.

1. William.

2. Richard, to whom the Tenures are addressed, who followed his father's profession, and died 1518. He married Alice, daughter and sole heir of William Winnesbury, of Pillaton-hall, in the county of Stafford, esquire, and was lineal ancestor to the present Sir Edward Lyttelton, of that place, baronet.

3. Thomas was seated at Spechley, near Worcester, and married Anne, daughter and sole heir of John Botreaux, of Salford-Abbotts, in Warwickshire, esquire, from whom were descended the lord keeper Lyttelton, baron of Mounslow, in the reign of Charles I. Sir Thomas Lyttelton, baronet, speaker of the house of commons, in the time of William II. and other families of the Lytteltons.

His two daughters, named Ellen and Alice, both died unmarried. He himself died at Frankley,† on August 23, 1481, aged about sixty, and was interred under an aral tomb, which he erected in his life-time, on the south side the nave of the cathedral at Worcester; upon the flat part whereof was his portraiture in brass, and these words issuing from his mouth, Fili Dei miserere mei; at each end, two shields of brass; one containing the arms of Westcote, the other of Lyttelton; and the front, four shields; the first, argent, a lion rampant, sable, armed, gules, debruised with a fess, counter-compone, or and azure (impaling) argent, two cheverons, gules, Burley and Grendon: second, Burley, as before (impaling) barry of six; or and azure; on a bend sinister, gules, three martlets, argent, Grey of Rythin: third, argent, two talbots, passant, gules (impaling) barry of six, argent and azure, a bend sinister, gules; on the highest bar an annulet of the third, Breston, and Grey of Wilton: fourth, gules; a fess, azure, between four hands, or, Quatermain; impaling Breston, as before. On the flat stone, above the judge's portraiture, were three brass shields, viz. Lyttelton impaling Quatermain; Westcote impaling Lyttelton; and Lyttelton impaling Burley. All these arms, as well as the figures, were torn off the tomb in the last civil war, and nothing left but the following inscription, on brass round the verge of the monument, Hic jacet corpus Thome Lyttelton de Frankley, Militis de Balneo, & unus justiciarorum de Communi Banco, qui obiit 23 Augusti, Ann. Dom. M.CCCC.LXXXI. After the restoration of king Charles II. it was repaired; had gilt iron rails placed before it (which were lately removed when the body of the cathedral was new paved) and the several compartments on the front decorated afresh with arms, but erroneously; for the Lyttelton shield was supported by the merman, which was never borne by judge Lyttelton, his eldest son Sir William Lyttelton being the first that used it. In 1765, the modern shields were obliterated, and the old ones restored.

By inquisition taken after his death, in Worcester-shire

* This Mr. Burley was of the same house with Sir William Burley, warden of the cinque ports, constable of Dover-castle, lord chamberlain and knight of the garter, in the reign of Richard II. whose brother Richard was also knight of the garter, as was Sir John Burley, their father.

† As Sir Thomas Lyttelton's will contains many curious particulars, it may not be amiss to give it the reader faithfully copied from the original, remaining in the prerogative-office.

In the name of God, amen. I, Thomas Lyttelton, knight, oon of king's justice of the common place, make my testament, and notifie my wille, in the manner and forme that followeth. Also I wull, that the feofees, to myn use, of and in the manor of Spechley, in Worcester-shire, make a sure estate to my sonne, Thomas Lyttelton, and the heirs of his body, with all chartours, &c. concerning the same, and all other lands, rents, reversions, and services, that I have in Spechley, Cuddeley, Bradicor, and White-lady-Aston, with the lands and tenements, in Weddesbury, in the county of Stafford.

By a like inquisition taken at Whitchurch in Shropshire, the jury find that Sir Reginald Grey, of Wilton, and Fulke Springhose, were seised of the manors of Cressage, in that county, and thereof enfeofed Sir Thomas Lyttelton, knight of the Bath; Humphry Salway, and Guy Westcote, esquires, quod manerium valet ultra reprisas, 20l. By another inquisition taken at Stafford, the jury find that the manor of Arley was held by Sir Thomas Lyttelton, Humphry Salway, and Guy Westcote; and that Lyttelton being deceased, the two others were seised thereof by right of survivorship, & valet ultra reprisas, 20l. They find the same with regard to the manor of Tixhale, quod valet ultra reprisas, 40 marcas. They find them all seised jointly of twelve houses, in the city of Litchfield, held of the bishop. N. B. Salway and Westcote were feoffees in trust for Sir Thomas Lyttelton and his heirs; a method not long before invented by the lawyers, for the preventing the forfeiture of estates in those times of civil distractions, when attainders were very frequent. Besides these manors and lands which Sir Thomas Lyttelton appears to have had in fee, he held for his life the manor of Sheriff Hales, in the county of Stafford, by the grant of Sir William Trussell, knight, pro bono & notabili consilio, as expressed in the grant, dated 30th of Henry VI. He had a grant also of the advowson of the vicarage of Bromsgrove, in the county of Worcester, from the dean and chapter of Worcester. He likewise held for the life of dame Joan, his wife, half the manor of Grendon, with the advowson of the church; the whole manor of Ingestre, with the advowson of the chapel, and divers lands in Rule, Rudge, and Breredon, all in the county of Stafford; also certain lands in Dordon and Warton, in the county of Warwick, and lands in Grotwich (forsan Droitwich) and Mitton, in the county of Worcester, all by grant from Robert Cherwin, of Aspath in Warwickshire.

Joan, the widow of Sir Thomas, survived him many years, and died on March 22, 1505, in the 80th year of her age, leaving a great estate, that came both by her father and mother (who was an heiress) to her eldest son, Sir William. By inquisition taken after her death, she is found to have held the manors of Broomcroft, Baldcote, Merkton, Mounslowe, Henlegh, Tugford, Brocton, Aldon, Thongland, Alfcote, and Alcamstone; besides lands and tenements in Wormcote, Abbedon, Winstantowe, Bromfield, Cokerich, Walton, Rowthall, Halton, Dedybury, Aston, Bodenhope, and the advowson of Merston chapel, all in county of Salop; and that Sir William Lyttelton is her heir, aged above sixty. Which

Sir WILLIAM resided at Frankley, and being of rank and authority in his country, raised a considerable force there, and came very opportunely to the aid of king Henry VII. against Lambert Simnel, the earl of Lincoln, and his adherents, and was engaged in the battle of Stoke, near Newark, where after the victory gained on the eleventh of June, he was by the king rewarded with the honour of knighthood. He married to his first wife, Ellyn, widow of Thomas Fielding, esquire, daughter and coheir of Thomas Walsh, of Wanlip, in the county of Leicester by his wife the daughter and coheir of Sir Richard Byron, of Clayton in Lancashire, by whom he had an only daughter, named Joan, who became the wife of Sir John Aston, of Heywood in Staffordshire, and carried the manor of Tixhale in that county, given by her father, and that of Wanlip descended

His second wife was Mary, the daughter of William Whittington, of Pauntley in the county of Gloucester, by Elizabeth, the daughter of Renefred Arundel, of Lanhern in Cornwall, and sister of John Arundel, bishop of Exeter, who gave this Mary, on her marriage with Lyttelton, the sum of four hundred marks for a portion.

By her he had issue an only son, John, and a daughter, named Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Rouse, of Rouselench, in Worcestershire.

In 21 Edw. IV. he seals a deed with the merchant, viz. a grant of an annuity to his brother Richard, of Pillaton-hall. He was undoubtedly a benefactor to the priory church of Great Malvern, in Worcestershire; for there remains at this day a portrait of him, finely painted in a window of the body of the church, with a tabard or surcoat of his arms, and his name inscribed under it. There was likewise a portrait of the same kind, and of Ellyn, his first wife, in the north window of Over-Arely church, in Staffordshire, remaining in the year 1625, with these words inscribed underneath, viz.

Orate pro bono statu Willielmi Lyttelton, Arm. & Elyn uxoris ejus, qui fenestram fieri fecerunt.

He departed this life at Frankley, in December 1507, aged sixty-five; and by will bequeaths his body to the monastery of Hales-Owen, to be interred before the image of the Blessed Virgin, nigh the place and grave where his first wife lay buried: settles on Mary, his wife, the manors of Frankley and Coulesdon, in the county of Worcester, &c. &c.

JOHN LYTTTELTON, his son and heir, endowed his family (saith Mr. Habington, in his MS. Antiq. of Worcestershire) with abundance of noble blood, by having in marriage Elizabeth, the daughter and coheir of Sir Gilbert Talbot, of Grafton, in the county of Worcester, by Anne, his wife, the daughter and coheir of Sir William Paston, by Anne, his wife, third sister and coheir to Edmund Beaufort, duke of Somerset, grandson of John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster: in right of whom Lyttelton and his posterity have lawfully quartered the arms of France and England, within a bordure goboné; and likewise all the arms and quarterings of Talbot and Paston.

By her he had seven sons and two daughters.

1. John Lyttelton.
2. Edward Lyttelton, nicknamed Long Edward, who married the lady Elizabeth Talbot, daughter of Walter Wrottesley, of Wrottesley, in the county of Stafford, and widow to Sir John Talbot, of Albrighton, in the county of Stafford, from whom the Talbots of Salwarp, Worvil, and also the present earl Talbot, lineally descend.

3. Gilbert Lyttelton, died unmarried.

4. Anthony Lyttelton, seated at Abbot Salford, in the county of Warwick, died unmarried.

6. George Lyttelton, counsellor at law, who died in 1600, and lieth buried under a splendid monument in Bromsgrove church, in Worcestershire.

7. Thomas Lyttelton.

Of the daughters,

1. Anne, the eldest, died unmarried.

2. Margaret, was the wife of Edmund Newport, of Hanley-Williams, in Worcestershire, younger son to Thomas Newport, of High Erca, in Shropshire, ancestor to the late earls of Bradford.

VIII. he settles on Elizabeth, his wife, the manors of Frankley and Coulesdon, with certain boeries of salt in Droitwich, all in the county of Worcester; the great manor of Cressage, and certain lands in Halesowen and Rugeacre, in the county of Salop; but adds, "If my heir be married, and has a mind to keep house for the exercise of husbandry, or other hospitality, then I will that he shall have one of the manors of Frankley or Cressage, paying my wife the value in rent."

This John Lyttelton died at Frankley, on May 17, 1532, aged thirty-two; and by his last will ordered his body to be interred in the church porch of the parish church of Halesowen.

By inquisitions taken after his death, he was found to die seized of the same lands and manors as specified in the inquisitions after the death of his grandfather, Sir Thomas Lyttelton, afore recited; together with certain messuages and gardens, within the city of Worcester; and divers lands and tenements in South Lyttelton and Pirton; and also the wardenship of Elmley-castle (all in the county of Worcester) in right of his manor of Naunton.

Written att Frankley, 22 August, the yere of our Lord Jesu Christ, MCCCCXXXI.

JOHN

JOHN LYTTELTON, his son and heir, was a minor at his father's death. His wardship the king granted to Sir John Packington, knight, who married him to Bridget, his daughter and coheir; by which match Mr. Lyttelton greatly increased his fortune, and was the better enabled to rebuild in a magnificent manner his seat at Frankley; also to purchase a very fair estate at Halesowen, and likewise Hagley and Prestwood for hunting seats.

In 1553, queen Mary granted him for life the office of governor or constable of Dudley-castle, in the county of Stafford, together with that of ranger of the old and new parks there; also custos of the lodges, with a right of paunage, herbage, and warrenage, in the whole manor of Dudley, with a salary of eighty pound per annum; and farther appointed him high steward of the manors of Birmingham and Berkeswell, in the county of Warwick, with a fee of ten pound per annum.

The same year, he was chose one of the knights for Worcestershire; and also served the office of high sheriff there, once in that reign, and twice in queen Elizabeth's. Though a papist, yet he enjoyed places of honour and trust under queen Elizabeth, being one of the council of the marches of Wales, deputy-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of Worcestershire, and in the commission of the peace for that county and Stafford.

In 1556, the said queen Elizabeth knighted him with other gentlemen of great distinction, at Kenelworth-castle, when she honoured her favourite Robert Dudley, earl of Leicester, with a visit there.

In 1570, a treasonable letter was sent to Sir John Lyttelton, and Sir Thomas Russel, the queen's lieutenants in the county of Worcester, from the popish rebels, who had fled to Edinburgh, containing a sort of declaration of their intention to subvert the government and protestant religion; but how well inclined soever Sir John might be to the restoration of popery, he acted on this occasion like a good subject, and immediately sent the letter to secretary Cecil.

The year preceding the Spanish invasion, we find a list of all the justices of the peace in Worcestershire, together with their valuations in the subsidy book, conditions and affections in religion, privately communicated by the bishop of Worcester to secretary Cecil: the first person which occurs, is Sir John Lyttelton, "custos rotulorum, and accounted wise," valued sixty-six pound thirteen shillings and four pence.

Sir John died * at Frankley, on February 15, 1589-90, in the sixty-ninth year of his age, and was buried, agreeable to his last will, in the parish church of Halesowen. He had issue by Bridget, his wife, six sons and four daughters.

1. Gilbert Lyttelton.

2. William Lyttelton, who espoused Margaret, sole daughter and heir of William Smyth, of Shirford, in the county of Warwick, esquire, but died before the age of consummation, by a fall from his horse in hunting.

3. George Lyttelton, settled at Holbeach, in the county of Stafford, who married his brother's widow, viz. Margaret, above-mentioned.

4. John Lyttelton,

5. Robert Lyttelton,

6. Francis Lyttelton,

} who all three died unmarried.

Of the daughters,

1. Elizabeth, was the wife of Francis Willoughby, of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham, from whom the lord Middleton is descended.

2. Margaret, married Samuel Marrow, of Berkeswell, in the county of Warwick, esquire.

3. Amphylis, married to William Barnaby, of Bokelton, in Worcestershire.

4. Frances, who died unmarried.

GILBERT LYTTELTON, his son and heir, served in parliament for Worcestershire, 13 and 14 Eliz. and was high sheriff there the 26th of that reign. He resided chiefly at Prestwood, in the county of Stafford, where his father built a large house, part of which was lately the mansion of William Foley, esquire. It was bought by Sir John Lyttelton, of Sutton, lord Dudley; but there was great contention between the two families, before the Lytteltons could get quiet possession of it.

In the month of October, 1562, lord Dudley armed one hundred and forty persons, and came by night to Prestwood, and forcibly carried off three hundred and forty-one sheep, fourteen kine, one bull, and eight fat oxen, which they drove to Dudley, and there kept them. Replevins were immediately taken, but not delivered by the bailiffs, for fear of their being cut to pieces. After lord Dudley had killed and eaten part of them, the remainder were sent towards Coventry, accompanied by sixty armed men, in order to be sold; but his lordship changing his mind, he raised the inhabitants of Dudley, Sedgley, Kingswinford, and Rowley, to the number of six or seven hundred persons, who brought them back to Dudley-castle, where they roasted them all. Upon this violent proceeding, a bill was filed in the Star-chamber against lord Dudley and his adherents; where, upon full proof of these illegal outrages, a reference was proposed and accepted, and articles were signed the 24th of May, 1595, whereby lord Dudley agreed to pay one thousand marks to Mr. Lyttelton, and all farther suit to cease.

This Gilbert Lyttelton took to wife Elizabeth, daughter of Humphry Coningsby, of Nyend-Solers, in Shropshire, and of Hampton-court, in the

* By different inquisitions taken after his decease at Worcester, Stafford, and Salop, he was found to die seised of the manor and advowson, with the rectory impropriate, of Over-Arely; the manor of Clent and of Prestwood, with lands in Sedgley, King's-Swinford, and Kinfare, by the service of keeping the hay of Ashwood, all in the county of Stafford; of the manor and advowson of Hagley; the manor and advowson of Old Swinford, and five hamlets thereunto belonging; the manors of Cradeley and Warley-Wigorn, in the parish of Halesowen; the several manors of Woodcote, Dyers, Timberhange, with Pinton-fields, all in the parish of Bromsgrove; the manor of Groveley, in Coston-Hacket; lands in North-field, Salwarp, and Elmbridge; boileries of salt in Droitwich, together with the great tithes of Wolverley (held by lease of the church of Worcester) all in the county of Worcester. He was likewise found to have died seised of the site of the late dissolved monastery of Hales-owen, and of the several manors of Hales-borough, Romsley, Ludley, and Oldbury; together with thirteen townships in the said parish of Hales, with the rectory impropriate of Hales, Warley, St. Kenelm in Kenelmstowe, and advowson of the vicarage of Hales and St. Kenelm's chapel; also of the manor and advowson, with the rectory impropriate of Higley, all in the county of Salop; of divers lands and tenements in Llanyhangel, Kevenlys, Llandowy, Stradenny, and Maentel, all in the county of Radnor.

county of Hereford, by whom he had three sons, and one daughter.

1. John Lyttelton.
2. Humphry Lyttelton, } who both died un-
3. Gilbert Lyttelton, } married.

Anne, his only daughter, was the wife of Sir Thomas Cornwall, baron of Burford; which Anne lived to a very great age, and died the 30th of January, 1596, aged eighty-seven, and was buried in Eastham church, in Worcester-shire.

Mr. Lyttelton departed this life * on the first of June, 1599, at his house in the White-friars, London, in the fifty-ninth year of his age, and was interred in the parish church of Hales-owen.

Elizabeth, his widow, survived him, and died about the year 1608.

JOHN LYTTELTON, his eldest son and heir, sat in parliament for the county of Worcester, the 27th and 28th of Eliz. his father and grandfather then living; and again in the 39th year of the same reign. Being a man much respected for his wit and valour (to use the great Sir Francis Bacon's words, in his account of this gentleman's conduct in lord Essex's plot) and a Roman catholic, he was courted by lord Essex and his friends; and in some measure drawn in by Sir Charles Davers to that conspiracy which cost Essex his head, and Lyttelton his estate, for he was tried and condemned for high treason at the King's-bench bar, on February 20, 1600-1. The evidence on which the jury convicted him was very slender to amount to high treason; the utmost that was proved against him, being no more than that he came to Drury-house at the close of a treasonable consultation. He was charged indeed to have designed some mischief and sedition by the great number of horses and quantity of arms he had in his inn, to which he answered: "That his estate was able to maintain good store of horses, and that he always delighted in arms and horses." Being condemned, he said no more, but lifting up his eyes to heaven, "We praise thee, O God, we acknowledge thee to be the Lord."

Sir Walter Raleigh was at that time in great favour and power at court, and was remarkably warm in prosecuting lord Essex, and his unfortunate adherents, with the utmost rigour. A very large sum of money, privately paid him by Mr. Lyttelton and Bainham, so far indeed operated upon him, that he saved their lives, but not their estates.

The following most excellent letter, wrote from the dungeon in Newgate, to Sir Walter, shews the greatness of Sir John Lyttelton's spirit, and deserved far better at the hands of Raleigh.

"Sir,

"It is not worthy the vertue and honour you professe to persecute persons fallen into misfortunes. If heretofore you have borne me causelesse displeasure, now of all others is the time leste seasonable to shewe it. Remember, Sir, what it is to be truly noble, and how it agreeth not with generous hartes to delite to trample upon dejected fortunes. It is nowe in your power to do me good or ill offices; if you do me ill, you shall wrong your own reputation; if you do me good, you shall give me cause to be thankfull. There is allredy betweene your son and me one tye in blood and nature: I could be contente you did now double the knot with offices of love and friendship. To begge your favour in the state I stand, were two much basenesse; to refuse it, were arrogancy and indiscretion: but to require you to do me no harm, is but justice, and that one gentleman of right oweth to another. What construction you will make of this, or what is now meete to be don, I must refer to your own judgment, and so I ende."

J. Lyttelton.

He was removed from Newgate to the King's-bench prison, Southwark, shortly after his conviction, where he lived but a few months, being sick (saith Camden) of an irrecoverable disease at the time of his trial; and dying on the 25th of July, 1601, aged thirty-nine, was interred in the church of St. George, in that borough. Mr. Habingdon (the Worcester-shire antiquary) in a letter to his son, Sir Thomas Lyttelton, dated in 1630, has these words: "Sir, if you would lay but a stone over your father, and write thereon but John Lyttelton, esquire, the same will sufficiently blaze his exceeding worth." In Habingdon's account of the Lyttelton family, in his Survey of Worcester-shire, he gives the following character of him: "John Lyttelton, a man of that undaunted spirit, as he trampled over all afflictions; scorning as dust his large revenues; and of that resignation and submission to almighty God, as he esteemed himself not a man, but a worm, of all which I being an eye-witness, doe hope that this heir of the worthy judge hath so acquitted himself at the tribunal of our eternal Judge, that his faults and imperfections being washed away by the blood of Christ, he possesseth never-ending felicity: and I wish these my poore lines were a tomb of brass to celebrate his memorial."

He left issue by Meriel, his wife, daughter of Sir Thomas Bromley, knight, lord high chancellor of England (temp. Eliz. R.) by Elizabeth, the daughter of Sir Adrian Fortescue, knight, three sons, and five daughters.

1. Thomas Lyttelton.

2. John Lyttelton, who was captain of horse, and adjutant to the earl of Southampton, in the Netherlands, where he lost his life in an engagement, in 1620.

3. Edward Lyttelton, who died unmarried.

The daughters were,

1. Elizabeth, } who died young.
2. Joan, }

3. Bridget, was the wife of Sir Robert Tracy, of Fairford and Toddington, in the county of Gloucester, great grandfather to the last lord Tracy. She lies buried in Fairford church, and appears by her epitaph, written by her daughter, to have been mistress of the learned languages.

* By several inquisitions taken after his death, he was found to die seized of all the manors and lands recited in the foregoing inquisitions; also of the manors of Shirford, Fletchamsted, Newbold, Eyfinghill, Kirkley, Kingscote, and Stretton-Baskerville; with the advowson also of Stretton, and divers lands and tenements in Cheping-Dercet, Temple Grafton, Weston under Wethele, Ausley, Billingsley, Cowndon, Brinklow, Hyde, and Attelborough, all in the county of Warwick; also of the manor of Hinkley, and lands and tenements in Wigston and Loughborough, in the county of Leicester; and certain lands, &c. in Onely and Barby, in the county of Northampton.

4. Anne,

4. Anne, married to Edward Lyttelton, esquire, afterwards lord keeper, and baron of Mounslow, in Shropshire. She died the 6th of February, 1623, and was buried in the church of the Inner Temple.

5. Jane, the wife of Sherington Talbot, of Salwarp, in the county of Worcester, esquire, from whom are descended Mr. Ivory Talbot, of Lacock, the earl of Suffex, and other families of consideration.

On queen Elizabeth's death, king James I. well weighing how popular a man the earl of Essex was, and so consequently all those who took part with him were esteemed by the vulgar, unto whom an act of mercy could not but be very grateful, especially at his first coming to the crown, granted back, by letters patent, the whole estate unto Meriel, widow of John Lyttelton, and his children; and, farther, an act of parliament also passed, the first year of that reign, for reversing the attainder, and restoring the blood of his issue. Meriel survived him twenty-eight years, in which time she paid, by savings out of her jointure, the sum of 9,000*l.* and upwards, debts, which her husband and his father had contracted; and though she exercised a proper frugality, yet was remarkably hospitable and charitable: but the most glorious part of her conduct, was the breeding up her children in the protestant religion, their ancestors having from the reformation to that time adhered to the old errors of the church of Rome. After a life thus spent in good works, she exchanged it for a better, dying at Hagley-hall, the 10th day of April, 1630, where in the church-yard she lies buried under a plain tomb, amongst her poor neighbours, as she expressly directed by her last will.

Sir THOMAS LYTTELTON, her eldest son, was chose knight for Worcestershire, in the two last parliaments of king James I. and three others of king Charles I. In 1613, he served the office of high sheriff of Staffordshire. In 1618, he was knighted at Whitehall, having a few months before been created a baronet. Upon the breaking out of the civil war, he adhered to the king's party. The county of Worcester being entirely in his majesty's interest, Sir Thomas had the chief military command there, the king by letter dated the 25th of June, 1642, ordering him to repair immediately to his house in Worcestershire, where he was appointed colonel of all the militia, and commissioner of array jointly with the lords Dudley and Coventry, Sir John Packington, and others. The year following he was a member of the Oxford parliament; and the very next year he was taken in arms at Bewdley, by the parliament forces, and streightly confined in the Tower of London. During his imprisonment, his estate was put under sequestration; an order of the 10th of March, 1644-5, passing the house, that Sir Thomas Lyttelton should pay four thousand pounds for his delinquency. About this time also, his fine seat at Frankley was burnt to the ground by prince Rupert, having been garrisoned by the prince for the king; and he, being obliged to dislodge, took this effectual method, to prevent the enemy making the like use of it. Sir Thomas obtained his liberty after some years close confinement; but enjoyed it a very short time, dying on the 22d of February, 1649-50, at Newcastle-house, in Clerkenwell, and was interred in Worcester cathedral.

He had issue by Catherine, his wife, daughter and sole heir to Sir Thomas Crompton, of Hounslow, in Middlesex, and of Driffeld, in Yorkshire, by Meriel, sister of Henry, viscount Falkland, lord deputy of Ireland, twelve sons, and four daughters,

He died at Windsor, 1712, and was buried in St. George's chapel, leaving no issue.

A handsome monument was erected to the memory of Sir Thomas, and his wife, in Worcester cathedral, with the following epitaph:

Near this place, under
A black stone lies interr'd
The body of Sir THOMAS LYTTTELTON
Of Frankley in the county of Worcester Knt. and Bart. who died
In the year of our Lord 1649-50,
Aged fifty-seaven yeares.
And under the same stone also
The body of Dame CATHARINE
LYTTTELTON, his wife, daughter
And sole heir of Sir THOMAS
CROMPTON, in the county of York, Knt. who died in the Year of our Lord 1666,
Aged sixty-seaven yeares.

At the top of the monument is placed a shield, containing the arms of Lyttelton, viz. argent, a cheveron between three escallops, sable, with the arms of Ulster in a canton, impaling those of Crompton, viz. gules, a fess between three lions rampant, or. N. B. The fess should have been waivy, and not plain. Upon a flat grave-stone, under the monument (which was lately removed, together with all the other grave-stones, in the body and side isles of the cathedral) was this inscription in capital letters:

Let no Man slight,
His Mortalitie.
Anno 1642.

These words were appointed to be hereon inscribed by Sir THOMAS LYTTTELTON, of Frankley, in the county of Worcester, Knt. and Bart. who died the 22d of Feb. 1649-50, and was buried under this stone, together with Dame CATHARINE, his wife, who died the 24th of June, 1666, full of years and good works.

Sir Thomas got a very good estate with this lady; but the whole was sold by him and his son, Sir Henry, while they were under imprisonment and sequestration, for adhering to the royal cause. She brought him the manors of Skidby and Ruston, with lands and tenements in Beverley, Ayke, Rippon, Holdenby, Darfield, Thorp, and Slatborn, together with the advowson of Slatborn; also the rectorial tithes of Willefdale, alias Guilsdale; a moiety of a mill in Norton and Sutton, all in the county of York; the rectory impropriate of St. Olave's, in York city; the tithes of Barrow, Poffenhill, Arlestone, Swynney, Wigwick, Harley, Acton-

Round, and Paynton, all in the county of Salop; the manor of Hownslow, in Middlesex; the rectory impropriate, and advowson of the vicarage of Laxton, in the county of Nottingham; the rectory impropriate, and advowson of the vicarage of All Saints, in the county of Northampton; with divers lands and tenements in Blisworth, in the county of Northampton; lands and tenements in Kirkby-Kendal, in Westmoreland; with the rectory impropriate, and advowson of the said vicarage, and the chantry lands formerly belonging to the said church, lands and tenements in Litherland, Beckenshaw, and Rufford, in Lancashire, with divers buildings in Hare-court, at the Inner Temple, London, called Crompton's-buildings. In his last will, dated December 20, 1644, "Concerning my goods (he says) which by these unhappy wars are of small value, I give my jewels, plate, and chattels of all sorts, to my wife, except ———; to my nephew, John Tracy, esquire, my ruby ring; to Sherington Talbot, esquire, twenty pounds; to my wife five hundred pounds; to the poor of Halesowen ten pounds, and of Hagley five marks, &c."

Sir HENRY LYTTTELTON, the fifth, but eldest surviving son, succeeded his father in title and estate. In 1654, he was seized by warrant from Cromwell, and confined in the Tower, on suspicion of having designs to subvert the government, a large quantity of arms being discovered in a private chamber, at his house at Hagley. He was kept a close prisoner seventeen months; his estate put under sequestration, and the then expensive office of the sheriffalty of Worcestershire laid upon him (A. D. 1655) during his confinement. A very short time before the restoration took place, he was honoured with the following letter from the king, all wrote in his hand; which shews how high a value the king set upon his services:

Brussels, 8th Jan. 1660.

To Sir Henry Lyttelton.

"I am well informed how much and how often you have suffered for me, and how much I am beholding to all your relations, and you may be very sure I have the sense of it that I ought to have, of which you shall one day have evidence; in the mean time cherish your health, and prepare for better times, which we shall enjoy together. Commend me to all your friends, and be confident you shall always find me to be

Your affectionate friend,

CHARLES R."

In 1660, he was chose member of parliament for the city of Litchfield; and the same year was one of the jury for the trial of the regicides. He was twice married, viz. first to Philadelphia*, daughter daughter and coheir of Thomas Cary, esquire, second son to Robert, earl of Monmouth, by whom he had no issue.

* This lady died at Tunbridge-wells, in her attendance on the queen (to whom she was lady of the bed-chamber) the 2d of August, 1663, and was interred in the parish church of Tunbridge, where an elegant monument was erected to her memory, with the following epitaph, wrote by Dr. Allestree, provost of Eton.

His second wife was Elizabeth Newport, daughter of Francis, viscount Newport (afterwards earl of Bradford) by whom also he had no issue. She survived him above thirty years, and became wife to Edward Harvey, of Comb, in Surry, esquire.

Sir Henry died at Over-Areley, in Staffordshire (where he chiefly resided) the 24th of June, 1693, aged sixty-nine; and was buried in that church, where is a very handsome monument erected to his memory, ornamented with a shield, containing his own arms and supporters, and eleven quarterings, with the following inscription:

In the vault beneath is interred the body of Sir HENRY LYTTELTON, Baronet, of Frankley, in the county of Worcester; who died the 24th of June, 1693, aged 69 years. He was first married to Mrs. PHILADELPHIA CARY, one of the daughters and coheirs of Mr. THOMAS CARY, son of the Earl of Monmouth; and after her death to the Hon. Mrs. ELIZABETH NEWPORT, of Bradford, in Shropshire; to whose memory this monument is erected by his brother and heir, Sir CHARLES LYTTELTON, Knt. and Bart.

In the chancel of this church lies also buried his brother, Captain WILLIAM LYTTELTON, and his beloved nephew, HENRY LYTTELTON, eldest son of Sir CHARLES LYTTELTON.

Sir CHARLES LYTTELTON, brother and heir of Sir Henry, took to arms early in his youth; and, during the civil wars, was in the town of Colchester, when it underwent that severe siege from Cromwell's forces. After the surrender of the town, he escaped into France; but returned to England in the year 1659, just before Sir George's Booth's rising in Cheshire for the king. How considerable a share he had in that bold and spirited attempt, to restore the king and constitution, appears by the following passage, in lord Mordaunt's letter to the king, concerning that transaction:

Calais, Oct. 11th, 1659.

"Charles Lyttelton landed here yesterday, and desires his duty may be humbly presented to your majesty. I cannot forbear doing him right to assure your majesty, no person appeared more considerable (Sir George Booth only excepted) than he; and he had undoubtedly carried Shrewsbury, but that one misfortune on another happened, &c."

That design miscarrying, he was taken prisoner, and confined in the Gatehouse, Westminster; but soon obtaining his liberty, he returned to his royal master, and served him in a private capacity with more success than he had been able to do in a public one; for it appears by other letters, in the Ormond collection (from whence the above was extracted) that he was employed on many secret and important messages, between the king and his friends in England, at that critical conjuncture, just preceding the restoration. How favourably Sir Edward Hyde thought of him, at that time, though he does not vouchsafe to mention him in his History, appears from the following letter of his to the marquis of Ormond.

"Colonel Whitley tells me, that Charles Lyttelton is gone post to the king, with letters to the king from my lord Mordaunt. I shall not need to desire you to make very much of Charles Lyttelton, who is a very worthy young man; and, I pray you oblige him to tell you (and call to him from me) the pleasant discourse he had with lord Berkley, the morning before his departure; and if he be not worth his weight in gold, &c."

In 1662 he was knighted, and went soon after to Jamaica, with lord Windsor, as lieutenant-governor; who quickly leaving that island, on account of ill health, Sir Charles Lyttelton remained sole governor, and built the town of Port Royal, which was almost entirely destroyed by the great earthquake in 1692. On his return to England, he was appointed colonel of the duke of York's regiment. In 1673, he was made governor of Sheerness and Landguard-fort; and had other employments under the crown in the reign of king Charles II. During king James II's reign, he sat in parliament for the borough of Bewdley, and had the command of the prince's of Denmark's regiment, and was brigadier-general till the revolution, when he resigned all his employments on account of the oaths, and retired to his house at West-Sheene, near Richmond, till his brother, Sir Henry's death, when he settled at Hagley for the remainder of his life.

He was twice married: first, to Catharine, daughter of Sir William Fairfax, of Steton, in Yorkshire, knight, (and widow of Mr. Lister) by whom he had one son, born at sea, in their passage from England to Jamaica; who, together with the mother, died not long after in that island, and were both interred in the church of Spanish town. A monument was erected there to her memory, on which are inscribed these epitaphs:

Sir Charles lived to a great age, having the perfect enjoyment of his health and senses to his 87th year. He departed this life at his seat at Hagley, on May 2, 1716. Dame Anne, his widow, survived him two years, dying on the 27th of August, 1718, and was buried by her husband in the vault at Over-Arley.

Sir THOMAS LYTTTELTON was thrice chosen knight of the shire for Worcestershire, and sat in one parliament for the borough of Camelford, in Cornwall. In 1727, he was appointed a lord of the admiralty, which he resigned in 1741; and at the same time declined a re-election to parliament on account of ill health and infirmities. He married Christian, maid of honour to queen Anne, daughter to Sir Richard Temple, of Stowe, in Buckinghamshire, baronet, (by Mary, the daughter and coheir of Henry Knap, of Weston, in Oxfordshire, esquire) and sister to the late lord viscount Cobham, by whom he had six sons, and as many daughters,

On the 21st of March, 1762, he was consecrated bishop of Carlisle, on the translation of bishop Osbaldiston to the see of London. His lordship is fellow of the royal society, and president of the society of the Antiquaries in London.

On the 11th of December, 1756, he was appointed master of the jewel office, which he resigned in December, 1762, when he was appointed captain-general and commander in chief of the island of Minorca. April 19, 1766, having resigned the government of Minorca, he was appointed governor of the island of Guernsey, &c. In the parliament summoned to meet on the 13th of August, 1747, he was elected member for Brackley; and in the next parliament sat for Poole, in the county of Dorset. On the 27th of December, 1753, he was installed knight of the Bath. He married Rachel, daughter of Wriothesley, second duke of Bedford, and widow of Scroop, first duke of Bridgwater, by whom he has no issue.

His lady died in Jamaica, May 28, 1765, and was there interred.

Sir Thomas died at Hagley, the 14th of September, 1751, aged sixty-six years, and was interred by the remains of his wife (who died the 10th of April, 1748, aged 59 years) in the vault at Hagley, to whose memories an elegant monument is erected in the chancel, with the following inscriptions :

To the memory of Sir THOMAS LYTTELTON, Bart.
 Whose sound judgment, inflexible integrity, and universal candour,
 Recommended him to the esteem of all parties.
 He was knight of the shire for the county of Worcester in three successive parliaments,
 And one of the lords commissioners of the admiralty fourteen years,
 Where he behaved with impartialty, prudence, and honour :
 But his ill health obliging him to withdraw from business,
 He resigned that employment
 And lived retired
 In the continual exercise of all the virtues
 Which can enoble a private life,
 Hospitality, charity, unbounded benevolence,
 But more especially of that most difficult and truly heroical virtue,
 Fortitude in bearing violent pain,
 With which it pleas'd God to try him in an extraordinary manner,
 And which instead of diminishing the vigour of his mind
 Gave it additional strength.
 He felt every publick and private calamity,
 More than the intenseness of his own sufferings,
 Which he seem'd to forget
 While he was meditating the relief
 Or advancing the felicity of others.
 To the great author of all good his heart overflowed with gratitude,
 And his tongue with praise,
 Even amidst the severest agonies,
 Especially for that divine grace
 Which enabled him to support them,
 And for that unimpaired understanding
 Of which he made the noblest use to his last moments,
 Dying as he had lived,
 With unaffected greatness of mind,
 With modest dignity,
 With calm resignation,
 And humble but confident hopes in the mercy of God,
 Through the merits of JESUS CHRIST his redeemer,
 September the 14. Ann. Dom. 1751,
 In the sixty-sixth year of his age.

In the same vault lies interred
 The body of dame CHRISTIAN,
 The wife of Sir THOMAS LYTTELTON, baronet,
 Daughter of Sir RICHARD TEMPLE, baronet,
 Of Stow, in the county of Bucks,
 A lady of excellent piety,
 And of a most gentle
 And sweet disposition,
 By whom he had twelve children,
 Six son, and six daughters.
 She was born the eleventh of June, 1688,
 Was married in the year 1708,
 And died, beloved and mourned
 By her family, by her neighbours,
 And by the poor, April 10, 1748.

To both his most dear
 And most honoured parents
 Sir GEORGE LYTTELTON, baronet,
 Raised and inscribed this stone.

(Present Lord) GEORGE LYTTELTON, the eldest, son and heir to Sir Thomas, sat in several parliaments for the borough of Okehampton, in Devonshire. In 1737, he was appointed principal secretary to the then prince of Wales; and in 1744, one of the lords commissioners of the treasury, which resigning in 1754, was made cofferer to his majesty's household, and privy-counsellor. Having resigned the office of cofferer, in December 1755, he was appointed chancellor and under-treasurer of his majesty's court of exchequer; and by letters patent, dated the 19th of November, 1757, 31 Geo. II. was created a peer of Great Britain, by the style and title of lord Lyttelton, baron of Frankley, in the county of Worcester. He married Lucy, the daughter of Hugh Fortescue, of Filleigh, in the county of Devon, esquire, by Lucy, his second wife, the daughter of Matthew, lord Aylmer; and has one son, Thomas, born on January 30, 1743-4, member in the present parliament (chosen 1768) for Bewdley, in the county of Worcester, and one daughter, Lucy; which Lucy was married on the 10th of May, 1767, at St. James's church in Westminster, to Arthur Annesly, baron Altham, in the kingdom of Ireland, who lays claim to the earldom of Anglesea, in England. This lady died the 19th of January, 1746-7, and was buried at Over-Arley; but a very elegant monument is erected to her memory in the chancel of the church at Hagley, containing the following inscriptions :

To the Memory of LUCY LYTTELTON,
 Daughter of HUGH FORTESCUE, of Filleigh
 In the County of Devon, Esq;
 Father to the present Earl of Clinton :
 By LUCY his Wife,
 The Daughter of MATTHEW Lord AYLMEY,
 Who departed this Life the 19th of Jan. 1746-7,
 Aged twenty-nine,
 Having employed the short Term assigned to her here
 In the uniform Practice of Religion and Virtue.
 Made to engage all Hearts, and charm all Eyes :
 Though weak, magnanimous ; though witty, wise;
 Polite as all her Life in Courts had been ;
 Yet good, as she the World had never seen ;
 The noble Fire of an exalted Mind
 With gentlest female Tenderness combin'd.
 Her Speech was the melodious Voice of Love;
 Her Song the warbling of the vernal Grove,
 Her Eloquence was sweeter than her Song,
 Soft as her Heart, and as her Reason strong.
 Her Form each Beauty of her Mind express'd,
 Her Mind was Virtue by the Graces dress'd.

COMPTON'S ENGLISH REFRAG.

By George Compton, Lord Lytton, Baron of Lytton, and George Compton, Esq.

LYTTON

P E T T Y, Baron W Y C O M B E.

FOR the maternal ancestors of this noble lord we refer our readers to the note beneath*: for the origin of his family in the male line we must refer to Vol. II. p. 295, where Gerald, the son of Walter, (patriarch of the Windsors, Fitz-Geralds, Fitz-Maurices, Carews, Gerards, &c.) is said to have had, by Nesta, his wife (daughter to Rhese, and sister to Griffith, prince of South Wales, and formerly concubine to king Henry I.) three sons, viz. William, Maurice, called the ancestor to the duke of Leinster, &c. and David, consecrated bishop of St. David's, in 1147: but Mr. Lodge, in his Peerage of Ireland, makes the said William second son of Gerald. However that be, we shall not pretend at present to determine, but proceed with the descent of William, as progenitor to the earl of Kerry and lord Wycombe. This

WILLIAM, son of Gerald, in 1166, 12 Henry II. held two knights-fees in Buckinghamshire, and the manor of Spersholt and Hermitage, in Berkshire; and with Odo, his son, gave the village of Redbard (distant about a mile from the castle of Carew, in the county of Caermarthen, his mother's inheritance, formerly wrote Karria, Karriu, and Carrio) to the Knights Templars. He was, in 1171, 17 Henry II. sent with his son, Reymond, into Ireland, by Richard de Clare (known by the appellation of Strongbow) earl of Pembroke, and of Striguil; or Strighul, a castle in Monmouthshire, and contributed much towards the reduction of that kingdom; but returned to England, and died there in 1173.

By Catharine, his wife, daughter to Sir Adam de Kingsley, of Cheshire, besides a daughter Matilda (wedded to Nicholas de Cantilupe, father by her of a son Reymond, who held lands of his uncle Reymond; in Idrone, in the county of Carlow, in Ireland) he left seven sons,

1. Odo (placed as third son by Sir William Segar) who inherited the beforementioned castle of Carew; and having married Margaret, daughter of Richard Fitz-Tancred, a man of great power in Pembrokehire, left by her two sons, William and Stephen, progenitors to the numerous and respectable

* Anthony Petty, of Rumsey, in the county of Southampton, clothier, was father of Sir William Petty, Anthony Petty, and a daughter, —, besides other children. The daughter was married to James Napier, esquire, fourth son of Sir Nathaniel Napier, of Middle-Mershall, in Dorsetshire, baronet, who derived his origin from lord Napier's family in Scotland; a cadet from the antient earls of Lennox in that kingdom (their armorial bearings being the same, viz. argent, a saltire engrailed, between four roses, gules) and whose ancestor acquired the surname of Napier, by his matchless bravery in battle. From the said James Napier, esquire, descended, by this marriage, Nathanael Napier, of Loughrew, in the county of Meath, esquire, lieutenant-general Robert Napier, and others of that name, in Ireland.

Sir William Petty, aforesaid, was born at Rumsey, on May 26, 1623, and discovered such an early genius for mechanics, and so well understood the business of some artificers, viz. smiths, carpenters, &c. that he could, at twelve years of age, work at their several employments. He learned grammar at the place of his nativity, whence he went to the university of Oxford; and, when he attained the fifteenth year of his age, was master of the Latin, Greek, and French languages, the whole system of common arithmetic; and those parts of practical geometry and astronomy that tended to the knowledge of navigation, dialling, &c. Thus qualified, he served on board the royal navy, where, at the age of twenty years, he had made about 60*l.* with which he went to the Low Countries and France, in 1643, when the parliamentary rebellion raged against Charles I. and studied, with great application, anatomy, medicine, &c. at Utrecht, Leyden, Amsterdam, Paris, &c. Whilst abroad, he read Velasius with the famous Mr. Thomas Hobbes, of Malmesbury, who delighted in his company, and testified an eagerness to encourage his pregnant genius. He returned to Rumsey, in 1647, in company with his brother Anthony, whom he had educated; and by that time had encreased his stock to about 70*l.* after defraying his own and his said brother's expences abroad. On March 6, 1647-8, the parliament ordered him a patent, to be in force for seventeen years, for teaching his method of double writing.

He concurred with the people then in power; and practised physick at Oxford, where he also instructed the young students in anatomy and chemistry. He became deputy-professor of anatomy in that university; and on March 7, 1649-50, was admitted to the degree of doctor of physic, at the recommendation of lieutenant-colonel Kelsey, deputy-governor of the garrison in that city, as well as of other persons, who all gave to the delegates of the university ample testimony of his rare qualities and extraordinary gifts. About the same time, he was likewise elected fellow of Brazen-Nose-college; and in December, 1650, he acquired no small reputation for being the chief person in the recovery of Anne Green, who had been hanged at Oxford, on the 14th of that month, for child murder, and ordered for dissection; but Sir William, observing that she had symptoms of life, which he humanely cherished, and not only prevented her from being hung up a second time, but procured a pardon for her, and she lived many years after that. In January following, he was unanimously chosen professor of anatomy in the university of Oxford; and being a favourite among the virtuosi, was soon afterwards received a member of the Royal College of Physicians in London, and appointed lecturer on music in Gresham-college there.

His capital was reduced to 28*l.* at his admission into the College of Physicians: but with his income as fellow of Brazen-Nose-college, and professor of anatomy, in Oxford, and as lecturer in Gresham college, together with his practice as doctor, he raised it to above 400*l.* with which, and a 100*l.* advanced by the commonwealth, he set out in August, 1652, as physician-general to the army in Ireland, and to its commander, lieutenant general Edmund Ludlow; as well as the head-quarters; having an allowance of 20*s.* a day, which he enjoyed with his office, till June 1659. In that quality he landed, on September 10, at Waterford, and proceeded thence to Dublin, where he met with great success as doctor amongst people of the first rank. He was made clerk of the council there, and constituted secretary to Oliver Cromwell, who was then styled lord-lieutenant: for the discharge of which two offices he was allowed 400*l.* a year. In December, 1654, he engaged in the survey of Ireland; and finished it with such exactness, spectable families of Carew, in the counties of Devon, Cornwall, &c.

2. Raymond, of whom more fully as ancestor to the noble family of whom we are now treating.

3. Sylvester.

4. Henry.

5. William (by Sir William Segar is reckoned second son) who was justice in eyre, in Cheshire, and from whom, by Alice, his wife, daughter to Richard, earl of Pembroke, aforesaid, descended the Gerards, earls of Macclesfield, the last of whom, Fitton Gerard, died on December 26, 1702, without lawful issue; the lords Gerard, of Bromley; the Gerards, of Bryn, in Lancashire, &c.

6. John, ancestor to the Keatings in Ireland.

7. Griffyn, who, in 1173, killed O Rourke, king of Meath, at a conference between him and Sir Hugh de Lacy.

RAYMOND, the second son, or, according to Sir William Segar, the eldest son, of William, the son of Gerald, was, from his corpulence, stiled Crassus, or Le Gros, and was one of those principally concerned in the reduction of Ireland to the crown of England, as the annals of both kingdoms amply testify. When the success of the adventurers, in that undertaking, made king Henry I. jealous of them, particularly of the earl of Pembroke, and, to prevent their power becoming too great, forbade the exportation of provisions and military stores to Ireland, and ordered all his subjects to return thence, Raymond was dispatched to his majesty, then in Aquitaine, to assure him of their obedience, and that all their conquests were and should be at his command. Upon his return to Ireland, he continued to signalize himself by his exploits against the natives, and thereby maintained the interest of the English in that country. Having relieved the said earl of Pembroke (called Strongbow) when coupé up in Waterford by the citizens, who were conspiring his lordship's murder, he got that nobleman's sister, Basilina, in marriage, A. D. 1175, with the lands of Idrone (beforementioned) Fothard, and Glascarrig, with the constableship of Leinster, as a portion with her.

As this Raymond, after an expedition against Donald, king of Limerick, was concerting measures in that city for the benefit of the English adventurers, Dermot (or Diarmuid, or Dermoid) Mac Carty, king of Cork (stiled, by the Irish, Ningal, that is, The stranger's friend) implored his aid (with promises of large rewards to himself, and reasonable pay to his soldiers) against his son, Cormac O Lehanah, who had imprisoned and treated him with great cruelty. Raymond, having consulted his friends, accepted the proposal, and re-establishing Dermot in his dominions, by defeating and delivering to him his rebellious son (who was for some time kept in confinement, and then lost his head) obtained from the said Dermot, in recompence, a large tract of land in the county of Kerry, then reckoned part of the kingdom of Cork, where he settled his son Maurice, who grew so great and powerful, that from him both his family and that country derived their names, the latter being denominated Clan-Maurice, and the former Fitz-Maurice, both which are now enjoyed by his lineal descendant, the earl of Kerry.

The beforementioned Richard, earl of Pembroke and Striguil, dying on May 27, 1177, 23 Hen. II. Raymond that there was not an estate, even of 60l. a year, but what was distinctly marked in its true value; and the whole performance was illustrated with accurate maps. Among other advantages attending the said survey, he had, by agreement with the soldiers, a penny an acre; and it appears, by an order of government, dated at the castle of Dublin, March 19, 1655-6, that he had then surveyed two millions and eight thousand acres of forfeited profitable land (part of which he subdivided among the late disbanded troops) besides the church and crown lands; which according to the rates in the contract, when the army should be put in possession of the whole, amounted to the sum of 17,900l. of which he had received 7,500l. and, from the army, 2,186l. 2s. besides the money that was to be deducted from the advance of former surveys. By the aforesaid order, he received 3,000l. more, in consideration of his being in want of money to pay several persons employed under him in the survey: but part of his contract remained in arrear till after king Charles's Restoration, when full payment was provided for him by act of parliament.

By his employment in the survey (which was unquestionably of public utility) it was said that he acquired an estate of 5 or 6000l. a-year, and that he could, from Mount-Mangorton in Kerry, behold 50,000 acres of his own land: and that large acquisition having brought an odium upon him, he shews the unreasonableness thereof (in his book of Reflections upon some Persons and Things in Ireland) and demonstrates how he might, without ever meddling with surveys, have acquired as large a fortune. In the year 1649 (says he) I proceeded M. D. after the charges whereof, and my admission into the college of London, I had left about 60l. From that time till about August 1652, by my practice, fellowship at Gresham, and at Brazen-Nose-college, and by my anatomy lecture at Oxford, I had made that 60l. to be near 500l. From August 16, 1652, when I went for Ireland, to December 1654 (when I began the survey and other publick entanglements) with 100l. advance money, and of 365l. a-year well paid salary, as also with my practice among the chief in the chief city of the nation, I made my said 500l. above 1,600l. Now the interest of this 1600l. for a year in Ireland, could not be less than 200l. which, with 550l. (for another year's salary and practice, viz. until the lands were set out in October, 1665) would have increased my said stock to 1,350l. With 2,000l. whereof I would have bought 8,000l. in debentures, which would have then purchased me about 15,000 acres of land, viz. as much as I am now accused to have. These 15,000 acres could not yield me less than, at 2s. per acre, 1,500l. per ann. especially receiving the rents of May-day, preceding. This year's rent with 550l. for my salary and practice, &c. till December, 1656, would have bought me even then (debentures growing dearer) 6,000l. in debentures, whereof the five 7ths then paid would have been about 4,000l. neat, for which I must have had about 8,000 acres, for three years, could not have been less than 7,000l. which, with the same three years salary, viz. 1650l. would have been near 9000l. estate in money, above the above-mentioned 1500l. per ann. in lands. The which, whether it be more or less than what I now have, I leave to all the world to examine and judge. This estate I might have got without ever meddling with surveys, much less with the more fatal distribution of lands after they were surveyed, and without meddling with the clerkship of the council, or being secretary to the lord-lieutenant: all which had I been so happy as to have declined, then had I preserved an universal favour and interest with all men, instead of the odium and persecution I now endure.—Thus, with strength of argument, does this great man set forth his case, in answer to the aspersions thrown out against him: and how he acquired his great fortune, will further appear from his last will, hereafter narrated at large.

He sat for the borough of Westflow, in Cornwall, in Richard Cromwell's first and only parliament, which met at Westminster on January 27, 1658-9, and made a considerable figure therein, till it was dissolved, on April 22, 1659, at the instigation of the military officers, who threatened to set fire to the house, and kill all who should resist. Richard Cromwell being deposed next month by the Rump parliament, which had imbrued their hands in the blood of their lawful sovereign, king Charles I. and were then re-established by military power, Sir William returned to Ireland, and remained there till the restoration of king Charles II. upon which he went back to England, Raymond le Gros was chosen chief governor of Ireland by the council, and so continued till the arrival of William Burke (patronymically stiled Fitz-Adelm) ancestor to the earl of Clanrickard, viscount Mayo, &c. This Raymond built fort O Nolan for the defence of the province of Leinster, and gave one carucate of land, with all the tythes of Fothard, to religious uses; and his wife gave to the monastery of St. Thomas, for the health of her own soul, and those of her father, brother, and husband, the lands called Incheronewalla, which had some time belonged to William Dammartin; and likewise by another grant gave her body to be buried in the church of that convent, and she to serve God there, as a sister, for life.

By Basilia, his wife, aforesaid, the earl of Pembroke's daughter, he had issue two sons,

1. Maurice, his heir.

2. Hamon, Hamo, or Heimond, stiled Le Groffe, whose posterity, after some descents, by a small difference in the pronounciation, were called Grace, and became a family of great account in the county of Kilkenny, where a considerable tract of land still retains their name, being denominated Grace's country.

MAURICE, the eldest son, was settled, as aforesaid, by his father, in that part of the county of Kerry now called Clan-Maurice; and had a grant of five knights-fees, from king Richard I. in Cofmange and Molahiffe, in Desmond. He was twice married, 1st, to Johanna, daughter to Miles Fitz-Henry, founder of Conall abbey, in the county of Kildare, and chief governor of Ireland, and got with her the lands of Rathivoe, Killury, and Ballyheige: and, 2. to Catherine, daughter to

Sir Miles Cogan, counsellor of state to William Burke Fitz-Adelm, beforementioned, chief governor, having been custos of Dublin at its first reduction, lord of Belvoir, now called Carrigleen, in the county of Cork.

By the first wife he was father of two sons,

1. Thomas, his heir.

2. Gerard, ancestor of the Fitz-Maurices, of Liscahane and Kilfenurugh.

Maurice, by his second wife whom he wedded A. D. 1177, had a son, William, progenitor to the Fitz-Maurices, seated at Brees, in the county of Mayo, and at Ballykealy, in Clan-Maurice, anciently barons thereof.

THOMAS, the eldest son and heir of Maurice, was the first who took the name of Fitz-Maurice; and was also the first who was stiled lord of Kerry, or baron of Lixnaw. In his youth, he obtained a grant from king John, in the first year of his reign (which began on April 6, 1199) of ten knights-fees, Iveforna and Ivefarba, in Kerry: and an ancient rent is reserved to this family, from time immemorial, out of the territory of Kerry, of fourpence by the acre from Bealtra to Grahane, called the rent of acres. He founded the Grey Franciscan friery of Ardfert, a noble structure, over the gate whereof is inscribed the date of its foundation, M. CC. L. III. — He departed this life on the feast of St. Peter and St. Paul (June 29) 1280, 8 Ed. I. at Browry, the house of his son-in-law; and was interred on the north-side of the great altar in the said friery at Ardfert.

His lordship wedded Grany (Grace) daughter to Mac-Murrough Cavenagh (son to Dermoid, king of Leinster, who first brought over Richard, earl

of

England, and being introduced to the king, his majesty was much pleased with his ingenious discourse.

The royal society being instituted about that time, he was one of the first members, and afterwards one of the council thereof, when incorporated in 1663, being esteemed the person most capable to advance experimental philosophy and mechanics.

On March 19, 1660-61, he was nominated one of the commissioners of the court of claims relating to the Irish estates: and king Charles, in his instructions for the execution of the act of settlement, ordered lands to be assigned him for his outstanding debentures, according to the directions in his majesty's letter of January 2, 1660-61, that all the forfeited lands, which had been set out to him, and of which he had been possessed on May 7, 1659, should be confirmed to him for ever; which was accordingly done by the said act, and in virtue thereof he had seven grants of lands by his letters patent, and his lady two.

On April 11, 1661, he received the honour of knighthood from his majesty; and was returned one of the burgesses for Eniscorthy, in the county of Wexford, to the parliament which was convened at Dublin, on May 9, that year.

Sir William Petty raised his reputation to a great height, A. D. 1663, by the success his invention of the double-bottomed ship had, contrary to the expectation of almost all mankind; for in July, when first that ship sailed from Dublin to Holyhead, and having staid there many days, during which her enemies, absolutely concluding that she was lost, were assigning various reasons for her supposed disaster, she shewed, at her return, that she could not only keep the sea (which the maligners of her contrivance had declared her altogether incapable of) but that her form of structure was superior to that of other vessels with respect to sailing, carriage, and security. She turned into the narrow harbour against wind and tide, among the rocks and ships, with such dexterity, that the oldest seamen acknowledged they had never seen the like: but at length, returning from a voyage, was destroyed by a terrible tempest, which overwhelmed, that same night, a fleet of seventy vessels without sparing one of the number; so that the advocates for the common fabric of ships had no reason to triumph over that new contrivance. Sir William made a model of this vessel with his own hands, which he presented to Gresham-college, where it is still preserved in the repository.

Dr. John Stearne, with this Sir William Petty, and other eminent physicians, were, by patent dated August 8, 1667, created a body politic, by the name of The President and Fellows of the College of Physicians: and he is allowed to have been a great reformer and improver of the practice of physic in Ireland.

Sir William Petty was a singular promoter of experimental philosophy; an admirable inventor of mechanic instruments; and his Treatise of Political Arithmetic shews the extensiveness of his capacity, and will be of lasting service to posterity. He was qualified, by his natural and acquired talents, to be an useful member of society, and to add lustre to the highest preferments.

The will of this great man is of such a curious nature, that it would be a great injustice not to insert a copy of it for the satisfaction of our readers. It bears date May 2, 1685, and runs thus: "In the name of God, amen. I Sir William Petty, knight, born at Rumsey in Hantsire, do, revoking all other and former wills, make this my last will and testament, premising the ensuing preface to the same, whereby to express my condition, design, intentions, and desires, concerning the persons and things contained in relating to my said will, for the better expounding any thing, which may hereafter seem doubtful therein, and also for justifying, on behalf of my children, the manner and means of getting and acquiring the estate, which I hereby bequeath unto them; exhorting them to improve the same by no worse negotiations. — In the first place I declare and affirm, that at the full age of fifteen years I had obtained the Latin, Greek, and French tongues, the whole body of common arithmetick, the practical geometry and astronomy conducing to navigation, dialling, &c. with the knowledge of several mathematical trades, all which, and having been at the university of Oxford, preferred me to the king's navy; where at the age of twenty years I had gotten up about threescore pounds, with as much mathematics as any of Pembroke, aforefaid, to Ireland) and by her had two fons, and two daughters, viz. Maurice, his heir; Pierfe (or Peter) ancestor to the families feated at Ballymac-Equim, Crofsnifhane, and Magneogahane, who yet exift, having changed their furname to Pierfe about the latter end of queen Elizabeth's reign; Catherine, married to Sir Hugh de Lacy, of Ballingamy; and Joan, the wife of Sir Otho de Lacy, of Browry.

MAURICE, the eldeft fon, fecond lord of Kerry, or Lixnaw, fat in the parliament held at Dublin, A. D. 1295, being ftiled Maurice Fitz-Thomas, of Kerry; and in 1297, had a writ of fummons sent to him by king Edward I. requiring his affiftance in an expedition into Scotland; with which he complied, by going thither with horfe and arms, prepared for that fervice. He died in 1303, at his houfe of Lixnaw (fo corrupted from Lackfnaway) and he was buried with his father in the abbey of Ardfert, beforementioned.

This Maurice, fecond lord Fitz-Maurice, of Kerry, took to wife Mary, daughter and heir to Sir John Mac Cleod (or Mac Leod) of Galway, chief of his name in thofe parts, and whose kindred are commonly denominated Mac Elligott: and by her (who brought him two knights-fees about Liftowell and Tralee; the lands of Gael, O Brennan, and Cloghan-Mac Kinn, with feveral others in Kerry; and in whose right, the family quarter the arms of Mac Leod, viz. azure, a tower, argent) he was father of five fons, and four daughters.

Of the latter,

1. Grace, married to Robert, lord Perceval.

2. Mary, married to George, lord Roche, of Coflea; commonly called the Red Roach.

3. Joan, married to William, lord Barry, of Olethan.

4. Elinor, married to John, lord Roche, of Fermoy and Poolcastle, by whom she was mother of Blanch, the first countess of Kildare.

The fons of the aforefaid Maurice, fecond lord of Kerry, were,

1. Nicholas, his heir and fucceffor.

2. Matthias, who ufurped the title of lord of Kerry, for a year or two, and wedded Catharine, daughter to Dermoid (Rower, or the Fat) Mac Carthy (More) of Carbery, and was by her progenitor to the families at Ballinprior and Ballinvohir.

3. Geffrey, who left iffue.

4. Gerard, a Knight Templar, and grand prior of that order in Ireland, at their fuppreffion,

5. Thomas, a Bernardine monk, abbot of Ordneyn, otherwife St. Mary de Kurie Eleefon, and of Fermoy.

NICHOLAS FITZ-MAURICE, third lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry, was knighted at Adair, in the county of Limerick, A. D. 1312, by John, lord Offaley, and first earl of Kildare, for affifting him to fuppreff the rebellion of the Irish in Munfter; and the fame year went againft the Scots. He made feveral grants of land to pious ufes; built the lepers houfe at Ardfert, with the caftles of Portrinande and Ardfert, and the ftone-bridge at Lixnaw; and was the first who made toughers, or caufeways, to that place. His lordship married Slany, daughter to Connor O'Brien, prince of of my age was known to have had. With this provifion, anno 1643, when the civil wars between the king and parliament grew hot, I went into the Netherlands and France for three years, and having vigorously followed my ftudies, efpecially that of medicine, at Utrecht, Leyden, Amsterdam, and Paris, I returned to Rumsy, where I was born, bringing back with me my brother Anthony, whom I had bred, with about 10 l. more than I had carried out of England. With this 70 l. and my endeavours, in lefs than four years more, I obtained my degree of M. D. in Oxford, and forthwith thereupon to be admitted into the College of Phyficians, London, and into feveral clubs of the virtuous; after all which expence defrayed, I had left 28 l. and in the next two years being made fellow of Brazen-Nofe, and anatomy profefor in Oxford, and alfo reader at Gresham-college, I advanced my faid ftock to about 400 l. and with 100 l. more advanced and given me to go for Ireland, unto full 500 l. Upon the 10th of September, 1652, I landed, at Waterford in Ireland, phyfician to the army, who had fuppreffed the rebellion begun in the year 1641, and to the general of the fame, and the head-quarters, at the rate of 20 s. per diem, at which I continued till June, 1659, gaining by my practice about 400 l. a year above the faid falary. About September, 1654, I perceiving that the admeafurement of the lands, forfeited by the afore-mentioned rebellion, and intended to regulate the fatisfaction of the foldiers, who had fuppreffed the fame, was moft infufficiently and abfurdly managed; I obtained a contract, dated 11th of December 1654, for making the faid admeafurement, and by God's bleffing, fo performed the fame, as that I gained about 9,000 l. thereby, which, with the 5000 l. above-mentioned, my falary of 20 s. per diem, the benefit of my practice, together with 600 l. given me for directing an after-furvey of the adventurers lands, and 800 l. more for two years falary, as clerk of the council, raifed me an eftate of about 13,000 l. in ready and real money, at a time, when, without art, interest, or authority, men bought as much lands for 10 s. in real money, as in this year, 1685, yields 10 s. per annum rent, above his majesty's quit-rents. Now, I beftowed part of the faid 3,000 l. in foldiers debentures, part in purchafing the earl of Arundel's houfe and garden in Lothbury, London, and part I kept in cafh to answer emergencies. Hereupon I purchafed lands, in Ireland, with foldiers debentures, bought at the above market rates, a great part whereof I loft by the court of Innocence, anno 1663; and built the faid garden, called Token-houfe-yard, in Lothbury, which was for the moft part destroyed by the dreadful fire, anno 1666. Afterwards, anno 1667, I married Elizabeth, the relict of Sir Maurice Fenton, baronet. I fet up iron-works and pilchard-fifhing in Kerry, and opened the lead-mines and timber-trade in Kerry; by all which, and fome advantageous bargains, and with living under my income, I have, at the making this my will, the real and perfonal eftate following; viz. a large houfe and four tenements in Rumsy, with four acres of meadow upon the caufeway, and four acres of arable in the fields, called Marks and Woolliworths, in all about 30 l. per ann. Houfes in Token-houfe-yard near Lothbury, London, with a leafe in Piccadilly, and the feven Stars and the blazing Star in Birching-lane, London, worth about 50 l. per ann. befides mortgages upon certain houfes in Hog-lane, near Shoreditch, in London, and in Erith, in Kent, worth about 20 l. per ann. I have three 4th parts of the fhip Charles, whereof Derych Paine is mafter, which I value at 80 l. per ann. as alfo the copper-plates for the maps of Ireland with the king's privilege, which I rate at 100 l. per ann. in all 730 l. per ann. I have in Ireland, without the county of Kerry, in lands, remainders, and reverfions, about 3,100 l. per ann. I have of neat profits, out of the lands and woods of Kerry, above 1,100 l. per ann. befides iron-works, fifhing, and lead-mines, and marble-quarries, worth 600 l. per ann. in all 4,800 l. I have as my wife's jointure, during her life, about 150 l. per ann. and for fourteen years after her death about 200 l. per ann. I have, by 3,300 l. money at interest, 320 l. ann. in all about 6,700 l. per ann. The perfonal eftate is as follows, in the cheft, 6,600 l. in the hands of Adam Loftus, 1,296 l. of Mr. John Cogs, goldfmith, of London, 1,151 l. in filver, plate, and jewels, about 3,000 l. in furniture, goods, pictures, coach-horfes, books, and watches, 1,150 l. per eftimate in all 12,000 l. I value my three chefts of original map and field-books, the copies of the Downe survey, with the barony maps and cheft of diftribution books, with two chefts of loofe papers relating to the survey, the two great barony mond: and by her had three sons, and six daughters; of which last,

1. Catherine, wedded to John, lord Barry, of Hely.

2. Mary, to Sir Robert de Lacy, lord of Ivecolyen, or (as others say) to the lord Mathew de Condon.

3. Eleanor, to Maurice Fitz-Gerald, the first earl of Desmond, who had with her the estates of Killury and Ballyheige (beforementioned) besides other lands.

4. Joan, to Maurice Fitz-Gerald, the first knight of Kerry.

5. Elizabeth, to Sir Otho de Lacy, of Browry.

6. Margaret, to Donald M'Carthy, (More) prince of Desmond. The sons were,

1. Maurice, } successively lords of Kerry.

2. John, }

3. Gerald (named Thomas by some) who was abbot of Loughfedy, in West Meath, of the Cistercian order, and died in Italy, where he was soliciting large preferments.

The said Nicholas, their father, third lord of Kerry, departing this life in 1324, had sepulture in the aforelaid monastery of Ardfert: and was succeeded by his eldest son,

MAURICE, the fourth lord of Kerry, who, having a distaste to, and a dispute with, Dermoid (Oge) M'Carthy, son and heir of M'Carthy (More) killed him upon the bench, before the judge of assize, at Tralee, in 1325. Maurice was tried for that action, and attainted by the parliament at Dublin; but was not put to death: yet his family thereby lost their lands in Desmond and Molahiffe. He was afterwards taken prisoner, in 1339, by

Maurice, earl of Desmond, for associating with the Irish, and disturbing the peace; and kept in confinement till his death, which happened in the course of that year, and was imputed to his spare diet. He was buried at Ardfert: and leaving no issue by Honora, his wife, daughter to O Connor of Kerry, was succeeded by his brother, JOHN, who, having the lordship restored to him, became the fifth lord Kerry, and departing this life, at Lixnaw, in 1348, was buried with his brother at Ardfert. He married, by dispensation from the pope, for his first wife, Honora (or Margaret) daughter to O'Brien of Thomond, his mother's grand-niece: and by her was father of a son, Maurice, his successor.

And a daughter,

Margaret, wedded to Dermoid M'Carthy, lord of Carbery, the first who was called M'Carty Reagh.

His lordship's second wife was Eleanor, daughter to Garret-Fitz-Pierse, of Ballymac-Equim: and by her had two sons, and a daughter, viz.

1. Garret, ancestor to the family of Cosfeale.

2. Robert, ancestor to those of Cloncalla.

And the daughter,

Eleanor, wedded to the White Knight.

MAURICE, the eldest son, succeeded as sixth lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry, and fighting for the king against the Irish, was taken prisoner with the lord Thomas Fitz-John, and many others, on July 6, 1370, 44 Edward III. He was a lord of parliament in the 48th of that reign; and dying in 1398, 22 Richard II. had sepulture with his forefathers at Ardfert. His lordship married, first, Elizabeth, daughter to Raymond, lord Canton (or barony books; and the book of the history of the survey, altogether at 2,000l. I have due out of Kerry, for arrears of my rent and iron, before June 24, 1685, the sum of 1,912l. for the next half year's rent out of my lands in Ireland, my wife's jointure, and England, on or before the 24th of June next, 2,000l. Moreover, by arrears due April 30, 1685, out of all my estate, by estimate, and interest of money, 1,800l. By other good debts, due upon bonds and bills at this time, per estimate, 900l. By debts, which I call bad, 4,000l. worth perhaps 800l. By debts, which I call doubtful, 50,000l. worth perhaps 25,000l. In all 34,412l. and the total of the whole personal estate, 46,412l. so as my present income for the year 1685 may be 6,700l. the profits of the personal estate may be 4,641l. and the demonstrable improvement of my Irish estate may be 3,659l. per ann. to make in all 15,000l. per ann. in and by all manner of effects, abating for bad debts about 28,000l. whereupon I say in gross, that my real estate or income may be 6,600l. per ann. my personal estate about 45,000l. my bad and desperate debts 30,000l. and the improvements may be 4,000l. per ann. in all 15,000l. per ann. ut supra. Now my opinion and desire is (if I could effect it, and if I were clear from the law, custom, and other impediments) to add to my wife's jointure three 4ths of what it now is computed at, viz. 637l. per ann. to make the whole 1,487l. per ann. which addition of 637l. and 850l. being deducted out of the aforementioned 6,600l. leaves 5,113l. for my two sons; whereof I would my eldest son should have two 3ds, or 3,408l. and the younger 1,705l. and that after their mother's death, the aforelaid addition of 637l. should be added in like proportion, making for the eldest 3,832l. and for the youngest 1,916l. and I would that the improvement of the estate should be equally divided between my two sons; and that the personal estate (taking out 10,000l. for my only daughter) that the rest should be equally divided between my wife and three children; by which method my wife would have 1,587l. per ann. and 9,000l. in personal effects; my daughter would have 10,000l. of the Crame, and 9,000l. more with less certainty; my eldest son would have 3,8000l. per ann. and half the expected improvement, with 9,000l. in hopeful effects, over and above his wife's portion, and my youngest son would have the same within 1,900l. per ann. I would advise my wife, in this case, to spend her whole 1,587l. per ann. that is to say, on her own entertainment, charity, and munificence, without care of increasing her childrens fortunes; and I would she would give away one third of the above-mentioned 9,000l. at her death, even from her children, upon any worthy object, and dispose of the other two thirds to such of her children and grandchildren as pleased her best, without regard to any other rule or proportion. In case of either of my three childrens death under age, I advise as follows, viz. if my eldest, Charles, die without issue; I would that Henry should have three fourths of what he leaves, and my daughter Anne the rest. If Henry die; I would that what he leaves may be equally divided between Charles and Anne; and if Anne die, that her share be equally divided between Charles and Henry. Memorandum, That I think fit to rate the 30,000l. desperate debts at 1,000l. only, and to give it my daughter, to make her above-mentioned 10,000l. and 9,000l. to be full 20,000l. which is much short of what I have given her younger brother, and the elder brother may have 3,800l. per ann. 9,000l. in money, worth 900l. more, 2,000l. by improvements, and 1,300l. by marriage, to make up the whole to 8,000l. per ann. which is very well for the eldest son, as 20,000l. for the daughter." — He then leaves his wife executrix and guardian during her widowhood, and, in case of her marriage, her brother James Waller, and Thomas Dance; recommending to them two, and his children, to use the same servants and instruments for management of the estate, as were in his lifetime, at certain salaries to continue during their lives, or until his youngest child should be twenty-one years, which would be the 22d of October, 1696, after which his children might put the management of their respective concerns into what hands they pleased. He then proceeds — "I would not have my funeral charge to exceed 300l. over and above which sum I allow and give 150l. to set up a monument in the church of Rumsey, near where my grand-father, father, and mother, were buried, in memory of them, and of all my brothers and sisters. I also give 5l. for a stone, to be set up in Lothbury church, London, in memory of my brother Anthony there buried about October 18, 1649. I also give 50l. for a small (or Condon) and widow of Maurice, the second earl of Desmond: and by her (who departed this life in 1375) he was father of a son,

John, who died before him, in 1364, a bachelor. And of a daughter, Honora (or Joan) wedded to Donald M'Carthy (More) prince of Desmond, who by her had Donald M'Carthy (More) and Dermoid, ancestor to the earl of Clancarty.

His lordship's second wife was Joan, daughter to Gerald, the fourth earl of Desmond, and by her he had two sons,

1. Sir Patrick, his heir, seventh lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry.

2. Sir Richard, ancestor to the family of Lukbenon, called Clan Rickard.

And a daughter,

Joan, married to Donald Reagh M'Carty, lord of Carbery.

Sir PATRICK, seventh lord of Kerry (commonly called Barbarus, on account of his long beard) was killed in the county of Clare, in 1410, and had interment at Ardfert with his ancestors. By his wife, Catharine, daughter and heir to Teige M'Carthy (More) styled prince of Desmond, he left three sons,

1. Thomas, his heir.

2. Nicholas, bishop of Ardfert, in 1420.

3. Gerald, abbot of Odorney, otherwise St. Mary de Kurie Eleeson, already mentioned.

Also two daughters,

1. Catharine, wedded to Sir William Fitz-Gerald, knight of Kerry.

2. Johanna, to Sir John Fitz-Gerald, The White Knight.

THOMAS, the eldest son and heir, eighth lord Fitz-Maurice (denominated Balbus, or The Stutterer) married Honora, daughter to James, the seventh earl of Desmond, and by her was father of three sons,

1. Patrick, who died before him.

2. Edmond, his heir.

3. Robert, father of the family of Ardglafs and of Tubrid.

Also of three daughters,

1. Joan, wedded to Turlogh, prince of Thomond.

2. Eleanor, the second wife of Cormac M'Carthy (More) prince of Desmond (though she is by some said to be the daughter of lord Edmond).

3. Mary, spouse to the Knight of the Valley.

The said Thomas, eighth lord of Kerry, deceasing at Dublin, in 1469, 9 Edward IV. had sepulture with his ancestors at Ardfert; and was succeeded in his dignity and estate, by his eldest surviving son,

EDMOND, the ninth lord of Kerry, who, in 1485, recovered lands, which had been granted by king John to his ancestors, in the earl of Desmond's court-palatine at Dingle; and departing this life, at Lixnaw, in 1498; was interred among his forefathers at Ardfert. By Maud (or More) his wife, daughter to Connor O Connor, of Kerry, he left two sons,

1. Edmond, his heir.

2. Thomas, who was promoted to the see of Emley, but died before consecration.

Also two daughters,

1. Mary, wedded to Cormac M'Carthy, lord or chief of Muskery.

2. Honora,

small monument to be set up in St. Bride's church, Dublin, in memory of my son, John, and my near kinsman, John Petty; supposing my wife will add thereunto for her excellent son, Sir William Fenton, bart. who was buried there 18th March, 1670-71 and if I myself be buried in any of the said three places, I would have 100 l. only added to the above-named sums, or that the said 100 l. shall be bestowed on a monument for me in any other place, where I shall die. As for legacies for the poor I am at a stand; as for beggars by trade and election, I give them nothing; as for impotents by the hand of God, the public ought to maintain them; as for those, who have been bred to no calling nor estate, they should be put upon their kindred; as for those, who can get no work, the magistrate should cause them to be employed, which may be well done in Ireland, where is fifteen acres of improvable land for every head; prisoners for crimes, by the king; for debts, by their prosecutors; as for those who compassionate the sufferings of any object, let them relieve themselves by relieving such sufferers, that is, give them alms pro re nata, and for God's sake relieve those several species above-mentioned, where the abovementioned obligers fail in their duties; wherefore I am contented that I have assisted all my poor relations, and put many into a way of getting their own bread, and have laboured in public works, and by inventions have sought out real objects of charity; and do hereby conjure all, who partake of my estate, from time to time to do the same at their peril. Nevertheless to answer custom, and to take the surer side, I give 20 l. to the most wanting of the parish wherein I die. As for the education of my children, I would that my daughter might marry in Ireland, desiring that such a sum as I have left her, might not be carried out of Ireland. I wish that my eldest son may get a gentleman's estate in England, which, by what I have gotten already, intend to purchase, and by what I presume he may have with a wife, may amount to between 2 and 3000 l. per annum, and buy some office he may get there, together with an ordinary superlucration may reasonably be expected; so as I may design my youngest son's trade and employment to be the prudent management of our Irish estate for himself and his elder brother, which I suppose his said brother must consider him for. As for myself, I being now about threescore and two years old, I intend to attend the improvement of my lands in Ireland, and to get in the many debts owing unto me: and to promote the trade of iron, lead, marble, fish, and timber, whereof my estate is capable: and as for studies and experiment, I think now to confine the same to the anatomy of the people and political arithmetic; as also to the improvements of ships, land-carriages, guns, and pumps, as of most use to mankind, not blaming the studies of other men. As for religion, I die in the profession of that faith, and in the practice of such worship, as I find established by the law of my country, not being able to believe what I myself please, nor to worship God better than by doing as I would be done unto, and observing the laws of my country, and expressing my love and honour to Almighty God by such signs and tokens, as are understood to be such by the people with whom I live, God knowing my heart, even without any at all; and thus begging the divine Majesty to make me what he would have me to be, both as to faith and good works, I willingly resign my soul into his hands, relying only on his infinite mercy, and the merits of my Saviour, for my happiness after this life, where I expect to know and see God more clearly, than by the study of the Scriptures and of his works I have been hitherto able to do. Grant me, O Lord, an easy passage to thyself, that, as I have lived in thy fear, I may be known to die in thy favour. Amen."

Elizabeth, his wife, whom he wedded in 1667, as aforesaid, was daughter of Sir Hardress Waller, of Castletown, in the county of Limerick, knight, and widow of Sir Maurice Fenton, baronet, and having been created baroness of Shelburne, in the county of Wexford, for life, about a year after her second husband's death, viz. by privy seal dated at Whitehall, December 6, 1688, and by patent dated the 31st of that month, 4 James II. departed this life in February, 1708.

Sir William died at his house in Piccadilly street, in St. James's parish, Westminster, on December 16, 1687, of a gangrene in his foot, occasioned by the swelling of the gout; and was interred in the church of Rumsy, Hants, near the bodies of his father and mother.

2. Honora, the wife of Donogh M'Carthy, called M'Donogh of Dowhallo.

EDMOND, the eldest son and heir, and tenth lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry, was twice married, first to Una (Winifred) daughter of Teige (or Turlogh) M'Mahon, lord of East and West Corkaviskins, in the county of Clare; and, secondly, to Amy, daughter of Mac Ibrien Arrah, and widow of James, eleventh earl of Desmond. By the first he was father of four sons,

1. Edmond.
2. Patrick.
3. Gerald (surnamed the Red-haired).
4. Thomas,

who were in their course lords of Kerry.

Also of five daughters,

1. Margaret, espoused to Sir Edmond Fitz-Gerald, of Clengliffe.
2. Joan, to Maurice Fitz-Gerald, The White Knight.
3. Winifred, to Sir William Fitz-Gerald, knight of Kerry.
4. Mary, to Sir Edmond M'Sheehy.
5. Honora, to Connor O Connor Kerry, of Carrifoile.

By his second wife he had no surviving issue: and after her death he resigned his estate and title to his eldest son, Edmond, and took the habit of St. Francis, as a lay-brother, in the friery of Ardfert, where he died and was buried in 1543.

EDMOND, the eldest son, succeeded as eleventh lord of Kerry, and in 1537 was, by king Henry VIII. created baron of Odorney, and viscount of Kilmaule. He had, moreover, from the same prince, a grant of several abbies, with their appurtenances, to him and his issue male; but in default thereof the said gifts were to revert to the crown. He married Catherine, daughter of John, lord Zouch, of Codnovre (and sister to Elizabeth, the first wife of Gerald Fitz-Gerald, the ninth earl of Kildare) but his lordship dying without male issue, in 1541, the said grants returned to king Henry, and his other possessions, with the old barony, devolved on his next brother, PATRICK, who was the twelfth lord Fitz-Maurice, of Kerry. This nobleman died in 1547, of a cold which he caught after hunting at Drumleggagh, and was buried at Ardfert. His lordship, by dispensation from the pope, married Slany, eldest daughter to Murrough, the first earl of Thomond: and by her (who remarried with Donald O'Brien, of Dough) had two sons.

1. Thomas,
2. Edmond,

successively lords of Kerry.

THOMAS, the eldest, was thirteenth lord, but, being left a minor, was in ward to James, earl of Desmond, and so dying at the castle of Listowell, A. D. 1549, had sepulture with his ancestors at Ardfert.

EDMOND, his brother, also a minor, then became the fourteenth lord, and dying within a month after his accession to the peerage, at his castle of Beaulieu, commonly called Beale, was buried at Ardfert. Thereupon, his uncle

GERALD, (the Red-haired) third son of Edmond, tenth lord of Kerry, succeeded to the honour and estate, and was the fifteenth lord. He took to wife Julia, daughter to Cormac (Oge) MacCarthy, lord of Muskerry: but he had not been married above a month to her (who was afterwards successively

By the said Elizabeth, he had three sons, and a daughter, viz. John, who was baptized on February 15, 1669, and had sepulture at St. Brides, in Dublin, on January 28, 1670; Charles, his heir; Henry, created earl of Shelburne; and Anne, who was married, on January 14, 1692, to Thomas Fitz-Maurice, earl of Kerry, and of whom more fully in the body of this work.

Charles, the eldest surviving son and heir, was at the same time that his mother was created baroness of Shelburne, advanced to the dignity of baron Shelburne, with limitation of that honour to the heirs male of his body; but being in England in 1689, when king James II. held a parliament at Dublin, was among the number of persons attainted by that assembly, and had his estate, with his mother's and brother's, sequestered, which however were restored when king William became master of Ireland.

In 1690, he wedded Mary, daughter to Sir John Williams, of Minster-court in Kent, baronet, and with her had 1000 l. a-year in England: but dying without issue, in April, 1696, his peerage became extinct; and his lady was after that successively married to major-general Henry Conyngham, of Slone, in the county of Meath (by whom she had two sons, William, who died without issue, and Charles, now viscount Conyngham, and two daughters) and Robert Dalway, esq; colonel of a regiment of dragoons, whose wife she died in 1710, and was buried at St. Mary's, Dublin, in December, that year.

Henry, younger brother to the said Charles, succeeded upon his death to the family estate: and on September 14, 1696, 8 William III. obtained a re-grant, and confirmation, by patent, of 32,309 acres, 3 roods, and 10 perches, of plantation measure (amounting to 52,336 acres, 2 roods, and 10 perches of English statute measure) in the barony of Glaneroughty, in the county of Kerry, with an abatement of the quit-rents thereof; and, in like manner, of 21,101 acres, 3 roods, and 35 perches, of plantation measure (making 34,181 acres, 2 roods, and 32 perches, of English statute measure) in the barony of Dunkeron, in the said county; both parcels containing in the whole upwards of 135 square miles, of English statute measure. All those lands in the barony of Dunkeron were, by patent bearing date July 20, 1721, erected into the manor of Dunkeron, pursuant to his petition for that purpose; wherein he set forth, that the premises were situate in the extreme part of the kingdom towards the western seas, and in a coarse and mountainous country, and for the most part inhabited by papists, who, living very remote from all courts of law, or justice, had hitherto acted without any regard to either; and though he had used his utmost endeavours to reclaim them, yet the same had hitherto proved unsuccessful, for want of having a legal form of justice established in that part of the country: that there were very considerable woods on the said tract of ground, which, if preserved, would have been of public use and service to the country; but the situation, people, and their circumstances, being remote from, and not fearing the laws, nor the administration thereof, the said woods were almost destroyed by them: and forasmuch as he had nothing more at heart, than the planting the said colony with protestants, and making the said papists in some measure amenable to law, which he was in great hopes of compassing, if his majesty would erect the said lands into a manor by patent, and grant to him and his heirs the franchises of all waifs, strays, courts-baron, &c. with special power to take cognizance and hold pleas, and all manner of actions for debt, detinue, and trespass, not exceeding 20 l. on each action, &c.

On March 14, 1698-9, he was jointly with William Fownes, esquire, appointed ranger and game-keeper, or master of the game, ranger of the Phoenix-park, and of all the parks, forests, chaces, and woods, in Ireland. He was, moreover, by patent dated June 16, 1669, 11 Will. III. created baron of Shelburne, in the county of Wexford; and viscount Dunkeron, in the county of Kerry, and earl of Shelburne, by patent bearing date April 29, 1719, 5 Geo. I. with the creation fee of 20 l. a year; these honours being limited to the heirs male of his body.

In 1704, he was admitted of queen Anne's privy-council, as he was also of those of king George I. and king George II. he was returned for the borough of Great Marlow, in Buckinghamshire, to the fifth parliament of Great Britain, which first met for business on March 17, 1714-15, and for the borough of Chipping-Wycombe, in the county aforesaid, to the successively wife to Carmac Mac Carthy Reagh, lord of Carbery, and Edmond, lord Dunboyne) when he was killed in Desmond, and interred on August 1, 1550, 4 Ed. VI. at Ardfert. Leaving no issue, his only surviving brother, THOMAS, then became the sixteenth lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry. This Thomas was born A. D. 1502, and having been bred a soldier, for many years, in the Imperial service, at Milan, in Italy, was in that country when his brother Gerald died. On that occasion, one Gerald Fitz-Maurice entered as next heir male, upon Lixnaw, and would probably have kept possession, if Joan Harman, who had been nurse to this Thomas, and was then much advanced in years, had not set out in search of him. She embarked, with her daughter, at Dingle, and landing in France, proceeded to Milan, where she acquainted his lordship with his situation. Upon that, he set out for Ireland; but the good old woman died in her return. At his first appearance, he met with great opposition in claiming his peerage and estate, but, in about two years, he obtained both. In a deed made to him by John Fitz-Richard, 5 Ed. VI. he is stiled "lord of Kerry, and captain of his nation." In 1554, 1 and 2 of Philip and Mary, his lordship received a letter, from their majesties, dated at Hampton court, September 23, and directed to their trusty and well beloved subject the baron of Kerry, advertising him of their marriage, and requiring him to assist the lord deputy, Sir Anthony St. Leger, to redress the disorders crept into the state since the death of king Henry VIII. both in matters of religion and otherwise, and to preserve the kingdom in peace, tranquillity, justice, and honour. His lordship, also, in consideration of his good services to the said queen Mary, and her brother king Edward VI. received, by patent, dated at Westminster, October 23 following, a grant and confirmation of his estate, to hold for ever of the crown by the same rents and services, as any of his ancestors had held the same.

His lordship sat in the parliaments held 3 and 4 Phil. and Mary, and 2 Eliz. by the title of Thomas Fitz-Maurice, baron of Lacksnaw, vulgariter vocatus Baro de Kery. On March 14, 1578-9, he was introduced by Thomas Butler, tenth earl of Ormond, in the camp, to the lord deputy, Sir William Drury, then prosecuting the earl of Desmond; and made a tender of his service: but in 1581, 23 Eliz. when the tranquillity of Ulster seemed to be established, and the army was, on that account, reduced to four hundred foot and fifty horse, and the garrisons discharged, this nobleman and his son (provoked at the hard usage of the governor, who intercepted his lordship's provisions, and scarce allowed him whereon to subsist) rose in arms, took the castles of Adare and Lisconnell, and ravaged the countries of Tipperary, Ormond, and Waterford, until the governor, John Zouch, marched from Cork into his country of Clan-Maurice. Upon that he abandoned the castle of Adare, defaced his own of Lixnaw, and gave the governor battle in the wood of Lisconnell; but his forces being there defeated, he retired to the mountains of Slewlogher. Meeting with a second repulse, soon after, at Glanflish, from captain Dowdall, with the loss of one hundred and fifty men and all his provisions, and the dispersion of his friends and followers, he was reduced to very great distress; and professing a sorrow for what he had done, applied to the beforementioned earl of Ormond (whom he had causelessly injured by wasting his country, and acknowledging his offence, besought his protection, which that generous peer readily granted.

His lordship being thus admitted to peace, he was present in the parliament held in 1585, by Sir John Perrot, lord deputy: and having been knighted by the lord deputy, Sir Henry Sidney, in 1567, and of the privy-council to king Henry VI. queen Mary, and queen Elizabeth, departed this life, at Lixnaw, on December 16, 159, 33 Eliz. aged eighty-eight years. He was interred in the cathedral of Ardfert, in the tomb of Philip Stack, bishop of that see; governor John Zouch, aforesaid, who then kept a garrison in the abbey, refusing him burial among his ancestors.

This warlike nobleman (who was one of the most beautiful men of that age, and of such strength, that, within a few months before his death, not three men in Kerry could bend his bow) married, soon after his return to Ireland, first, Margaret, called the Fair, second daughter of James Fitz-Gerald, the fifteenth earl of Desmond; secondly, Catharine, who was only daughter and heir to Tieve Mac Carthy (More) elder brother to Donald, earl of Clancarty, who dying of the small-pox, in the island of Eleanmoylea, in Loughlea, was buried with her ancestors in the Grey Friery of Irrinlaugh; and, thirdly, Penelope, who was daughter of Sir Daniel O'Brien, brother to Connor, the third earl of Thomond, and afterwards wedded Anthony O'Laughlan, lord of Burren.

His children were all by the first lady, and those were a daughter, Joan, or Jean, married to Connor O'Brien, the third earl of Thomond; and four sons, next parliament, which first convened for the dispatch of business on October 9, 1722.

1. Patrick, his heir, the seventeenth lord.

His lordship (who was likewise F. R. S.) took to wife, in 1709, Arabella, fifth daughter to Charles Boyle, lord Clifford, and sister to Charles, earl of Burlington and Cork, father of Richard, who died earl of Burlington and Cork, on December 3, 1753: and by her ladyship (who departed this life, in October, 1749, and was interred at High-Wycombe) had issue three sons, 1. William, who was buried at St. Bride's, Dublin, on March 4, 1701-2; 2. Charles, who was baptized on September 27, 1705, and died young; and 3. James, viscount Dunkerton; besides a daughter, lady Anne, who was christened on August 4, 1700, and on March 26, 1722, wedded Francis, then son and heir apparent to Francis Bernard, esquire, one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas, and had sepulture on February 2, 1727-8, at St. Mary's, in Dublin.

James, viscount Dunkerton, aforesaid, the only surviving son, married, on April 21, 1737, Elizabeth, second and youngest daughter of Sir John Clavering, of Axwell, in the bishopric of Durham, baronet, and coheir to her brother, Sir James, who died on his travels unmarried, A. D. 1726; and by her ladyship (who departed this life at High-Wycombe, on August 11, 1742) was father of a son, who was born on November 7, 1741, but only lived till April 23, 1742. His lordship also yielded to death, on September 17, 1750, at his house on Turnham-green and was buried at High Wycombe.

Henry, earl of Shelburne, his father, only survived him until April 17, 1751, when he died at London, from whence his corpse was carried to High-Wycombe, and there interred: and leaving no issue, his peerage became extinct; but he bequeathed his great estate to his nephew, John Fitz-Maurice, late lord Wycombe, earl of Shelburne, &c.

2. Edmond, who was killed, fighting in the battle of Kinsale, on December 24, 1601, against the English, and left an only daughter, Mary, the wife of Teige Dermoid Mac Teige M'Carthy, of Cosmange.

3. Robert, who was slain in the isles of Arran, leaving a son, Gerald, who became a chief commander under Philip III. king of Spain.

4. Richard, the father of Gerald, whose son, Edmond, died without male issue.

PATRICK, the eldest son and heir of lord Thomas, was the 17th lord Fitz-Maurice of Kerry, and, whilst very young, was sent as hostage, in the reign of queen Mary, into England, where he was educated till upwards of twenty years of age. He had an employment in the court of queen Elizabeth, with whom he was in great favour; and obtained her leave to return to his native country: but upon his arrival there, he was induced to take up arms with his father, as aforesaid; and afterwards joined those, who were for shaking off the dependance on England. In 1599, he with Thomas (Oge) and others, maintained five hundred foot and thirty horse, against the English, in Kerry; and pulled down his castle of Beaulieu, to prevent its falling into the hands of his antagonists, against whom he waged continual war, until he resigned his breath, at Downloagh, on August 12, 1600. His death was occasioned by sorrow for the loss, on July 23 preceding, of Lixnaw, his principal seat, which had been sacked by his lordship's order, and underfret with wooden props, that, if any English forces should enter the country, fire being set to those supports, the castle might instantly be ruined, which he rather wished, than to see it made a garrison by his adversaries: but the sudden march of the English army prevented his intention; and his lordship not liking their being so near as Carrigfoile, about two miles distant, ordered the castle of Beaulieu to be demolished, for the reason before-mentioned. He lies buried in the tomb of Donald M'Carthy, earl of Clancarty, in the Franciscan Friery Irrinlaugh, in Desmond.

This nobleman married Joan, daughter of David, lord Fermoy: and by her was father of two daughters, viz. Joan, the second wife of Donald O Sullivan (More) of Dunkeron, and Eleanor, wedded to Charles, second son of Florence M'Carthy (More) but died without issue: and also of three sons,

1. Thomas, his heir, the eighteenth lord.

2. Gerald, who died unmarried.

3. Maurice, who, by Honora, his first wife, daughter to Teige Mac-Mahon, of West-Corkevaskin, commonly called the one-eyed lord, owner of the barony of Moyscarta in Clare, had one daughter, Elizabeth, wedded to Cormac M'Carthy, of the Drishanet family; and by his second wife, Eleanor, daughter to Thomas Fitz-Gerald, of Ballyglighlin, in the county of Limerick, had two sons, viz. Capt. Gerald Fitz-Maurice, who, by Catharine, daughter to John Pierse, of Ballymac-Equim, esquire, was father of an only son, Gerald, who being in Denmark with Charles Stuart, duke of Richmond and Lenox, ambassador to that court, died there unmarried, A. D. 1673, and Thomas, who was several years a captain at Tangier, and by Ellen, daughter to Florence, third son of Florence M'Carthy (More) had issue, William, Eleanor, and Joan.

THOMAS FITZ-MAURICE, the eldest son, before-mentioned, eighteenth lord of Kerry, was born in the year 1574, and at the death of his father (in whose time he lived at Ballybonany, in Kerry) he sought, at his first wife's intercession, the favour of the president of Munster, and queen Elizabeth's protection; which were both promised, on condition that he would perform such service as might in some measure deserve them: but his lordship absolutely refusing that, because (as he expressed himself in a letter to Donough, earl of Thomond, his brother-in-law) it stood not with his conscience, nor his honour, the president rejected him and his suit. His lordship persisted in his opinion and in November, that year (1600) his castle of Listowell, the last and only one which he had in Kerry, was taken, with his provisions and goods, by Sir Charles Wilmot: and the queen, in her directions of December 21 ensuing, enjoined, that, in every pardon granted, either general or special, the titular earl of Desmond (James Fitz-Gerald) his brother, John, and Pierce Lacey, with the knight of the valley, and this Thomas, should be expressly excluded from any benefit thereof. However, the lords of the council, by their letters to the president, which he received on January 28, 1600-1, gave him power to accept of the three last (if he saw cause) and pardon them for life only, provided they performed some signal service to merit such favour. That condition being disagreeable to his lordship, he was a commander, under O Donell, in the army which came with Hugh O Neile, earl of Tir-Oen (or Tyrone) to relieve the Spaniards in Kinsale; and after Tir-Oen's defeat, on December 24, 1601, at that town, and the surrender thereof, he retired to Lixnaw-castle: but upon Sir Charles Wilmot's approach to reduce it, he left it to the care of his brother, Gerald, who surrendered upon terms. Sir Charles, after that, slew his lordship's kerne, brought his tenants to subjection, and acted with such vigour, that he obliged him to quit the country of Clan-Maurice, and take refuge in Desmond. His lordship assembled there about two hundred infantry and twenty horse; but these were soon routed by captain Thomas Bois, who likewise in a short time afterwards took the castle of Berengary, in which were his lordship's brother, Gerald, and other people of Munster, the chiefs whereof were executed, and the rest pardoned, when the lord-lieutenant, Charles Blount, lord Montjoy, came to Cork, in February, 1601-2; and thereby the whole province of Munster was finally reduced to obedience.

After the accession of king James I. to the throne of England, on March 24, 1602-3, his lordship waited on him, and made an humble submission for the offence of himself and his father. His majesty sent him back to Ireland, with a warrant to the lord deputy, Sir George Carey, dated at Wilton, October 28, 1603, requiring him to accept of a surrender of his lordship's estate, and not only to restore it to him by new letters patent, but likewise to cause a pardon for him to be passed under the great seal: all which were executed accordingly on July 16, 1604, 2 James I. and his lordship, in order to have a further confirmation thereof by a new patent, surrendered the former one on July 1, 1612, and obtained a regrant, on the 6th of that month, to him, his heirs and assigns, for ever.—Moreover, it being found, by divers inquisitions and records, that Gerald Fitz-Gerald, late earl of Desmond, was seized, as in fee-tail, of a chief-rent of 160l. a year in half-face money, making two hundred thirteen pounds six shillings and eight-pence English, and one hundred and twenty beeves yearly, payable out of the lord Kerry's estate of Clan-Maurice; and seeing the same were at first obtained by the earl's oppressions and exactions, when in his full power and authority, and which had come to the crown by his attainder, and because the lord Kerry's lands were burdened with the composition and other rents to the crown, king James released and exonerated the whole country of Clan-Maurice from the said rent and service: and not only so, but by privy seal, dated at Westminster, April 9, 1616, the same king, as a mark of his favour and royal bounty, was pleased to add so many castles, honours and crown-lands, as should amount to forty pounds a year in the fee-simple, and as many more as should amount to the like sum in fee-farm, in regard of his faithful services to the crown, and the better to encourage and enable him to persevere in his majesty's service, to which he was found most zealously affected: and forasmuch as he had undertaken to discover, and at his own charges to bring to the crown, certain concealed rents and composition-money to the yearly value of one hundred pounds or thereabouts, king James, in consideration of that service, granted to him for ever the moiety thereof. In consequence of this warrant, his lordship had a patent, dated June 23, 1618, granting the lands of Curracullenagh, with many others in the counties of Kerry, Cork, Downe, Limerick, Meath, Sligo, and Monaghan, to be held by fealty, as of the castle of Dublin.

His lordship was present in the parliament held A. D. 1615, and then had a dispute with Christopher Fleming, lord Slane, about precedency; but the commissioners for executing the office of earl marshal in England, by their letter, dated at Whitehall, January 17, 1615-16, determined the matter in his favour: notwithstanding which, the lord Slane, in 1624, at the instigation of the lords of the Pale, again demanding precedency, it was ordered by the lord deputy and council (on November 17) after much debate and many proofs on both sides, that the lord of Kerry and Lixnaw should have and hold his place and precedency from the lord of Slane, until he should sufficiently prove that he was not lord of Kerry.

This Thomas, lord Kerry, died at Drogheda on June 3, 1630, 6 Charles I. and had sepulture, at Cashel, in the chapel and tomb of Cormac M'Culinan (commonly called St. Cormac) who died archbishop of that see.

His lordship was twice married, first to Honora, daughter to Conner O'Brien, third earl of Thomond, by his second wife, Unagh, daughter to Tirlogh O'Brien, of Ara; and, secondly Julia, daughter to Richard, lord Poer, of Curraghmore.

By his first lady, who died 1600, he was father of two sons,

1. Patrick, his successor, 19th lord Kerry and Lixnaw; and,

2. Gerald, who died young.

And of a daughter, Joan, wedded to George Fitz-Harris, esquire.

His lordship, by his second wife, had five sons,

1. Colonel Edmond Fitz-Maurice, who married Ellena, fifth daughter to Charles M'Carthy, viscount Muskery, by whom he had three sons, and two daughters, viz. Thomas, who, about the year 1695, wedded Ellena, daughter of Dermoid M'Carthy, of Ballyea, esquire; Patrick, and Gerard, who both died young; Margaret, married to Daniel M'Carthy, of Drongville, esquire, and Eleanor, who lived and died in celibacy.

2. Colonel Garret Fitz-Maurice, married lady Lucy, eldest daughter of Mervin Touchet, second earl of Castlehaven, in Ireland, and 9th lord Audley, in England, and relict of John Anketell, esquire, who, after the reduction of Ireland by Oliver Cromwell, had an allotment of two thousand seven hundred and fifty-five acres of land, in Connaught, granted him by the commissioners at Loughrea. He departed this life on December 16, 1662, and was buried in St. Werburgh's church in Dublin: leaving one son, Richard, who was a Capuchin friar, of the order called Cyprian, and was provincial in 1689; and two daughters, Eleanor, the wife of Sir Turlogh Mac-Mahon, baronet, without issue; and Catharine, wedded, first, to James Barry, esquire, by whom she had a son and several daughters; and, secondly, to captain John Stevenson, with whom she went to France. In default of the issue male of the said lord Audley, the right of succession to his peerage is limited, by act of parliament to the said Lucy, and her two sisters, and to their heirs.

3. Thomas, who took to wife Ellena, daughter to David, viscount Fermoy, but had no issue by her, who had formerly two husbands, viz. Donald M'Carthy (Reagh) and Charles, viscount Muskery.

4. Robert, who was a colonel in the army of king Charles I. likewise governor of Chepstow, and retiring beyond the sea, after the defeat of that monarch's forces, died a bachelor, in Germany, about the year 1680.

5. Richard, who was colonel of horse in the service of Charles I. and lost his life at the battle of Newbury, unmarried.

His lordship had also, by his second lady, three daughters, Catharine, Margaret, and Mary. —Catharine married John Fitz-Gerald, of Inishmore, knight of Kerry. Margaret, the second daughter, was thrice married: first to Walter Bermingham, of Dunfert, in the county of Kildare, esquire, secondly to John Bourk, the second lord Brittas. Mary, the third and youngest daughter, was married, first, to Patrick Purcell, of Croagh-Purcell, in the county of Limerick, esquire, who was major-general in the army under James Butler, marquis and duke of Ormond, at the siege of Dublin, in 1649, and, secondly to James Butler, of Kilmoyler, in Tipperary, esquire, by whom she had no children.

PATRICK FITZ-MAURICE, the eldest son of Thomas, lord Kerry, was born at Lixnaw, A. D. 1595, and became 19th baron of Kerry and Lixnaw. His lordship sat in the parliament of 1634; but after the troubles broke out, in 1641, he retired about Candlemas following into England, where he resided till his death, which happened on January 31, 1660-61, 13 Charles II. in the parish of St. Giles in the Fields, London, and was buried in the church there. He married Honora, second daughter to Sir Edmond Fitz-Gerald, of Ballymaloe, in the county of Cork, knight, (eldest son to Sir John Fitz-Gerald, of Cloyne, at that time the best estated commoner in Ireland) and by her (who made her will, on June 16, 1680, desiring her body to be privately in the night interred in the tomb, erected by her herself, at Ard-fert) had three sons,

1. Thomas, who died young.

2. William, his heir, 20th lord Kerry.

3. Raymond

3. Raymond Fitz-maurice, esquire, who was wedded, first, to Anne, eldest daughter to James Barry, the first lord Santry, and widow of Stephen Butler, of Belturbet, esquire; and by her (who was buried in St. Mary's chapel in Christ-church, on March 11, 1681-82) had several children, whereof only two survived their infancy, viz. Charles, killed at the siege of Namur, in 1695, and Thomas, who was an officer in the confederate army, 1696; and afterwards resided at Gortcroffane, in the county of Kerry, where he was succeeded by his son, William; and, secondly, to Mrs. Elizabeth Kenny, nearly related to his first wife, but by her had no issue, and died on July 5, 1713.

Besides these three sons, the said Patrick, 19th lord of Kerry, had also, by the same lady, five daughters,

1. Honora, married to William Fenton, esquire, who was eldest son and heir of Sir William Fenton, knight, and being drowned, had by her (who died at Bristol in child-birth) a son and a daughter, who both died young.

2. Joan (or Jane) who was first married to Sir Thomas Leigh, being second wife to him, who died before his father, Thomas, first lord Leigh, and by her was mother of Thomas, second lord Leigh, besides three daughters; secondly, to Mr. Richard Giffard, of Hampshire, who by her was father of a son, Fitz-Maurice Giffard, to whom his grandmother, lady Kerry, left her personal estate; and, thirdly to — Baggot, of Blithfield, in the county of Stafford, esquire.

3. Elizabeth, who had two husbands, first, Thomas Amory, esquire, one of the victuallers of the navy under Sir Dennis Gauder, and by him, who died in 1667, was mother of a son, Thomas, and of two daughters, Elizabeth, married to Mr. Richard Hart, of Grange-bridge, in the county of Limerick, and Lucy, who died unmarried; and secondly, Charles O Connor, esquire, called O Connor Kerry, by whom she had, at her death on September 13, 1713, in the eighty-third year of her age, two daughters, Julia, wedded to Charles O Connor, of Dublin, gent. (by whom she was mother of Charles-Fitz-Maurice O Connor) and Mary, who accompanied her father to France.

4. Mary, who was wife to Ignatius White, otherwise Vitus, of Limerick, created a baronet of England, on June 29, 1677, styled baron de Vicke, and marquis of Abbeville in France, and by her father of one daughter, Mary.

5. Margaret, espoused to Christopher Roper, lord Teynham, by whom she had no issue.

WILLIAM FITZ-MAURICE, the eldest surviving son, was born in 1633, and succeeded his father, Patrick, as 20th baron of Kerry and Lixnaw. He obtained, on March 9, 1691-2, a grant of a weekly market, on Wednesday, and two yearly fairs, on July 15, and October 18, at Listowell, in Kerry.

His lordship married Constance, daughter to William Long, of London, esquire, a second brother of a good family in Yorkshire: and by her had three sons,

1. Thomas, twenty-first lord Kerry and Lixnaw, and first earl of Kerry.

2. William Fitz-Maurice, of Gallane, esquire, who was educated at Oxford, and in the reign of king William, was captain of a company in the earl of Drogheda's regiment, and afterwards lieutenant-colonel to lord Slane's. He married, on November 25, 1701, Deborah, daughter of Sir John Brookes, of York, baronet (by his wife, Mary, daughter to Sir Hardress Waller, by his wife, Elizabeth, second daughter and coheir to Sir John Dowdall, of Kilfinny, in the county of Limerick) and by her was father of one son, John Fitz-Maurice, of Springfield, in the county of Limerick, esquire, who, in January, 1732, wedded Anne, relict of John Odell, esquire, and daughter to James Fitz-Maurice, of Killmihill, in the said county, &c. as before recited, and by her has a son, —, and a daughter, Mary. — By the same Deborah, he had likewise two daughters, 1. Elizabeth, married, on January 19, to Dr. Josiah Hort, Archbishop of Tuam, who by her, (who departed this life on January 25, 1745, and was interred under a marble monument in St. George's chapel near Dublin) had two sons, and three daughters: and 2. Mary, wedded on February 13, 1734, to her first cousin, John, earl of Shelburne, lord Wycombe, &c. of whom in the sequel.

3. James Fitz-Maurice, of Killmihill, in the county of Limerick, and of Bannagh, in Kerry, esquire, who was a captain in the army, and by Catherine, his wife, only daughter and heir to William Harman, of Dublin, esquire, had issue, Harman Fitz Maurice, of Bannagh, esquire (who died in Dublin, on March 20, 1748) leaving by Margaret, daughter to Gamaliel Fitz-Gerald, esquire, (whom he married in December, 1732) one son, James, and four daughters, Catherine, Margaret, Eleanor, and Henrietta) and a daughter, Anne, who was, first, wedded, in December, 1720, to John Odell, the younger, of Balingarry, in the county of Limerick, esquire, by whom she was mother of four sons, (viz. Thomas, John, who survived his father but a few days, Fitz-Maurice Odell, of Middleton, in the county of Limerick, and William, besides a daughter, Catharine, who, in April, 1743, became the wife of the reverend William John Bowen, of Bowensford, in the county of Cork;) and, secondly, after the said John Odell's death (which happened on January 9, 1725) to John Fitz-Maurice, of Springfield, esquire, as after related.

This William, the twentieth baron of Kerry, was also by the same lady, father of two daughters, 1. Honora, wedded to Sir William Piers, of Trilternagh, in West-Meath, baronet, descended from Richard Piers, of Piers-hall, in Yorkshire, whose son, William, being in favour with queen Elizabeth, was by her made governor of Carrickfergus, in Ireland, in which kingdom his posterity have flourished ever since: and, 2. Constance, married to John Odell, the elder, of Balingarry, esquire, who was son of major John Odell, and had an only son, John Odell, esquire, the first husband of Anne, daughter to James Fitz-Maurice, of Killmihill, esquire, as before taken notice of.

The said William, twentieth lord Kerry, &c. departed this life in the year 1697, 9 Will. III. and was succeeded by his eldest son,

THOMAS FITZ-MAURICE, who was born in 1661, and taking his seat in the Irish house of peers, on August 17, 1697, as the twenty-first baron of Kerry and Lixnaw, was one of the lords, who, on December 2, that year, signed the association in defence fence of king William's person and government. His lordship was further advanced to the titles of viscount Clan-Maurice, in the county of Kerry, and earl of that county, by patent dated January 17, 1722-3, 9 Geo. I. with the creation-fee of twenty marks. He was, in May, 1726, admitted into the privy-council of king George I. as also into that of George II. at his accession to the throne in 1727.

His lordship took to wife, on January 14, 1692, Anne, only daughter to Sir William Petty, and sister to Henry, earl of Shelburne; and, by her ladyship (who died at Lixnaw in November, 1737) was father of five sons and three daughters. The sons were,

1. William, his successor.
2. Thomas, who died young, and was buried at St. Bride's, in Dublin, on June 16, 1700.
3. James, who also died young, and was interred there on November 16, 1705.
4. Thomas, who departed this life a bachelor, after the year 1738.
5. John, lord Wycombe, &c. of whom more fully, after giving an account of the elder branch of his family.

Of the three daughters,

1. Elizabeth-Ann, was married to Sir Maurice Crosbee, of Ardfert, knight, and bore to him three sons (of whom, William, the eldest, in November, 1745, wedded lady Theodosia, third daughter to John Bligh, earl Darnley, in Ireland, and lord Clifton, in England) and four daughters.
2. Arabella was the wife of Arthur Denny, of Tralee, who left her a widow on August 8, 1742, without issue.
3. Charlotte was married in 1741, to Sir John Conway Colthurst, baronet, and by him had four sons, John, Nicholas, Edward, and Charles.

The said Thomas, earl of Kerry, &c. departing this life in March, 1741, was privately interred in the vault under the monument at East-Clogher; and succeeded by his eldest son, WILLIAM FITZ-MAURICE, who was baptized in Dublin, on March 2, 1694. His lordship was captain in the second regiment of foot-guards; and in January, 1721, was appointed governor of Ross-castle, in Kerry. In April, 1746, he was sworn of his majesty's privy-council; and constituted lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Kerry.

His lordship, on June 29, 1738, married Gertrude, eldest daughter to Richard Lambart, fourth earl of Cavan, in Ireland: and by her ladyship (who, after his death, which happened on April 4, 1747, at Lixnaw, took to her second husband, on July 7, 1750, James Tilson, of Pallice, in the King's county, esquire) he was father of one son, Francis-Thomas, his heir, and a daughter, Annabella-Margaretta, who was born at Ardfert, on October 6, 1741.

The said

FRANCIS-THOMAS, his lordship's only son, was born in Dublin, on September 9, 1740, and is the third earl of Kerry, and the twenty-third baron of Kerry and Lixnaw.

Having thus deduced the principal branch of this noble family, we now return to (First Lord.) JOHN, fifth son of Thomas Fitz-Maurice, first earl of Kerry.

The said John, (who was one of the governors of the county of Kerry, and one of its representatives in parliament) inherited, pursuant to the will of his uncle, Henry Petty, earl of Shelburne, his lordship's opulent fortune, as before taken notice of, and assumed his surname in 1751. On October 7, that year, he was created viscount Fitz-Maurice, and baron of Dunkerron, and on June 26, 1753, earl of Shelburne, in the kingdom of Ireland; and at the general election, next year, was returned one of the members for the borough of Chipping-Wycombe, in Buckinghamshire. On May 17, 1760, he was promoted to the dignity of a peer of Great Britain, by the name, style, and title, of lord Wycombe, baron of Chipping-Wycombe, aforesaid, with the like limitation.

His lordship, on February 13, 1734, married his first cousin, Mary, youngest daughter of his father's brother, William Fitz-Maurice, of Gallane, in the county of Kerry, esquire, as already mentioned: and by her ladyship was father of two sons, viz.

1. William, viscount Fitz-Maurice, now lord Wycombe, &c.
2. Thomas, born in July, 1742.

(Second and present Lord) WILLIAM PETTY, was baptized on May 13, 1737, and succeeded his father as lord Wycombe, earl of Shelburne, &c. on May 14, 1761; having been, about a month before, at the general election, returned to the twelfth parliament of Great Britain, one of the burgesses for Chipping-Wycombe, for which he had also been chosen to the remainder of the preceding in the room of his father, when he vacated his seat upon being created a British peer.

This noble peer was, on April 20, 1763, sworn of the privy-council to his present majesty, and on the 23d of that month was declared first lord commissioner of the trade and the plantations, in the room of the honourable Charles Townshend; but resigned in September next ensuing, and was succeeded in office by Wills Hill, lord Harwich, earl of Hillsborough, &c.

On December 4, 1760, his lordship was appointed an aid-de-camp to the present king, with the rank of colonel of foot; and in March, 1765, was promoted to the rank of major-general of his majesty's forces. On July 30, 1766, his lordship was appointed one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state.

His lordship, on Sunday, February 3, 1765, was married, in the royal chapel at St. James's, to Sophia, daughter to John Carteret, late earl Granville, by his second wife, Sophia, daughter to Thomas Fermor, earl of Pomfret: and by her ladyship has a son, John-Henry, viscount Fitz-Maurice, born on Friday, December 6, 1765.

(TITLES.) William Petty, lord Wycombe, baron of Chipping-Wycombe, in Great Britain; and earl of Shelburne, viscount Fitz-Maurice, and baron of Dunkerron, in Ireland.

(CREATIONS.) Baron of Dunkerron, in the county of Waterford, and viscount Fitz-Maurice, October 7, 1751, 25 Geo. II. earl of Shelburne, in the county of Wexford, June 26, 1753, 27 Geo. II. and lord Wycombe, baron of Chipping-Wy-

LEGGE, Baroness STAWELL.

SIR William Poole, whose learning and accuracy have remained indisputable in his collections concerning the Western counties, presents us with the only regular pedigree of this ancient family that deserves our notice. The first person mentioned in the said pedigree, is

ADAM DE STAWEL, who, as his name appears to be English, is not without reason supposed to have been living about the time of the Norman conquest of England, A. D. 1066, and had a son,

HENRY DE STAWEL, the father of GALFRIDUS DE STAWELL, who left three sons, Matthew, Rollo, and Nicholas. The son and heir of

MATTHEW, is styled in that pedigree,

GALFRIDUS * DE STAWEL DE COTHELSTON,

Miles, and therein is said to have married Joan, a daughter and heir of John de Columbariis.

The wife of the said Sir Geoffrey de Stawel, was Joan, a daughter and heir of John de Columbariis, whose ancestors, for four generations, were christened by the name of Phillip. † He left by the said Joan, a son and heir, another

SIR GEOFFREY DE STAWEL, who often occurs as a witness in old charters in king Edward III's reign, which commenced on January 20, 1326-7, and in the 37th of which he departed this life; being then possessed of the lordships of Corthelston, Stawel, Stratton, and Begbury, in Somersetshire, Framton-Cotterell, in the county of Gloucester, and the manor of Norigg, in Wiltshire, besides what he might have in other counties. * It is evident from an authentic record in the old register of the abbey of Glastonbury, now in the library of the viscount Weymouth, at Longleat, that the above-mentioned Galfridus (or Geoffrey) de Stawel, knight, was a grandfather in the month of November, 1270, about two years before the death of king Henry III. and though he is, in the aforesaid pedigree, styled of Corthelston (sometimes wrote Cotherstone) yet it appears from the before-mentioned record, that his habitation, or chief seat, was at Stawel (in the parish of Merlinch, or Murlinch, in the county of Somerset) from which place his family had assumed their name, and which continued with his posterity till the death of John, second lord Stawel, after which it was, with many other goodly manors, sold to pay off his debts.

The said record, from the old register of the abbey of Glastonbury, runs thus:

† They were gentlemen of great note in Somersetshire, of the degree of barons; and their name (which is sometimes wrote Columbers, and Columbiers) shews them to be of Norman extraction. The charter of Philip de Columbariis (among those of the barons of the county of Somerset, in the 12th of king Henry II's reign, which began on October 25, 1154) is still extant in the Red Book of the exchequer; and thereby it appears, that, from the time of king Henry I. (who died on December 2, 1135) he held ten knights fees, of the old feoffment, Nether Stowey being the head of the barony of the family.

In the register of Glastonbury, aforesaid, Sir Henry Stawel is mentioned as a knight of Somersetshire, together with Sir William Malet, &c. in 1261, 7 Hen. II. being witnesses to a deed dated at Wells in that year: but it cannot be well explained by the pedigree, who that Sir Henry was; though undoubtedly he was of this family, no other of this name being to be found in that county, so considerable as to have knights in it.

In the same register there is likewise notice taken of Nicholas de Stawel, Reginald de Stawel, and Rollo de Stawel, as living in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. and who are supposed to be brothers to Sir Geoffrey; though possibly the said Nicholas, and Rollo, might be his uncles, mentioned above.

ried Juliana, sister and heir to William Gastelin; and by her (who died in 31 Edw. III.) had several children, of whom,

Sir MATTHEW STAWEL, knight, his eldest son, inherited his estate, and wedded Eleanor, one of the daughters and coheirs of Sir Richard Merton,* of Merton, in Devonshire, knight, descended from a daughter and heir of Matthew, baron of Torrington, in the same county, whose ancestor, William Fitz-Robert, was baron of Torrington, in Richard I's reign, which terminated on April 6, 1199, after lasting nine years and nine months. Many knights-fees were held of the honour of Torrington, it being a considerable barony, from the Norman conquest to the time of king Edward I. whose reign began on November 16, 1272, and ended on July 6, 1307. The barons of Torrington bore, for their arms, gules, two bars. and a lion in chief, passant, or: but the lands of this barony went at length, by the five coheirs of the last baron, unto the families of Martin, Sully, Merton, Umfraville, and Byran.

Sir Matthew Stawel, as appears from Glastonbury register, was living in the third year of king Richard II's reign, which commenced on June 21, 1337; and by his said wife, Eleanor, left a son and successor,

Sir THOMAS STAWEL, knight, who in 15 Rich. II. was declared heir in tail to Philip Columbers (who died in 20 Ed. III.) lord of the manors of Nether-Stowey, Honybere, &c. in the county of Somerset. Sir Thomas wedded Joan, daughter of Walter Frampton, of a family of good antiquity in Dorsetshire, the said Walter, who departed this life in 13 Rich. II. being lord of Buckland-Ripers, Morton, &c. in the said county of Dorset. By Joan, aforesaid, his wife, he had, among other children, Walter, his heir apparent; and departed this life, in 1438, 16 Hen. VI. being then seized of the manors of Cothelston, Stony-Stratton, Evercriche, &c. in the county of Somerset. It is observable, that he bore supporters to his coat of arms, viz. two goats, or antelopes, as was visible on his seal to a deed in 15 Hen. VI. mentioned by Sir William Pool, in his large collections of evidences relating to the Western families; wherefore he is not without reason supposed to have been a knight banneret. He married secondly, Margaret, daughter of Henry Burton; and, thirdly, Jane, daughter of — Berkeley, but by these two ladies had no issue. He had sepulture in the abbey of Glastonbury, as Mr. Willis assures us, in his catalogue of the abbots of that monastery, in the Appendix to J. Leland's Collectanea, part ii. p. 105.

WALTER STAWEL, the eldest son and heir apparent, died in the life-time of his father, Sir Thomas; having wedded Joan, daughter and heir of John Farway, by Agnes, his wife, third daughter and heir of Sir John Langland, by Isabella, his wife, daughter and heir of John Beaupre (or de Belle Prato, as written in Latin records) and Margaret, his wife (A. D. 1360) a daughter of Sir John Carmino, whose family was esteemed the most considerable in the county of Cornwall, as well for their possessions as antiquity. Walter, by the said Joan Farway, left a son, ROBERT STAWEL, who was sixteen years of age when he succeeded his grandfather, Sir Thomas, in 16 Hen. VI. and in 1454, 32 Hen. VI. obtained a grant of a vessel of two hundred tons, with a captain and mariners, to transport goods, provided they did not belong to the staple at Calais, and to import others, paying the customs due upon the same, in consideration (as the patent sets forth) that he had been taken prisoner in the duchy of Aquitaine, in the retinue of John Talbot, earl of Shrewsbury, and put to a great ransom and expence, which he was not able to pay, if his kindred and friends had not supported him.

This Robert Stawel espoused Elizabeth, daughter to William Wadham, of Merrifield, in Somersetshire, esquire, son and heir of Sir John Wadham, † knight, one of the justices of the court of Common Pleas, and had issue a son and heir,

EDWARD STAWEL, who married Agnes, daughter of John Cheyney, of Pinhoe, in the county of Devon, and by her was father of

ROBERT STAWEL, his successor, who wedded Anne, ‡ one of the daughters and coheirs of John St. Maur, lord of North-Moulton, in Devonshire, &c. second son of Richard, baron St. Maur, of Castle-Cary, in the same county, and had issue two daughters,

1. Joan.
2. Elizabeth, married to Henry Beaumont.

Also two sons.

1. John Stawel.
2. William STAWEL.

The eldest,

JOHN STAWEL, married Dorothy, daughter to Sir Edmund Carew*, a gallant soldier, who was knighted by king Henry VII. at Bosworth-field,

1485,

* Of the said family of Merton, Sir William Pool, in his Survey of Devonshire, has given the following account: "Merton giveth name to an ancient family, which from king Henry I. continued in this land to the latter end of king Edward III. Philip de Merton, Henry, Sir Walter, Sir Thomas, Sir Richard, Sir Richard, and Sir Richard Merton, who had issue by Margaret, his first wife, Eleanor, wife of Sir Matthew Stawel, and Joan, wife of John Bamfield, &c. Joan dying without issue, the whole inheritance came to Stawel."

† The family of Wadham took their name from the place of their habitation in the parish of Knowlton, near South Moulton, in Devonshire; and both East and West Wadham descended, through divers successions, unto Nicholas Wadham, who left them to his heir general. Sir John, the judge, was son of Nicholas Wadham, and father of Nicholas, who, having no issue by his wife, Dorothy, daughter to Sir William Petre, father of John, the first lord Petre, was the last of this family, and, together with his said wife, founded and endowed Wadham-college in the university of Oxford.

‡ By that match his descendants became intitled to quarter the arms of the barons St. Maur, of Richard, lord Lovel, of Castle-Cary, in Somersetshire, of Alan, lord Zouch, of Ashby, in Leicestershire, of William, lord Zouch, of Harrowworth, as also those of Erleigh, another baron in Somersetshire, in the reign of king Henry II. and likewise to bear the arms of the several noblemen, from whose heires the barons aforesaid issued. Thus, by descent from the lords Zouch, the present baroness Stawel may quarter the armorial bearings of the Quincies, earls of Winchester, and by Erleigh, those of Guy, the elder, lord Bryen; as Sir Wm. Pool, and others, have observed.

§ He was the elder branch of the Carews of Haccom, a very ancient and honourable family, descended from Walter Fitz-Other, patriarch likewise to the earl of Plymouth, the duke of Leinster, the earls of Kerry and Shelburne, of Fit-1485, and killed by a cannon-ball, at the siege of Terouenne, A. D. 1513, as he sat in council.

The said John Stawel, by Dorothy, his wife, had two sons; the youngest, Thomas, married Thomasine, daughter of John le Floyre; the eldest,

RICHARD STAWEL, wedded Alice Powlett, eldest daughter to William, first marquis of Winchester; and by her (whose mother was daughter of Sir William Capel, ancestor to the earl of Essex) he had a son,

Sir JOHN STAWEL, who succeeded him, and married first, Frances, daughter to Sir Thomas Dyer, knight; secondly, Margaret, daughter of Sir John Portman, knight; by the former he left a son and heir,

Sir JOHN STAWEL, who was one of the knights of the Bath created at the coronation of king James I. in July, 1603. He wedded Elizabeth, second daughter to George Touchet, eighth lord Audley, in England, and first earl of Castlehaven, in Ireland; and by that lady, who was descended from the old barons Tracy and Martin, lords of Kemeis in Pembrokeshire, and of Barnstaple and Dertington, in Devonshire, and also from the Mortimers, earls of March; and took to her second husband Sir Thomas Griffin, of Dingley, in the county of Northampton, knight, ancestor to lord Griffin) was father of a third

Sir JOHN STAWEL, created knight of the Bath at the coronation of king Charles I. in February, 1625-6. He was educated in Queen's-college, in the university of Oxford; and having served the offices of sheriff, deputy-lieutenant, &c. had a very great interest in the county of Somerset, for which he was returned one of the knights to the fatal parliament, which met at Westminster on November 3, 1640.

Sir John was one of those loyalists who steadfastly adhered to the cause of king Charles I. and suffered very much on that account. At the first eruption of the unnatural rebellion against that excellent prince, he engaged with William Seymour, marquis of Hertford, afterwards second duke of Somerset, in raising forces for his majesty in the West; being (as the earl of Clarendon writes) one of those who were like to give as good examples in their persons, and to be followed by as many men, as any such number of gentlemen in England could be. In his first action with the rebels, he, with his two sons, and some volunteers, in the whole not above fourscore horse and fourteen dragoons, charged a greater body of horse, and above six hundred infantry, led by a member of the house of commons; and, without the loss of a single man, killed seven of them on the spot, wounded very many, took their chief officers, and a great number of other prisoners; and routed the whole body in such a manner, that six of them kept not together, and all threw down their arms. He raised and maintained at his own charge, three regiments of horse, one of dragoons, and another of foot, for the service of his injured sovereign: and on the reduction of Taunton, in the county of Somerset, A. D. 1643, the government thereof was committed to him, being, as the noble author before-mentioned writes,

"A gentleman of one of the largest estates that any man possessed in the West, who had, from the beginning of the parliament, shewed very great affection to the person of the king, and to the government that was settled both in church and state; and, from the beginning of the war, had engaged both his own person and two sons in the most active part of it, with singular courage; and had rendered himself as odious to the parliament, as any man of that condition had done.

Sir John was engaged with other loyalists in the defence of the city of Exeter, which sustained a blockade and siege from October 28, 1645, to April 9, 1646, when it surrendered to Sir Thomas Fairfax upon articles signed by him and the garrison, and confirmed by both houses of parliament. After that he came to London, for reaping the benefit of the capitulation, two of the articles of it importing, that no oath, covenant, &c. should be imposed on any person included in that capitulation, but only such as should bind them from bearing arms for the king against the parliament; and that all persons comprised in, and subscribing the articles of capitulation, should be admitted to a moderate composition, not to exceed two years value of any man's real estate. Sir John brought with him a copy of his subscription, and a certificate from Sir Thomas Fairfax, and presented them to the commissioners at Goldsmiths-hall, in order to settle his composition: but as the usurping powers not only thirsted after his ample fortune, as well as his life, the commissioners told him, that he could not be admitted to compound, unless he would take the covenant and negative oath. He modestly replied to these demagogues, that there was no article for his so doing, but rather e contra. However, he was not only debarred of the benefit of composition, but sent prisoner to Ely-house, in Holborn, and deprived of his estate, which continued under sequestration above seven years. On August 18, 1646, he was brought to the bar of the house of commons, and by their order committed to Newgate for high treason in levying war against the parliament, though he had been indemnified by the articles of Exeter. He was detained in that prison near four years, during which he was several times indicted of high treason, and twice arraigned for his life at the King's Bench. From Newgate he was removed to the Tower, and kept in close restraint. From thence he was divers times conveyed to that infamous tribunal called the High Court of Justice; but his judges, after many days trial, would neither condemn nor acquit him, and only reported their proceedings to the parliament. During his confinement he was not allowed one penny of his estate for subsistence, so that his loss amounted to upwards of 30,000 l. five times as much as if he had fairly compounded. After the act for selling his whole estate, and another being passed, and commissioners nominated, for the relief of persons upon articles of war, Sir John applied to those commissioners, who were eight in number, and after more than ton Gerard, the last earl of Macclesfield of his surname, the lords Gerard of Bromley, the Gerards of Bryn, in Lancashire, &c. the Keatings in Ireland, &c. &c. The issue of John Stawel, by the said Dorothy Carew, are descended from the Princes of South Wales, from the Peverels, the Talbots, the Fitz-Alans (earls of Arundel) the Bonviles, the Courtenays, the Archdeknies, the Carminoes, the barons Dinham, the Huddesfields, &c.

ten months debate, declared, that he was within the articles of the capitulation of Exeter, none of which he had ever violated, and consequently, that he was not only to be unmolested in his person, and to have his estate restored, but ought to be more-over satisfied for the great losses which he sustained by the sequestration of his whole estate. Judgment in that case was not only pronounced solemnly in his favour by the commissioners, but the demurrers, made by the trustees for forfeited estates, and by the purchasers of the lands, were over-ruled. Nevertheless, the parliament having resumed the business, reversed the sentence of their own court, and voted, that the purchasers should quietly enjoy their several contracts. This scene of tyranny and injustice is said to have been principally owing to the fallacious measures of a member of the house of commons, who professed the greatest friendship for him. Mr. Whitlock writes, "That Sir John refusing to kneel at the bar of the house of commons, and behaving with great firmness, was by them committed to Newgate, and ordered to be indicted of high treason. He endured in those times of affliction, long and tedious imprisonments in the press-yard in Newgate, and other goals, and after in the tower of London; and, with admirable wisdom and courage, approved himself an eminent assertor of the laws and liberties of the kingdom, by making such a defence in their several bloody tribunals (viz at their Upper Bench, and High Court of Justice) as to put to silence those bold judges, who sat there with design to take away his life. And though he was reduced to the greatest want and misery which his severe opposers, by sale of his lands, and cutting down his woods, and demolishing the principal seat of his family at Cothelstone, could bring upon him; yet, by the subsistence which his aged mother, the lady Elizabeth Griffin afforded him, which was all he had, he most chearfully underwent the same, lived to see the happy restoration of king Charles the Second, and to be again elected one of the knights of the county of Somerset, to sit in that parliament which began at Westminster the 8th of May, 1661. After he had continued there some months, his urgent affairs drew him to his house at Ham, three miles distant from Somerton, in his own country; where dying the 21st of February, 1661-2, aged sixty-two years, he was buried on the 23d of April following, on the south side of the church at Cothelstone, five miles from Taunton."

This illustrious patriot married Catherine, daughter and heir to Sir David Hext, of Ham, in the county of Somerset, and widow of Sir Joseph Killigrew, and by her had three sons.

1. Ralph Stawel, esquire, created lord Stawel.
2. Edward Stawel.
3. George Stawel, of Cothelstone, in the county of Somerset, esquire, who was colonel of a regiment in the service of king Charles I. and distinguished himself by his bravery and conduct in every encounter with the enemies of his sovereign. This George wedded Ursula, daughter of Sir Robert Austen, of Bexley, in Kent, baronet, and by her (who, secondly married Henry Seymour, of Langley-park, in Buckinghamshire, esquire, father of Sir Henry Seymour, who was created a baronet, on July 4, 1681, but died a bachelor) left two daughters, his coheirs, 1. Ursula, successively the wife of Edward, earl of Conway, and John Sheffield, third earl of Mulgrave, and first duke of Buckingham, of his family; and 2. Elizabeth, espoused first, to Sir Robert Austen, of Bexley, baronet, grandson to Sir Robert, aforesaid; and, secondly, to William Wynd, of Norfolk, esquire, chamberlain to the princess Sophia.

(First Lord by the ancient creation) RALPH STAWEL, esquire, the eldest son, in consideration of the eminent loyalty and sufferings of his father, during the time of his troubles, and the many good and acceptable services performed by himself, was created a peer of this realm, by the stile and title of lord Stawel, baron Stawel, of Somerton, in the county of Somerset, by letters patent, bearing date January 15, 1682-3, 34 Car. II. He married, first, Anne, daughter of John Ryves, of Runston, in the county of Dorset, esquire; by her, who died September 3, 1670, and was buried at Lowham, he had issue, John, his successor, and a daughter, Ann, married to James d'Arcy, esquire. He married secondly, Abigail, daughter and heir of William Pitt, of Hartley-Wespall, in the county of Southampton, esquire, and by her, who died September 27, 1692, and was buried at Hartley, he had issue two sons, and four daughters, viz. William, and Edward Stawel, esquire, of whom hereafter.

The four daughters were, 1. Elizabeth, married to William Bromley, of Bagington, in Warwickshire, esquire, speaker of the house of commons, and principal secretary of state in the reign of queen Anne, who had issue by her, William, his son and heir, member in the sixth parliament of Great-Britain, for Fowey, in Cornwall; for Warwick, in the seventh; and for the university of Oxford, in the eighth; and who died in 1737. 2. Catharine, married to William Higden, D. D. prebendary of Canterbury, and rector of St. Paul's Shadwell, London. 3. Lucy; and 4. Diana.

The said Ralph, lord Stawel, their father, deceased on August 5, 1689, in the forty-ninth year of his age, and was buried at Lowham, with his first lady. He was succeeded by his eldest son, (Second Lord) JOHN STAWEL, who married Margaret, daughter of James, earl of Salisbury; and died November 30, 1692, in the twenty-fourth year of his age, leaving issue by her an only daughter and heir, Anne, wedded to John Barber, esquire, of Sunning-hill, in the county of Berks, the descendants of which marriage as heirs at law through this lady to the barony enjoyed by Philip de Columbaris, already mentioned, seem to have sufficient foundation for an application to parliament in their behalf. Margaret, lady Stawel, after the decease of her first lord, married secondly, Richard Jones, earl of Ranelagh. His lordship was succeeded by his brother,

(Third Lord) WILLIAM STAWEL, who was one of the gentlemen of the bed-chamber to his royal highness, George prince of Denmark, consort of her late majesty queen Anne. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of William Port, of the county of Sussex, esquire, and of Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of William Forster, esquire, and heir of her brother, Sir Humphrey Forster, baronet, in whose right he became possessed of the lordship of Aldermaston, in the county of Berks, where he resided. He had issue by his said lady, who died 1748, William, his son and heir, who died without issue in the life-time of his father, in 1740, and a daughter, Charlotte, married to Rushe Haffel, and secondly, condly to Ralph Congreve, of Aldermaston, esquire, and his lordship deceasing, January 22, 1741-2, at his seat at Hartly, in the county of Southampton, was succeeded by his only surviving brother, (Fourth and last Lord, by the first creation.) EDWARD STAWEL, who married May 10, 1719, Mary, daughter and heir of Sir Hugh Stewkley, of Hinton-Amney, in Hampshire, baronet, (who died in July 1740) by whom he had issue a son, Stewkley Stawel, who died young, and a daughter, Mary. And his lordship dying on April 13, 1755, at his seat at Aldermaston, without surviving male issue, the title of lord Stawel became extinct; but he was succeeded in his estates by his said only daughter and heir, (Present Lady) MARY, now baroness Stawel, who married, on September 3, 1750, the right honourable Henry Bilson Legge*, fourth son of William, first earl of Dartmouth.

On May 20, 1760, his majesty was pleased to grant to the said honourable Mary Legge, his wife, the dignity of a baroness of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title of baroness Stawel, of Somerton, in the county of Somerset; and the dignity of baron to the heirs male, by her husband, the said right honourable Henry Bilson Legge. By whom her ladyship had issue Henry Stawel Legge, their son and heir, who was born on February 22, 1757.

MONSON-WATSON, Baron SONDES.

LEWIS Watson, second son of John, first lord Monson, and Margaret, youngest daughter of Lewis Watson, first earl of Rockingham*, was born on November 28, 1728; and at the death of his cousin, Thomas, third and last earl of Rockingham, viscount Sondes, &c. on February 26, 1745-6, assumed the name and arms of Watson, in obedience to the will of that nobleman, who left him his estate on that condition.

In April, 1750, he was, on a vacancy occasioned by the death of Francis Scot, earl of Dalkeith, elected one of the representatives for Boroughbridge, in Yorkshire, to the tenth parliament of Great-Britain; and at the general election, in 1754, was returned, to the next parliament, a burgess for the same place, and likewise one of the knights for the county of Kent, for which last he chose his seat.

On February 16, 1754, he was appointed, for life, one of the auditors of the imprest and foreign accounts, first fruits, tenths, customs, and of the mint and coinage: and by letters patent, bearing date May 20, 1760, 33 Geo. II. was created a peer of Great-Britain, by the name, stile, and title of baron Sondes, of Lees-court, in the county of Kent, with limitation of that dignity to the heirs male of his body.

His lordship, on October 12, 1752, wedded Grace, fourth daughter of the late Henry Pelham, esquire, (brother to his grace the duke of Newcastle) by lady Catharine, his wife, eldest daughter of John Manners, second duke of Rutland, by his first duchess, Catharine, second daughter to William, lord Russel, and sister to Wriothesley, second duke of Bedford: and by her ladyship (who was born on August 18, 1728) has issue three sons,

1. Lewis-Thomas-Monson Watson, born on April 18, 1754.

STEWART, Baroness MOUNT-STEWART.

FOR the origin of this noble lady's family, we must refer the reader to Vol. I. page 361, where they will find that Drogo de Monteacuto, or Montagu, (the common ancestor of the several families which bear the same name) came into England with the Conqueror, 1066. The succeeding pages present him with a full account of all that is memorable concerning her ladyship's lineal ancestors so far as Sir Edward Montagu, who died in 1601-2. In page 373, it is observed, that this Sir Edward had eight sons; from the seventh, Sir Sidney Montagu, descended the earls of Sandwich, as may be seen by inspecting page 550, et seq. In page 555, is inserted her ladyship's descent from Sidney Montagu, second son to Edward, first earl of Sandwich; it remains therefore only to observe that (Present Lady) MARY WORTLEY MONTAGU, grand-daughter to the last-mentioned Sidney Montagu, who assumed the surname of Wortley, was married, on August 24, 1736, to the right honourable John Stewart, earl of Bute, of whom, therefore, it will be proper to speak in this place.

The said John, earl of Bute, on the decease of the earl of Orkney, was elected one of the sixteen peers for Scotland, in February, 1736-7, and in September, the same year, was appointed a commissioner of police, in Scotland. In August, 1738, his lordship was invested with the ensigns of the ancient order of the Thistle, at Holyrood-house, and soon after appointed a lord of the bed-chamber to Frederick, late prince of Wales. He was groom of the stole to his present majesty, when prince of Wales, and, upon his accession to the throne, October 25, 1760, was reappointed to the same post, and sworn also a member of his majesty's most honourable privy-council. In March, 1761, his lordship was constituted one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, and in June following, ranger and keeper of Richmond-park. In August, 1761, having been elected one of the sixteen peers for Scotland, he was likewise elected chancellor of the university of Aberdeen, and a governor of the Charter-house. In May, 1762, his lordship was appointed first lord commissioner of the treasury, which office he resigned in April, 1763, and on September 22, 1762, was installed a knight companion of the most noble order of the Garter, at Windsor.

Her ladyship's father died January 22, 1761, and her mother, in August, 1762, upon whose decease, she succeeded to the possession of a very large estate; and on April 4, 1761, her ladyship was raised to the rank of a peeress, by the title and title of Baroness Mount-Stewart, of Wortley, in Yorkshire, with limitation of that honour, to her heirs male, by her present husband, John, earl of Bute.

Her ladyship, by the said earl, her husband, has issue five sons and six daughters, viz.

STEWART, James MDI NIX STEWART

ROBINSON, Baron GRANTHAM.

THE first we find of this noble lord's family, was

WILLIAM ROBINSON, an Hamburgh merchant, who resided chiefly at the city of York, where he was lord-mayor, in the years 1581 and 1594. The high esteem which he had raised for himself among his fellow-citizens, procured him the honour of being their representative in parliament in the years 1584 and 1588.

He departed this life in 1616, at the advanced age of ninety-four, and was interred in the church of St. Crux, in the aforesaid city.

This gentleman, who had large possessions in the city and county of York, was twice married; first, to a daughter of John Redman, of Tulworth, in the aforesaid county; and, secondly, to a daughter of Thomas Harrison, of the city of York, merchant; by the latter he had a son, Thomas Robinson, who succeeded to those of his father's possessions, which lay in Richmondshire; but dying without issue, they reverted to his elder half brother, WILLIAM ROBINSON, the produce of his father's first marriage with — Redman, who, upon his decease, (1616, as aforesaid) succeeded to his father's estates in and near York.

This gentleman was also lord-mayor of York in 1619, and marrying Margaret, daughter of Sir Henry Jenkins, of Grimston, in the county of York, had issue one son and heir, William, which Sir WILLIAM ROBINSON, upon his father's demise, 1626 (who was buried at St. Crux church aforesaid) succeeded to the estates which had been the property of his grandfather, and had received great improvements both by his father and uncle. In 1633, he received the honour of knighthood, and five years after, served the office of high sheriff for the county of York. He married first, Mary, daughter and coheir of Sir William Bamburg, of Housam, in the county of York, and by her had a son, William, who died unmarried. By his second wife, Frances, daughter of Sir Thomas Metcalf, of Nappa, in the county of York, he had issue three daughters. 1. Elizabeth, the wife of Philip Rycot, esquire, merchant. 2. Margaret, married to William Weddell, of Erswick, in the county aforesaid, esquire; and 3. Frances, married to Robert Bell, of Overton, in the same county. Also two sons.

1. Metcalf Robinson.

2. Thomas Robinson.

And dying 1658, he was buried at St. Crux church, and his effects devolved upon his eldest son by his second wife,

Sir METCALF ROBINSON, who was created a baronet 1660, and in the three several years 1660, 1661, and 1684, was returned to parliament as one of the representatives of the citizens of York. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William d'Arcy, of Witton-castle, in the bishopric of Durham, and by her had a son, who died in his infancy.

Sir Metcalf died at Newby upon Swale, near Topcliffe, February 6, 1688, and was there buried; and his estates were inherited by his nephew, the eldest son of his brother Thomas Robinson deceased, which

THOMAS ROBINSON, second son of Sir William Robinson, by his second marriage, took to wife Elizabeth, daughter of Charles Tancred, of Arden, in the county of York; and by her had a daughter, Margaretta, married to Rowland Norton, of Dishforth, in the county of York. Also two sons,

1. William Robinson, heir to his uncle.

2. Tancred Robinson, who was physician to king George I. and married Dorothea, daughter of — Coke, of Derby, M. D.

Sir WILLIAM ROBINSON, heir to Sir Metcalf Robinson, baronet, as already observed.

This gentleman was member of parliament for the borough of Northallerton, in the county of York, in the reign of king James II. and was of the convention parliament, at the revolution. In 1689, he was high sheriff of the county; and, in the same year, was created baronet, his uncle's title being extinct. He was chosen member of parliament twice afterwards for Northallerton; and from the year 1697, to the year 1722, was chosen eight times to represent the city of York. In the year 1700, he was lord mayor of that city. In 1679, he married Mary, the eldest daughter of George Aislaby, of Studley Royal, in the county of York, esquire, by whom he left six children, viz.

1. Metcalfe, his successor,

2. Tancred, successor to his brother.

3. William, who served in the army many years, till he arrived to the rank of colonel of a regiment of marines, in which capacity he went upon the expedition to Carthage, in 1740, and died at Port Royal in Jamaica, in 1741.

4. Thomas, now lord Grantham.

5. John, who was major of his brother's regiment, and died at Jamaica in 1742.

6. Anne, who married Thomas Worsley, of Hovingham, in the county of York, esquire.

Sir William died in the year 1736, aged eighty-one, at Newby, and was buried at Topcliffe, aforesaid.

Sir METCALFE ROBINSON, baronet, eldest son of Sir William, died unmarried, December 26,

1736,

1736, and was buried at Topcliffe, and succeeded by his brother, Tancred.

Sir TANCRED ROBINSON, baronet, was bred to the navy, in which service he rose to the rank of rear admiral of the white. In 1718, he was lord mayor of York the first time; and in 1738, a second time. He married Mary, only daughter and heiress of Rowland Norton, of Disforth, in the county of York, esquire, by whom he had nine children; six whereof survived him, viz. William, his successor; 2. Norton; 3. Mary, married to Thomas Peirse, of Pierfeburg, in the county of York, esquire; 4. Elizabeth; 5. Alatheia, died unmarried, 1767; and 6. Margaret. Sir Tancred died at York, in 1754, and was buried in St. Crux church, in that city.

Sir WILLIAM ROBINSON, his son and heir, the present baronet, married Dorothea, daughter of John Thornhill, of Stanton, in the county of Derby, esquire.

(Present Lord) THOMAS ROBINSON, fourth son of Sir William Robinson, above-mentioned, was educated at Westminster school, and at Trinity college, Cambridge, of which he became a fellow in 1719.

In 1723, when Horace Walpole, esquire, afterwards lord Walpole, of Wolterton, was ambassador at the court of France, Mr. Robinson was, by commission under the great seal, appointed secretary to that embassy.

In the first parliament of the reign of king George II. he was returned member for the borough of Thirsk, in the county of York.

In 1730, he was appointed minister plenipotentiary to the emperor Charles VI. and concluded the treaties of Vienna, between the emperor, England, and the States General, of the sixteenth of March, 1731; and between the emperor, England, and Spain, on the twenty-second of July, of the same year.

In 1740, he was, upon the demise of the emperor Charles VI. appointed minister plenipotentiary to the queen of Hungary and Bohemia.

In 1742, upon the conclusion of the peace between their Hungarian and Prussian majesties, Mr. Robinson was honoured with the order of the Bath, and knighted and invested at Vienna, by the duke of Lorraine, great duke of Tuscany.

When his royal highness was elected emperor of Germany, in the year 1745, Sir Thomas Robinson was appointed minister plenipotentiary to his imperial majesty.

In 1748, Sir Thomas Robinson was ordered to repair from Vienna to Aix la Chapelle, to act as ambassador and minister plenipotentiary, jointly with the earl of Sandwich, in the negotiation that was carrying on there for the general peace of Europe; which being concluded, he returned to England, after having been constantly employed in foreign service upwards of twenty-five years.

At his arrival in England, in 1749, he was appointed one of the lords commissioners of trade and plantations, and chosen member of parliament for the borough of Christchurch, in the county of Southampton.

In 1750, he was, upon the death of the duke of Montagu, appointed master of the great wardrobe; and was shortly afterwards sworn of his majesty's most honourable privy-council; and in 1754, was appointed one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state.

In 1755, he was declared one of the lords justices of Great Britain, during his majesty's absence; and in November following, having resigned the seals, was again appointed master of the great wardrobe, in which office he continued till the accession of his present majesty, who was graciously pleased, by letters patent, bearing date the 7th day of April, 1761, to create him a peer of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title, of lord Grantham, baron Grantham, in Lincolnshire; and in July, 1765, to appoint him one of the postmasters-general of Great Britain and Ireland, in which office he continued till the end of December, 1766.

His lordship married Frances, third daughter of Thomas Worsley, of Hovingham, in the county of York, esquire, and she dying at Earl's-court, near Kensington, in the year 1750, was buried at Chiswick, in the county of Middlesex, having had issue two sons,

1. Thomas Robinson, born at Vienna, November 30, 1738, member in the last and present parliaments for Christchurch; appointed April 27, 1761, secretary of the embassy to the intended congress at Augsburg; and constituted October 1, 1766, one of the lords commissioners of trade and plantations.

GROSVENOR, Baron GROSVENOR.

AMONG the attendants of William the Conqueror, into England, in 1066, we find enrolled his two uterine brothers, (legitimate sons of his mother by her husband, Herlain, a Norman gentleman) Odo, bishop of Bajeux, in the duchy of Normandy, created after the conquest (1067) earl of Kent; and Robert, earl of Montaigne, created afterwards earl of Cornwall. Also Hugh Lupus, created earl of Chester, 1070, the son of Emma, whole sister to Odo, and Robert, already mentioned by her husband, count of Avranches; together with these came over.

GILBERT DE GROSVENOR, nephew to the said Hugh Lupus, being the son of his sister, by her husband, who bore the name of Grosvenor, so that the descendants of this Gilbert have a legitimate claim to the ancient dukes of Normandy as ancestors. This surname was assumed from the high office of le Grosvenor, or, as it was variously written, le Grosvenor, le Grosvenour, Grovenor, le Groveneur, and le Grovenour, which was enjoyed by his ancestors, and probably by himself, before his arrival in England.

This Gilbert, who bore for his arms, azure, a bend or, was father of ROBERT DE GROSVENOR, who, upon a partition of the lordship of Lostock, in the county of Chester, by his kinsman, Hugh Lupus, already mentioned, after the battle of Namptwich, received one moiety, called Over-Lostock, which continued with his male descendants until the year 1465, when it was among other lands partitioned among the coheirs of Robert le Grosvenor, hereafter mentioned.

This Robert was succeeded by his son,

HENRY LE GROSVENOR, who was father of RAUFE LE GROSVENOR, who adhered to the cause of the empress Maud against king Stephen. He was with his cousin, Ranulph de Gernoniis, fourth earl of Chester, at the battle of Lincoln, on February 2, 1141, 6 Stephen, when that prince was made prisoner; but, being with the same earl about two years afterwards, had the misfortune to be taken by his adversaries.

ROBERT LE GROSVENOR, son and successor to the said Raufe, engaged in the crusade with king Richard I. for the recovery of the Holy-land, and was with that courageous monarch in Sicily, A. D. 1190; he was likewise, in 1191, with king Richard, at the conquest of the island of Cyprus; he assisted besides at the siege of Acon, Acres, or Ptolemais, in Palestine. His son, ROBERT LE GROSVENOR, was seated at Hulme, and purchased Nether-Pever, in Edward I's reign, in the twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth years of which, he served the office of sheriff of Chester; and in that reign was also in the wars of Scotland. He married —, one of the seven daughters of William de Mobberley,* of Mobberley in Cheshire, esquire, by his second wife, Maud, daughter and heir to Robert Downes, of Chorley, juxta Werford, by whom he had a son, Sir Robert le Grosvenor, his heir, and a daughter, Mary, wife to Edmund Sherard, ancestor to the present earl of Harborough.

Sir ROBERT LE GROSVENOR, son and heir to Robert le Grosvenor, aforesaid, accompanied king Edward III. when he besieged Vannes in Brittany, A. D. 1342, 1346; was with him at the passage of the river Somme, on Friday, August 25, 1346, and next day at the memorable battle of Cressly (or Crecy) as also at the siege of Calais, which began on September 8, that year, and continued till August 4 following. This Sir Robert le Grosvenor wedded Emma, daughter to Waring de Maynwaring, of Pever; and by her had a daughter, Matilda, married first to John Hatton, and secondly, to Richard de Vernon, in 19 Edward III. also a son,

RAUFE LE GROSVENOR, who succeeded him in his lands of Hulme, Nether-Pever, &c. and was father of

Sir ROBERT LE GROSVENOR, who had a famous plea,† with Sir Richard le Scrope, about a coat of arms, viz azure, one bend, or.

He had two wives, first, Joan, one of the daughters of Sir John Daniers, or Danyell, of Tabley, in the county of Chester, knight-banneret, before

* The above-named William de Mobberley was sheriff of Chester, A. D. 1319, 13 Edward II. and by his first wife had Sir Raufe de Mobberley, who died without issue, in France, A. D. 1361, 35 Edward III. and a daughter, Ciceley, who, in 1329, 3 Edward III. wedded John Dumville, the younger, of Mobberley. Upon the death of the said Sir Raufe de Mobberley, who had succeeded his father, William, in 1327, 1 Edward III. the said Ciceley, his sister, inherited the estate of Mobberley; and his sisters of the half blood (whereof one was wife of this Robert le Grosvenor, and another, Mary, was married to Nicholas Leicester, of Tabley, in Cheshire) became coheirs to their mother's lands in Chorley.

† This suit (in which Sir Richard le Scrope was plaintiff, and Sir Robert le Grosvenor, defendant) was tried before the high-constable and high-marshal of England, and others commissioned for that purpose; and lasted three years, not being decided until 1389, the 12th year of the reign of king Richard II. The judges proceeded upon the evidence of old chronicles, ancient deeds, and old records of monasteries, &c. then produced, and upon the testimony of the following nobility, and gentlemen, then bearing arms, viz. John, duke of Lancaster, king of Castile and Leon, the earl of Derby, the earl of Arundel, the lord D'Arcy, the lord Grey of Ruthyn, the earl of Northumberland, the duke of Warwick, the lord Poynings, Stephen, before-mentioned, but by her had no issue : and, secondly, Joan, or Jane, sometimes called Joceline. This Joan was daughter to Sir Robert de Pulford, lord of Pulford, in the county of Chester, knight, (who was living in 1348, 22 Ed. III. when Sir James Audley was sheriff of that county) and widow of Thomas Belgrave, and at last heir to her brother John, son and heir to her father, Sir Robert, by Dame Jane, his wife, who, after his death, took Richard de Boffeley for her second husband. The said Sir Robert de Pulford was the son of Sir Robert, lord of Pulford, who was alive in 1308, 2 Ed. II. and was son of another Sir Robert de Pulford, lord of Pulford, who was with king Edward I. in the wars of Scotland. The said Sir Robert le Grosvenor was sheriff of Cheshire, quam diu nobis placuerit, as appears by an ancient writ, now remaining in the exchequer at Chester, dated January 1, 1388-9, 12 Rich. II. He was again sheriff of that county, 1394, 18 Rich. II. and by the aforesaid Joan, or Joceline, left at his death (which happened in 1396) a son and heir,

Sir THOMAS GROSVENOR, knight, who wedded Catharine, one of the daughters and coheirs of Sir William Pheasant, of the county of Stafford, knight, and was living, A. D. 1422, 10 Hen. V. By the said Joan (who, by a second marriage was the wife of Sir Thomas del Roche, knight, and was alive in the year 1431, 9 Hen. VI.) he had four sons,

1. Robert Grosvenor, his successor in Hulme, &c.

2. Raufe Grosvenor, continuator of the male line.

3. Thomas Grosvenor, of whom afterwards.

4. Randolph Grosvenor, who by —, his wife, daughter and heir of — Whitmore, was progenitor to the Grosvenors of Warwickshire.

ROBERT LE GROSVENOR, lord of Hulme, &c. eldest son and heir to Sir Thomas le Grosvenor, knight, was, in most part of king Henry VI's reign, in the war against France. He married Jonet, otherwise Johanne, daughter to Sir Geoffrey de Chedell, knight, and by her was father of six daughters.

This Robert le Grosvenor was possessed of Hulme, Allostock, Lostock, Gralam, Nether-Pever, Donam, Barton, Aldersey, Broxton, Chorley, Buyerton, Pulford, and lands in Claverton, nigh Chester, and in Hornbridge, nigh Chester, all in the county of Chester; besides considerable estates in Staffordshire: all which, after his death, were divided by deed of partition, in 1465, 5 Ed. IV. among his daughters, which were as follows:

1. Elizabeth, who was married in 1446, 24 Hen. VI. to Peter Dutton, of Hatton, esquire, son and heir of John Dutton, of Hatton, esquire. She was living in 1469, 9 Ed. IV. but died in the life-time of her husband, by whom she was mother of Peter Dutton, junior, Raufe, Richard, and Randle. The said Peter Dutton, junior, wedded Eleanor, daughter of Sir Robert Towlehurst, of Crewe, in Cheshire, knight, and left a son, Sir Piers Dutton, of Hatton and Dutton, knight, who departed this life

Stephen, abbot of Vale-Royal, of the Cestertian order, Sir Owen de Glendore, Sir John le Maffy, de Podington, knight-banneret, Sir Laurence de Dutton, knight-banneret, Sir Hugh de Browe, knight-banneret, Richard de Monlegh, Robert de Pufeldon, Morgan de Yonge, John de Hanmere, John Decka, Tudor de Glandore, Howell de Eton, James de Eton, Thomas Sampeer, Sir William de Brereton, knight-banneret, Thomas de Davenport, John de Leycestre, Raufe de Leycestre, Hugh de Hulle, Richard de Legh, Richard de Vernon, Thomas de Legh, de Norwolde, John de Maffy, Hugh de Legh, Sir William de Legh, knight-banneret, Sir William de Atherton, knight-banneret, Sir Roger de Pilkington, knight-banneret, Raufe de Langton, baron de Newton, Henry de Rixton, Roger de Bradhagh, John de Haddock, Raufe de Standish, William de Chisnall, John de Ashurst, Richard de Atherton, Mathew de Sothworh, Sir William de Atherton, knight, Matthew de Haddock, Roger de Atherton, Robert de Par, Henry de Tildesleigh, Gilbert de Culcheth, Hugh de Wistanlegh, Matthew de Tildesleigh, Henry de Par, John de Holcroft, Sir Richard de Bold, knight-banneret, Aleyn de Rixton, Richard de Maffe, de Rixton, Gilbert de Burgg, Hugh de Welston, William de Moston, Randolph de Manwaring, William de Stanlegh, John Mainwaring, Geoffrey de Boyddell, Sir John de Ashton, knight-banneret, John Pygot, Robert de Stanlegh, esquire; William de Hulme, esquire; John de Cliffe, de Macclesfield, esquire; John Fitz-Richard, de Sutton, esquire; Robert de Holland, John de Holland, Raufe de Stanlegh, John de Radeleve, de Dordehall, John de Dockensfield, esquire; Thomas de Hashton, John de Legh, Geoffrey de Legh, William de Sodington, Robert de Downes, John de Davenport, de Bromhall, John de Dokenfeld, Geoffrey de Vernon, Robert de Hyde, John de Henford, Geoffrey Maffy, Nicholas de Rixton, Roger le Prior de —, William de Tranmer, Thomas le Vernon, John Boteler, de Verton, William del Slene, Nicholas Orrel, Roger de Barton, Robert de Pilkington, de Rorrington, Yoner de Bradshaw, John de Trafford, Thomas de Pynnington, John de Urmiston, John de Horneby, Sir Thomas Fleminge, knight-banneret, Edmund de Dacre, John de Bache, John de Raudford, Sir John de Dalton, knight-banneret, Andrew de Levere, Richard de Hilton, Edward de Lathum, Robert de Wastbynton, Robert de Bradshawe, Sir Robert de Hassal, Thomas Hesketh, Nicholas de Rigby, Thomas de Halghtun, ife, A. D. 1545, 37 Hen. VIII. leaving many sons and daughters. Of the latter, Catharine, the eldest, was successively wedded, first, to Sir Roger Puleston (or Pilston) of Emrald (or Emerald) in Flintshire, knight; and, secondly, to Richard Grosvenor, second son of Richard Grosvenor, of Eaton, by Catharine Coton, his wife, of whom afterwards.

2. Emme, had two husbands; first, John Legh, of Booths, in the county of Chester, esquire, by whom she left an only daughter and heir, Elizabeth, the wife of Piers Shakerleigh, whose descendants by her now inherit Hulme, and the fifth part of Allostock, being the portion that fell to the said Emme, by the deeds of partition in 1465 and 1474: and, secondly, Ralph Egerton, esquire, who survived her; but they were both living in 1490, 5 Hen. VII. and had issue.

3. Catharine, had the lordship of Pulford, in Cheshire, and other lands, by the said deed of partition, 1465, 5 Ed. IV. and a fifth part of Allostock, upon the death of her sister Margery, by another deed of partition, A. D. 1474, 14 Ed. IV. This Catharine was successively married, first, to Richard Winnington, of Winnington, in Cheshire, esquire, by whom she had three sons, Richard, Peter, and George, and also two daughters, Jane and Elizabeth; who were all living in 1490, 5 Hen. VII. and, secondly, to William Venables, esquire. Richard, the eldest son of Richard Winnington, and of Catharine Grosvenor, his wife, died in 1504, 19 Hen. VII. and by his wife, Joan Smith (who departed this life in 1509, 24 Hen. VII.) had two daughters, 1. Catharine, who died without issue, A. D. 1508, 13 Hen. VII. as appears by her office taken in 1515, 6 Hen. VIII. and, 2. Elizabeth, who wedded Sir Piers Warburton, of Arley, in Cheshire, knight, A. D. 1511, 2. Hen. VIII. being then sole heir. The said Sir Piers died in 1550, 4 Ed. VI. and his wife, Elizabeth, in 1558, 6 Mariae, leaving issue, besides several daughters, a son, Sir John Warburton, who inherited the estate of Winnington, and also Pulford, and other lands, the portion of his great grand-mother, Catharine Grosvenor; all which continue in the family.

4. Margaret, had for her share a moiety of Nether-Pever, with Little-Pever, the third part of Over-Alderley, the third part of Pygrave-wood, in the demesne lands of Allostock, in the county of Chester, and certain lands in Hope, juxta Astonfield, in the county of Stafford, according to the deed of partition made in 1465, 5 Ed. IV. She married Thomas Leicestor, of Nether-Tabley, in Cheshire, esquire, and was living in 1469, 9 Ed. IV. but died before her husband, by whom she had a son, John Leicestor, who, upon the decease of Margery, his mother's youngest sister, got the fifth part of Allostock, by deed of partition made in 1474; and from the said John, the present Sir Peter-Burn Leicestor, of Tabley, baronet, is descended.

parts and counties adjacent: and they, or some of them, further depose, that he, the said Sir Robert le Grosvenor, armed with these arms, accompanied, and was harbinger to Sir James d'Audley, then lieutenant to the lord Edward, prince of Wales, commonly called Edward the Black Prince, for seventeen years last past, and was in Barry, Algayne, del Tour de Brose, & à Issendon & à la siege de Rochefort, en Peyto, en Gyan, & à Viers en Normandie, & en bataille de Poitiers (when the said Sir James d'Audley gained the greatest honour for this extraordinary valour, and his bounty and generosity to to his esquires and followers) that the said Sir Robert le Grosvenor, being armed as aforesaid, was at the victory of Najara, in Spain, 1367, and with the said lord Edward, the prince, in his last action, at Limoges, 1370. It was likewise proved, that Raufe le Grosvenor, an ancestor of the said Sir Robert, was at Lincoln, with his cousin Ranulph, earl of Chester, and armed as aforesaid, 1141, when king Stephen was taken prisoner; and again, in 1143, with his said cousin, the earl of Chester, when he was pursued, and himself taken prisoner.

The before-mentioned conveyance, made by the said Hugh Lupus, earl of Chester, of the lands of Over-Loftock, to Robert le Grosvenor, the son of Gilbert, was also attested, during the course of the trial; and that the said lands were then part of the inheritance of the said Sir Robert le Grosvenor, the defendant, by lineal male succession.

It was likewise proved, that Sir Robert le Grosvenor, another ancestor of the said Sir Robert, bore the same arms, when he accompanied king Edward the Third in the camp laying before Vannes, in Brittain, and also afterwards at the passage over the Somme, and at the battle of Cressy, and at the siege of Calais: and that Robert le Grosvenor, another ancestor also of Sir Robert, the defendant, was armed, as aforesaid, with king Richard I. at Messina, in Sicily, 1190; and, in 1191, at the conquering of Cyprus, and at the taking of Acon, or Ptolemais, defended by the power of Saladin, and at the relief of Joppa, where Saladin was repulsed.

It was also made evident, that another Robert, likewise an ancestor to the defendant, was in Scotland with king Edward II. in his wars, armed as aforesaid.

Many of the before-mentioned gentlemen also depose, that they had seen the said arms painted in glass windows, upon shields, standards, pennons, buildings, edifices, tombs, sepulchres, or monuments, and other places, as the arms of the said Sir Robert and his ancestors; and particularly in the several churches of Great Budworth, Mobberley, Tarvin, Warton, Chrifleton, Stockport, Lymm, Sandbach, Aldford, Middlewich, Namptwich, St. Werburge in Chester, the Friars Minors in Chester, St. Mary in Chester, Vale Royal abbey, Cumbermere abbey, the chapels of Hulme, Over-Pever, Nether-Pever, Witton, Bonches, and Bold, and at Dutton, and Bradley; and that they had moreover seen several charters, records, and other deeds, belonging to the said Sir Robert; and his ancestors, sealed with seals engraved with the said arms, and which were with the register, to be by him properly exhibited before the lord the constable, and the lord the marshal of England.

Likewise, the before-mentioned Howell de Eton, James de Eton, Sir William de Brereton, knight-banneret, Thomas de Davenport, John de Leycestre, Raufe de Leycestre, Sir Richard de Bold, knight-banneret, Randolph de Manwaring, Raufe de Stanlegh, Thomas de Stanlegh, Robert de Downes, John de Davenport, de Bromhall, Robert de Hyde, Thomas le Vernon, John de Eton, Robert de Haffall, John de Frodsham, and Hugh de Coton, did further depose, that they were cousins to the said Sir Robert le Grosvenor, defendant.

It appeared by the said trial, that Sir Richard le Scrope, 1346, in his expedition against the Scots, challenged an esquire of Cornwall, of the name of Carminaw, and upon examination before the knights, and esquires, there present, it was alledged that Sir Richard le Scrope and his ancestors had borne the same arms ever since the conquest of England; and, on the part of Carminaw, it was alledged, that he and his ancestors had borne the same arms ever since the time of king Arthur: wherefore, it was adjudged, that they should continue to bear the said arms.

The sentence of the court, in the case of Sir Richard le Scrope and Sir Robert le Grosvenor, was, that Sir Richard should bear the arms of azure, and one bend, d'or, as formerly, and that Sir Robert should bear the said arms, but with a bordure d'argent. Sir Robert, thinking himself injured by that sentence, appealed to the king himself, before whom, by his commissioners, the whole pleadings were reviewed; and, at length it was decided, that Sir Richard le Scrope should continue the usage of the said arms, and that Sir Robert le Grosvenor should either use the said arms with a bordure, as in the sentence, or else, instead of the bend, or, might bear a garb, or, from the arms of the ancient earls of Chester, his consanguinity to them having been so fully proved in the said trial: whereupon, Sir Robert le Grosvenor, ever after, bore, for his arms, azure, a garb, or; and the same have been constantly used by his successors.

✱ Anne,

5. Anne, or Agnes, had, according to the deed of partion dated 1465, 5 Ed. IV. Buyerton, Newbolde, and other lands in Cheshire, besides a fifth part of Allostock, the share of her sister, Margery. This Anne, in 1469, 9 Ed. IV. became the second wife of Sir William Stanley, of Hooton, in Cheshire, knight, ancestor by her to the present Sir Rowland Stanley, of Hooton, aforesaid, baronet.

Margery had, by the deed of partition made in 1465, the lands of Allostock; but dying unmarried, her share was divided among her other sisters, or their issue, according to partition agreed on in 1474, 14 Edward IV. as before related.

Having thus deduced the descendants of Robert le Grosvenor, eldest son and heir of Sir Thomas le Grosvenor, knight, by Joan Pheasant, his wife, we shall give an account of the said Sir Thomas's third son, also Thomas, before we proceed with Raufe, the second son, continuator of the male line of this ancient family; having already taken notice of Randolph, the fourth son.

The said Thomas, third son, in Henry VII's reign (which commenced on August 22, 1485, and ended on April 22, 1509) married Elizabeth (or Isabella) daughter and coheir of Sir Richard Peshale (or Persal) of Chetwynd, and Bellaport, in the county of Salop, esquire, and by her, who had Bellaport for her portion (the other coheir carrying Chetwynd to her husband, — Pigott, from whom the Pigotts of that place descend) was father of Randolph Grosvenor, of Bellaport, who wedded Margaret, one of the daughters of Randal Maynwaring, of Carrigham, and had issue, Randolph, his heir, who, by Anne, his wife, daughter to William Charlton, of Apley in Shropshire, esquire, had a son and heir, Thomas Grosvenor, esquire, who espoused Margery, daughter of John Cotes, of Woodcote, in the said county of Salop, esquire, and by her was father of William Grosvenor, of Bellaport, esquire, who married Anne, one of the daughters and coheirs of William Heywood, of Stonelow, in Staffordshire, esquire, and by her had a son and heir, William Grosvenor, of Bellaport, esquire, who wedded Cicely, one of the daughters of Sir Richard Maynwaring, of Ightfield, in Shropshire, knight, but had no issue.

The said Richard Coton, father of those four ladies, was heir to Thurcaston, Tayme, and Mapplewell, in the county of Leicester; to Coilston, and Rolington, in Derbyshire; Rudware-Hampstall, Poefwood, and Ashfield, in the county of Stafford; Coton, and Ofcroft, in the county of Chester; his grandfather, Richard Coton, of Rudware-Hampstall, having, in 31 Hen. And Edmund Coton, father of the aforesaid John, was lord of Rudware-Hampstall, 45 Ed. 12 James I. to Jane Bostock, of Morton-Say, in Shropshire, relict of John Bostock, of Morton-Say aforesaid, esquire. By this Jane (whom he left a widow at his death, on September 18, 1619, 17 James I. being then in the fifty-sixth year of his age) he had no issue: but by his first lady (who departed this life in 1609) he was father of three sons,

1. Thomas, who died young.
2. Richard, who succeeded to the estate, and was created a baronet.
3. Thomas, who died unmarried.

By the same lady, he had also fourteen daughters,

} who all four died young.

14. Maudlin, who died unmarried.

Sir RICHARD GROSVENOR, second son, aforesaid, who, by his elder brother's death, became heir to his father, was knighted in 17 James I. and created a baronet on February 23, 1621-2, 19 James I. He served the office of sheriff for the county of Chester, in 22 James I. and for the county of Denbigh in the year following. He was mayor of the city of Chester, and one of the knights of the shire for the county, in the first parliament called by king Charles I. viz. A. D. 1625, 1 Charles I.

This Sir Richard Grosvenor, baronet had three wives, first, Lettice, second daughter to Sir Hugh Cholmondeley, junior, of Cholmondeley, in Cheshire, knight, by Mary, his wife, daughter and sole heir to Christopher Holford, of Holford, esquire, and by her had Sir Richard Grosvenor, baronet, his heir.

And also three daughters,

1. Christian, who, in 1621, 19 James I. married Sir Francis Gamul, of the city of Chester, knight, and by him was mother of a son (who was killed in the civil wars, without issue) and of several daughters,

2. Mary, who died unmarried, in 1642, 18 Charles I.

3. Grace, who, in 1638, 14 Charles I. also died unmarried.

He wedded, secondly, in 1614, 12 James I. Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Willbraham, of Woodhey, knight, and by her (who departed this life, A. D. 1621) was father of a son,

Thomas, who died young.

And, thirdly, he married Elizabeth, one of the daughters of Sir Peter Warburton, of Grafton, knight, (one of his majesty's justices of the court of Common-pleas) and relict of Thomas Stanly, of Alderly, esquire; but by her, who departed this life in 1629, had no issue.

Sir Richard died in 1645, being then sixty-one years of age, and was interred at Eccleston, in Cheshire, and was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir RICHARD GROSVENOR, (second baronet) who was sheriff of Cheshire, for the king, in 1644, 20 Charles I. at which time he raised the posse comitatus, to oppose the parliament army, commanded by Ferdinand, lord Fairfax; and continued steadfast in his loyalty to his sovereign, during the whole time of that unnatural war; whereby he suffered very great hardships, having his estate sequestered. He was turned out of his habitation, at Eaton, to seek for shelter; and afterwards lived in a small house belonging to a neighbouring gentleman, for many years, till the happy restoration of king Charles II. He married, in 1628, Sidney, daughter, of Sir Roger Mostyn, of Mostyn, in Flintshire, knight, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Sir John Wynne, of Gwyder, in the county of Caernarvon, knight and baronet, and by her was father of five sons.

1. Roger Grosvenor, esquire, of whom afterwards.

2. Thomas Grosvenor, who departed this life unmarried, A. D. 1674, aged forty-four.

3. Robert Grosvenor, who lived to man's estate, but never married.

4. Hugh Grosvenor, who died a bachelor, in 1698, at sixty-one years of age.

5. John Grosvenor, who departed this life unmarried, aged fifty-five years.

Sir Richard Grosvenor, by the same lady, had likewise four daughters,

1. Lettice,

2. Catharine,

3. Mary,

} who died unmarried,

4. Sidney, who had two husbands. The first was Thomas Hesketh of Rufford, in the county of Lancaster, esquire; and the second was colonel Spencer, son of the honourable William Spencer, third son of William, lord Spencer.

ROGER GROSVENOR, esquire, eldest son to Sir Richard Grosvenor, second baronet, born 1629, had likewise his estate sequestered at the same time that his father's was, and persevered firm in his loyalty to the royal cause. In 1659, when the loyalists intended a general insurrection in favour of their exiled sovereign, king Charles II. in the success of which they were in a great measure defeated by the treachery of Sir Richard Willis, this Roger Grosvenor, esquire, was ready and prepared in Wales, together with Sir Thomas Myddleton, of Chirk-castle in Denbighshire, knight, his father-in-law, and his wife's brother-in-law, Edward third lord Herbert, of Chirbury, and Sir Richard Wynne,

Wynne, of Gwyder, waiting his majesty's orders. In consideration of his eminent affection to the true constitution, he was one of the thirteen gentlemen of Cheshire, nominated to be knights of the Royal Oak, in 1660, when king Charles II. proposed the institution of that order, as an honorary reward to several of his friends. The badge was to have been a silver medal, with a device of the king in the oak, pendant to a ribbon about their necks, as the knights of the garter then wore theirs: but it was thought proper to lay the design aside, lest it should revive the heats and animosities, which had formerly distracted the kingdom. This Roger's estate, though his father was alive, was then 3000*l.* a year. He married, in 1654, Christian, daughter to Sir Thomas Myddleton, aforsaid: and by her was father of two daughters,

1. Sidney, who was born in 1655, and married Nicholas Bagnall, of the isle of Anglesey.

2. Anne, who lived but a few years.

And also of four sons,

1. Sir Thomas Grosvenor, the third baronet.

2. Robert Grosvenor, who died young.

3. John Grosvenor, third son, who was sheriff of the county of Merioneth, and was twice married; 1. to Anne, daughter and heir of Godfrey Prodrick, of Llanedon, esquire, and relict of Pierce Lloyd, of Llugway, esquire; and, 2. to Anne, daughter and coheir of Sir Richard Lloyd, of Elles, in Denbighshire, knight, and also a widow, viz. of Edward Ravenscroft, of Bretton, in the county of Flint, esquire, but departed this life, A. D. 1691, in the thirty-first year of his age, without issue by either of his wives.

4. Roger Grosvenor, who died under age.

Roger Grosvenor, esquire, aforsaid, eldest son and heir apparent to Sir Richard Grosvenor, second baronet, lost his life in a duel, in 1661, in the thirty-third year of his age: and the said Sir Richard departing this life on January 31, 1664, aged about sixty-five, his title and estate devolved upon his beforementioned grandson,

Sir THOMAS GROSVENOR, third baronet, who was one of the representatives in parliament for the city of Chester, in the reigns of Charles II. James II. and William III. and was mayor of that city, A. D. 1685, 1 Jac. II. By commission, dated June 22, that year, he had the honour of the command of a troop in the earl of Shrewsbury's regiment of horse, with which he was at the camp on Hounslow-heath; and when the bill was brought into the house for repealing the penal laws and test acts, he was closetted by the king, and offered the regiment, and a peerage, for his assent, which he refused, preferring the religion and liberty of his country to all honours and power, so likely at that time to be attended with popery and slavery. He thereupon quitted his commission, and, going to the house, gave his negative to the bill. He was sheriff of the county of Chester, 4 Jac. II. and 1 Will. and Mary; and died in June, 1700, 12 Will. III. in the forty-fourth year of his age. This Sir Thomas Grosvenor, in 1677, wedded Mary, sole daughter and heir of Alexander Davies, of Ebury, in the county of Middlesex, esquire, and by her (who departed this life on January 12, 1729-30, aged sixty-five years) had five sons.

1. Thomas Grosvenor, who died young.

2. Sir Richard Grosvenor, the fourth baronet.

3. Sir Thomas Grosvenor, the fifth baronet.

4. Sir Robert Grosvenor, the sixth baronet.

5. Roger Grosvenor, who died in his infancy.

By the same lady, he was likewise father of three daughters,

1. Elizabeth, } who both died young.

2. Mary, }

3. Anne, who was a posthumous child, being born on July 29, 1700, and on May 26, 1730, married the honourable William Leveson-Gower, brother to John, late earl Gower. She departed this life on December 31, 1731; leaving, by her said husband, an only child, Catharine, then about four months old.

Sir RICHARD GROSVENOR, fourth baronet, second but eldest surviving son of Sir Thomas Grosvenor, third baronet, was chosen one of the members for the city of Chester, to the first parliament of Geo. I. which met for the dispatch of business on March 17, 1714-15; and was returned at the two ensuing elections for the same city, of which he was also mayor in the year 1715. At the coronation of king George II. on October 22, 1727, he acted as grand cup-bearer of England, by presenting the first cup of wine to his majesty to drink out of, after he was crowned, and had the cup as his fee. He performed that service, as being lord of the manor of Wymondeley, in the county of Hertford; that manor being held of the crown by the tenure of grand serjeantry. This Sir Richard Grosvenor was twice married; first, in 1708, to Jane, daughter of Sir Edward Wyndham, of Orchard-Wyndham, in the county of Somerset, baronet (grandfather to Charles Wyndham, first earl of Egremont, of his family) and by her ladyship, who died on February 6, 1719, had a daughter, Catharine, born March 1, 1717, who lived but a few years; and, secondly, in Easter, 1724, he married Diana, the only daughter of Sir George Warburton, of Arley, in Cheshire, baronet; but by that lady, who departed this life on February 18, 1729-30, had no issue: and only surviving her till July 12, 1732, when he died in the forty-fourth year of his age, without marrying again, was succeeded in dignity and estate by his next brother,

Sir THOMAS GROSVENOR, the fifth baronet, who was at that time his colleague as member for Chester, and also an alderman of that city. This Sir Thomas died of a consumption, at Naples, unmarried, on January 31, 1732-3, in the fortieth year of his age, and was succeeded in honour and estate by his only surviving brother,

Sir ROBERT GROSVENOR, sixth baronet, who was also his colleague as representative in parliament for Chester, having been chosen in the room of his brother, Sir Richard. Sir Robert was likewise returned for the same city (of which he was mayor in 1737) to the next parliament in 1734; as also to those convened in 1741, 1747, and 1754; and, like his worthy predecessors, was always numbered among the friends of his country, both in public and private life.

1. Richard Grosvenor, his heir, now lord Grosvenor.

2. Thomas

1. Mary.
2. Elizabeth.
3. Jane, who died in March, 1737-8.
4. Dorothy, who was married on February 6, 1766, to Asheton Curzon, esquire, brother to lord Scarfdale.

The said Sir Robert Grosvenor, sixth baronet, departed this life on August 1, 1755, and was succeeded by his eldest son, (Present Lord) RICHARD GROSVENOR, seventh baronet, born June 18, 1731, who, was created lord Grosvenor, baron Grosvenor, of Eaton, in the county palatine of Chester, by letters patent dated April 8, 1761, 1 Geo. III.

D. 1759: and at his majesty's coronation, on September 22, 1761, officiated as great cup-bearer of England, as his uncle, Sir Richard, had at that of George II.

CURZON, Baron SCARSDALE.

THIS ancient and noble family are of Norman extraction, and owe their origin in this country, to one of those warriors who attended William I. in his expedition to this island, 1066; his name was GIRALINE DE CURSON, or Curzon, lord of the manor of Locking, in the county of Berks, and of divers other lands in that county, with the manor of Fishhead, in the county of Oxford, all which he received as the donation of his victorious general. He was a great benefactor to the abbey of Abington, in Berkshire, as appears by their register. He had issue three sons, Stephen, Richard, and Giraline.

Stephen, the eldest, succeeded him in his estates in the counties of Oxon and Berks, and had also given him, by William, earl Ferrers and Derby, the manor of Fauld, in the county of Stafford. He bore for his coat armour, vairy, or, and gules, a border, sable, charged with popinjays, argent; and his heir general, Agnes, was married to Nicholas Burton, of Fauld, in her right.

Giraline, the third son, died without issue.

RICHARD DE CURZON, the second son, held four knights fees in Croxhale, Kedleston, Twyford, and Edinhale, in the county of Derby, in the reign of Henry I. and bore for his arms, vairy, or, and gules, on a chief, azure, three horseshoes, argent. He was succeeded by his son, IRBY, Baron of BOSTON.

THE ancestors of this noble lord were lords of Ireby*, in Candlesho-Wapentake in Lindsey, near Wainfleet, in the county of Lincoln, from whence the family surname was taken, which has continued with their descendants, notwithstanding the property has long since left them. Records are deficient in ascertaining the time when they first settled in those parts, as also when the lordship suffered alienation. These inconveniences we are obliged to submit to, no less than others equally interesting, which arise from the want of some authentic pedigree of the first settlers (of this name) in Lincolnshire. Thus circumstanced we must begin our pedigree with

ANTHONY IRBY, or IREBY, seated at Gosberton, in Lincolnshire, who was living in 16 Henry VIII. and by Alice, his wife, was father of three sons,

1. John Irby, who died without issue.
2. Leonard Irby, who was one of the representatives in parliament for the borough of Boston, in the county of Lincoln, from the first of Mary to the sixth of Philip and Mary, and again in the reign of queen Elizabeth A. D. 1563 and 1571. He had issue a son, Edmund, who died without issue, and a daughter, Alice, who married a gentleman, whose surname was Gates.

3. Thomas Irby, who continued the line.

Which

THOMAS IRBY, seated at Whapload, in the county of Lincoln, married Elizabeth, daughter of —, serjeant, and by her was father of three daughters and one son,

ANTHONY Irby, who served in parliament for the borough of Boston in the 31st, 39th and 43d years of queen Elizabeth's reign, as also in the first of her successor, James I. He was early attached to the study of the law, and being a member of Lincoln's-Inn, was had in high estimation by that society. He shared with others the highest honour that body has to confer, being called to the bench in the 32d of Elizabeth, after which, in the ensuing year he was appointed their autumn reader. His arms obtained a place in the third window of the chapel, and were, argent fretty sable, over which was his name. In the reign of James I. he was appointed master in chancery.

* We find the name mentioned three several times in ancient charters, but can gather no intelligence from thence, but that they were men high in repute with their sovereigns. A Sir William de Irby in 1251, was a witness to the charter of foundation of the abbey of Hales, in Gloucestershire, granted by king Henry III's brother Richard, earl of Cornwall, king of the Romans (See Dugdale's Monast. Anglic. Vol. I. page 928) also to a confirmation charter from William de Fortibus, earl of Albemarle, to the monastery of St. Bega, in Cumberland (See Dugdale's Monast. Anglic. Vol. I. page 397) and the same Sir William de Irby is a witness to another charter dated 1257, from Richard, earl of Cornwall, already mentioned, to the priory of Knaresborough, in Yorkshire. In 1332, John de Ireby (probably son to Sir William) appears as a prior in the inquest taken, &c. See Dugdale's Monast. Angl. Vol. I. page 886.

He took to wife, Alice, daughter of Thomas Welby, of Moulton, esquire, which manor, together with several adjoining, formerly the estates of the lords de Moulton, barons of Egremont, he purchased October 13, 1538.

His issue were two daughters,

1. Ann, married to Sir Francis Smith, of Kelston, in the county of Lincoln, knight.
2. Alice, married to Robert Balam, of the isle of Ely.

Also three sons,

1. Thomas Irby, who died an infant.
2. Thomas Irby, who married Anne, daughter of Sir Daniel Dunn, but died without issue.
3. Anthony Irby.

The youngest son,

Sir ANTHONY IRBY, served in parliament for Boston in the 3d and 15th of Charles I. was high sheriff for the county of Lincoln, in the 13th, and served again in parliament for the same borough in the 16th of the same reign. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Peyton, of Isleham, in the county of Cambridge, baronet. By this lady he had issue two daughters,

1. Alice, married first, to Francis Jermy, of Gunton, in Norfolk, esquire, to whom she bore five sons, and three daughters; and, secondly, to Edmund Grey, esquire of the family seated at Merton. She died July 30, 1665, aged fifty-six, and was interred at Gunton.
2. Elizabeth, died an infant.

Also three sons.

1. Anthony Irby, great grandfather to the present lord Boston.
2. Edward Irby.
3. Thomas Irby.

Most probably the remains of Sir Anthony and his lady, were deposited in the church of Whapload, in the wapentake of Elloe, in Holland, in the county of Lincoln, because at that time the family were seated there; and moreover, in the north isle of the said parish church, was erected to their memory, a monument of free-stone, with a canopy supported by ten columns of the composite order, under which is a knight in armour on his back, with a book in his hands, and his crest at his feet. His lady at his right hand, with a griffin, sejant, or, on a wreath, or, and sable at her feet. Three youths in armour kneeling by his side, and on hers, a young damsel and a girl, with a skull in her hands. On the frieze, in Roman capitals, is an inscription, setting forth their descent, marriage, and issue, and that her father, Sir John Peyton, was descended of the noble race of the Uffords, sometime earls of Suffolk. Over all is a large shield with the arms of Irby, (viz. argent, a fret of eight pieces, sable, on a canton, gules, with a chaplet, or) on one side, and on a helmet, on a wreath, argent, and sable, a wyvern's head, argent, double collared, gules. On the other side of the same shield, the arms of Irby impaling Peyton, sable, a cross ingrailed, or, with a mullet of the second in the dexter quarter. He was succeeded by his eldest son,

Sir ANTHONY IRBY, seated at Whapload, who was member of parliament for Boston, in 30 and 31 Charles II. He married three times, first, to Frances, daughter of Sir William Wrag, of Glentworth, in Lincolnshire; secondly, to Margaret, daughter of Richard Smith, of Kent, esquire; and thirdly, to Catharine, daughter of William, fourth lord Paget, by his wife, Lettice, daughter and co-heir to Henry Knowles, of Kingsbury, in Warwickshire. His second lady bore no issue, by his first, he had a daughter, Isabel, who became second wife to William, sixth lord Paget. By his third lady, Sir Anthony was father of a daughter, Elizabeth, who became the wife of George Montagu, of Horton, in the county of Northampton, esquire, third son of Henry, earl of Manchester, and a son and successor,

ANTHONY IRBY, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir Edward Barkham, of Southam, in Norfolk, baronet, and by her had issue two sons,

1. Edward Irby.
2. Anthony Irby, who served in a military capacity, but died unmarried.

This gentleman stands upon record, a benefactor to poor widows in Wapload, and Moulton, who had already an endowment from his relation William Tash. At his decease 1696, the fortune of the family devolved upon his eldest son, Sir EDWARD IRBY, who was representative for the borough of Boston, in the 1st and 7th of queen Anne's reign, and on the 13th of April, 1704, was created a baronet.

He married Dorothy, daughter of Henry Paget, esquire, second son of William, fifth lord Paget, and by her, who died in October, 1734, and was buried at Drayton, in Middlesex, had issue a daughter, Joan, who died young, and one son, William.

Sir Edward, departed this life November 11, 1718, and was interred at Wapload; his honours, &c. devolved upon his only son, (Present Lord) WILLIAM IRBY, born March 8, 1707, who was page to George I. and George II. equerry to Frederic, prince of Wales, in December, 1728, upon the first arrival of his royal highness in England. In 1736, he was appointed vice-chamberlain to her royal highness Augusta, princess of Wales, upon her marriage; and in 1761, was appointed her lord chamberlain.

In 1734, John King, eldest son to Peter, lord King, was chosen member of parliament for Launceston, in Cornwall, but becoming a peer by the death of his father, before the new members met, a fresh writ was issued, and Sir William Irby was returned. He served in the ensuing parliament for the same place. In the tenth parliament he was returned for Bodmin, as also for Old Sarum, but made his election for the former. In the eleventh parliament assembled in 1754, he served again for Bodmin, and his present majesty graciously taking into consideration his great merit and long services to his royal father and mother, grandfather and great grandfather, was pleased to raise him to the dignity of a peerage, by letters patent bearing date April 10, 1761, by the stile and title of lord Boston, baron of Boston, in the county of Lincoln, to him and his heirs male.

August 26, 1746, he married Albinia, daughter of Henry Selwyn, esquire, younger brother of John Selwyn, Esq; of Matson, in Gloucestershire, and by her, who was maid of honour to her royal highness the princess of Wales, has issue two sons,

1. Frederick Irby, born June 28, 1749.
2. William-Henry Irby, born August 29, 1750.

Also a daughter.

Augusta Georgina Elizabeth, born July 15, 1747.

PERCEVAL, Baron LOVEL and HOLLAND,
(Earl of EGMONT in Ireland.)

THIS noble and illustrious family (eminently distinguished by its antiquity, and by the honours and extensive possessions enjoyed in its different and numerous branches for many ages) appears from circumstances extremely probable, to have sprung from Robert, a younger son of Eudes, sovereign duke of Brittany, in France. Out of which province they are supposed to have been transplanted into Normandy before the conquest of England; but were certainly at that time possessed of the castle of Yvery, with great estates and power, and invested with the hereditary office of chief butler, in that dutchy. In the district of Gouel, in Brittany, (where it is presumed that they were first seated,) still continue two noble families, lords of Mezernou, and Kerenmear, who bear not only the name of Perceval, but the ancient arms of Yvery, with a difference of tincture only, descendants of a line for many centuries, of great distinction, knights of the Ermine, and employed in very eminent stations, under sovereign dukes of that country, before its union with the crown of France.

Upon the Norman invasion, in 1066, two of this family came over into England with the conqueror, viz. Robert, and Roger de Yvery, who probably were brothers. Of these, Robert, is the immediate ancestor of the present earl of Egmont, to whom the descent is deduced by the clearest, and most indisputable proofs of cotemporary historians, and records. But, before we pursue that line, we shall give a short account of Roger, taken from bishop Kennet's Antiquities, who made a curious search into the descent of the barony of Yvery, in England.

This Roger de Yvery, and Robert D'Oily, a noble Norman, were contracted fast friends, by mutual oaths, to be joint sharers of the fortunes which might fall to the lot of either in that great adventure. In the same year, or that next ensuing, the Conqueror having given in marriage to the said Robert D'Oily, Alditha, the only daughter and heir of Wigod de Wallingford, a potent Saxon lord, the whole estate of the said Wigod shortly came by his death to the said Robert, who likewise had obtained two other honours (including Burcester, Ambroseden, &c.) of that prince. Whereupon, in 1068, by virtue of the agreement before-mentioned, the said Roger de Yvery obtained of the said Robert D'Oily one of those honours, which was thenceforward called the barony of Yvery, of which Beckeley, in the county of Oxford, was the capital seat: he likewise acquired other large possessions, being recorded in Doomsday-book to have held very great estates in the counties of Gloucester, Warwick, Huntingdon, and Oxford; and was constituted chief butler of England, as the other branch of his family at that time were of Normandy. In 1074, in conjunction with Robert D'Oily, he founded the church of St. George, in the castle of Oxford; and in 1077, he founded also a monastery of the Benedictine order, dedicated to the Virgin Mary, near the castle of Yvery, in the diocese of Evreux, in Normandy. And having married Adeline, a most beautiful lady, daughter of Hugh de Grentmesnil (one of the greatest of all the barons) by his wife Ivo de Bellomonte, earl of Judea; (which Adeline survived him till the year 1111) he died in 1079, leaving three sons, Roger, Hugh, and Geoffry, and a daughter, Adelize.

Roger de Yvery, second of that name, inherited not only his father's barony of Yvery, in England, and his office of chief butler, but also his Norman estates, which, in 1086, were greatly wasted and spoiled by Hugh de Stavelè, and Ralph de Mauvoisin, two French commanders of the garrisons of Mante. In which year also, attending the Conqueror in Normandy, he was made keeper of the castle of Rouen, and there gave a notable proof of his fidelity and courage; for a quarrel happening at a town called de L'Aigle, between the king's sons, so great a clamour was occasioned thereby, that the king himself was obliged to come down from his own lodging to part them. Whereupon Robert, the eldest, (afterwards duke of Normandy) in the following night left his father, and with his whole retinue marched to Rouen, where he attempted to seize the castle, of which intention this Roger de Yvery having notice, diligently strengthened the place, and sent messengers to the king, to inform him of this rebellious attempt.

Notwithstanding this, the Conqueror dying upon the 29th of September, 1087, and William Rufus, his second son, having usurped the crown, and the English barons being divided much as to the interests of the two princes, this Roger de Yvery, (as Himingus, the monk of Worcester relates) a man of infinite riches, and vast possessions, chief butler to the king, and his great favourite, honestly adhered to Robert, against William Rufus, and joining with Hugh de Grentmesnil, and other of the barons, raised forces in favour of the duke, committing great spoil in the county of Leicester; by which means he so incensed the king, (soon after established upon the throne,) that he was compelled pelled to fly beyond the seas for fear of his resentment; where, after a short time of exile, he died in that or the following year, in deep sorrow and disgrace, deprived by the king of all his vast estates in England.

Nevertheless, not long after, Geoffry de Yvery, the only surviving brother (for Hugh it seems was dead before) making his peace with the king, was, upon certain terms, restored to his barony of Yvery, in the county of Oxford. But he dying about the beginning of the reign of Henry II. without issue, this honour fell into the king's hands, and was by him granted to Reginald, son of Guy de Sancto Walerico, from which time it lost its antient name, and was called St. Walerie.

There yet remained the sister of this Geoffry, Adeliza de Yvery, but she neither inherited the office of chief butler (which was afterwards granted to the family of Albini) nor was suffered to succeed to more of the inheritance than certain lands in Illip, Hedyngton, and Drayton, which she carried to her husband, Alberic de Vere, junior, who was made hereditary lord high chamberlain of England, had issue by her, Alberic de Vere, the first earl of Oxford, of that great family, which maintained that title, in a direct male line, till the year 1627, from whose heir-general the present duke of Ancafter descends.

Having thus traced Roger, and his descendants, we now come to

ROBERT DE YVERY, the lineal progenitor of the present lord Lovel and Holland, and earl of Egmont, and founder also of the great houses of the barons Lovel, of Karry, Lovel, of Tichmarch, and Harpetree Gournay, and (as there is great reason to believe, though no regular proof) of the barons Perceval de Somerie, in England, who in the third of king John, 1203, held no less than fifty knights fees in capite of the crown. He likewise attended William, duke of Normandy, in his expedition into England, in 1066, and is mentioned by Ordericus, who lived at, or very near that time, as a person of great account. That author positively asserts his alliances to be the most noble, and his relations the most considerable in rank, courage, and fortune, in the whole dutchy of Normandy, where he held three knights fees in Yvery, and the castle of Yvery, as a fief under the duke. The same author farther relates, that this important and memorable place was built by Albereda, (wife of Ralph, earl of Yvery and Baieux,) by whom it was at length finished and rendered impregnable, with immense labour and expence, under direction of one Lanfred (who before had built the famous tower of Pedvers) the most expert architect and engineer that France had till then produced; but that the works of the said castle were no sooner compleated, than this infamous woman caused his head to be stricken off, lest he should ever raise another structure like it: and that afterwards, endeavouring to keep this fortress against her own husband, she was killed by him for the attempt. He was likewise lord of Breherval, Montinney, and Vassé, there; and upon the conquest, as appears by Doomsday-book, obtained the lordships of Karry, Quantoch, East-Harpetree, &c. in the county of Somerset; and returning into Normandy, joined with his sons, Gouel and William, Unfridus Harenc, and Hawisia, his wife, Roger de Rolla Crotta, and his wife, Basilla, with Guaiardus, her son, in the confirmation of certain grants in the parish of Villariis Vastatis (now Vassé) by them made to the abbey of Utique; himself making at the same time other concessions in that place to the same convent, in lieu whereof he received from the monks one ounce of gold, and privilege of the monastery. This transaction passed at the castle of Yvery, then in his possession; but not long after being visited by sickness, and despairing of recovery, he devoted himself to a religious life, and became a monk of the abbey of Bec, in Normandy, where he died, in 1083, the 13th of William the Conqueror, leaving three sons,

1. Ascelin.
2. Gouel.
3. William.

ASCELIN, sometimes called (by the same historian) Ascelin Gouel, Gouel de Breherval, Gouel de Percheval, and Gouel de Yvery, was also surnamed Lupus, or the Wolf, from the violence of his temper and actions, and accompanied his father in the Norman invasion, being mentioned in some accounts of the principal commanders, by the name of Perceval, in others by that of Ascelin, or Azeline, alone. By which last he is recorded in Doomsday-book, wherein the manors of Weston, in Gordano, West-Harpetree, Stawel, and other estates in the county of Somerset; Tichmarch, in the county of Northampton, &c. appear to have been allotted to him, besides those before-mentioned, held at the time of the said survey by his father. In the year 1087, he commanded the Norman forces at the siege of Mante, under William the Conqueror, who there received the hurt of which he died.

After the decease of that prince, William Rufus, his second son, obtaining the crown of England, Robert, the elder, was obliged to content himself with Normandy alone, whose government being weak to the last degree, every subject acted as an independent sovereign upon his own estate, whereby that dutchy became one continued scene of violence and rapine. During which unhappy state, in the year 1090, William, the youngest brother of this Ascelin, having ravished a woman at Pacey, a town belonging to William, earl of Bretevil, Pacey, Constantine, and Yvery, brother to the earl of Hereford, in England, and the said earl endeavouring to revenge the injury, Ascelin Gouel de Perceval, then in Normandy, took his brother under his protection, and began hostilities against the earl, by seizure of the castle of Yvery (which the duke Robert had not long before weakly granted to the said earl of Bretevil, so that the said Ascelin no longer held it under the duke, but under the said earl) and, to engage the duke to entertain a good opinion of his proceedings, delivered up to him the said castle, which (having repented of his former concession of it to the earl) he earnestly desired to get into his hands again. Yet so imprudent (as the historian observes) was the said duke Robert, that neither reflecting upon the folly of parting a second time with so strong a place to the earl, or upon the consequences of the resentment of Ascelin, at this treatment, he soon after restored the castle of Yvery to the earl of Bretevil, for the sum of fifteen hundred pounds.

The said earl thus repossessed of this castle, and Ascelin being deprived by him of his command thereof, thereof, a long and terrible war in Normandy ensued thereon. For the said Ascelin, having fortified and garrisoned his castle of Breherval, collecting his friends, relations, and dependants, and calling in to his assistance some of the family of Philip, king of France, and associating with Richard de Montfort, nephew to the earl of Evreux, and son to Almeric, who had been lately killed by the earl of Bretevil, took the field with great forces against him and his adherents.

The earl on his part raised a great power, with which giving battle to Ascelin, in February 1090, the 3d of William Rufus, he was, in the very first engagement, utterly defeated, with great slaughter of his men, and himself being taken prisoner with Roger de Glotis, and many other persons of note, confined by the said Ascelin in his castle of Breherval for three whole months, treated there with the utmost severity, and exposed at the upper windows of that fortress, in the depth of winter, to the frost, in his shirt (which was purposely dipt in water) till it was frozen on his back. And the power and resolution of Ascelin was so great, and the weakness of the government so correspondent with it, that the earl, having no other hopes of being relieved from his distress, was compelled to submit to the terms prescribed by his enemy, obliging him to pay three thousand deux pounds for his ransom, with a mighty quantity of arms and horses; to resign the possession of the castle of Yvery; and, what was still more galling than all the rest, to give his only daughter in marriage to the said Ascelin. All which articles being fully performed, the earl obtained his freedom.

Yet, notwithstanding this alliance, the earl of Bretevil, unable to forgive the injuries he had received, in the year 1091, raised fresh forces to renew the war, and having fortified the monastery of St. Mary, near Yvery, which he intended for his principal place of arms, placed a strong garrison therein. But Ascelin suddenly gathering together a considerable body of troops, set down before that strong hold, in which the earl then lay, about the middle of summer, and pressed the siege thereof with so much vigour, that he soon became master of the place, burned the monastery to the ground, and took many prisoners, among whom were William de Alis, Ernold, the son of Popeline, and eight other knights, the earl himself escaping with great difficulty.

This war continued for three years successively, and so much to the disadvantage of the earl, that by the devastations of his lands, the loss of his men, and the ransom of his prisoners, he was in a manner ruined. At length, in the year 1094, he called in Philip, king of France, to his aid, and agreed to pay him seven hundred pounds for that service. He found means also to procure the assistance of divers other great men of that time, by promises of great rewards, and even at length prevailed upon the supine duke Robert, to engage in his quarrel. The clergy concurring also against this formidable enemy, who had given them much offence, by his little reverence to them and their religious houses.

In consequence of these different negotiations, the confederates assembled their troops in the Lent of the following year, 1095; and Philip, king of France, Robert, duke of Normandy, many great lords and knights, all the militia of the dutchy, all the forces the church could raise, with all who held by military tenure of the abbies there, under the personal command of each respective parish priest and abbot, sat down before the castle of Breherval, to which Ascelin Gouel de Perceval had retired, unable to keep the field against so vast a power.

The troops who formed this siege were moreover provided in an extraordinary manner for it. Robert de Belesme, a very expert officer, and an inveterate enemy to this Ascelin, had the principal direction, and the artillery or engines were the same which had been employed not long before at the siege of Jerusalem, invented about that time by a famous engineer in the expedition to the Holy Land, and esteemed the most terrible that had ever been till then used in war. These, being brought in service against this castle, ruined the walls and outworks of the place, destroyed the houses of the inhabitants, and cruelly annoyed the garrison. Yet Ascelin had put himself into such a condition of defence, and sustained his men with such courage, that he resisted all the attempts of the confederates for two whole months. And, till wearied with the length of the siege, the prospect of its much longer continuance, the expence of money and loss of men before the place, they offered and concluded a treaty between Ascelin and the earl, whereby Ascelin was to keep his castle of Breherval, and to remain in every respect as he stood before, this single condition excepted in favour of the earl, that he should be restored and left quiet in possession of the castle of Yvery aforesaid. Which castle, however, returned again, not many years after, to the said Ascelin Gouel de Perceval, and his descendants, in right of his wife.

The next mention made of this Ascelin, is in the year 1102, the second of king Henry I. when, after the death of the earl of Bretevil, before-mentioned, William de Guader, Rainold de Craceio, his nephews, and Eustace, his natural son (brother to Isabella, wife to this Ascelin) each claimed his succession; but William de Guader dying soon after, the competitors were reduced to two, viz. Rainold de Craceio, and Eustace. William Alis, Radulfus Rufus, son-in-law to Ascelin, and Tedbald supported the latter; but Ascelin Gouel, Almeric de Montfort, and Ralph de Conchis, supported the other party, Eustace was obliged to fly from Normandy, to demand the protection and support of Henry I. then king of England.

The king received him graciously, and gave him Julian, his natural daughter, in marriage, promising to maintain him powerfully against Ascelin Gouel and all his opponents; and accordingly, in the next year, 1103, the earl of Mellent, was sent into Normandy to support Eustace in his possessions, and to quiet the disorders there: but Rainold and Ascelin gave the earl much resistance. And Ascelin Gouel having taken the son of Stephen de Mellent prisoner, confined him in a dungeon near four whole months; nor could the earl by any means deliver him, ex ore lupi, from the jaws of the wolf, as Ascelin is there stiled, till Rainold de Craceio being killed, the earl of Mellent (who is recorded to have been as well among the wisest, as most potent of the great men in that age, and highly commended for his art and conduct in this particular transaction) concluded a peace, in which Ascelin Gouel de Perceval, earl Eustace, William, earl earl of Evreux, Almeric, and many other leaders on both sides in that war, were comprehended.

In the 13th of the same reign, 1113, king Henry going over to visit his Norman dominions, confirmed all the donations to the abbey of Utique, by a new charter, to which many of the great men subscribed, and among the rest, Gouel de Yvery, who was evidently the same person with this Ascelin.

In the 19th of Henry I. 1119, Eustace, before-mentioned, then earl of Pacey, Bretevil, Constantine, and Yvery, which had been yielded to him upon the peace before-mentioned, being jealous that the king intended to deprive him of his castle of Yvery, rebelled and fortified his other castles of Lira, Glotz, Pont St. Pierre, and Pacey, and sent his wife, Julian, to defend the castle of Bretevil against the king her father. The king soon followed, and attacked the place with so much vigour, as obliged her to surrender, though not till she had attempted to kill him with her own hands, at a conference to which she had treacherously invited him. Provoked at this unnatural attempt, he ordered her to be thrown from the castle wall into the ditch, from whence she escaped to her husband at Pacey, which castle he was suffered to maintain as long as he lived, but forfeited the rest of his estates; of which the king granted part to Ralph de Guader, son to William, one of the competitors before-mentioned. But the castle and earldom of Yvery were given to Ascelin Gouel de Perceval, and his children, who had pretensions to a share of that inheritance by his wife Isabella, sister of earl Eustace, and daughter of the late earl of Bretevil.

Among the religious acts of this Ascelin, it is recorded, that he joined with his father Robert in the grant to the monks of Utique, before-mentioned; and afterwards that he gave all his lands in Villariis Vastatis, and the tithe of Montinney, to the said church, and confirmed this by his charter, to which his wife and sons also signed, at his castle of Bretevil. In consideration whereof, and from the charity of the monks, as it is expressed, he received sixty shillings. He also granted at Helery, to the monks of St. Ebrulf, free passage in that place, and in all his other lands; and departed this life in the 19th of Henry I. 1119.

Isabella, his wife, was natural daughter, as before observed, to William, earl of Bretevil, Pacey, Constantine, and Yvery, in Normandy, brother to Roger, earl of Hereford, in England; which Roger is called the king's cousin in the histories of those times, and was so in effect, being son to William Fitzosbern, by the daughter of Roger de Toeny, standard-bearer of Normandy; which William Fitzosbern was the principal adviser of duke William's attempt to conquer England, and afterwards appointed high steward and joint regent thereof, with Odo, bishop of Baieux, the Conqueror's brother, having been farther rewarded for his services with the county of Hereford, and dominion of the isle of Wight. The said William Fitzosbern was son (by the daughter and coheir of Ralf, earl of Yvery, and Baieux, son of Asperling, a Norman, by Sprora, widow of William Longespee, son of Rollo, duke of Normandy) to Cibernus Crepon, whose father, Herfastus, was a noble Dane, brother to Gunnora, wife to Richard II. of that name, and third duke of Normandy, great grandfather to William the Conqueror. By which lady, Isabella, the said Ascelin left seven sons, viz.

1. Robert.
2. William.
3. Roger.
4. John.

And three more, whose names are not with certainty recovered, and a daughter, married to Radulfus Rufus, a noble Norman.

Of these, Roger, the third, surnamed Balbus, or the Stutterer (from an impediment in his speech) was lord of Grandisilva, in Normandy, and was in arms with the earl of Pacey, in Normandy, against king Stephen in 1136; and again engaged in like manner against the same prince, with his brother, William Gouel de Perceval, in 1152. John, the fourth son, being portioned by his father in the manor of Harpetree, in the county of Somerset, assumed that name (which was afterwards changed to Gournay) and was ancestor to the barons of Harpetree-Gournay, who were of great eminence, being possessed of twenty-two knights fees and more, in the reigns of Henry III. and Edward I. but they failed in the chief male branch before the establishment of titular honours, and the rights of their line returned again into the same stock, passing, in the reign of Henry VII. through the heirs of Delamore, or Bythemore, to that of Perceval, of which the earl of Egmont is the chief.

ROBERT, the eldest son of Ascelin, succeeded his father, as lord of Yvery, but does not appear to have borne the title of earl of that place, being possibly deprived thereof on account of his rebellion; for in the very same year, viz. 1119, notwithstanding the recent obligations of his family to that prince, he took up arms against king Henry I. in conjunction with other malecontents in Normandy. Yet, not long after, the king employing Radulfus Rufus, (who married this Robert's sister) to negotiate with him, succeeded so well, that he not only returned to his obedience (being the first who led the example) but, drawing over with him many of his allies, stoutly took part himself against the rebels; and the king, intending an assault upon the town of Evreux, entrusted to him the command of a great body of his troops, which were detached to the banks of the river Eure, near Yvery, to amuse the earl of Evreux, then himself employed in the defence of the place: which stratagem taking effect, and the earl going out to attack the enemy, during the engagement that ensued, the king stormed and burnt the city; of which intelligence being given to the said Robert, he ordered it to be proclaimed in the heat of the fight, whereby the said earl and his adherents were so disheartened, that they immediately retreated, leaving Robert and his forces masters of the field.

From that time forward till his death (which, as Ordericus observes, happened not long after) in the year 1120 or 1121, he continued faithful to the king. He confirmed the grant made by his father Ascelin to the monks of St. Ebrulf; and leaving no issue, was succeeded by his next brother, William, who joined in the same act of confirmation with him.

This

celin, thus coming to the estate, is in an ancient manuscript of Camden, stiled earl of Yvery, though not so called in the histories of that time; but he was lord of Yvery, in Normandy, and of Kary, Weston, Stawell, &c. in England; and no sooner had obtained possession of his inheritance, than he also engaged in rebellion against the king: for Waleran, earl of Mellent and Leicester, ungratefully meditating mischief to his king and foster-father, and ambitious to essay the power of his arms, as yet untried, in order to strengthen himself for that his undertaking, gave three of his sisters to the three most powerful persons in castles, men, and money, then in Normandy, viz. to this William Gouel de Perceval, Hugh de Novo Castello, son of Gervase, and Hugh de Montfort; who, together with William de Rolmara, Baldric de Braio, and Pagan de Guisfortis, conspired against king Henry I. in the 22d of that reign, 1123. And having thus planned his treason, in the Easter following, in the night of the Annunciation of the blessed Virgin, 1123, he summoned the said William Gouel de Perceval, and his other brothers-in-law, to garrison his tower of Gateville; after which they broke out in open war.

In the next year, 1124, the said earl of Mellent, with his associates, venturing to take the field against king Henry, was by him defeated at the battle of Turol, and there taken prisoner, with his brothers, Hugh de Novo Castello, and Hugh de Montfort aforesaid; but this William being likewise taken prisoner in his flight by a peasant, he bribed him with his arms to suffer him to escape; and being shaved by him in manner of an esquire, and carrying a staff in his hand, reached the banks of the Seine, unknown in that disguise, where he was obliged to give his shoes to the boatman for his passage over that river, and so to return barefoot home. Yet, notwithstanding this defeat of his party, he still maintained his ground, and continued his rebellious courses with Almeric de Montfort and others, till, in the latter end of that year, he found means to make his peace with the king, providing at the same time for the security of his friends.

This William appears to have passed more of his time in England than either his grandfather or father, and may be therefore more probably supposed to have been the founder of, or at least to have compleated the castle of Kary, in the county of Somerset, the head of his barony in England; the vestiges of which castle may be still traced upon the brow of the hill hanging over that town, and consisted, according to the first construction of the Normans (like Windsor, Marlborough, Warwick, Tunbridge, &c.) of a mount with a great tower or keep thereon, situated at one end or angle of a very extensive court, which was defended on the other parts by a great gateway, and several towers at proper distances round the said inclosure.

In 1137, the third of king Stephen, the barons of England, being much discontented with that prince, for non-performance of those conditions upon which they had raised him to the throne, confederated against him, under the command of Robert, earl of Gloucester, in favour of Maud the empress, (mother of king Henry II.) to which party this William (as Roger Hoveden, and the Gesta Regis Stephani, relate) adhered; and being then in England, manned his castle of Kary aforesaid; as did also William, son of John de Harpetree, that of Harpetree, William de Moion, that of Dunster, many other barons then doing the like in different parts of the kingdom. Which William Gouel de Perceval, and William de Harpetree, being engaged in a strict friendship with the said prince Henry Plantagenet (then only earl of Anjou) were above others zealous to seize all occasions for his service, and finding king Stephen much embarrassed in the siege of Bristol, issued from their castles (which both lay not many miles distant in the county of Somerset) ravaging the adjacent country, and carrying away all the provisions and necessaries for the king's army in those parts; whereupon the king, raising the siege, advanced against the castle of Kary, which, after a long battery of his engines, he reduced by famine, but on terms to restore it to the said William, upon assurance of a future quiet conduct; after which he became master also of the castle of Harpetree, partly by surprize, and partly by assault.

In the 17th of the same reign, 1152, he was again in arms, with his brother Roger Balbus, against Simon, earl of Evreux, in Normandy, who had made incursions, and committed great ravage on his lands in that province.

But not long after, in the same year, the barons associating again with more animosity than ever against king Stephen, in favour of the empress Maud, this William returned to England, and again strongly garrisoned his castle of Kary; and in the beginning of the year 1153 (the last of Stephen) Henry de Tracy, lord of Barnstaple, in the county of Devon, a stout adherent of the king, having been victorious over William de Moion, at Dunster, advanced farther into the county of Somerset, and besieged this William in his castle, which was soon relieved by Robert Consul, earl of Gloucester, who came with a powerful army, demolished the works raised against it by the said Tracy, and forced him to submission.

How long after this he survived, is not exactly ascertained, but undoubtedly not many years, his sons appearing by record to have been possessed of his lands in the 5th or 6th of Henry the Second, 1159.

He married Auberie de Bellomonte (sister of Waleran) and daughter of Robert, earl of Mellent, in Normandy, and of Leicester, in England, by his wife, daughter of Hugh, the great earl of Vermandois and Valois (brother to Philip I. king of France) son of Henry, king of France, by Anne, daughter of George, king of Russia; which king Henry was son to Robert I. king of France, by Constantia, heiress of Provence and Anjou; which Robert was son to Hugh Capet, by his wife, Blanch, of Navarre; which Hugh Capet, was son to Hugh the Great, count of Paris (founder of the family which now reigns upon the French throne) by his wife, Alduida, daughter to the emperor Henry I. the direct descendant of and eleventh emperor from Charlemagne. The issue of this illustrious marriage were five sons, viz. Waleran, Ralph, Henry, William, and Richard.

WALERAN, the eldest son, in the Servitia Militum Normaniæ, is found to have been lord of Yvery, and to have held for himself in the bailiwick of Tenchebray three knights fees for the same, and eight knights fees and one half, and what more pleased the king. He likewise held the office of chief chief butler of Normandy, by the service of one knight's fee; and in a deed dated at Yvery, where in his father is called Gulielmus Lupellus, and himself Galeranus filius ejus, he confirmed to Richard, son of Hellwyn, all that land which the said William, and he the said Waleran, had granted when he was in England: but dying in the year 1177, the 24th of Henry II. the king seized his castle of Yvery, which he had long desired, into his own hands. This Waleran appears to have been wholly seated in Normandy, and to have succeeded to his father's inheritance only in those parts, the English possessions being divided among his younger brothers. And Normandy passing, very few years after, into the hands of the kings of France, the son of this Waleran and his descendants, of necessity adhering to their patrimony there, became wholly separate from those who remained here, but continued barons of Yvery, in that dutchy, in a direct male line, very great and eminent men till the fifteenth century, when the castle, estate, and barony of Yvery, passed through females into other houses, upon the death of Charles, the last baron of Yvery, Oisery, and St. Pathus, grand master of the forests of France; from whom, by heirs-general, are descended the dukes of Orleans, Retz, Antin, and Epemon, Gesvres and Tresmes, and Montmorency-Luxembourg; the marquises of Alegre, Estampes, Barbesieux, and Maillebois; the count of Boulainvilliers, and many others of the greatest houses in France; the margraves of Baden and Hesse-Darmstadt, and the princes of Nassau-Siegen, Lobkowitz, and Hohenzollern, in Germany; the dukes of Havre, Arschot, Aremberg, and princes of Chimay, grandees of Spain; the dukes of Guastalla and Bifaccia, of the house of Pignatelli, in Italy; and the princes of Gavre, and counts of Egmont, in Flanders.

Ralph, second son of William Gouel de Perceval, aforesaid, assumed the name of Lupellus, as did also his brothers Henry and William; a remarkable instance of the capricious course of surnames at that time, this being plainly connected with the appellation of Lupus, ascribed to the father Ascelin; the diminutive of which became a sobriquet, or nick-name of his son William (given to him also from the like turbulence and activity of his temper) afterwards assumed by some of the children of the said William, then softened into Lovel or Lovel; and at length, in the third descent, transmitted as the settled name of two great families of the ancient peerage here. This Ralph Lovel (being then also called Simelt) defended the castle of Kary, with his father, against king Stephen, in 1152 (which castle, the capital seat of his father's barony in England, he obtained at his decease) and married the daughter of Henry de Novo Mercatu, from whom he received a grant of Dunkerton, in the county of Somerset, but died soon after without issue.

To him succeeded his brother Henry Lupellus or Lovel, (third son of William Gouel de Perceval,) who, so soon as the 5th of Henry II. 1159, (which was at most but six years after the death of his father William) appears possessed of the barony of Kary, being charged and paying for it five marks to the crown upon the scutage then levied; and in the 12th of the same reign, 1166, upon the aid for marrying the king's daughter, certified his knights fees to be eighteen of the old feoffment, and one of the new. From this Henry descended the barons Lovel of Kary, whose male line failed in the 25th of Edward III. 1351, upon the death of Richard, lord Lovel, when Muriel, his grand daughter, viz. daughter of James, son of the said Richard, being then nineteen years of age, and the wife of Nicholas, lord St. Maur, was found his heir; whose posterity also failing at length in the male line, the heir-general, being the wife of William Bamfylde, Esq; had a son, Sir Edward Bamfylde, whose daughter, Elizabeth, became the wife of George Perceval, Esq; ancestor to the present Earl of Egmont.

William, the 4th son of William Gouel de Perceval (who also assumed the name of Lovel) obtained for his inheritance the manor of Tichmarsh, in the county of Northampton (one of those granted to his grandfather Ascelin at the conquest) and was lord also of Minster-Lovel, in the county of Oxford; but died before the 8th of Richard I. 1197, leaving, by Maud his wife, a son named William. This

William Lovel, son of the said William and Maud, in the said year 1197, joined with his wife Isabel in a grant to the monks of Ithame, of two mills in his town of Minster-Lovel, and was one of the barons at the coronation of king John. In the 1st of his reign, 1199, that prince confirming the donations made to the abbey of West-Dereham, in Norfolk, ratified, among others, a rent of half a mark, to be annually paid out of Tichwell at the feast of Easter, which this William Lovel, there called William Lovel de Yvery, had conferred upon that place. Again, in the 8th of king John, 1207, this William Lovel brought an assize against the abbot of Yvery, concerning a moiety of the church of Minster-Lovel; whereupon the abbot pleaded that no assize ought to be had thereon, producing a charter of Maud, mother of the said William Lovel; in which it appeared, that the bishop of Lincoln, upon petition of the said Maud, wife of William Lovel, and of William Lovel, her son, had granted in perpetual alms the presentation of the said church of Minster to the abbots and monks of Yvery. This William, in 1212, appears by the Testa de Nevil to have been also lord of Dockinge, in Norfolk, which he then held by barony; and by Isabel, his wife, before-mentioned, left a son, John, his heir. This

John, lord Lovel, a minor at the time of his father's death, was in custody of Alan, lord Bassett of Muresdewall, and Wiccombe, in the county of Surry; and in the 22d of Henry III. 1238, being summoned to answer against his men of Dochinges, upon complaint that he had taken illegal fines from them, put in his plea before Robert de Lexington, and others of the judges, wherein he affirmed, that he claimed no more than what had been always taken by himself, by Alan Bassett, in whose custody he had been during his minority, nor more than his father William had taken at the coronation of king John. He married Aliva, daughter of Alan, lord Bassett, by his wife, daughter of Stephen Gay, whom he jointured in his manor of Minster-Lovel, and left by her three sons, viz. 1. John, lord Lovel, of Dockinges, his heir; 2. Philip; 3. Fulco; and a daughter, Agnes; of which Agnes, the daughter, became the wife of — Chetwynd. Fulco, the third son, was archdeacon of Colchester; Philip Lovel, the second second son, the 25th of Henry III. was guardian of the Jews, and became also treasurer of England; but in the 42d of Henry III. the barons of England, repining at his high favour, caused him to be brought to trial for a charge of bribery incurred in the office first mentioned; whereupon the king joining in prosecution of him, required immense sums at his hands, on pretence of trespasses committed in his forests; in consequence whereof, his estate was seized till satisfaction should be given; in which distress, taking holy orders upon him, he retired to Hamestable, where, for grief and vexation, he rendered up his soul in the year following, 1258, leaving by his wife, and widow of Alexander de Arfick, or Darcy, two sons, Henry Lovel, a priest, and Sir John Lovel, knt. living in the 54th of Henry III. who left an only daughter, Mary, the wife of Thomas de Borehunt.

John, lord Lovel, second of that name, (eldest son and heir of the last John, by the said Aliva, daughter of Alan, lord Bassët,) among other great men of that time, had summons to be at Bristol on the octave of St. Peter, in the 41st of Henry III. well provided with horse and arms, to attend the king into Wales; and in the 45th of the same reign, appointed sheriff of the counties of Huntingdon and Cambridge, to continue for two years. In the 48th of Henry III. he was made governor of the castle of Northampton, and in the 54th was signed with the cross, in order to a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. In the 56th of Henry III. he was constituted governor of the castle of Marlborough; and about this time, by the name of John, the son of John Lovel, granted, for the safety of his own soul, and that of Maud de Sydenham, his wife, and those of his father and mother, and Alan Bassët, and Alice his wife, and of all his predecessors and successors, to God, and the blessed Mary of Stanley, and the monks there, all his lands in Chadendon in pure alms. He died in the 15th of Edward I. 1287, seized of the manors of Minster-Lovel, in the county of Oxford, Elecumbe, in the county of Wilts, and Tichmarsh, in the county of Northampton, leaving, by the said Maud de Sydenham, his wife, two sons; John, his son and heir, and Thomas; of which the younger being a knight, obtained Tichwell as his portion, and bore a bend azure over his paternal coat armour for his difference.

John, lord Lovel, third of that name, was thirty-two years old at the death of his father, and married to his first wife Isabel, daughter of Arnold de Bosco, of Thorpe Ernald, sister and heir of William; which lady dying about the 4th of Edward II. left an only daughter by him, called Maud, who received Dockinge as her portion from her father, and became the wife of William, lord Zouche. This lord Lovel, in the 22d of Edward I. attended that king to his wars in Gascony. In the 24th of the same reign, he was summoned, with Roger, lord Perceval (immediate ancestor of the present earl of Egmont, in a direct male line) to attend the king at Newcastle upon Tyne, on the 1st of March next ensuing, at the great council then and there to be held, for determining how to act against the Scots, well provided with horse and arms, to execute what should be there resolved. In the very next year, the 25th of Edward I. he received summons to that parliament then held at Salisbury. In the 26th he was summoned to attend with horse and arms, upon the eve of Pentecost, at the great council held at Carlisle, to repress the malice and disobedience of the Scottish nation, as it is expressed in the record. In the following year, viz. the 27th of Edward I. he received summons, with the rest of the barons, to the parliament held at London, on the first Sunday after Easter, there to consider of foreign affairs, by which was understood the assistance intended to be given to Guy, earl of Flanders, against the king of France; and in the same year he was summoned also to the parliament to be held at Westminster, on the 10th of April next ensuing. In the 28th of the same reign, he was summoned also to two parliaments, by the title of lord Lovel, of Tichmarsh; to the first of which were summoned likewise two others of the same name, who were of the king's council, one of whom by the stile of Master John Lovel, and the other by that of John Lovel, of Snotescombe. In the 29th of Edward I. he was one of those barons present in the parliament of Lincoln, who, on the 12th of February, 1301, signed that memorable letter to the pope, Boniface VIII. in answer to that insolent bull by him then published, declaring the sovereignty of Scotland to depend upon the see of Rome, forbidding Edward, king of England (then master of that kingdom) to vindicate any pretensions thereto, and requiring the said prince to send his ambassadors to Rome, there to receive his sentence as to his claim thereon. In which answer the whole baronage of England resist this audacious attempt of the said pope, in terms of the highest dignity and resentment, unanimously declaring, that the see of Rome had no right over the kingdom of Scotland, or to interfere in any temporal concern of the crown of England, and that they would never suffer the king of England (was even he himself inclined thereto) judicially to appear in any case whatever, before him, or any other, who should sit in the papal chair. To this instrument (still existing of record in the chapter-house at Westminster) all the barons signed and affixed their seals, by which it appears that this lord Lovel then bore for his arms, Barry Nebulee, of six, over all in chief, a label of three points, each charged with three mullets. After this, the 32d of the same reign, he was again in the Scottish wars; and in the 33d had licence from the king to make a castle of his house at Tichmarsh, in the county of Northampton, and obtained a grant also of a market, and a fair, to be held there yearly upon the eve, and day, of the Holy Trinity, and seven days next ensuing. This John, lord Lovel, having received summons to all the parliaments held from the 24th of Edward I. till the 4th of Edward II. inclusive, and having married for his second wife, Joan, the daughter of Robert, lord Roos, of Hamlake (by his wife, Isabella Dawbeney) died in the same 4th of Edward II. 1311, seized of the manors of Tichmarsh and Minster-Lovel, as before; and of Elecumbe, and Bluntesdon Gay, in the county of Wilts: leaving (besides a daughter, Maud, by his first wife beforementioned) by his second wife two sons, John, lord Lovel, his son and heir; and James Lovel, who bore the arms of his brother, with a canton ermine for his difference, and left a son, Sir Ralf Lovel, knt. of whom we know nothing further, but that he was appointed executor to the will of John, lord Lovel, fifth of that name, hereafter mentioned.

John, lord Lovel, fourth of that name, being twenty-two years old at the death of his father, was, soon after, viz. in the 7th of Edward II. in the Scottish wars, and had summons to parliament in the 6th, 7th, and 8th of that reign, in which last named year he died, A. D. 1315, leaving issue by Maud, his wife (sister and sole heir of Edward, lord Burnell) one only son, also named John; his widow afterwards becoming the wife of Sir John Handlo.

John, lord Lovel (fifth of that name) son of John, lord Lovel, and Maud, lady Burnel, his wife, succeeded his father, being then but two years old. In the 8th of Edward III. 1334, being then twenty-one years of age, he was in the expedition then made into Scotland. In the 10th and 18th of the same reign, he was in the wars of France; and in the 19th, 20th, and 21st of Edward III. (being then of the retinue of Thomas de Beauchamp, earl of Warwick) continued in the same service; but on the Saturday, next after the feast of All Saints (having made his will before) in the 23d of Edward III. 1347, he died seized of the manor of Southmere, in the county of Norfolk, and Minster, in the county of Oxford, (which he held in conjunction with Isabel, his wife) of Tichmarsh, in the county of Northampton, and of two parts of the manor of Cheriton, in the county of Somerset. By which lady Isabel, daughter of William, lord Zouch, of Harringworth, he left two sons, both of the name of John, and one daughter, Isabel, the wife of Thomas, son of Thomas Green.

John, eldest son, then but six years and an half old at the death of his father, was the sixth lord Lovel of that name; but before he attained the age of twenty-one years, died on the Monday, next after the feast of the translation of St. Thomas the Martyr, in the 35th of Edward III. 1359, leaving his brother (of the same name, John) his heir, then nineteen years of age. This

John, lord Lovel, (the seventh of that name) being at full age in the 37th of Edward III. had livery of all his lands, but had respite of homage, and was elected afterwards into the most noble order of the Garter. In the 42d of Edward III. he was in the wars of France, and of the retinue of Lionel, duke of Clarence, that king's son. And again, in the 45th and 47th of Edward III. having married Maud, daughter and sole heir of Robert, lord Holland, summoned to parliament the 16th of Edward III. son and heir of Robert lord Holland, summoned to parliament July 29, 1314, and afterwards beheaded (son of Robert, son of Thurstan, son of Sir Robert, son of Sir Thomas Holland) by Maud, daughter and coheir of Alan lord Zouch, of Ashby (who died 1314) by his wife, Eleanor, daughter of Nicholas, lord Segrave. Which Alan was the son of Roger, lord Zouch (who died 1285) by Adela, daughter and heir of Stephen de Longespee, and coheir to her mother Emeline, daughter and heir to Walter de Riddlesford, baron of Bray, in Ireland: which Roger was the son of Alan, lord Zouch (who died 1270) by his wife, Helen, daughter and coheir of Roger de Quincy, earl of Winchester, (by his wife, Helen, eldest daughter and coheir of Alan, lord Galloway, by his wife, Margaret, daughter and coheir of David, earl of Huntingdon. Which David, earl of Huntingdon, was brother to Malcolm VI. king of Scotland, and earl of Chester, in right of his wife, Maud, daughter of Hugh Meschines, earl of Chester. This David, was the son of Henry, earl of Huntingdon, by his wife, Maud, daughter and coheir of Waltheof, earl of Huntingdon. This Henry was himself king of Scotland, and was the son of Malcolm III. king thereof. By Margaret, sister to Edgar Etheling, and sole heiress of the Saxon line of England.) Which Roger, earl of Winchester, was son and heir to Saier de Quincy, earl of Winchester, (whose father and grandfather of the same name were lords of Quincy) by Margaret, the second daughter and coheir with Amicia, her eldest sister (who married Simon de Montfort, earl of Leicester, in her right) to Robert, earl of Leicester, (by Petronell, his wife, daughter and heir to Hugh, lord Gretemelnel) son of Robert le Bossa, earl of Leicester (by his wife, Iffa, daughter and heir of Ralph de Guader, earl of Norfolk) son of Robert de Bellomonte, earl of Leicester and Mellent (by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh the Great, Count of Vermandois and Valois, son to Henry I. king of France, and sister to Auberie, wife of William Gouel de Perceval, lord of Yvery, common ancestor to this branch of the house of Yvery (surnamed Lovel) of which we here treat, and of that of which the earl of Egmont is now the chief in a direct male line. In the 48th of Edward III. this John, lord Lovel, was again in the wars of France, in the retinue of Edmond Mortimer, earl of March; and in the 49th, constituted governor of the castle of Banelyingham, in France; also in the 3d of Richard II. 1380, employed in Ireland, upon that king's service: but some years after, much discontent arising among divers of the nobility, by reason that the king was wholly swayed by Robert de Vere, duke of Ireland, to the great scandal of the realm, Thomas of Woodstock, duke of Gloucester, and his party raising what forces they could, appeared in arms near London, at Bishop's-Wood, Waltham, Hackney, and other places, whence they sent this John, lord Lovel, with the archbishop of York, to the king, requiring him to deliver up those by whose evil counsel he had been thus seduced. Nevertheless it so happened that this lord Lovel fell off from them to the king, being one of those whom they expelled the court, when thus predominant. And in the 18th of Richard II. attending him into Ireland, so far insinuated himself into his esteem, that in the 22d of his reign he was again employed on his service in that realm. After this we have seen nothing further memorable of him, but that he gave to the canons of Marlebergh, in the county of Wilts, certain lands in Monton-Burbach, and West-Grafton; and that the morrow, next ensuing the feast of St. James the Apostle, in the 9th of Henry IV. 1408, by the title of John, lord Lovel and Holland, he made his will at Wardour-castle, in the county of Wilts, whereby he bequeathed his body to burial in the church of St. John, at Brackley, in the county of Northampton, and gave thereto a vestment of black, adorned with stars of gold, as also certain copes, and other things thereunto appertaining of the same suit and colour, appointing Maud (de Holland) his wife, to dispose of part of his goods for the health of his soul, whom together with John, his son, Sir Humfry Stafford, knight, and others, he constituted his executors. The day of his death we cannot certainly tell, but it happened not long after, for the probate of that his testament bears date the 12th of September following. The lands whereof he died seized being these, viz. the manors of Sutton-Walrond, in the county of Dorset; Sparkford, alias Speckesford, North Cheriton, and Upton-Noble, in the county of Somerset; Tichmarsh, and Othecote, in the county of Northampton; Minster-Lovel, in the county of Oxford; Mighenden, Bridesherd, Erdescot, Knoll, Hywishe, Wamberge, Ubaton, Wardor, Knoweke, Knighton, Salthorpe, Wichelescote, Areforde, Stutecombe, and Elecombe, in the county of Wilts; and in right of Maud Holland, his wife, of Hameldon, in the county of Rutland, Southmere, in the county of Norfolk; Broughton, juxta Ailebury, in the county of Bucks; Yorhale, in the county of Stafford; Baggeworth and Shepesheved, in the county of Leicester; Dochelyngton, Norton-Bruin, and Chelderston, in the county of Oxford; Denford, in the county of Berks; as also the manor of Brackley and Hulls, with the hundred of Sutton, commonly called Kings-Sutton, in the county of Northampton. Maud, his wife, surviving, who in the 1st of Henry V. by a formal release, bearing date under her seal of arms at Bristol, the 4th of July, did quit claim to Henry V. of all her right to diverse lordships and lands, whereunto that king did then pretend a title, by virtue of a certain grant made of them by king Henry III. unto Edmund, his son, and the heirs of his body; and having given her manors of Baggeworth and Thornton, in the county of Leicester, to the hospital of Brackley, in the eighth of Henry V. procured licence for converting it to a house of friars preachers.

To this last mentioned John, and Maud de Holland, his wife, succeeded

John, lord Lovel and Holland, their only son, (eighth of that name) who, in the next year after his father's death, had livery of his lands, his homage being respited; but he lived not long, for upon the 19th of October, in the second of Henry V. he departed this life, then seized of the manors of Mighenden, Elcombe, Erdescot, and Wardercastle, in the county of Wilts; Chelesdon, Minster-Lovel, Norton, Bruyn, Dochelington-Breton, Tichmarsh, Hinton juxta Hulls, with the manor and hundred of Kings-Sutton, in the county of Northampton, and Broughton, in the county of Leicester; leaving by Alianora, his wife, the daughter of William, lord Zouch, of Harringworth, two sons, both of the name of William: the youngest of whom married one of the daughters and coheirs of Thomas St. Clere, of Barton St. John, in the county of Oxford, but of him we know nothing farther.

William, lord Lovel and Holland, eldest son and heir of John, lord Lovel, by the said Alianore la Zouche, his wife, was in the 4th of Henry V. A. D. 1417, by indenture retained to serve the king with six men at arms, and archers, in his wars of France; and before the end of that year to serve him in his fleet at sea with two men at arms (himself accounted) and four archers. Moreover, in the 9th of Henry V. he was again in those wars of France; and in the 1st of Henry VI. doing homage, had livery of the lands of his inheritance by descent, both from John, lord Lovel, his father, and Maud, the daughter and heir of Robert de Holland, his grandmother; being twenty-four years of age, and in the 2d of Henry VI. having married Alice, one of the daughters of John, lord Deincourt, sister and coheir to William, lord Deincourt (widow of Ralf Boteler, lord Sudley) performing his fealty, had livery of the lands of that inheritance; which John, lord Deincourt, her father, married Joan, daughter and heir of Robert, lord Grey, of Rotherfield (according to a late pedigree exhibited to the public) by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter and coheir of William de la Planche, of Haversham, Bucks, which Robert was the son of John Grey, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Michael de Poynings, and was son of another John Grey, by Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Herbert St. Quintin. This last John was summoned to parliament in the life-time of his father, John, lord Grey, which John, lord Grey, died October 1, 1359, having had to wife, Catharine, daughter and coheir of Brian Fitzalan, summoned to parliament as baron Fitzalan, 1295, the son of Brian, the son of Alan, the son of Brian, a younger son of Alan Fitzalan, earl of Brittany and Richmond. The last mentioned John, lord Grey, husband of Catherine Fitzalan, was son of John, son of Waller, son of Robert, all three successively lords Grey, of Rotherfield. The last named Robert was fourth son of Sir Henry Grey, lord of Wolterton and Codnor, in the reign of king John. In the 6th of Henry VI. he was also retained by indenture to serve the king in his wars with France, with twenty-nine men of arms, and eighty archers; and in the 29th of Henry VI. procured licence to deafforest his woods, called Minster woods, in the county of Oxford, with two fields thereto adjoining, and to impark them. This William, lord Lovel and Holland, was summoned to parliament from the 3d of Henry IV. till the 33d of Henry VI. inclusive. Though in the 24th of that reign, in consideration of his eminent services in foreign parts, as well in the time of Henry V. as this king; as also by reason of his infirmity of body, he obtained a special exemption from attending parliament for the term of his life. In the 28th of Henry VI. he was made constable of the castle of Wallingford; but died the 13th of June, the 33d of Henry VI. Alice, his wife, surviving, who, in the same year, upon the death of Margaret, her sister, wife of Ralph, lord Cromwell, without issue, was found to be her next heir, by which means divers fair lordships and lands descended to her, whereof she had special livery soon after. This William, lord Lovel and Holland, died seized of the following lands, viz. the manors of Rotherhyth and Bermundsey, in the county of Surry; Wolverhampton, in the county of Stafford; Waltham, Parva, called Powers-Manors, and Burnels, in Berle, in the county of Hertford; Resyngdon, Bassel, in the county of Gloucester; Wevilcote, called Butlers-court, in the county of Oxford; Minster Lovel, Docklyngton, Norton, Bruyn, and Cheleston, in the county of Oxford; Denford, in the county of Bucks; Elcombe, Blackgrove, Mighenden, Wigtescote, Sulthorpe, Whythyll, Uffecote, Erdescote, and Knoke, in the county of Wilts; the third part of the chase of Charnewood, in the county of Leicester; the manors of Cranleye, and Broughton-Lovel, in the county of Berks; the manors of Holgate, Clée, St. Margaret, Wolstanton, Prestes, Weston, Ardulweston, Bollylye, Longfield, Uppington, pington, Wotton, Onebury, Walton, Sutton, Crofton, Abbelon, Ewdon, Burnel, Millingchope, Busbury, Longeton, Condovere, Astewall, Hope, Bowdlers, Wiggecote, Chatwall, Smethecote, Chalton, Acton, Reyner, Casley, Ronton, Ambaston, Pulleyeye, Rammeshurst, Streford, Cantelope, Acton-Burnell, and Acton-Pigot, in the county of Salop; the borough of Brackley, the hundred of Sutton, alias Kings-Sutton, the manors of Pokebroke, Dufton, Tychemershe, Kings-Sutton, and Halls, in the county of Northampton; and of the inheritance of Alice, his wife, of the manors of Askeham, and Drynghouse, within the liberty of the city of York, and manor of Baynton, in the county of York; of the manors of Cogges, Herdewyke, Rotherfield, Somerton, and the moiety of the manors of Firngesford, and fourth part of the manor of Stanlanlake, in the county of Oxford; of the manor of Ordton, alias Ulverton, in Salihull, in the county of Warwick; of the manor of Shobyndon, East-Claydon, Bold-Claydon, Woburne, and Fryngford, in the county of Bucks; as also the manor of East-Wykhams, in the county of Kent; and jointly with the said Alice of the manor and castle of Wardour, and manors of Briddehurst, Ubbendon-Lovel, and Wamburge, in the county of Wilts, leaving four sons,

1. John, lord Lovel and Holland, the ninth of that name, his heir.

2. William, lord Lovel de Morley, (of whom we shall treat hereafter).

3. Robert Lovel, who died without issue.

4. Henry Lovel, who was buried in the Crutched-Friars, but whom we know nothing further.

John, lord Lovel and Holland (ninth of that name) eldest son of William, succeeded his father, and was baron of Lovel and Holland, Burnel, Deincourt, Gray, of Rotherfield, and Fitzalan, of Bedal, by descent; which John, in the 34th of Henry VI. obtained a patent from the king, to be chief forester of the forest of Whichwood, in the county of Northampton; but the scene of affairs soon changed upon the landing of the duke of York (afterwards king Edward IV.) when this John, lord Lovel, accompanied by the lord Scales and Hungerford, entered London, in hopes to retain the citizens in their duty to king Henry, but failing therein, were obliged to fly to the Tower for refuge; soon after which the Yorkists prevailing every-where to the fatal ruin of king Henry, and most of his friends, we find nothing farther memorable of this lord, till his death, which happened on the ninth of January, in the fourth of Edward IV. He married Joan, sister and heir of William, viscount Beaumont, and left by her, Francis, an only son, his heir; and two daughters, Joan, who became the wife of Sir Brian Stapleton, knight, and Frideswide, the wife of Sir Edward Norris, neither of whom could inherit any thing, by reason of the attainder of their brother, some years after.

Francis, lord Lovel and Holland, Burnel, Deincourt, Gray, of Rotherfield, and Fitzalan, of Bedal, aforementioned, was but nine years old at the death of his father; and notwithstanding the attachment of his father to the house of Lancaster, grew up into great favour with the house of York; and in the 22d of Edward IV. being then twenty-seven years of age, went with Richard, duke of York (that king's brother, and afterwards king by name of Richard III.) then appointed lieutenant-general of the English army, into Scotland; and before the end of that year on the 4th of January, was created viscount Lovel, and elected a knight of the Garter. Moreover, being a great friend and favourer of king Richard III. was advanced by him to be lord chamberlain of the household, constable of the castle of Wallingford, and also of the honour of St. Waleries (antiently the barony of this family at the conquest, and then known by the name of the barony of Yvery), as likewise chief butler of England, which office the barons of Yvery of this family had also antiently enjoyed. And having thus twisted interest with this king, adventured himself in battle for him at Bosworth-Field, against Henry, duke of Richmond, who by the success of that day, obtained the crown, by the title of king Henry VII. In which battle king Richard being slain, and his army totally routed, this viscount Lovel made shift to escape with his life, and thence flying to St. John's, at Colchester, in Essex, took sanctuary there for a while; but deeming that no safe place, privily got away to Sir Thomas Broughton's, in Lancashire, and (after lying there concealed for some months) from thence into Flanders, to Margaret, dutchess of Burgundy (sister to the late king Edward IV.) Not long after which he was sent by that princess into Ireland, with 2000 stout soldiers, under the conduct of Martin Swart, an eminent German commander, on behalf of Lambert Simnel (the counterfeit duke of York.) From whence he came over into England with John de la Pole, earl of Lincoln, and all the power of that party, in hopes to dethrone the king; but being defeated in the battle of Stoke, near Newark upon Trent, on the 16th of June, in the third of Henry VII. underwent the fate of all the chief leaders in that cause, having perished either in that fight, or soon after. Whereupon king Henry aspiring after his great inheritance, attainted this lord, and confiscated his whole estate, inferior at that time to few or none in this kingdom. He died without issue, and all his titles, viz. that of viscount Lovel, with those antient baronies of Lovel, Holland, Burnell, Deincourt, Gray of Rotherfield, and Fitzalan of Bedal, became forfeited to the crown, and remained extinguished, till his present majesty was graciously pleased to revive those of Lovel and Holland, in the person of John, now earl of Egmont, in consideration of the consanguinity of the said earl, and his descent both by the male and female line therefrom.

Notwithstanding which fatal blow, the male line of this branch of this noble family was still continued by William, lord Lovel of Morley, uncle to Francis, viscount Lovel, last mentioned, viz. second son of William, lord Lovel and Holland (by Alice, daughter and heir of John, lord Deincourt) who obtained his father's inheritance the manors of Erdescote, Bridesmith, and Uppadon-Lovel, in the county of Wilts. He married Alianore, the daughter and sole heir of Robert, lord Morley, who died in the 21st of Henry VI. 1443. (by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of William, lord Roos) son of Thomas, lord Morley, who died in the 14th of Henry VI. (by his wife, Isabel, daughter daughter and coheir of Michael de la Pole, duke of Suffolk) son of Sir Robert Morley (who died in the lifetime of his father) by his wife, Isabel (daughter of the lord Molines) eldest son and heir apparent of Thomas, lord Morley, who died on the 24th of September, in the fourth of Henry V. (by his wife, Ann, daughter of the lord Despencer) son of William, lord Morley, who died the second of Richard II. 1380. (by his wife, Cecily, daughter and at length heir of Thomas lord Bardolf) by his wife, Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Sir John Damorie, knight, by his wife, Elizabeth de Clare, widow of John de Burgh, earl of Ulster, and daughter of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, by his wife, Joan Plantagenet, surnamed Joan of Acres, daughter of king Edward I. Which Thomas, lord Bardolf, was son of Hugh, lord Bardolf (who died the 32d of Edward I.) by his wife, Isabel, daughter and coheir of William, lord Aguilon, by his wife, Margaret de Ripariis, countess of Devon, daughter and coheir of Warrin Fitz-Gerald, baron of Stokecurcy, in right of his wife Alicia de Courcy, daughter and sole heir of William de Courcy, baron of Stokecurcy, in the county of Somerset; which William, lord Morley, was son of Robert, lord Morley, who died in France in the 34th of Edward III. (by his wife Hawisia, sister and sole heir of John, lord Mareschall, lord marshal of Ireland, and daughter of William, lord Mareschall, who died the eighth of Edward II.) son of John, lord Mareschall, son of another John, lord Mareschall (brother of William Mareschall, the great earl of Pembroke) by his wife, Aliva, daughter and heir of Hubert, lord Rie, who died in the 18th of Henry II. which Robert, lord Morley, was son of William Morley, summoned to parliament December 20, 1299. The above-mentioned Alianore, lady Morley, thus brought to the said William, lord Lovel, her husband, the baronies of Morley, Marshall, Hengham, and Rhie, together with the office of hereditary marshal of Ireland, who having had respite of his homage, was summoned to parliament in the 9th of Edward IV. 1468, by the title of William Lovel, de Morley Chivaler; and was again called by writ to that parliament intended to be held at York, on the 22d of September, in the same 9th of Edward IV. but before the day assigned, viz. upon the 7th of the same month, he received a new writ from the king, suspending his former summons, because as the record affirms, there was need of immediate recourse to arms, for resisting that invasion of the French and Scots, with which the kingdom was then threatened: and again was summoned to the parliament held at Westminster, in the 10th of Edward IV. (and 49th of Henry VI.) by the same title. This William, lord Lovel de Morley, died upon the 23d of July, 1475, in the 16th of Edward IV. seized of the manors of Erdescot, Bride-smith, and Uppadon-Lovel; and his wife within twenty-eight days after, viz. upon the 28th of August next ensuing, seized of the manors of Halingbury-Morley, in the county of Essex; Walkern, in the county of Hertford; Heyngham, Swanton, Morley, Buxton, Matfale, Hockeryng, Albye, Folsham, and the hundred of Fourho, in Norfolk; as also of Shobington, East-Claydon, Crawley, and Woburne-Deincourt, in the county of Bucks; leaving one son, Henry Lovel, lord Morley, and one daughter, Alice.

This

Henry Lovel, lord Morley, was little more than ten years old at the time of the death of his father and mother, but had special livery of all his lands upon attaining his full age in 1489: soon after which he vested the manors of Hingham, Buxton, and the hundred of Fourho, in Sir William Boleyn, knight, and Thomas Woodhouse, senior, as trustees for the payment of his debts; but being afterwards sent into Flanders with the lord Daubinie, and others, in aid of Maximilian, king of the Romans, whose subjects in those parts had then rebelled against him, he was there unhappily killed by a gun-shot at Dixmude, in the same year, from whence his body being carried to Calais, was there interred; and thus dying without issue, Alice, his sister, became his heir. He married Elizabeth de la Pole, daughter of John de la Pole, duke of Suffolk, by the princess Elizabeth Plantagenet, sister to king Edward IV. and to king Richard III. By which great alliance this Henry Lovel, lord Morley, became nephew to those kings last mentioned, and cousin-german to king Henry VII. who married the daughter of king Edward IV. This Elizabeth, lady Morley, was also heiress (by the extinction of all her brothers and sisters) to John de la Pole, earl of Lincoln, her brother, who was declared heir apparent to the crown, by king Richard III. his uncle; but the effect of that settlement, which brought this family so near to the succession of the crown, was destroyed by that revolution which established Henry VII. upon the throne. All that we shall add of this lady is, that she survived her husband many years, and though a woman of more than common beauty, resisted all temptations to a second marriage, leading a most exemplary life of virtue in the state of widowhood till her death, which happened in the fifty-second year of her age, in the year —. She lies buried in the church of Halingbury-Morley, in Essex, where her nephew Henry Parker, lord Morley, of whom we shall hereafter come to speak, erected a monument to her memory, with the following inscription still remaining thereon.

Elizabetha, Ducis Suffolciæ filia, atque inclyti viri Henrici Lovel, Morlei Domini Uxor, tanto Maritum amore prosequabatur, ut in prælio contra Gallos ictu pilæ æneæ mortuo, de secundis nuptiis, ut cogitaret nunquam postea adduci potuit, sed florenti ætate, corporisq; non mediocri pulchritudine ad mortem usque viduam permanere voluit. — Aliis Mulieribus rarissimum castitatis exemplum. — Vixit Ann. 51. — Ob. The male line of this branch of the house of Yvery, barons Lovel and Holland, Burnell, Deincourt, Gray, of Rotherfield, Fitzalan, of Bedal, Morley, Marsham, Hengham, and Rhie, and viscount Lovel, being thus determined, it remains only to treat of Alice Lovel, sister and sole heiress of Henry Lovel, lord Morley, last mentioned. Which Alice,

Alice, in the 4th of Henry VII. thus succeeding to her brother, brought her title to the baronies of Morley, Marshall, Hengham, and Rhie (which had fortunately escaped those attainders that had extinguished so many others of this family) together with that of the hereditary office of lord marshal of Ireland, to her husband, Sir William Parker, knight, lord Morley, in her right; which said Sir William Parker married this lady before the year 1475, the 15th of Edward IV. with whom, and with Richard, duke of Gloucester, his brother, he was in great favour; the latter of whom, in the 22d of Edward IV. he attended to the wars of Scotland, and having entered Edinburgh with him, was, for his valour and conduct in that expedition there, knighted by him on St. James's eve in that year. And the said duke of Gloucester, having soon after attained the crown, which he bore under the title of Richard III. was made a privy-counsellor, and standard-bearer to that prince; but upon the accession of king Henry VII. he fell into utter disgrace, insomuch that he was neither summoned to parliament, nor suffered to assume the office of marshal of Ireland, but lay imprisoned in the Tower during that whole reign, and until the 2d of Henry VIII. 1510, in which year he died by violent means, as his epitaph in the church of Halingbury declares.

This Alice Lovel, lady Morley, after the death of the said Sir William Parker, took to her second husband Sir Edward Howard, knight of the Garter (second son to Thomas, duke of Norfolk) admiral of England, with whom she lived not long, he being killed before Brest, in Brittany, on the 25th of April, in the 4th of Henry VIII. 1513, leaving no issue; she herself dying also five years after, in 1518. In her will, which was dated the 9th of April, and proved on the 22d of February following, in that year, she orders her body to be buried in the parish-church of St. Andrew's, of Yngham, in Norfolk; she bequeaths to Henry Parker, lord Morley, her son and heir, her bed of cloth of gold and tawney velvet, also her best basin and ewer of silver, and parcel gilt, a bowl gilt, with a cover gilt with her lord's arms and her's upon it; a standing cup with a cover, gilt, that was gotten by her ancestors, and all the ornaments of her chapel, with other parcels of plate; also various other legacies to her two daughters, Jane, and Alice Parker, and to Sir Thomas Lovel, knight of the Garter, then treasurer with the king's grace, &c. Most probably, in pursuance of this her will, she was at first interred in the church of Hyngham, before-mentioned; but Henry Parker, lord Morley, her son, piously desiring to transmit the memory of his noble ancestors to future ages, erected a marble monument in the church of Halingbury-Morley, which, as his own epitaph recites, he designed for the common place of burial of his family, and caused the bones of his grandmother, of his father and mother, and of his wife, to be there entombed; at which time, doubtless, he removed the body of this Alice Lovel to the said church of Halingbury, where her epitaph, among those of many others of his ancestors, remain in the following words:

Nobilis heu tristi concessit foemina fato
Cujus in hoc tumultu condita membra jacent,
Morlei dicta Domina cui Alicia nomen
A Lovello fuit. Vivat ubique precor.
Maribus enituit claris, et stemmate clara,
Aurea nunc inter sidera clara nitet.
Corpus terra tenet, sed spiritus alta polorum
Regna tenet felix. Hoc Deus ipse velit.

Of this Alice Lovel, lady Morley, and Sir William Parker, her husband, the direct and lineal descendant, and the sole heir male, was the late Sir Philip Parker à Morley Long, baronet, and likewise the last male heir of that house, whose sister, Catharine Parker, became the wife of John, late earl of Egmont, and was mother to the present earl; by which marriage the blood and pretensions of the said Alice Lovel, heiress of this line of the house of Yvery, derived into itself, viz. into that of which the said earl is the chief, and which is now the only branch of the same stock subsisting in the male line at this day. But the intermediate descents from the said Alice Lovel, and the said Sir William Parker, to the present earl, we shall defer to recite till we come to give the direct deduction thereof in the due order of time and place, which will be when we have carried down the account of the line of the earl of Egmont to the period of that marriage of the said Catharine Parker with the said late earl.

We therefore now return to RICHARD, the fifth or youngest son of William Gouel de Perceval (the first who was called Lovel) and brother to William, surnamed Lovel, father to William, baron Lovel, of Dockings; which Richard retaining the primitive and paternal name of his family, delivered it down to his descendants, and is lineal ancestor of the present earl. What portion of his father's inheritance came to his share, is not farther known, than that he received lands in Stawel, in the county of Somerset, parcel of the lands given to his grandfather Ascelin at the Conquest; for there is extant a record in the Cotton library, wherein he granted to the monks of Thame, by the name of Richard de Perceval, the son of William Luvel, in pure and perpetual alms, one furlong of land in Stawell, and two plough lands and tofts in the same town, which belonged formerly to Ascelin de Yvery, his grandfather, by the gift of William the Bastard. He granted likewise, at the same time, the plough lands of Bedcombe, which he the said Richard had received from William de Moion, in marriage with his daughter; to which deed assented Robert Hamelin, and Richard, his sons.

In the 7th of Henry II. 1161, he was charged for his lands in the county of Somerset, upon the scutage levied for the expedition to Tholouse, at the rate of two marks for each knight's fee; as likewise, in the 13th of Henry II. 1168, upon the aid levied for the marriage of Maud, the king's eldest daughter, to Henry, duke of Saxony; and being nearly related to Richard de Clare, earl of Striguil, surnamed Strongbow (whose mother was Elizabeth, daughter of Robert, earl of Melent, and sister to the mother of this Richard) accompanied him in his Irish expedition. Upon the scutage of Wales in the following reign, viz. the 2d of Richard I. 1189, he was assised again; after which, in the year 1191, the 2d of that reign, he was abroad with king Richard I. in the Holy Land, and (as Josephus Iscanus, secretary to that prince, who wrote a particular account of that expedition, relates) a principal commander in the English army there; but being disabled by the loss of his leg, in an action against the Saracens, he returned home. In the 8th of that reign, 1197, we find him, together with Henry Luvel, assised in the third and fourth scutage, at twenty shillings for every fee, to defray the expences of the Norman army; and afterwards, upon the aid in the 2d year of king John, 1201, he was charged again, together with Ralph, the son and heir of Henry Luvel, before-mentioned; but dying, as it is presumed, not long after, was buried in the church of Weston, in Gordano, in the county of Somerset, with the following inscription:

Orate pro anima Rycardi Perceval qui Militavit in Terra Sancta com Rege Rycardo, A. C. mxc.

He married the daughter of William de Moion, or Mohun, lord of Dunster, in the county of Somerset, who, by some of the historians in the reign of king Stephen, was stiled earl of Somerset and Dorset; by whom he had Robert, Hamelin, and Richard.

Robert, the eldest, seems to have succeeded his father before the 3d of John, 1202; for in the pipe-roll of that year, he is charged to the king fifteen marks for the seizure of the lands of Bodecombe, which he held of William de Moion, and then paid ten marks thereof into the king's exchequer. But the said Robert and Hamelin dying without issue,

Their brother,

RICHARD DE PERCEVAL, second of that name, the youngest son of Richard, continued the line; of whom we know nothing farther, than that he was with his father in the Holy Land; that he joined with him in the grant to the monks of Thame, as aforesaid, and was buried also in the church of Weston, where his monument subsisted in the year 1692. He left three sons, Robert, Hugh, and John, as appears by a deed of the said John, which will be hereafter mentioned.

Robert de Perceval, eldest son of Richard, holding Clywere, in the county of Somerset, and other large estates of the honour of Gloucester, then enjoyed by the house of Clare, became an early adventurer in Ireland, where it is presumed that this family had acquired some property before, and in 1261, went over with Richard de Marleè, Stephen de Burgo, and near twenty men at arms, where he behaved with so much valour, that he acquired great possessions, which induced him to remain there, and to resign his paternal estate, or great part thereof in the county of Somerset, to his brothers. His services to the state were so considerable, that he received summons, as a baron of that realm, to the parliament holden at Dublin, the 14th of Edward I. 1285; but dying the same year, left two sons, Richard, the second baron, who dying without issue the same year, his brother Robert became the third baron, and was a man of great consideration in the county of Meath, in which he was seated near Portlester, and is presumed to have built the castle of Norrach there. His name is entered in two rolls of the barons of Ireland, and in 1301 he received letters from king Edward I. requiring his attendance in the Scottish wars; and also other letters of credence from that prince: but two years after, engaging in a battle with the Irish, was slain the 22d of October, 1303; and having been a great benefactor to the priory of Youghal, was buried there. He married Grace, eldest daughter of Thomas Fitz-Maurice, the second baron of Kerry (ancestor to the present earls of Kerry and Shelburne) and left an only son, Thomas, lord Perceval, the fourth baron, who dying without issue in 1312, the title ceased.

We now revert to John and Hugh, the second and third brothers of Robert (the first lord Perceval, in Ireland) and sons of Richard de Perceval, before-mentioned. Which John and Hugh de Perceval, as appears by the title-deeds, of the manor of Fairfield, near Stoke-courcy, in the county of Somerset, were witnesses (and therein called brothers) to a charter (without date, but made in the reign of Henry III.) of Philip de Columbaris, or Columbers, a great baron of that age, the capital seat of whose barony was Stowey, under Quantock Hills, in the said county, and bounded by the manors and lands of this family in those parts.

In the 5th of Edward I. 1277, the said Hugh de Perceval granted and quitted claim in favour of the said John (there surnamed de Watton, but stiled in the same deed his brother) to all the rights that he might have in Lymbury, a manor there adjoining, in the county of Somerset; which deed was dated at Lymbury, and witnessed by William de Vernay, lord of Fairfield, John de Perceval, and others.

Of this Hugh we know nothing farther; but

JOHN DE PERCEVAL, his brother, surnamed de Watton, continued the line; and in the year 1260, the 44th of Henry III. received summons among the barons to attend the king at Shrewsbury upon the feast of the nativity of the blessed Virgin, with horse and arms, to war against Llewellyn, prince of Wales. In the 5th of Edward I. 1277, he did his homage for that part of his estate held by knights service, of William de Vernay, lord of Fairfield, viz. the manors of Corville, Lymbury, and Watton, in the county of Somerset; from which last it is evident, that he assumed for a time his name. There is likewise extant a deed in the Cotton library, bearing date at Stawel, in which (by the name of John, the son of Richard) he grants to the monks of Thame one yard-land in the town of Bodecombe, adjoining on the north to a certain plowland, which the said monks received formerly of the gift of Richard de Perceval, the son of William Luvel, his grandfather, in pure and perpetual alms; to which deed were witnesses his brothers, Robert and Hugh,

Hugh, his sons, Roger, John, and Ascelin, Robert de Chen, and others; but in the 9th of Edward I. 1281, he died, having had issue by two wives, viz. by the first (Alice, sister to Odo de Dampmartin, in the county of Surry) three sons, before mentioned, viz. Roger, John, and Ascelin; and by the second, whose name is not known, a son, Henry; of which Roger, the eldest, continued the descent in a direct male line to the present earl of Egmont; and Henry was founder of a considerable branch of this family, which subsisted in the male line till the reign of Richard III. 1485.

To prevent confusion in deducing the principal line of the said Roger, and farther, because little account has been yet given of this other branch, we shall first trace the descent from the said Henry Perceval, son by another venter, of John de Perceval, or de Watton, above-mentioned; which Henry is ascertained only by one title-deed (now in the hands of Peregrine Palmer, esquire, present lord of the manor of Fairfield) relating to a claim of John Perceval, of Coreville, in the 3d of Edward IV. 1464, to a right of common in East-Quantoch, and la Westmore, in the county of Somerset, obtained by this Henry de Perceval (ancestor to the said John) from William de Vernay, lord of Fairfield, in the time of Edward I. The said Henry left two sons, John and Richard; and that he died in the life-time of his father, or soon after his decease, seems more than probable, as his father, John, surnamed de Watton, was living in the 5th of Edward I. 1277, and his son, John de Perceval, did homage for the estate in the ninth of the same reign, 1281.

John de Perceval, eldest son of the said Henry, lord of Coreville, Lymbury, and Watton, did homage for the estates which he held of William de Vernay, son of William, paying relief for the same in the 9th of Edward I. 1281, but died five years after, viz. on the Tuesday next after the annunciation of the blessed Virgin, in the 14th of Edward I. 1286.

To whom Sir Richard de Perceval, his brother, surnamed de Coreville, now Corril (who was born in 1260, the 44th of Henry III.) succeeded, and being then of full age, paid relief for the lands which his said brother John held at the time of his decease, viz. in Fairfield, Lymbury, Sydenham, and Watton. Which Richard was in the wars of Scotland, where he bore upon his banner the arms of his family, but with the tinctures counter-changed, viz. the field and the three crosses-pattees gules, and the chief argent, as a difference from the arms of the elder branch. It appears that he was living in the 5th of Edward III. 1332, but died before the 22d of the same reign, 1350; for in the year last-mentioned, Johanna, then his widow, together with John, Walter, and Richard de Perceval, laid claim to certain lands in Fairfield, and being sworn in court, presented an evidence, which had been before produced in the same place upon the Sunday next after the exaltation of the Holy Cross in the 5th year of king Edward III. by the said late Richard Perceval, formerly husband of the said Joan, and father by her of the said John, Walter, and Richard Perceval, as the deed recites. Concerning Richard, the youngest of which sons, we have no farther account; but Walter, the second son, having married Joan, sister of Gilbert de Hywish, the said Joan, in the 10th of Richard II. 1387 (at that time the widow of the said Walter) conveyed to her brother, Gilbert de Hywish, all her rights in her lands and tenements in East-Quantoch.

John de Perceval, the eldest of the three said sons, succeeded to the estate, but departed this life in the 3d of Henry V. 1415, seized of the manors of Lymbury, Coreville, &c. and many other estates in Westlake, Clafford, Sinderland, and Sydenham, in the county of Somerset, all held by knights service; leaving by Margaret, his wife, a son, John, his heir; in which year, viz. 1415, the said Margaret Perceval obtained from John de Vernay, then lord of Fairfield, a release of certain lands in Estrecholt (now Asholt) near Quantoch, in the said county.

John de Perceval, son and heir of the said John and Margaret, at the time of his father's death, (viz. in the 3d of Henry V. 1415) was forty years of age, and became lord of Coreville, Lymbury, Watton, with many other fair possessions in those parts, and lived to a great age, but dying in or about the 23d of Henry VI. 1455, eighty years old, left two sons, Hugh and John, and two daughters, Joan and Margaret, all in their minority.

Hugh Perceval, the eldest son, succeeded his father John, as before observed, in 1455, and being then under age, John de Vernay, lord of Fairfield, released to Margaret, before mentioned, the widow of John de Perceval, father of the last-mentioned John, and grandfather of the said Hugh, all his right, title, or claim to the wardship and custody of the two manors of Coreville and Lymbury, during the minority of the said Hugh. But he dying in or before the 3d of Edward IV. 1464, without issue, was succeeded by John.

John Perceval, lord of Coreville, and brother and heir of Hugh, in the same year 1464, laid claim to the common of pasture in La Westmore, and East-Quantoch, in the county of Somerset, as above-mentioned; and exhibiting two charters, viz. one from William de Vernay to Henry de Perceval, his ancestor (as he is styled in that record) of which charter mention has been made above; as likewise another charter from Ralph de Vernay, justified his right thereto. This John, the last male of his line, died on the Sunday next after the feast of All Souls, in the second year of Richard III. 1485, seized of the manors of Coreville and Lymbury, and many other lands and tenements in Stoford, East-Quantoch, Dodington, Stokecurcy, Durbrow, Fairfield, &c. with common of Turbary in La Westmore, &c. in the county of Somerset; John Everard, the son of Joan, eldest sister of the said John Perceval, and Margaret his other sister, then the wife of John Willems, or Williams, being found his next heirs; which John Everard was then above twenty years of age, and Margaret thirty-five years old, and upwards. Which Margaret became sole heir to this branch by the death of the said John Everard soon after, and left a son, Sir Reginald Williams, knight, father of Sir John Williams, of Burfield, in the county of Berks, who had two sons, Reginald and John, of whom John, the second son, was by queen Mary I. solemnly created baron Williams, of Thame, in the county of Oxford, at the palace of St. James's, on the 5th day of April, in the first year of her reign, 1553, from whose heirs general descend the present sent earl of Abingdon and the lord viscount Wenman.

Having thus fully traced the branch of the Percevals of Coreville, we shall only add, that in the 8th of Henry VII. 1492, seven years after the decease of the said John Perceval, Sir Reginald Williams before-mentioned, having vested the manors of Coreville and Lymbury (and part of the lands so descended to him, in right of Margaret Perceval, his mother) in the lord Zouche, Sir John Dawbeney, and others his trustees, they were sold by him, together with the capital messuage of Coreville, to Sir Baldwin Mallet, knight, then lord of the manor of Enmore adjacent thereto, and in the same county, and part thereof is now the estate of the present earl of Egmont.

We now revert to

ROGER DE PERCEVAL, the eldest son of John de Perceval surnamed de Watton, by Alicia Dampmartin his first wife, from whom the present earl of Egmont immediately in the direct male line descends, which Sir Roger Perceval, was lord of East-Quantoeh, Eastbury, Stawell, Bridcot, &c. in the county of Somerset, who in the ninth of Edward I. 1281, was charged to the king for half a knight's fee in Bodecombe, in the same county; and in the 15th of Edward I. 1281, succeeded upon the death of Sir John Breteche, his wife's father, to the large estate of that family, viz. the manors of Carhampton, Thrubwell, alias Trobbeville, and another half knight's fee in Bodecombe, &c. in the county of Somerset (his wife being then sixteen years of age) and doing his homage, had livery of the lands of her inheritance in the same year. In the 18th of the same reign, 1290, at the parliament then held after the feast of St. Michael, he petitioned the king for remission of the fine which had been laid upon him, for having taken certain sums of money of Walter Parson, of Mulso, who had fled upon an indictment of murder; the said Roger pretending that his goods and chattels were forfeited to him, whereas in truth they were escheated to the crown. In the 24th of Edward I. 1295, he was summoned among the barons to the great council or parliament, held at Newcastle, previous to the wars of Scotland, against John Baliol, whom king Edward had promoted to that throne, and who had entered into an alliance against him with the French king. The next year, 1296, he had another summons to attend the king at London, upon the Sunday after the octave of St. John the Baptist, well provided with horse and arms, in order to assist Guy, earl of Flanders, at that time invaded by Philip, king of France. This lord Roger Perceval is said to have been slain at the battle of Bannockburn, in Scotland; but it is certain, by record, that he died between the years 1310 and 1314, the 3d or 7th of Edward II.

He married Joan, the daughter and heir of Sir John de Breteche, son of another Sir John, by Margaret, daughter of Ralph, lord Boteler, of Overley, widow of Warin de Rawleigh, (which family of Breteche descended from a younger branch of the counts of Guisnes, in Flanders) and by her had issue two sons,

1. Sir John Perceval, his heir.
2. Richard Perceval, who, in 1318, was presented by his mother to the church of Exford, upon Exmore, in the county of Somerset.

Sir JOHN PERCEVAL, lord of Eastbury, Carhampton, Trobbeville, Bodecombe, &c. in the year 1300, though under age, and his father living, was returned a knight to serve for the county of Warwick, in the parliament held at Lincoln; and a writ was issued for payment of his wages by the county, for his services therein. In 1302, he was knight of the shire for the county of Somerset. In 1314, the 7th of Edward II. upon the death of Gilbert de Clare, earl of Gloucester, he appears to have held Clywere, in the county of Somerset, of that honour by knight's service. And in 1324, he was knight of the shire, and returned in chancery one of the men at arms in the county of Warwick, by the name of Sir John Perceval, of Somerset, knight. He made a large addition to his estate, by his marriage with Milicent, daughter and heir to Laurence (surnamed from his mother) de Sancto Mauro, son and heir of Simon de Ludgate, by Maud, daughter and heir of Peter de Sancto Mauro, lord of Weston-Gordein and Kingston-Seymour, in the county of Somerset, son of Milo de Sancto Mauro, a rebel baron against king John, and dying in the 12th of Edward III. 1339, (having never had summons to parliament, a discontinuance frequent in those days) left issue by her (who re-married the year after with John de Kanford) two sons, John, who died before 1346; and

Sir WALTER PERCEVAL, lord of Eastbury, Trobbeville, Bridcote, Bodecombe, Weston-in-Gordano, &c. in the county of Somerset; who was but fourteen years old at his father's death, and put under the guardianship of Sir Richard de Acton, knight; in the 20th of Edward III. and the twenty-first year of his age, he was in the wars of France, at the memorable battle of Cressy, in which ten princes, eighty bannerets, twelve hundred knights, and thirty thousand soldiers of the French were slain, and so far a partner in the glory of that day, that he was knighted by the king in the field; but died in the 23d of Edward III. 1349, in the twenty-fourth year of his age. He married Alice, daughter and heir of William de Acton, from whom, in process of time, a great inheritance devolved upon this house; and by her, who survived him many years, had issue three sons,

1. John Perceval, who died young.
2. Sir Ralph Perceval, who became his heir.
3. Sir John Perceval, knight, who forfeited his estate for practising with the malecontents at the time of the insurrection of Walter the Tyler, against king Richard II.

Sir RALPH PERCEVAL, first of that name, born about the twenty-first of Edward III. 1347, succeeded his father Walter, and in the 23d of Edward III. 1349, appears to have been in ward to Hugh, lord Despencer, one of the heirs of the honour of Gloucester; of which honour he held Clywere and Thrubwell by knight's service. Besides which he had other great possessions, viz. the manors of Eastbury and Carhampton, Bodecombe, Weston-in-Gordano, Bridcot, Avele, Huntspil, Lymplesham, Chedder, Axebrugge, Cokelake, Wedmore, Nye, Sandford, Makkelmulle, Wynscombe, Wyntred, Barton, Wodeberg, Compton-Episcopi, Draycot, Rolleston, Rowberugh, &c. in the county of Somerset; and the manor of Downhatherley, &c. in the county of Gloucester. He died between the 4th of January and the 24th of March, 1402, the 3d of Henry IV. about the fifty-fourth year of his age; leaving by Elizabeth, his wife, (who appears to have been the daughter and heir of John de Wyke*, of Ninehead, Flory, and Withele, in the county of Somerset) three sons,

1. John Perceval.
2. Richard Perceval.
3. Walter Perceval.

JOHN PERCEVAL, (the fifth of that name) succeeded his father Ralph, and was charged for his lands held by knight's service, as of the honour of Lancaster, immediately after his death in the same year, upon the aid levied on occasion of the marriage of Blanch, the king's daughter, with the emperor Henry. In the 2d year of Henry V. he was charged for his lands held by knight's service of the honour of Gloucester, 1414. But he died between that year and the 8th of that reign, 1420, without issue.

To him succeeded

SIR RICHARD PERCEVAL, lord of Eastbury, and Weston-in-Gordano, (third of that name) his brother, to whom in the 3d of Henry VI. 1425, the king committed the custody of the manors of Ninehead, Flory, and Withele, in the county of Somerset, to which he then laid claim. Two years after, he was charged upon the aid then levied for several knights fees in Avele, Bridcot, and Weston-in-Gordano, in the same county. He died between the years 1433 and 1436, leaving by his wife Agnes (the daughter of Sir Richard Arthur, of Clopton-in-Gordano, in the county of Somerset) a son, named John, and two of the name of Ralf.

Sir John Perceval, the eldest, (sixth of that name) inherited the estate; but he dying in the 17th of Henry VI. was succeeded by his second brother, Ralf.

This Ralf Perceval, lord of Eastbury, Weston, Tykenham, &c. (second of that name) in the 33d of the same reign, upon the 11th of May, 1455, did homage for a part of his estate, then held by knight's service, as of the honour of Dunster; and, in the following year, upon the 3d of February, the 34th of Henry VI. joined with his wife Joan de Bosco, daughter of William de Bosco, lord of Tykenham, in the county of Somerset, in a settlement of that place upon Ralf Perceval, his younger brother, who is the lineal ancestor of the present earl of Egmont. This Ralf Perceval the elder, as he is called in the record, died on April the 9th, 1477, the 17th of Edward IV. leaving three sons, Richard, John, and Ralf, and a daughter, Joan.

Richard Perceval, lord of Eastbury, Weston, &c. (fourth of that name) was born in 1446, the 24th of Henry VI. and succeeded his father, being thirty years of age. He married Catharine, one of the coheirs of — Hampton, in the county of Somerset, and had by her three sons, Richard, Ralf, and William. He died in 1482, at or near London, upon the 13th of July, in the thirty-sixth year of his age, and was buried in the church of Weston-Gordein, where his monument still remains.

Richard Perceval, (fifth of that name) his eldest son and heir, (born in 1473) was but nine years old at his father's death; and notwithstanding his tender age, had been already married, (as the record affirms positively) a long time to Agnes, the daughter of John Staunton, esquire, then of large possessions in the county of Somerset. But he and both his brothers dying without issue soon after,

Sir John Perceval, lord of Eastbury, Weston-in-Gordano, &c. (seventh of that name,) their uncle (born in 1447, the 25th of Henry VI.) viz. second son of Ralf the second, succeeded to them, and did his homage for the estate upon the 6th of May, in the 10th of Henry VII. 1496. Which John having married Joan, the daughter and co-heir of Thomas Chedder, esquire, or, according to other authorities, the daughter of Sir John Newton, and widow of Richard Kyng, of Kingston-Seymour, in the county of Somerset, esquire, by that lady left a son, James, and a daughter, who became wife of Gilbert Cogan, of Huntspill, esquire, a great family in those parts. And dying on September 25, 1498, the 13th of Henry VII. (about the fiftieth year of his age) was succeeded by

The said Sir James Perceval, (first of that name) who was born in 1468, and did homage upon the 28th of November following his father's decease, being then thirty years of age. Three years after, in the 15th of Henry VII. 1501, upon the marriage of Arthur, prince of Wales, to the princess Catharine of Arragon, he was returned as one of those proper to be made a knight of the Bath upon that great solemnity. In the 13th of Henry VIII. 1524, after a long dispute at law, he recovered from the lady Elizabeth, widow of Richard, son of Sir John Newton, the presentation of the church of Exford, a great living, dependant upon his manor of Eastbury, which had been usurped for above a hundred years successively, by Sir Richard Chedder, knight, Talbot, viscount Lisle, and Sir John Newton, knight; which pleading is a very remarkable record, setting forth no less than nine generations of this family in direct succession, (besides collaterals) from the reign of king Henry III. to the year we have mentioned, 1524, and establishing thereby such precision in the accounts of this family, as can be found in few others at this day. He was a man of great magnificence and expence, and lived to a great age, dying at eighty-two years old, in the 3d of Edward VI. 1550, and leaving by Joan, his wife, daughter of John Ken, of Ken, in the county of Somerset, esquire, one son, Edmund.

This Edmund, doing homage on the 21st of April next ensuing, had possession of his estate, which he enjoyed not long; for he died the very next year, upon the 21st of September, 1551, in the 4th of Edward VI. He married two wives; by Elizabeth Panthuit, his second, he left three sons, Andrew, Edmund, and Thomas; and four daughters, Margaret, Elizabeth, Christian, and Anne. By his first wife, the daughter of De Marisco, or Maries, a family then of great note in the county of Somerset, he left two daughters;

* This John de Wyke was son of another John de Wyke, who was the son of Philip de Wyke, by his wife Maud, daughter of Maud, already mentioned, as the daughter and heir of Peter de Sancto Mauro, by her first husband Walter de Wengham.

Eleanor, the wife of William Rouse, of the county of Dorset, esquire, and Joan, wife of Thomas Francis of the same county; and one son, James, his heir.

This James Perceval, lord of Eastbury, Weston-in-Gordano, &c. (second of that name) was born in 1530, in the 21st of Henry VIII. He married five wives; first, Mary, the daughter of Edmund Gorges, of Wraxhall, in the county of Somerset, esquire; secondly, the daughter of — Lutterell, of Dunster-castle, esquire; thirdly, Elizabeth, the daughter of Christopher Ken, of Ken, in the county of Somerset, esquire; fourthly, Elizabeth, widow of — Marshall, of Yvythorne, (by all whom he had no issue) and, lastly, Elizabeth, second daughter of Sir Maurice Berkeley, of Bruton, in the county of Somerset, knight (ancestor to the earl of Falmouth, the viscount Fitzharding, and the present lord Berkeley, of Stratton) by Catherine, daughter of William Blount, lord Mountjoy; by which lady he left a numerous issue, viz. two sons,

1. James Perceval.

2. John Perceval, who died without issue.

And eight daughters.

1. Elizabeth, married to Thomas Chappel, of Capnor, in Portished, in the county of Somerset, esquire.

2. Gertruda, married first to Francis Dyer, of Roundhill, esquire; and, secondly, to Barnabas Leigh, of the county of Chester, esquire.

3. Anne, first married to — Parsons, esquire, secondly to — Cheeke, esquire.

4. Florence, to Toby Pierce, esquire, of the kingdom of Ireland.

5. Sarah, married to — Thorne, esquire, near Bruton, in the county of Somerset.

6. Grace, married to James Dugdal, of Evercreech, in the same county, esquire.

7. Alice, } who died infants.

8. Mary, }

This James dying on the 26th of May, in the 36th of Elizabeth, 1594, in the sixty-third year of his age,

To him succeeded James Perceval, lord of Eastbury, Weston, &c. (third of that name) his eldest son, then ten years and three months old, being born in 1584, in the 26th of Elizabeth. Upon the death of Elizabeth, the widow and second wife of Edmund Perceval, his grandfather (who had outlived her husband fifty years and fifteen days) in the 43d of Elizabeth, 1601, the said James being in ward, the jointure of the said widow fell, during the minority of the heir, to the crown; and was granted by the queen, together with the whole estate of the minor during that term, to Richard Perceval, esquire, then secretary to the court of wards, cousin to the said James, and immediate ancestor to the present earl of Egmont. In 1604, being of full age, he had livery of his lands, doing his homage on the first of January the same year; and was soon after married to Ann, daughter of William Chester, of Amesbury, in the county of Gloucester, esquire. In the 7th of James I. 1610, upon the aid levied for making Henry, prince of Wales, a knight, he answered for his knight's fees in Weston-in-Gordano. He died in or near the year 1641, (about the sixtieth year of his age) having had by his lady five sons.

1. James Perceval.

2. Thomas Perceval.

3. Charles Perceval.

4. Robert Perceval.

5. Philip Perceval.

And four daughters,

1. Catherine, the wife of Edward Trenchard, of Cuttridge, in the county of Wilts, esquire.

2. Anne, married to Thomas Holworthy, of Bristol, esquire.

3. Mary, married to Nicholas Southcote, in the county of Tipperary, in Ireland, esquire, son of — Southcote, of Mountsadviv, in the county of Devon, in England.

4. Elizabeth, died unmarried.

Of the sons, James, Charles, Robert, and Philip, all died without issue; so that Thomas, the second son, alone, surviving his father, succeeded to the estate upon his death, which happened, as we before observed, about the year 1644.

This Thomas was born in 1613, in the 11th of James I. who coming to his estate much encumbered, contributed greatly to involve it more; and, being of an active spirit, engaged in the civil war on the side of the king, in whose cause he greatly suffered; and after the defeat of the royal party, became a compounder for his estate. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Lloyd, of Place-Ilcoid, in Chirk-manor, in the county of Denbigh; and dying the 28th of September, 1691, in the seventy-eighth year of his age, was buried in the church of Weston-in-Gordano.

He left an only daughter, Anne, his heir, who became first the wife of Evan Lloyd, of Llanemnick, in the county of Salop, esquire; and next to colonel Thomas Salusbury, of Bachagraige, esquire, in the county of Flint. But she having no issue that survived by either of these husbands, with her determined that branch of this family. This lady (her father having cut off the old entail which had been made by Sir Ralf Perceval, first of that name, who lived in the reign of Edward III. which was never altered in a course of above three hundred years, and by which the earl of Egmont, as next heir, otherwise would have been entitled to it) sold at different times the whole estate of that line, which is now passed into many hands no way related to it.

Having thus finished our account of this the elder branch of the line of Eastbury and Weston, we revert to RALF PERCEVAL, the younger son to Sir Richard, the third of that name, and brother to Ralf the elder.

Which Ralf the younger obtained by a fine levied on the morrow after the purification of the Blessed Virgin, as we have mentioned before, upon the 3d of February, in the 34th of Henry VI. 1456, from his elder brother Ralf, second of that name, lord of Eastbury, Weston-in-Gordano, &c. beforementioned, the estate of Tykenham, to him and his heirs for ever, after the decease of the said Ralf the elder, and his wife Joan, who were to enjoy it during their lives, paying to the said Ralf the younger, the annual acknowledgement of one rose, upon the feast of the nativity of St. John the Baptist, in lieu of all services, custom, or exaction whatsoever; which estate, together with Rolleston, (afterwards acquired by Thomas Perceval, the son of this Ralf the younger, from Richard chard Vincent of that place, esquire, his mother's father) continued in his descendants, till it was sold by Sir John Perceval, baronet, grandfather to the late earl, in 1656.

This Ralf Perceval the younger holding part of his estate of the honour of Hereford, to which Henry Stafford, the great duke of Buckingham, in the time of Edward IV. laid claim, being invited by the prospect of a great addition to his fortune, if the said duke should succeed therein, associated himself intimately with him, as the duke himself had done with Richard, then duke of Gloucester, afterwards king Richard III. upon promise of that honour, if he should help him to the crown: and being a person of great address, was secretly employed by the said duke of Buckingham, then in Wales, upon the death of king Edward IV. to concert measures with the said duke of Gloucester, the king's brother, then in the North, and to engage him to usurp the crown, promising to assist him with a thousand brave fellows, if need were, from the western and southern parts of the realm. In which employment his endeavours were but too successful: for the duke of Gloucester, concurring with the proposal, out-went the intentions of his advisers, putting his nephews to death, as well as making seizure of the crown.

But the duke of Buckingham, dissatisfied as well at this barbarity, as moved by the disappointment of his projected reward, which king Richard afterwards refused to ratify, soon endeavoured to dethrone the king he had thus raised: in which attempt, having failed, he was taken prisoner, and put to death at Salisbury; whereby this Ralf Perceval was defeated of the advancement he had promised himself, in consequence of this undertaking. But his disgrace was so far serviceable to his posterity, that upon the turn of affairs, which soon followed by the accession of Henry VII. his family escaped all punishment, and preserved their fortune, though he fell himself a victim to his rash engagements, being slain at the battle of Bosworth field, on the 22d of August, 1485, leaving by his wife, the daughter, and at length heir, of Richard Vincent, of Rolleston, in the county of Somerset, esquire, two sons, Edmund and Thomas.

Edmund, the eldest, dying young without issue,

THOMAS PERCEVAL, his brother, succeeded to the estate of Tykenham, and obtained Rolleston from Richard Vincent his uncle. He married Alice, daughter of William, sister and sole heir of John Cave, lord of Sydenham, in the county of Somerset, and heiress of the families of Cave, Sydenham, Kitsford, Redmore, Pixton, Tilly, &c. by whom he acquired the lordship of Sydenham, and other great additions to his estate. He died about the beginning of the reign of Henry VIII. leaving two daughters, Alice and Dorothy, and a son named David: which

DAVID PERCEVAL was lord of Tykenham and Rolleston, Sydenham, Moreland, Wely, and Wolmerton, with part of Wembdon, Petherham, Dunwere, Mulfey, Slappe, Bawdrip, Bowere, Balis, and Bradnemed, near Bridgwater, five messuages and burgage houses in the said borough of Bridgwater. &c. who being a man of much profusion, Elizabeth, the daughter of John Marshall, of Ethorne, esquire, his wife's mother, (viz. widow of Thomas Bythemore, or De la More, her first husband) then the wife of James Hadley, esquire, holding a great part of the estate of Cave in jointure, from John Cave, of Sydenham, esq; her second husband, in order to prevent his dissipation of that inheritance, to which, in the course of succession, he was intitled after her decease, gave one thousand pounds, a great sum in those days, in consideration whereof the said David bound himself to receive no profit therefrom to his own use, and made over the marriages and wardship of his two sons to the said Elizabeth their grandmother. He married Alice, daughter of Thomas de la More, or Bythemore, sister and sole heir of John de la More, lord of Overwere, &c. in the county of Somerset, son and heir of Roger de la More, son and heir of William, son and heir of John, son and heir of William, son and heir of George de la More, or Bythemore, lord of Nail-say, in the county of Somerset, by his wife Joan, daughter and heir of Thomas de Gournay, lord of Overwere, (by his wife, daughter and heir of Richard de Counteville, lord of Alwarton, in the said county.) — Which Thomas de Gournay was son and heir of Anselm, son and heir of another Anselm, son and heir of Robert de Gournay, lord of Overwere, brother of John lord Gournay, and son of Anselm de Gournay, a great baron, by his wife Sibilla, daughter of Hugh de Vivoun, or Byvun, by his wife Mabel, daughter and coheir of William Mallet, lord of the honour of Eye, and of Curry-Mallet and Enmore, in the county of Somerset, one of the twenty-four barons appointed by the great charter for the guardianship of the realm in the reign of king John, by his wife Alice, daughter and heir of Thomas, lord Bassett, of Heddendon, by his wife Alice, daughter and heir of Walter Dunstanville, both barons of that age. — Which last mentioned Anselm de Gournay was son and heir of Robert, surnamed de Gournay, who died seized of twenty-two knights fees and a half, in the fifty-third of king Henry III. son and heir of Thomas de Harpetre, by his wife Eva (sometimes called Eva de Gournay, and sometimes Eva de Gant) sister and heir to Maurice de Berkeley (commonly called Maurice de Gant) and daughter and heir of Robert de Berkeley (commonly called Robert de Were, brother of Maurice, the first lord Berkeley, and third son of Robert Fitzharding) by his wife Alicia, daughter and heir of Robert de Gant, baron Gant of Folkingham, in the county of Lincoln, by his wife Alicia, daughter and heir of William Paganell, a baron, by his wife Avicia de Romelly (daughter and coheir of William Melchines, a great baron, brother to Ranulf, earl of Cumberland) and mother also of William de Curcy, baron of Stokecurcy, in the county of Somerset. — William-Robert de Gant, baron of Folkingham, was brother and heir to Gilbert de Gant, earl of Lincoln, and son and heir of Walter de Gant (by Maud, daughter of Stephen, earl of Brittany and Richmond) son and heir of Gilbert de Gant or Flanders, surnamed de Gant, third son of Baldwin, and sixth earl of Flanders, by Richildis, daughter and heir of Raynier, the sixth earl of Hainault, who descended in a direct male line of six descents (himself not included) from Gilbert, count of Brabant, by Ermengarde his wife, daughter of the emperor Lothare, Lothare, the first grandson of Charlemain. Which Thomas de Harpetre, above-mentioned, was son and heir to William de Harpetre, who certified the knight's fees of his barony in the 12th of Henry II. to be 13 and one-half, which he held in capite of the crown. Which William was the son and heir of John, son and heir of another William, son and heir of another John de Harpetre, who was one of the sons of Ascelin Gouel de Perceval, and assumed the name of Harpetre, by reason of that lordship so called in the county of Somerset, being one of those granted at the Conquest, as before observed, to the said Ascelin, and by him conferred in part of his portion to this one of his younger sons, whose descendants assuming, (as this descent evidently shews) the name of Gournay, flourished long as barons of this realm under that title, till they became, after near four centuries, reunited by the female heir, with that branch of the same stock, of which the earl of Egmont is now the chief. The family of Delamore, or Bythemore, (whose paternal ancestor, William De la More, was a baron by tenure in the reign of king John) determined wholly in this Alice, the wife of David Perceval, of whom we here treat; who, in consequence of this illustrious alliance, acquired to his family the manor, town, and borough of Overwere, (which formerly sent two members to parliament) as also the manors of Nailfay, Alwarton, Batilburgh, &c. and a great estate besides in North Pederton, Pederhinz, Marsh, Chilton, Wembdon, Dunster, &c. in the said county of Somerset, with a right to the blood and arms of all those noble houses, whose heiresses have been above deduced. This David Perceval died on the 5th of December, 1524. the 25th of Henry VIII. leaving a daughter, named Blasse, and three sons, James and George (who were twins) and Thomas (which Thomas the youngest had a wife named Catherine, and left a son also named Thomas, of whose descent we know nothing farther.)

JAMES PERCEVAL, the eldest son of David, was born upon St. Andrew's day, viz. the 30th of November, 1532, and succeeded his father when he was little more than two years old. Six years after, upon the death of his uncle, John Bythemore, (the 8th of September, 1540) he was found heir to the greatest part of the estate of that house. But he died himself without issue, upon the 29th of March, 1548, being then but seventeen years of age.

To him succeeded

GEORGE PERCEVAL, his twin-brother, lord of Tykenham, Rolleston, Overwere, Sydenham, Netherwere, Batelborow, Nailfay, Moreland, Wely, &c. and other large possessions in Wembdon, Hurcot, Littleton, Kingsdon, Dunster, Withicombe, Chilton, Hutchyn, Blontland, Webhouse, Ernesham, Storkeflond, Rydon, and Culwere; with five hundred acres of meadow and pasture in North-Pederton and Hamnie, near Bridgwater, and divers lands and burgage-houses in the said borough of Bridgwater, who the next year was married to Elizabeth, daughter to Sir Edward Bamfylde, of Poltimore, in the county of Devon. His great uncle John Bythemore, dying on the 8th of December, 1551, he then succeeded to the whole inheritance of that family. And on the feast of St. Andrew, 1553, having attained his full age, had livery of his lands, which amounted to two thousand a year, one of the largest estates at that time in the western parts of England. He died in or about the year 1529, and had issue three sons,

1. Richard Perceval.
2. Bamfylde Perceval,
3. Thomas Perceval,

} who died young.

And a daughter,

Elizabeth, married to Richard Gilbert, esquire.

RICHARD PERCEVAL, (fourth of that name) lord of Sydenham, Tykenham, Rolleston, &c. born in 1551, was eldest son of George; he was a man of extraordinary parts and improvement, but guilty of great extravagance in the beginning of his life; and marrying Joan, the seventh daughter of Henry Younge, esquire, second brother of the house of Buckhorn-Weston, in the county of Dorset, against the approbation of his father, so angered him thereby, that for many years he would neither see him, nor contribute to his support. This severity engaged many of his relations on his side, particularly Roger Cave, of Stamford, esquire, at whose house he passed much of his time, and there made acquaintance with the lord Burleigh, (who had married his sister) which was afterwards of much service to him: for that lord with great friendship taking him under his own care, and observing his abilities, employed him in many secret transactions of state. About which time, the Spaniards making vast preparations for the great armada, with which two years after they invaded England; and an English ship chasing a Spanish vessel, charged with letters from the Low-Countries, which were understood by informations from abroad to contain the secret, the Spanish commander, finding himself in danger, cast his packets into the sea, which, being happily taken up by the English, were brought before the council: the contents whereof being wrote in cypher, and not intelligible to any of that board, were thereupon entrusted by the queen herself to this Richard, who returned them the next day, at the same hour, decyphered, translated, and fairly transcribed, into the queen's own hands.

It was thus that this government obtained the first certain light into the designs of Spain, the importance of which discovery was such, and the service of the person employed therein, so grateful to the queen, that she assigned him a pension of eight hundred marks per annum. Some time after which he obtained an employment in the dutchy court of Lancaster, worth four hundred pound per annum, and Sir Robert Cecil, (afterwards earl of Salisbury, son to the lord Burleigh) then secretary of state, being made master of the wards, this Richard was appointed by him secretary to that court; an office of much credit, and great emolument.

In the latter end of the same reign, he was sent into Ireland, to see if the court of wards could be extended farther there, and conducted more for the advantage of the crown; but that country being in great disorder from the rebellion of Tyrone, he disliked the situation of affairs so much, that his report discouraged any attempt to settle that branch of the revenue for that time.

Upon the accession of king James I. in the first parliament of that reign (which by reason of the plague did not meet till March 19, 1603,) he was elected elected to serve for the borough of Richmond, in the county of York, which place he represented many years, and made a considerable figure in the affairs of trade, revenue, and other matters of public concern, particularly in the great business of the union with Scotland, which was long attempted by the king, though without success.

In the beginning of the same reign he obtained a grant from the crown, (jointly with Edmund Duffield, esquire,) of the lands of the dissolved monastery, founded by cardinal Wolsey, at Ipswich, in the county of Suffolk, and was also made remembrancer of the Court of Wards.

In 1609, Sir William Fleetwood, receiver-general of that court, being deficient in the balance of his accounts, that office was put into commission, and this Richard Perceval appointed first commissioner, with a grant of the whole profits of that place, paying only thereout one hundred marks yearly to each of the other two who were joined therein. After this he passed a patent for the office of auditor-general of the Court of Wards in reversion, besides which he obtained many wardships, custodiams, and leases of estates in ward, to a great value.

But in 1612, the earl of Salisbury dying, and being succeeded as master of the Wards by William, lord Knollys, he was dismissed from all his employments in that court, and so continued for some years; till the project of the new settlement of the Wards in Ireland being again revived, and an officer of experience wanted, he was made register of that court there; and going over to that kingdom on November 16, 1616, passed patent also for the said office, with a fee of one thousand marks per annum.

Thus introduced, and judiciously observing the improvements already made in Ireland, after the peace, and foreseeing those which would naturally follow further therefrom, he took the resolution to sell a part of his ancient patrimony in England, drawing over the money arising therefrom, and disposing thereof, together with other large sums, in purchases and mortgages on that side, whereby this family acquired, and still enjoy the paramount lordship of the whole signory, cantred, and barony of Duhallow, in the county of Cork, (except only the fourteen plough-lands of Aghtrasney or New-Market) containing two hundred and eleven thousand one hundred and eighty-five statute English acres; in which great royalty were included the honour of Kanturk, containing the manors and castles of Kanturk and Lohort, and thirty-one thousand, two hundred and ninety-seven acres, one rood, and nine perches of the same measure, being lands at actual rent upon leases, either of three lives, or a short term of years; together with the title of lord of Duhallow; the superiorities over the territories of Poble ô Callaghan, and Poble ô Keefe, and all royalties, jurisdictions, liberties, rights, privileges, and emoluments whatsoever, belonging to the ancient Irish lords of Duhallow; with all customs, services, and demands from the gentlemen and freeholders of Duhallow, courts-baron, courts-leet, fairs, markets, &c. rights of chase and free-warren through the whole extent thereof: all great and small tythes, and all advowsons of churches, as likewise the extraordinary power of erecting manors in the district of Duhallow, and liberty to impark eight hundred and forty acres of land; which royalty was confirmed by patent of king James I. and after by a statute of king Charles I.

On March 16, 1618, returning to England, he obtained a privy-seal for remission of all his debts to the crown; but died in 1620, in the sixty-ninth year of his age.

By his first wife, Joan, before-mentioned, he had three sons, 1. James, (who married the heiress of — Potts, of Devon, esquire, but died soon after without issue) 2. Thomas; 3. Richard, (both of whom also died without issue); and two daughters, Mary, married to — Dorr, esquire; and Philippa, the wife of John Buller, of Lillesdon, in the county of Somerset, esquire.

His second wife was Alice, daughter of John Sherman, of Ottery St. Mary, in the county of Devon, esquire, by his wife Margaret, daughter of Sir Bernard Drake, knight, ancestor to the present baronets of that name, in the same county, by Gertrude, daughter of Bartholomew Fortescue, of Philly, of the family of the present lord Fortescue, and late earl Clinton; which Sir Bernard Drake was son of John Drake, of Ashe, esquire, by Amy, daughter of Sir Roger Greenville, of Stowe, knight, ancestor to the late earls of Bath, lord Lansdown, and the late countess Granville. By this lady he left two sons, Walter, born in 1602, and Philip, in 1603; and two daughters, Norris, married to John Mulys of Halynton, in the county of Devon, esquire; and Alice, wife of Richard Fitz-Gerald, of Castle-Dod, in the county of Cork, in Ireland, esquire, the heiress of which family is now the wife of William Stewart, earl of Blessington.

WALTER PERCEVAL, his eldest surviving son, succeeded, and on the 12th of March, 1621, the lords of the council at Whitehall came to a resolution of their board, to move his majesty king James I. in consideration of the great services of Richard Perceval, esquire, then lately deceased, (of which most honourable mention is made in that record) that he would be graciously pleased to confer upon the said Walter, and Philip Perceval, his brother, sons to the said Richard, the reversion of their father's office of register of the Court of Wards, which they accordingly obtained. But Walter dying soon after in 1624, without issue, in the twenty-second year of his age,

Sir PHILIP PERCEVAL, his brother, succeeded to him, and became lord of Tykenham and Burton, in the county of Somerset, in England, and lord of Duhallow, Kanturk, Burton, Lisearrol, &c. in Ireland. In which year, 1624, he was appointed a commissioner for finding the offices, post mortem, of such as held in capite of the crown; and on June 23, 1625, keeper of the records of Birmingham's tower; as also, not long after, keeper of the rolls of the upper house of parliament.

On August 21, 1626, he obtained a patent to hold his office of register of the court of wards for life, (and afterwards to his heirs) and in the same year passed a patent for the lands of Cleantefin, in the county of Wexford.

And on May 23, 1627, he received a grant of sixty pound English per annum in crown-lands, to him and to his heirs, which lands had been formerly passed to Sir Henry Harrington, knight, in the 23d of Elizabeth.

On January 31, 1628, he was appointed to the offices of clerk of the crown, of the King's-Bench, chief prothonotary of the Common-pleas, and keeper of the writs, rolls, and all other records of that court, which were afterwards confirmed to him for life; and on the 9th of February following, obtained a grant of the estate of Ulich Roche, Esq; which had been forfeited to the crown.

On July 18th, 1629, he empowered William Archbold to pass patent in his name for the hospital of St. John of Castledermot, with divers lands of great value therein mentioned. And on the 25th of September, in the same year, was made joint customer and collector of the port of Dublin, with Sir Edward Bagshawe, (whose name was only used in trust.)

In 1630, he had a grant to him and his heirs of the manors of Hassardstown, Herton, and Blackrath, &c. in the counties of Cork and Tipperary, under the rent of one pound seven shillings and five pence for all services, and a special exemption of all taxes or charges whatsoever, to be laid by parliament, or any other authority. And furthermore, on the 22d of March following, passed patent for the manor of Corbally, in the county of Wexford.

On June 18, 1634, he was appointed general-feodary of Ireland, and escheator of Munster; and had a farther grant, upon the 5th of March, in that year, of Lismurtagh, and other lands in the county of Tipperary, the forfeited estate of William Bret, of that place, Esq.

In 1637, being appointed a commissioner of survey, to distinguish possessions and titles of lands in the counties of Cork and Tipperary, he obtained divers considerable grants from the crown; and under the commission for remedy of defective titles, on Oct. 16, 1637, had a confirmation of the manors of Annagh, and the castles, towns, and lands of Annagh, Rochestown, Walshestown, Palmerstown, Marshallstown, Brownstown, Dunbary, with many others in the said two counties, which were altogether erected into one honour, by the name of the manor of Burton (in regard to his manor and seat in England, of the same name, in the county of Somerset) with free warren and chase throughout the whole extent thereof, power to impark one thousand six hundred acres, and many other privileges; which royalty contains fifteen thousand three hundred and forty-seven acres, two roods, and seven perches of the best land in that kingdom.

Not long after he passed patent also for the castle, town, and manor of Lisscarrol, contiguous to those of Duhallow, Kanturk, and Burton, beforementioned, containing six thousand two hundred and fifty-four acres, one rood, and six perches. And on May 20, 1638, in conjunction with Sir James Ware, obtained the favour of a grant for the sole licensing of ale and aqua-vitæ, throughout the whole kingdom of Ireland.

In 1639, he inclosed the woods of Gorthofinny, parcel of his forest of Loghort; and in that and the year following, built the castle of Ballynecloghy, in the county of Tipperary.

He had likewise the honour to be admitted one of the privy-council to Charles I. and before the breaking out of the war, procured divers other grants of lands and wardships, to a vast value, being possessed, when the great rebellion commenced in Ireland (exclusive of his English estate) of seventy-eight knights fees and one half, making a hundred and one thousand statute acres, all leased either for years or lives; the reserved rents whereof amounted to four thousand pounds per annum, besides the royalties, casualties and fines; and a stock in woods, houses, &c. valued at sixty thousand pounds, together with employments for life of the value of five thousand four hundred pounds per annum, besides others which he held upon a more uncertain tenure, of greater income. The profits of all which, with his whole personal estate, he lost in these troubles, together with the greatest part of his rents during that whole time; inasmuch, that in a schedule annexed to the petition of Sir John Perceval, his son, after the restoration, desiring favour from Charles II. in settling the taxes and quit-rents upon his estate, the losses of his family between the years 1641 and 1660, are set down minutely in particular items, article by article, amounting to the sum of two hundred and forty-eight thousand and four pounds nine shillings and one penny.

In the summer 1641, having a strong presage of those evils then impending over both kingdoms, he laboured with great earnestness to make as speedy and secure settlement of his affairs as the shortness of time could admit, providing a great number of arms and horses; which precaution (the rebellion breaking out in Ireland on the 23d of October following) were of great service to that state.

He was then in Dublin, and contributed in no small degree to confirm the spirits of the lords justices on their first surprize; but finding the government remiss in the care of Munster, where much of his fortune lay, he applied the greatest part of his revenues in that county to defend the state; repaired and fortified his castles of Lisscarrol, Annagh, Walshestown, Ballinliny, Ballinguile, Templeconnil, Bregoge, and Ballinegrah, all situate on or near the course of the river Obeg, and upon the borders of a large morass, extending many miles between the mountains of Slewlogher and Ballyhowra, and forming a strong barrier on the frontiers of the county of Cork, which were much exposed to the attempts of the rebels, being a constant seat of that war. These, with the castles of Loghort, Dundeady, and others, he garrisoned and maintained; two of which, viz. Lisscarrol and Annagh, were of such importance, that the former sustained a siege of thirty days, against a regular army of seven thousand foot, and five hundred horse, under the command of the lord Muskerry and general Barry, well provided with artillery, and did not surrender till September 2, 1642; which gave time to lord Inchiquin to come up, with the English forces, the very next day, when the two armies engaged under the walls of that castle, and the Irish received a memorable defeat; and the latter (by its natural situation deemed impregnable) resisted an army of five thousand men for several days, who after losing three hundred of their best troops, took it at last by treachery, on February 12, 1646; in which year Sir Philip lost all his strong-holds, and above half his estate in Munster. By maintaining these garrisons, and by this generous conduct, he became a principal means of that kingdom's preservation; for when the confederate Catholics of the counties of of Kilkenny and Tipperary first assembled under the command of the lords Mountgarret, Ikerin, Dunboyne, Brittas, and Castleconnel, and advanced into the county of Cork (in the beginning of the year 1642) with a formidable army, as far as the mountains of Ballyhowra, being there obstructed by the difficulties they met with from his garrisons, and afterwards by their own divisions, their measures were utterly broken, and the army dispersed, without then making any farther attempt in that county: which early check was of the utmost importance; for without it, as the English were not at that time in a condition to form an army in those parts, the province of Munster had probably been lost, and, if so, the kingdom must have fallen into the hands of the Irish, who were already so far masters of the rest.

During the first part of that winter, 1641-2, Sir Philip remained in Dublin, chiefly consulted how to stem the torrent of the rebellion; and that city swarming with multitudes of despoiled protestants, who flocked thither for shelter, he generously protected and maintained three hundred of them for a year, taking care to provide for them during his absence, when the public affairs called him to England in December or January that year, to hasten the supplies from the parliament, which came over in very small proportions; in the execution of which charge he employed near three months, with such diligence, that he procured a considerable supply to be sent into Munster, which enabled the English, under lord Inchiquin, to take the field on the latter end of the year 1642, and to defeat the enemy at the battle of Lisscarrol before mentioned.

On the 23d of March, 1641-2, he was appointed commissary-general of the army, by a vote of the English house of commons, and his salary settled, with allowance for clerks, at three pounds seven shillings and six pence a day; and receiving his instructions from the earl of Leicester, lord lieutenant, he arrived in Ireland on the 30th of April, 1642, when he was also appointed providore general of the horse, with an additional salary; and having the command of a company of firelocks given him by the earl of Ormond, lieutenant general, and annexed to his office, he armed and supplied them at a great expence, when the state had no money to pay them; in all which different employments he exerted himself with great ability, integrity, and zeal for the public service, expending for provisions only for the army above eighteen thousand pounds of his own money, which (notwithstanding his accounts were regularly passed and allowed, and though all the officers of the army in Ireland, 1645, certified to the parliament, that he was the only instrument, under heaven, of their preservation) was never repaid to him or his family. In 1643, having done every thing in his power to prevent it, by furnishing great supplies at his own expence, and by as much opposition as he could give to it in council, he was compelled to give way to the cessation then concluded with the Irish; for which, as contrary to the positive resolution of both houses at Westminster, he underwent much trouble afterwards, being a handle taken against him by the army-faction.

In 1644, he was called over, and appointed by his majesty's command, a commissioner at the treaty to be held between the king at Oxford, and the deputies of the Irish confederates, who were then endeavouring to obtain, by a projected peace, unreasonable graces and favours; and repairing thither, the lord Ormond (in his preparatory letter, relative to these affairs, dated the 8th of March 1643, to the lord Digby, secretary of state) refers him to be instructed in all that is necessary by Sir Philip Perceval, with the following mention of him and his services: "And now that I have mentioned Sir Philip Perceval, I may not pass him by without a very particular recommendation, as of a man exceedingly knowing in all the affairs of this kingdom; that hath been before in the war, in the treaty, and since the cessation, extremely industrious to advance the king's service; and particularly in providing with great dexterity, labour, and frequently upon his own credit, provisions for the men, which at several times were sent hence, who else could not have gone so seasonable, or well furnished."

At this treaty the commissioners exerted so much reason and resolution in exposing the demands of the Irish, which tended to throw the whole power of that state into their hands, that the court did not dare to venture at a compliance with them, as they then much desired to do (in order to bring over an army of ten thousand Irish against the parliament, which they stipulated) and actually did in the following year. But Sir Philip, as well for refusing to assist in that destructive project, as by bearing the principal part in those debates upon that measure, in which he had much the advantage of the opposite party, as well in method as matter, was looked upon at Oxford as a round-head (as lord Digby himself wrote to the marquis of Ormond at that time) and having thus rendered himself too obnoxious either to remain there, or to return to Ireland with safety, he privately left Oxford, quitted the royalists, to whom he till then had adhered, and accepting the offers before made him by Pym, his near relation, and renewed by Hollis, his intimate friend, retired to the parliament at Westminster (on the 7th of August, 1644) where he was received with open arms, and prevailed on to represent the borough of Newport, in Cornwall, which had been long kept vacant on his account, before he would resolve to engage on that side.

In 1646, he was made choice of by the province of Ulster, to manage their affairs and interests with the parliament in England, in which he continued to act with great vigour, in prosecution of the true interests of both kingdoms; and incurred such displeasure from the independent party, by his opposition to their dark designs (which he soon discovered,) that they made several inveterate attacks upon him, both with regard to his share in the cessation, and conduct in his employments; all which he resisted with great spirit, and the utmost proof of his integrity.

On the 28th of May, 1647, the protestant army in Munster, under the lord Inchiquin, by an unanimous address of the council of war, dated at Cork, in terms of the highest respect and honour, entreated him to take upon him the sole conduct of their interests in the parliament of England;

England; a commission as things then stood, of great difficulty and hazard, but which he resolutely undertook. And being secretly engaged in endeavouring to bring over the lord Inchiquin, and that army, to check the insolence of the independents, and the English army, in defence of the liberties of the parliament, he grew so suspicious and dangerous to that party, that they revived their charge against him upon the score of the cessation with more rancour than ever, passing a vote about five weeks after, viz. on the 5th of July, 1647, (with a view to get him, if possible, out of the house, and meaning to affect him alone) That no man, who consented to the cessation, should sit in parliament: which however had not the desired effect; for to this fresh attack he made a gallant defence, in two excellent speeches, manifesting his innocence, and shewing his great losses by the rebellion; the proof of which, joined to the general tenor of his conduct, clearing him from all reasonable imputation of being a favourer of that cause, the accusation was, with great honour to him, dismissed, and he maintained his seat.

Soon after this, the army-faction finding it time to throw off the mask, impeached Mr. Hollis, Sir Philip Stapleton, and several other leading members, who obstructed their measures, whereupon they withdrew; but a brave remnant of that house, not intimidated by these violent measures, persevered in giving such obstructions to their designs, that they were obliged to advance the army by speedy marches towards London, to force them to a concurrence. In which time of imminent danger, when the city of London and the parliament expected daily to be sacked, Sir Philip Perceval persevered in his honest opposition, and, standing at the head of the few resolute remaining members, was chairman of those committees which were appointed to manage the defence of the city and parliament; to direct the disposition of the troops, and the militia raised for that end, and to draw up those declarations, letters, and publick papers, which were issued on that occasion. Nor did he quit the cause he had undertaken, till the army actually possessed the city, and there was no possibility of resistance left; but then, justly dreading the effect of their first resentment, he retired into the country till the September following; when hearing that new matters of accusation were prepared against him, relating to the exercise of his place as commissary-general, he returned to demand his trial, which was postponed, from the insufficiency of the charge; about which time, though standing in these perilous circumstances, and that the independents were then absolute masters of the parliament, he had the courage to deliver to the house a strong remonstrance from lord Inchiquin's army, against their measures. But this was the last public action of his life; for overborne by the increasing malice of that party, and worn out with reflection upon the sad condition both of the public, and of his private affairs, which threatened his total and speedy ruin, he died after a few days illness, on the 10th of November, 1647, in the 44th year of his age, so respected, notwithstanding the violence of the faction which sought his ruin, that he was buried three days after, by order and at the expence of the parliament (who voted two hundred pounds to his widow, to defray the charge of his funeral) in the church of St. Martin in the Fields, Westminster, primate Usher preaching his funeral sermon.

He married, on the 16th of October, 1626, Catharine, grand-daughter to Sir William Usher, knight, clerk of the council, and daughter of his eldest son, Arthur Usher, Esq; by Judith, his wife, daughter to Sir Robert Newcomen, baronet, and by her (who lived till the 2d of January 1681, and was buried the 6th in St. Audoen's church) he had four daughters and five sons, viz.

1. Judith, born the 25th of December, 1627, married in February, 1653, to Randolph Clayton, of Mallow, in the county of Cork, Esq;

2. Anne, born the 13th of September, 1635, and died unmarried.

3. Dorcas, born the 30th of October, 1636, was married to Jonas Wheeler, of Grenan, in the county of Kilkenny, Esq;

4. Catherine, born in 1640, who died unmarried.

The sons were,

1. Sir John Perceval, baronet.

2. Richard, who died on the 29th of May, 1638, without issue, and was buried in St. Audoen's.

3. William, born the 30th of May, 1663, who died the 11th of June following, and was there buried also in St. Audoen's.

4. Arthur, born the 7th of September, 1634, who died at London in January 1653, without issue.

5. George Perceval, Esq; the youngest son, born on the 15th of September, 1637. This George was register of the prerogative court, and by deed dated on the 10th of November, 1660, obtained as his inheritance, from his brother Sir John Perceval, the castle, town, and lands of Ballynecloghy, alias Stone-town, Cloncross, Fanogh, Killmore, Ballinpharis, and Brownestone, in the county of Tipperary, with other lands in the county of Sligo. Also, on the 12th of November, 1667, he had a grant from the crown made to him, and Mary, his wife, and to her heirs and assigns, of part of Cloncor, Rancolovin, &c. in the county of Mayo; and on the 14th of September, 1668, of divers lands in the county of Limerick, until the respective mortgages thereon were discharged. This George, in a voyage to England, was drowned near Holyhead, with the earl of Meath, and other persons of distinction, on the 29th of March, 1675. He married Mary, daughter and heir to William Crofton, of Temple-house, in the county of Sligo, Esq; and by her had three sons, and two daughters, viz. 1. Philip, who inherited the estate of Temple-house, born on the 3d of August, 1670. 2. The reverend William Perceval, born the 14th of December 1671, (who the 30th of April, 1714, was appointed dean of Emly.) 3. Charles, born on the 8th of February 1674 (who, being major of Wither's dragoons, in 1710, served in Portugal with great reputation, and gallantly defended the town of Denia, but was killed in a duel at Lisbon, on the 6th of May, 1713, leaving no issue.) Catherine, born on the 26 of Jan. 1668, (married to George Brereton, of Carillano, in the county of Carlow, Esq;)

Esq;) and Mary, baptized on the 25th of March, 1673, and buried at St. Mican's, on the 17th of February, 1674.

It remains that we speak of Philip and George, the first and second sons of George Perceval, last mentioned as fifth son to Sir Philip. The eldest, Philip, died in August, 1704, having had issue by his wife, Elizabeth, (daughter of John Daberon, of Wandsworth, in the county of Surry) a daughter, Mary, married to the reverend Paul Forester, of Wooton Bassett, Wilts; and three sons, John, George, and William. William married a lady of the name of Horden, and dying at Fort St. George, left issue two sons, William and Richard, who both died without issue. George, (the second son of Philip) is now living (1768) and a beneficed clergyman in England. The eldest son John, was lord of Temple-house, and died in 1754, aged fifty-four; having had issue, by his wife, Ann, daughter of — Cowper, of Marcray, in the county of Sligo, three daughters, Mary, married to Alexander Cathcart, Esq; Margaret, married to — Roach of Waterford, and Ann. Also four sons. 1. Philip. 2. Joshua, killed in the late wars in America. 3. John, (now living, 1768) born in March 1734-5, a captain in marines. 4. George, died in the East-Indies, without issue. The eldest son, Philip, born in October, 1723, is now living and married to Mary, eldest daughter, and coheir of Guy Carlton, of Fermanagh, Esq; who bore to him issue three daughters, Mary, Ann, and Maria, all died infants, and three sons, Guy, born January 1755, Philip, born August, 1756, and John. The last, died young; but the other two are now living.

We must now speak of the descendants of George, (second son of George, and grandson to Philip Perceval) dean of Emley, who died August 29, 1734. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry Pritty, of Kilboy, near the silver mine in Tipperary, Esq; and by her, who died 1730, had issue a daughter, Catharine, married to Brewster Laughlin, of Dublin, Esq; she is now living (1768) a widow; and three sons, Kene, William, and Charles. Charles is vicar of Mogely, and rector of Church-town, in the county of Cork, and married Mary, only child of the reverend Thomas Squire. He and his wife are now living (1768) the eldest son, Kene, is prebendary of Castle-Knock, and vicar of Chapel Izod, and Athy. He married, first, Marianne, daughter of Daniel de Belrieux, baron de Virgal, and by her, who died 1755, had issue William, who died an infant. He married secondly, Sarah, daughter of Dr. Francis Corbet, but by her, who died 1757, has no issue. The second son, William Perceval, born June 24, 1711, is now living (1768) a barrister at law. He married first Elizabeth, daughter of John Croker, Esq; and by her, who died 1739, had issue Frederick, who died an infant. By his second wife, now living, Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Ward, of Lisbane, in the county of Down, he has had issue seven sons. John, born April 9, 1749, died January 16, 1750. William, born April 1750, died July 9, 1751. Robert, born October 1752, died an infant. William, born, September 9, 1754, now living. Robert, born September 30, 1756, now living. Michael, born July 18, 1763, died December 3, 1761. John, died an infant 1762.

SIR JOHN PERCEVAL, baronet, (lord of Tickenham, Rolleston, and Burton, in the county of Somers-set in England, and of Duhallow, Burton, Lisccarrol, Kanturk, Lohort, &c. in the county of Cork, and Castlewarning, in com. Dublin, in Ireland,) the eldest son of Sir Philip, was born in Dublin on the 7th of November 1629, and educated in the university of Cambridge, where he was a student at the time of his father's death; and, succeeding to him, became nominally lord of a great estate, in England and Ireland, but sequestered in both kingdoms, by the arbitrary government of that time; obnoxious to the rebel party in Ireland, from his father's service against them; odious to the royalists, from his father's having quitted that cause; and equally hateful to Cromwell and his adherents, from his father's late opposition to their measures; yet, notwithstanding his youth, (being then but eighteen years of age,) and the great difficulties of such a situation, he conducted himself with so much address, by cultivating the friendship of the speaker Lenthall, and that of Henry Cromwell, (with whom he had contracted a great intimacy at Cambridge) that he soon acquired the esteem and good opinion of the protector himself, by whom, after the intire reduction of Ireland, he was sent over, in 1653, with the lord deputy Fleetwood, to settle the important affair of transplanting the papists from their respective habitations, into the province of Connaught, which he had advised, in opposition to other more violent measures, and with which he was chiefly entrusted. He was likewise employed in the union and division of parishes, and consulted upon all the weightiest business of the settlement of the kingdom. In which services he recommended himself so well, that on the 6th of July 1653, the commissioners of the revenues of the sequestration, received orders to give him full possession of his estate, (the first favour of the kind done under that government) though it still continued to be loaded for some time with an assessment of two thousand four hundred pounds a year, to support the charge of the state; but he was at length relieved from that burthen, on the 25th of March 1655, and restored to the office of clerk of the crown and Common-pleas, which had been enjoyed by his father.

After this, the new parliament having passed an act on November 27, 1656, for the security of the protector's person, and continuation of the nation in peace and safety, he was appointed one of the commissioners for the execution thereof; but on the protector's death, and the anarchy that ensued, he so effectually employed himself with Richard Cromwell, that to his instances was principally owing his quiet resignation of the power of his family; which conduct was so well accepted afterwards, and his moderation and circumspection in his engagements and transactions with that government so fully known, that he was named by the secluded members, who then returned to parliament, one of the four counsellors to the president of Munster, and on May 7, 1660, appointed by their commissioners, clerk of the crown, prothonotary of the Common-pleas, and keeper of the public accompts.

Soon after the restoration he was sworn of the privy council to Charles II. and, on September 9, 1661, created a baronet, with a remarkable clause in the patent, that the eldest son or grandson shall exist a baronet, after the age of twenty-one years, at the same time with the father, or grand-

grandfather; and being elected knight of the shire for the county of Cork, in the restoration parliament, the great work of the act of settlement was principally conducted by the earl of Orrery and him, whose superior knowledge of the interest of Ireland was universally confessed. On August 1, 1662, he was restored to the place of register of the court of wards, an office of immense profit, but abolished by act of parliament not long after, having never been enjoyed by any but this family, in whose favour it had been erected, and at the same time appointed register to the court of claims. On October 24, 1663, he obtained a grant of two markets, on Thursday and Saturday, and two fairs, on St. Andrew's day, and Thursday in Whitsun-week, at Wellfleetown, in the county of Cork. And a council of trade being established in Ireland, he was constituted one of the first members of it, on May 26, 1664; and the next year made register to the commissioners for executing the act of explanation; as likewise one of the trustees for the commissioned officers, who had served in Ireland before the 5th of June, 1649.

On February 14, 1655, he married Catharine, daughter of Robert Southwell, of Kingsale, Esq; sister to Sir Robert Southwell, of Kings-Weston, in the county of Gloucester, knight, (secretary of state to William III.) and dying on November 1, 1664, at the age of thirty-six, was buried on the 5th of the same month at St. Audoen's church; and she (who was born at Kingsale on September 1, 1637) died, after having lived fourteen years a widow near that place, on the 17th of August, 1679, and lies buried under a noble monument there, erected by her son, Sir John, in 1682.

By this lady he had issue four sons, and two daughters, viz.

1. Sir Philip, his successor.
2. Robert, born at Kingsale, February 8, 1657, who was murdered by an unknown hand (never yet discovered) on June 5, 1667, in the Strand, London, and was buried under the chapel in Lincoln's-Inn.
3. Sir John, successor to his brother.
4. Charles, born in London, November 4, 1661, and died at Kingsale, in July 1662.

The daughters were,

1. Catharine, born in Dublin, March 19, 1662, first married, October 19, 1683, to Sir William Moore, of Rosscarbery, in the county of Cork; (from whom is descended Sir Charles Moore, Bart.) secondly, to colonel Montgomery; and thirdly to brigadier-general George Freak; by the two last of whom she had no issue.

2. Helena, born at Kingsale, February 17, 1665, married to colonel Daniel Dering, who was son to Sir Edward Dering, of Surrenden, in Kent, baronet, and had a son, Daniel, one of the commissioners of the wine-licences, and auditor of the dutchy of Cornwall, and principality of Wales, who married Mary Parker (only sister to the late countess dowager of Egmont) and died at the Hague, 1730, leaving by her (who died at the Bath, on January 24, 1731) an only daughter, Catharine, who died unmarried in March, 1760.

SIR PHILIP PERCEVAL, born at Kingsale,

January 12, 1656, was educated at the university of Cambridge, after which he visited the courts of several foreign princes; but died on the 11th of September, 1680, and was buried at Burton, where his brother, in 1683, erected a monument to his memory.

SIR JOHN PERCEVAL, his brother and heir, was born at Egmont, August 22, 1663, and was educated in the university of Oxford.—On May 22, 1677, in consideration of the great services of his great-grandfather, grandfather, and father, in defence of the English cause in Ireland, and the loss of the offices of register of the court of wards, and of the court of claims, &c. he jointly with his brother Robert (their eldest brother, Sir Philip, then living) obtained a reversionary grant of the office of clerk of the crown, prothonotary and chief clerk of the Common-pleas, and keeper of the writs and other records of the court of King's-bench; and upon his said brother Robert's death, obtained a sole grant thereof, August 21, of that year, for three lives. In 1680, he succeeded to the estate (being then twenty years of age), and in 1683 went over to Ireland. But three years after, in 1686, being present at the affizes in Cork, where the prisoners were infected with a contagious distemper, he and others were suddenly seized by the noisome smells that perspired from them, and died in a few days, on the 29th of April, of that year, at his seat at Burton, where he was buried; and an act of parliament being obtained by his son, the late earl of Egmont, in 1712, for removing the scite of that church, his body, with that of his brother, was removed in 1730, and now lies in a vault under the chancel of Bruhenny, otherwise Churchtown, near Burton.

In February, 1680, he married Catharine, daughter to Sir Edward Dering, of Surrenden, in Kent, baronet, son to Sir Edward Dering, baronet, by Anne, daughter of Sir John Ashburnham, ancestor to the present earl of that name. By this lady (who remarried in August, 1690, with colonel Butler, died on the 2d of February, 1691, and lies buried in the church of Chelsea, Middlesex) he had three sons and two daughters, viz.

1. Sir Edward, his successor.
2. Sir John, heir to his brother, created earl of Egmont.
3. Philip, born at King's-Weston, November, 13, 1686, who was appointed on February 19, 1711, with William Watson, Esq; customer of the port of Dublin, which he enjoyed to his death; and in November, 1713, was elected a Burgess to serve in parliament for the borough of Askeaton. On the 12th of June, 1712, he married Martha, widow of Nehemiah Donnelan, Esq; chief baron of the exchequer, and daughter to Christopher Usher, of Dublin, Esq; grandson to Arthur Usher, (whose daughter, as already observed, was the wife of Sir Philip Perceval, the first of that name.) By her he had one only son, Philip, (baptized on the 14th of August 1715, who died an infant) and he himself deceased in London, on the 26th of April, 1748, leaving no issue.

The daughters were,

1. Mary, born at Burton in 1685, who died in December, 1686.

2. Catherine

2. Catharine, born there also, who died an infant.

SIR EDWARD PERCEVAL, was born at Burton, in 1682; and on the 15th of June, 1686, being not then four years old, was removed to England, by his great uncle and guardian, Sir Robert Southwell, with whom he remained during the disorders in Ireland, which ensued upon the revolution. But the estate of this family suffered again, during the short war that ensued, by destruction of houses and woods, loss of rent and stock, above forty thousand pounds. The said Sir Robert Southwell, his guardian, giving in the accounts to the chancery of England, by which, in the single article of rents alone, their loss amounted to the sum of twenty thousand six hundred and twenty-eight pounds twelve shillings and five pence halfpenny. This Sir Edward dying soon after in London, viz. on the 9th of November, 1691, was interred at Henbury, the burying place of Sir Robert Southwell, near King's Weston, and was succeeded by his brother,

SIR JOHN PERCEVAL, the late earl of Egmont, who was born July 12, 1683, and educated in Magdalen-College, Oxford, which university he quitted in June, 1701, and having made the tour of England, upon the death of king William, and calling a new parliament in Ireland, went over in 1704, with the duke of Ormond, lord lieutenant, and, though then not of age, was elected knight of the shire for the county of Cork, and in October appointed a privy counsellor, in which honourable station he continued to his death.

In July, 1705, he began the grand tour of Europe, which he finished in October 1707; and going over a second time to Ireland, was, upon the summons of a new parliament in 1713, under the duke of Shrewsbury, again returned for the county of Cork; and on the accession of king George I. advanced (by privy seal, dated at St. James's, on the 4th of March, 1714, and by patent at Dublin, on the 21st of April, 1715) to the title of baron Perceval, of Burton, with limitation of that honour to the heirs male of his father. On the 12th of November following, he took his seat in the house of peers; and his majesty being pleased to advance him further in the peerage, he was created by the privy seal dated at St. James's, on the 29th of December, and by patent on the 25th of February, 1722, viscount Perceval, of Kanturk, with the annual fee of twenty marks, payable out of the exchequer, in support of that honour.

In the parliament of 1727, he served for Harwich, in Essex, and on the death of Edward Ruffel, earl of Orford, was chosen, in June, 1728, recorder of that borough, which office he resigned, in April, 1734. His lordship reflecting with some other persons of distinction, that multitudes, incapable of finding business at home, might yet be rendered useful to Great-Britain in the colonies abroad, jointly applied to the crown for the government of a tract of country in America, since called Georgia, then inhabited by by Indians only; which province they proposed to people by the assistance of private contributions and parliamentary aids; and a charter being accordingly granted on the 9th of June, 1732, his lordship was thereby appointed the first president; and created earl of Egmont, by privy seal, dated at Hampton-court, on the 4th of September, and by patent, on the 6th of November, 1733.

On the 20th of June, 1710, his lordship married Catharine, eldest sister of Sir Philip Parker à Morley, of Erwarton, in the county of Suffolk, baronet, who died on the 20th of January 1740, and was the last heir male of this noble family of Parker, of whose descent we have as yet treated no farther than to the marriage of Sir William Parker, knight, lord Morley, standard-bearer and privy-counsellor to Richard III. with Alice Lovel, sister and heir of Henry Lovel, lord Morley, who died by a cannon-shot at Dixmude, in the 4th of Henry VII. without issue; which therefore we shall now resume and deduce in this place down to the present earl of Egmont, as follows: the said Alice Lovel, and Sir William Parker, knight, lord Morley, left Henry Parker, lord Morley, their son and heir, whose family standing in disgrace, as before observed, he was not admitted to his seat in the house of lords till the 21st of Henry VIII. 1530, when he was restored to the place of his ancestors as a baron of parliament, of the 28th of Edward I. In the following year he was one of the peers who subscribed that declaration to pope Clement VII. whereby intimation was given to his holiness, that unless he complied with king Henry, in his divorce from Catharine of Arragon, his queen, the farther acknowledgment of his supremacy would be in danger; and in the 25th of Henry VIII. upon a dispute in parliament, between him and the lord Dacres, of Gillefland, for precedence, he had judgment given in his behalf. He married Alice, daughter of Sir John St. John, of Bletshoe, knight, by whom he became allied to Henry VIII. himself; his lady being grand-daughter to Sir Oliver St. John, knight, by his wife, Margaret, the daughter and heir of Sir John Beauchamp, of Bletso, knight, which lady Margaret, being afterwards the wife of John Beaufort, duke of Somerset, had by him an only daughter, who was mother to Henry VII. Yet notwithstanding this alliance, by reason of the marriage of his daughter, Jane Parker, to George, lord Rochford, brother to queen Anne Bullen, after the unfortunate execution of his son-in-law, and of that unfortunate queen, he utterly lost the favour of Henry VIII. again, so that he could by no means obtain the confirmation of his office of marshal of Ireland, to which he had an indisputable title, and about this time made his claim. This Henry Parker, lord Morley, died 80 years old, in 1556, and lies buried at Hallingbury, with his wife (who died in the 66th year of her age, four years before him) where both their epitaphs do now remain*.

The issue of this Henry Parker, lord Morley, and Alice, his wife, was one son, named Henry, and two daughters, Jane and Margaret, of which Jane (as already observed) was the wife of George, lord Rochford (son and heir of Thomas Bullen, earl of Ormond and Wiltshire) brother to queen Anne Bullen, and Margaret was married to Sir John Shelton, knight.

Sir Henry Parker, only son and heir apparent of the said Henry, lord Morley, and Alice, his wife, was a knight of the Bath, but never attained the family honours, having died in the life-time of his father.—He rebuilt the mansion-house at Erwar-ton, as it now stands, and married two wives, the first, Grace, the daughter of John Newport, of Brent-Pelham, in the county of Hertford, by whom he left a son, Henry, lord Morley, in whose descendants the title continued till the reign of William III. when the male line of that branch extinguished, since which the barony has lain dormant, or in suspense. His second wife was Elizabeth, the daughter and sole heir of Sir Philip Calthorpe, of Erwar-ton, in the county of Suffolk, knight, (by his wife Amata Bullen, aunt to queen Anne Bullen, the mother of queen Elizabeth, and daughter to Sir William Bullen, by Margaret, daughter and coheir of Thomas, Earl of Ormond and Wiltshire (which earldoms were granted to descend to the heirs female as well as male, but were barred by the attainder of George, lord Rochford, abovementioned) which said Sir William Bullen was son and heir to Sir Geoffrey Bullen, by Anne, daughter and sole heir of Thomas, lord Hoo and Hastings.) And the said Sir Philip Calthorpe was son and heir of Sir Philip Calthorpe (by Mary, sister and heir of Sir William Say) son and heir of Sir John Calthorpe (by Elizabeth, daughter of Roger, lord Wentworth, of Nettlested) son and heir of Sir William Calthorpe (by Elizabeth, his first wife, daughter of Reginald, lord Grey, of Ruthen, by his second wife, daughter of the lord Astley) which Sir William was son and heir of another Sir William Calthorpe (by his wife, Anne, daughter and heir of Sir John With, who was likewise heir of the family of St. Omars) son and heir of another Sir William Calthorpe, (by Elianore, daughter and heir of Sir John Mautby) son and heir of Sir Oliver Calthorpe (by Isabel, his wife, sister and heir of Sir Bartholomew Bacon, and daughter and heir to Sir Robert Bacon, by his wife, the daughter and heir to Sir Bartholomew Davilers, knight, lord of the manor of Erwar-ton, at the conquest, which was held by the tenure of leading the forces of Suffolk in time of war, and still continues the estate of this family to this day.)

Sir Philip Parker, knight, lord of Erwar-ton, son and heir of the last Sir Henry Parker, and Elizabeth Calthorpe, his wife, was high sheriff of the county of Suffolk, in 1578, and married Catharine, daughter of Sir John Goodwin, of Winchendon, in the county of Bucks, knight, by whom he left Sir Calthorpe Parker, lord of Erwar-ton, his son and heir, knighted at the coronation of James I. who, by his wife, Mercy, the daughter of Sir Stephen Soames, knight, left Sir Philip Parker, knight, his son and heir, lord of Erwar-ton, who served in the long parliament, in 1640, as knight of the shire for the county of Suffolk, and married Dorothy, daughter and heir of Sir Robert Gawdy, of Claxton, in the county of Norfolk, knight, (by Winifred, his wife, daughter and coheir of Sir Nathaniel Bacon, of Stivekey, in the county of Norfolk, knight,) by which lady he acquired a considerable estate, together with a right to the blood and arms of Gawdy, Knightley, Pantulph, D'Oily, Golover, Burgh, Chauncy, Paw, and Bacon, of Stivekey. Sir Philip Parker (son and heir of the said Sir Philip and Dorothy) was lord of Erwar-ton, and created a baronet in the 13th of Charles II. He married Rebecca, daughter of Walter, and sister and heir of Sir Walter Long, of Whaddon, in the county of Wilts, baronet, who at length brought a very great estate to this family.

Sir Philip Parker, baronet, son and heir of the said Sir Philip and Rebecca Long, his wife, married Mary, daughter of Samuel Fortrey, of Byall-Fenn, in the county of Cambridge, esquire; by whom he left one only son, the late Sir Philip Parker à Morley Long, baronet, and two daughters, Catharine and Mary, of whom Mary became the wife of Daniel Dering, esquire, auditor of the dutchy of Cornwall, to Frederick, late prince of Wales, and left an only daughter, Catharine Dering, who died unmarried, in March 1760. And Catharine was the wife of John, late earl of Egmont, by whom she was mother to the present earl.

The said Sir Philip Parker à Morley Long, brother to the said countess of Egmont, was the last male heir of this noble family, as already observed; and dying January 20, 1740-1, left by Martha, daughter of William East, esquire, only two daughters, Martha, born March 23, 1715-16, and Elizabeth, born July 21, 1717; which Elizabeth married James Plunket, esquire, but died without issue; and Martha married John Thynne How, lord Chedworth, who died May, 1762, leaving the said Martha, lady Chedworth, now his widow, and without issue: in whom, and the present earl of Egmont, center the rights of this descent.

John, the late earl of Egmont, worn out by a paralytic decay, departed this life, on May 1, 1748, at London, and was buried at Erwar-ton, having had issue by the said Catharine Parker, his countess (who died August 22, 1749, aged 60, and was buried with him, under a stone of black marble, on the left side of the great altar or communion-table there) three sons and four daughters.

1. John, his successor, now earl of Egmont.
2. Philip-Clarke Perceval, born June 21, 1714, and died an infant.
3. George, born January 28, 1721, and died July, 1726. The daughters were,
 1. Catharine, born in Dublin, January 11, 1723, and married April 14, 1743, to Thomas Hammer, of the Fenns, in the county of Flint, esquire, member of parliament for Castle-rising, in Norfolk (who died without issue, on April 1, 1737) and she deceased at London, on February 16, 1747-8.
 2. Mary, born May 12, 1713, and died an infant; as did
 3. Mary, who was born December 28, 1716.
 4. Helena, born February 14, 1717, married November 3, 1747, to Sir John Rawdon, baronet, (now earl of Moira) and died at Bristol, on June 11, 1746, by whom he left two daughters, Catharine and Helena.

(Present Lord) JOHN, earl of Egmont (lord of Duhallow, Burton, Lis-carrol, Kanturk, Lohort, &c. in Ireland; and of Enmore, Anderfeld and Spaxton, Tuxwell and Radlet, Currypole and Charlinch, Asholt, Aley, Plainsfield, Overstowey and Friron, Quantoch, Week-fitzpaine and Windates, the borough and honour of Stokecurcy, and the hundreds of Anderfeld, Williton, and Freemannahs, in the county of Somerset, in England) was born at Westminster, on February 24, 1711, and after a learned education at home, and a further improvement by visiting foreign countries, was chosen in 1731 (though then under age) a Burgess for Dingley, and on December 31, 1741, unanimously elected representative for the city of Westminster; as he was in 1747, for Weobly, in Herefordshire. In March, 1747, he was appointed one of the lords of the bed-chamber to Frederick, late prince of Wales, in which station he continued till the death of that prince. On April 17, 1754, he was elected a member at the choice of the last parliament of George II. for the borough of Bridgwater, in the county of Somerset; and on January 9, 1755, being sworn one of the lords of his majesty's most honourable privy-council (in Great Britain) then took his place at that board accordingly. He was likewise appointed one of the privy council upon the accession of his present majesty to the throne: and was elected to the late parliament on April 1761, for the borough of Ilchester, in the county of Somerset, and likewise the next day for the said borough of Bridgwater, for which place he made his election. On May 7, 1762, his lordship was called up to the house of peers in Great Britain, by the title of lord Lovel and Holland, baron Lovel and Holland, of Enmore, in the county of Somerset (two of those baronies as before observed, which were forfeited by attainder of Francis, viscount Lovel, in the 1st of Henry VII.) in regard to his relation (as well by consanguinity as descent, both by the male and female line) and took his seat in the house of lords accordingly, on the 10th of May then next ensuing. On November 27, 1762, the king was pleased to appoint him one of the postmasters-general, in the room of the earl of Besborough. Resigning which employment on September 10, 1763, his lordship was on the same day appointed first commissioner for executing the office of lord high admiral of the kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the dominions, islands, and territories thereto belonging, which office he resigned also in September 1766. On February 15, 1736-7, he married Catharine Cecil, 2d daughter to James, late earl of Salisbury (by Anne Tufton, 2d daughter and coheir to Thomas, earl of Thanet, by the lady Catharine Cavendish, daughter and coheir to Henry, duke of Newcastle). Her ladyship died at Charlton, in Kent, on August 16, 1752, aged 33 years and 10 days, and was buried there, having had issue five sons and two daughters, viz.

1. John James, lord viscount Perceval, born in Pall-mall, Westminster, January 29, 1737-8. His lordship in 1760, was appointed a captain of dragoons in lord Robert Sutton's regiment of royal foresters; and in April 1762, was promoted to a company, with rank of lieutenant-colonel, in the first regiment of guards, and served in the allied army, in Germany, under prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, during that campaign.—On May 4, 1762, his lordship was chosen member in the late parliament for Bridgwater, in the room of the earl of Egmont; his father, when called up to the house of peers, in England, and in 1768 was returned to the present parliament for the same place. On Tuesday, June 4, 1765, his lordship was married at his father's house, in the admiralty, to the honourable Miss Isabella Powlet, daughter and sole heir to the right honourable lord Nassau Powlet (third son of Charles, duke of Bolton, baron St. John of Basing, &c. &c. who died January 21, 1722) by his wife Isabella Tufton, one of the daughters and coheirs of Thomas, late earl of Thanet, baron of Clifford, Westmoreland and Vescy (by the lady Catharine Cavendish, daughter and coheir to Henry, duke of Newcastle) son of John, earl of Thanet, by the lady Margaret Sackville, daughter and heir of Richard, earl of Dorset, (by Ann, daughter and sole heir of George Clifford, earl of Cumberland).—Of which baronies of Clifford, Westmoreland, and Vescy (being all baronies in fee) it may be proper to observe, that by the death of the said Thomas, earl of Thanet, without male issue, they fell into abeyance between the five daughters and coheirs of the said earl, viz. Catharine, who married lord Sondes, father to the late earl of Rockingham.—Anne, who married James, late earl of Salisbury, and by whom she had Catharine, late countess of Egmont, mother to John, now lord viscount Perceval—Margaret, countess dowager of Leicester, now living, (who obtained of the late king the barony of Clifford, which, having no issue, will fall back again into abeyance after her decease)—Mary, who married the late Anthony Grey, son and heir apparent of Henry, duke of Kent (by whom he had no issue) and afterwards became the wife of John, late earl Gower, whose widow she now remains—And Isabella, mother, as before mentioned, of Isabella, now lady Perceval, who therefore has a joint claim in present to the two baronies of Westmoreland and Vescy, and (after the said countess of Leicester) to the barony of Clifford also.—It is likewise not improper farther to observe, that in case of failure of issue in Henry, now duke of Bolton, the said Isabella, lady Perceval, will be entitled to the barony of St. John of Basing, in fee, together with the great estate, which is settled to descend for ever to the heir of that noble family, under a perpetual intail, by an act of parliament, 27 Henry VIII. His lordship has issue one son John Perceval, born at High-house, near Purfleet, in Essex, Aug. 13, 1767.

2. Cecil-Parker Perceval, born in Pall-mall October 19, 1739, who died at Eaton-school, March 4, 1753.

3. Philip-Tuiston Perceval, born in Pall-mall March 10, 1741-2, who having entered early into the sea service, served during all the late war abroad, was at the siege and surrender of Quebec, and at the taking of Martinique, and was lately captain of the Ramillies, a third rate man of war, and is now captain of one of his majesty's yachts.

4. Edward Perceval, born in Pall-mall April 21, 1744, being an ensign in the first regiment of guards, served as aid-de-camp to general Hodgson, at the taking of Bellisle; was employed again abroad in the same station with the earl of Albemarle, in his late expedition to the West-Indies, at the siege of the Havannah; and is now captain of a troop in the fourth regiment of dragoon guards, commanded by general Mostyn.

5. Frederic-Augustus Perceval, born in Pall-mall February 11, 1749-50, who died January 21, 1757.

The daughters were,

1. Catharine, born in Pall-mall February 20, 1745-6, now living: married September 15, 1766, to Thomas Wynne, esquire, son and heir apparent of Sir John Wynne, of Glynlivon, in the county of Caernarvon, baronet.

2. Margaret, born in Pall-mall October 10, 1748, who died January 23, 1749-50.

On January 26, 1756, his lordship was married at Charlton, in Kent, to his second and present lady, Catharine Compton, daughter of Charles Compton, by his wife Mary, sole daughter and heir of the late Sir Berkeley Lucy, baronet, and sister to Charles (the late) and to Spencer (the present) earls of Northampton, by whom he has had one following issue:

1. Charles-George Perceval, (first son) born at Charlton, October 1, 1756, now living.

2. Mary, born at Charlton, July 15, 1758, now living.

3. Anne, born in Pall mall, December 15, 1759, now living.

5. Spencer Perceval, (second son) born in Audley-square. November 1, 1762, now living.

6. Elizabeth, born in the Admiralty-house, December 12, 1763, now living.

THIS noble family (whose name has been variously written D'Amory, Daumery, Delmary, Dameer, Amerie, Amery, and about the year 1490, Damer, and has so continued ever since) has been long seated in Somersetshire and Dorsetshire.

WILLIAM D'AMORY came into England with William the Conqueror, and his son

GILBERT D'AMERY, in 15 Hen. II. held lands in the county of Somerset; his son,

GILBERT D'AUMARY, was in the expedition to Gascoigne, in 22 Edw. I. He had issue three sons,

1. Sir Roger Damary, who was summoned to parliament as a baron, in 11 and 14 Edw. well advanced to the command of a troop of horse, who highly favoured and greatly confided in him. He was twice sent by him, when Protector, upon secret negotiations, to cardinal Mazarine. Upon the Protector's death he went to France to his friend Lockhart, the English ambassador at that court, and was present with him at the marriage of Lewis XIV; but not thinking it safe, as he had been in so much favour and trust with Cromwell, to reside in England after the restoration, he sold some of his lands in Somersetshire and Dorsetshire, and collecting large sums of money from thence, went into Ireland, and taking advantage of the cheapness of lands there, from the want of inhabitants and cultivation, purchased large estates in that kingdom, which are still in the family. He was a man of great abilities and resolution, and of so extremely happy a constitution, that he never felt any sickness, till three days before his death, which happened on July 6, 1620, at the great age of ninety-one years; and dying a bachelor, he left his estates in Ireland to John, the eldest son of his brother George; and the estates which still remained in Dorsetshire to Joseph, the youngest son. MONTAGU, Baron BEAULIEU.

WE shall begin our account of this ancient family with

Sir HUGH HUSSEY, who went from England in 1316, and settled in Ireland. The intermediate ancestors between this Sir Hugh, and Rollo, first duke of Normandy, are by no means ascertained to general satisfaction, altho' it is universally allowed that, in the female line, this extraction has been sufficiently authenticated. We shall however insert the account which Mr. Collins gives of this house; and also the pedigree which Mr. Edmondson, from the authority of Segar's Manuscripts, has lately published. The latter stands thus.

The following is Mr. Collins's account:

This ancient family is of Norman extraction. Rollo, who obtained of Charles the Simple that dutchy, was the first duke, as all the records of the French nation declare, and having obtained that establishment and married Gifelle, Charles's daughter, had issue, William, the father of Richard, the father of Richard, who was the father of Richard, duke of Normandy, and of Robert and Helen, who was created countess of Hufsey. Richard died without issue, and Robert, the eldest son, was father of William the Conqueror, by Arletta, daughter of a citizen of Falaise. Helen (or Roxana) above-mentioned, was the wife of — Baron Hufsey, of Colfarsbury, in Normandy, who had issue by her, Hubert, who came with William I. into England, as constable of his army; he had issue, William, the father of William, the father of a third William, father of Godfrey, or Geoffrey, who lived in the reign of king Stephen, and at the commencement of that of Henry II. This Godfrey had issue, Matthew, and William, the good monk of Glastonbury, also Henry and James, knight of Rhodes, et inter alia, Hubert Hufsey, king of the Danes, Sir Hugh de Huse, or Hufsey, who migrated into Ireland in 17 Henry II. and married the sister of Theobald Fitzwalter. He had by the grant of Hugh de Lacy, one of the first adventurers in that kingdom, the barony of Deace, in the county of Meath, the ancient estate of Melaghten, or Malshushlin, with other large possessions.

The reader, from such different accounts, will directly see the uncertainty we labour under before we arrive at Sir Hugh Hufsey. However he had issue by his wife mentioned in Mr. Collins's pedigree,

WALTER HUSSEY, who by his wife, Agnes, daughter and heir of Hugh de Lacy, senior earl of Ulster, and a son,

HUGH HUSSEY, who married —, daughter of Adam de Hereford, whose son,

WILLIAM HUSSEY, marrying Catherine, daughter of —, earl of Kildare, had issue,

JOHN HUSSEY, who was summoned to parliament in Ireland, as baron of Galtrim, March 25, and November 22, 1374, and January 27, 1377, and married Marian, daughter and heir of the lord Simon Genavile, of Culmoline, by whom he had issue, John, who died without issue, and

EDMUND HUSSEY, who was summoned to parliament in Ireland, September 11, 1380, and April 29, 1382. He died January 24, 1384-5, leaving issue by his wife, Margaret, daughter of — Butler, earl of Ormond, two sons,

1. Paul Hufsey, who died without issue.

2. Peter Hufsey.

Which

PETER HUSSEY, baron of Galtrim, married first, Anne, daughter of John Cusiack, of Liffmullen, esquire, and secondly, —, daughter of —, earl of Kildare, by which last he had issue one son,

MATTHEW HUSSEY, who was in possession of the manors of Galtrim, Mulhufsey, and other lands in 1403; and in 1406, made a settlement of the estate of Mulhufsey, &c. and dying 1418, left issue by his wife, Margaret, daughter and heir of — Pettid, of Rath-Kenny, esquire, two sons, Thomas, who deceased without issue, and

NICHOLAS HUSSEY, who was living 1441, and by his wife, — daughter of — Eustace, had one son,

JOHN HUSSEY, baron of Galtrim, who married a daughter of Plunket, lord Dunfaney, and had issue

PATRICK HUSSEY, baron of Galtrim, who married Ann, daughter of Delehyde, and was by her father of

NICHOLAS HUSSEY, baron of Galtrim, who married Catharine, daughter of Sir Charles Barnwall, of Crichtown, knight, by his wife, Catharine, daughter of Sir Charles Fleming, of Stone. Their son,

Sir PATRICK HUSSEY, lived in the reigns of queen Mary and queen Elizabeth, and by Catherine, his wife, daughter of John Barnwell, the third baron of Trimteston, had issue two daughters; Mary, married to George Aylmer, of Cloncurry, esquire; and Ruth, married to — Tuth, of Ballybreggan; and two sons, Nicholas, who died without issue, and

JAMES HUSSEY, who died 1603, having married Mary, daughter of Richard Aylmer, of the Lyons, in the county of Kildare, who bore to him two sons, Patrick and Peter:

PATRICK HUSSEY, baron of Galtrim, marrying Margaret, daughter of Robert Rochfort, of Kilbridge, esquire; ancestor of the viscounts Bellfield, about the year 1600, was ancestor of the Hufseys, barons of Galtrim. His brother

PETER HUSSEY, esquire, by his wife, Mary, only daughter and heir of Bartholomew Bellew, of Westown, in the county of Dublin, esquire, had issue

LUKE HUSSEY, esquire, who had issue,

EDWARD HUSSEY, esquire, who married Mabel, daughter of — Barnwall, by his wife, the countess dowager of Fingal, and were both buried at Westown. They had issue four sons and two daughters, viz.

1. James Hufsey, of whom hereafter.

2. George Hufsey,

3. Luke Hufsey,

4. Nicholas Hufsey,

5. Mabel, married to Matthias Barnwall, of Castletown, in the county of Meath, esquire.

6. Catharine, married to Sir Andrew Aylmer, of Mount-Aylmer, in the county of Meath, baronet.

JAMES HUSSEY, esquire, the eldest son, of Westown, in the county of Dublin, and of Courtown, in Kildare, esquire, who died in 1759, married Catharine, daughter of Richard Parsons, viscount Ross, which lady deceased on March 1, 1766, and was buried by her husband at Westown, by whom he had issue,

1. Edward Hufsey, now lord Beaulieu, of whom presently.

2. Richard Hufsey.

3. James Hufsey.

And four daughters.

1. Frances.

2. Elizabeth.

3. Mabel.

4. Mary, wife of James Hufsey, of Galtrim, esquire.

(Present Lord) EDWARD HUSSEY, esquire, the eldest son, in 1743, married Isabella, eldest daughter and coheir of John Montagu, duke of Montagu gu, and relict of William Montagu, duke of Manchester, and on the death of his father-in-law, took the name and arms of Montagu, pursuant to an act of parliament. On December 27, 1753, he was installed a knight of the Bath, and on May 4, 1762, 2 Geo. III. was advanced to the dignity of the peerage of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title of lord Beaulieu, baron Beaulieu, of Beaulieu in the county of Hants, to him and his heirs male, by his said wife Isabella, duchess dowager of Manchester. His lordship represented the borough of Tiverton, in Dorsetshire, in the eleventh and twelfth parliaments of Great Britain, till he was raised to the peerage. His lordship has issue by her said grace, now surviving, the honourable John Montagu, his son and heir, born on January 18, 1747, and Isabella Montagu, born on August 27, 1750.

Note. This account of the ancient family of Hufsey was drawn from a pedigree, copied from one in the hands of the right honourable Edward, lord Beaulieu, in vellum, which is thus signed: "I do hereby certify that the above is a true copy of a genealogy of the Hufeys, as entered in the herald's office, in testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand, and affixed the seal of mine office of arms, this ninth day of November, 1764.

JOHN WINSTANLEY, deputy Ulster.

V E R N O N, Baron V E R N O N.

THIS noble and ancient family claims descent from the lords of Vernon, in the dutchy of Normandy. The common ancestor, WILLIAM DE VERNON, assumed this surname from that town and district, whereof he was the sole proprietor in the year 1052. This gentleman founded and richly endowed the collegiate and parochial church of St. Mary's, in Vernon, for a dean and secular canons, and lies there interred underneath an altar monument, whereon is his effigies. He had two sons, Richard and Walter, who both came into England with the Conqueror; the younger obtained the lordships of Winfleton, Nessle, Ledsam, and Preston, now Prenton, in Cheshire; Hertwell, Adestock, and Plaet-Merton, in Bucks; and had a share of his father's possessions in Normandy, but dying without issue, they fell to his elder brother,

RICHARD DE VERNON, who was one of the seven barons created by Hugh Lupus, to whom king William, his uncle, in the twentieth year of his reign, granted the county palatine of Chester. It appears from Domesday-book, that this Richard de Vernon, first baron of Shipbroke, held the lands and manors of Aston, Picton, Shipbroke, Crew, Hetune, Cocheshall, Wice, Malatune, Wanetune, Devenham, Dovestock, Adeline, Boetbury, and others. He was a benefactor, with Hugh Lupus, to the abbey of St. Werburgh, in Chester, and in temp. Will. II. gave tithes of Easton and Picton to that abbey. He was succeeded by his eldest son and heir,

WILLIAM DE VERNON, whose son,

HUGH DE VERNON, third baron, living in 1119, was also lord of Northwyk, and with Richard, earl of Chester, likewise a great benefactor to the abbey of St. Werburgh. He married —, daughter and heir of Raynold Badgioll, lord of Erdewick and Helgrave; by whom he had issue five sons,

1. Warine de Vernon.

2. Matthew de Vernon, who obtained Erdewick and Holgrave, by the gift of his mother, and was ancestor to the Vernons of that place.

3. Hugh de Vernon.

4. William de Vernon, ancestor to the present lord.

5. Richard de Vernon, who married and had issue an only son, Adam, who assumed the name of Napton, and left several children, but they all died without issue.

We must first treat of the descendants of the eldest son.

WARINE

WARINE DE VERNON, third baron of Shipbroke, living in the time Henry III. whose eldest son, Richard de Vernon, in 37 Henry III. had a grant of the custody of the castle and manor of the Pecke, and dying before his father, left issue, four sons; whereof William the third, was chief justice of Chester, 1230, and Warine, the eldest, married Auda, third daughter, and one of the co-heirs of William Malbank, baron of Wich-Malbank, now Namptwich, in the county of Chester (descended from William Malbank, baron of Wich-Malbank, in 20 William I.) with whom he acquired a great number of manors in that county, and was father of Warine de Vernon, baron of Shipbroke; and Ralph, of whom hereafter.

Warine married Margaret, or Margery, daughter and heir of Ralph de Andeville, relict of Hugh de Altaribus, by whom he had a son, Warine, who died without issue, and three daughters, his co-heirs; Margery, the wife of Richard de Wilbraham; Edith, of Sir William Stafford, knight; and Rohesia, of John Littlebury. Whereupon Ralph, their father's brother, succeeded to the barony: but after a long suit with the co-heirs, it was agreed the barony should be divided, they and their husbands to have one half, with the salt works at Namptwich, called the juggar-house; and that Ralph should have the other half, including the manor of Minchal-Vernon, and the capital manor of Shipbroke. This Ralph levied a fine of his lands in Shipbroke, &c. in 19 Edw. II. His son, Ralph de Vernon, lived to the great age of 150, and on that account was stiled the old liver. He married first, Mary, daughter of Ralph, lord Dacres, and 2dly, Matilda, daughter of Robert, lord Grosvenor, of Budworth; by the first he had issue, Sir Ralph, and Thomas Vernon, of Lofstock, of whom presently.

Sir Ralph, or according to some, Sir Robert, married Margaret, daughter of Urian de Sancto Petro, and died before his father; his issue terminating, after two descents, in a daughter and heir, Margaret, who was married to Sir Hamon L'Estrange, knight, lord of Hurdleston, living in 3 Edw. III.

Thomas of Lofstock, second son, married Joan, daughter and coheir of Richard Lofstock, by whom he was father of two sons, Richard and John, the latter of which was seated at Redmon, and the former marrying Avise, daughter of Thomas Leigh, of Bradley, was father of another Richard, as also of John and Ralph. The eldest of these three brothers was seated at Haslington, and married Margaret, daughter of Sir Richard Molyneux. His son James Vernon, seated at the same place, by a daughter of Thomas Minshall, had issue, Richard Vernon, who, by Jane, daughter of Richard Torbock, of Lancashire, was father of John Vernon, who married Mabel, daughter of Henry Gifford, of Staffordshire, and had issue, Ralph, who married first, Joan, daughter of Robert Foulhurst of Crew; and 2dly, Mary, daughter of John Dutton, and widow of Thomas Aston; by the former he had issue, Richard Vernon, who, by his wife, Margaret, daughter of Laurence Rape, of Stapley, in the county of Chester, knight, had issue, Ralph, who marrying Isabella, daughter of Thomas Leverage, of Wheelock, esquire, was father of Robert Vernon, esquire, who marrying Cecilia, daughter of Robert Fowlhurst, of Crew, in the county of Chester, had a son, Sir Thomas

Vernon, of Haslington, knight, who died in 1615, and by Dorothy, his wife, daughter of William Egerton, of Betley, esquire, had issue, Sir George Vernon, knight, and judge of the Common-pleas, 1635, who, by his first wife, Jane, daughter of Sir George Corbett, of Leigh, esquire, had issue, Muriel, his daughter and heir, married to Henry Vernon, of Sudbury, in the county of Derby, esquire, (as hereafter mentioned.)

We now return to

WILLIAM DE VERNON, lord of Vernon, in Normandy, and third son to Hugh de Vernon. He married Alice, daughter and coheir of William de Avenal, of Haddon, near the Wye in Derbyshire, and had issue,

RICHARD DE VERNON, lord of Haddon, in right of his mother, who married Mary, daughter of Robert, baron of Stockport, had with her the manor of Appleby-Parva, and the advowson of Appleby-Magna, in the county of Leicester. He had issue by her,

SIR RICHARD VERNON, of Haddon, knight, who was lord of Haddon, in Derbyshire, and of Mount-Meland, Goriz, Anvers, Ruvistrat, &c. in Normandy, and by Isabel his wife, daughter of Geoffrey de Gernons, had another

RICHARD VERNON, who succeeded him as lord of Haddon, &c. and marrying Margaret, daughter of — Vipont, had a son, RICHARD VERNON, who by Felicia, daughter of — Vasseley, had a son, Sir Richard Vernon, the fifth of that name, in uninterrupted succession.

SIR RICHARD VERNON, who died about the 3d or 4th of Edward III. by his wife Maud, daughter and heir of William Camville, lord of Clifton, in Staffordshire, had issue,

WILLIAM VERNON, of Harliston, who was living in 1330, and married Jenetta or Juliana, daughter of Sir Rice Griffiths, knight, cousin and heir to Sir Richard Stackpole, and by her who died 41 Edward III. had issue,

SIR RICHARD VERNON, who was sometimes called Sir Richard Pemburge, from his having married Benedicta, sister and heir of Sir Fulk Pemburge, of Tong, in Shropshire. He was constituted treasurer of Calais, by patent, bearing date May 4, 1444, which office he resigned in 1451, and departed this life the following year.

He had issue three daughters,

1. Ann, married to Sir John Bradbury, of Housh.

2. Isabel, married to Sir John Stanley, knight.

3. Agnes, married to John Cokayne, of Ashburne, in Derbyshire; also two sons,

1. William Vernon.

Edmund Vernon, who married 1st, Benedicta, daughter and coheir of Robert Pipe, of Spennore, and 2dly, Joan, daughter and heir of William Handsacre, of Handsacre, in Staffordshire, by each of which ladies he had a daughter, his coheirs. By the former, Ann, married to Edward Leech, of Chatworth, in Derbyshire; by the latter, Agnes, married to Nicholas, son of Thomas Westcote, who took the name of Lyttleton.

The eldest son

Sir William Vernon, was treasurer of Calais, and constable of England for life; being the last who held that great dignity in that manner, it being looked upon as too important for a subject; and ever after it was held pro hac vice. He died on

8 K

June

June 30, 1467, 7 Edw. IV. and was buried at Tonge, in Salop.

He married Margaret, daughter and coheir of Robert Pype, of Spernore. This knight who was lord of the manor of Spernore or Spernal, in right of his wife, who died 1460, had issue by her four daughters, Elizabeth, Margaret, Bennet, and Alice; and two sons,

1. William Vernon.

2. Richard Vernon, seated at Haselbeach and Sheley, (now called Netherseale) in the county of Leicester, died without any legitimate issue.

The eldest son

SIR WILLIAM VERNON, succeeded his father as lord of Haddon and Spernore, and on the death of his brother, obtained the lordships of Haselbeach and Sheley; he married Margaret, daughter of lord Ferrers, and by her had issue, an only son,

SIR HENRY VERNON, who became lord of Haddon, Harleston, Haselbeach, Nether-seale and Spernore, and was governor and treasurer to prince Arthur, eldest son and heir apparent to Henry VII. (at whose creation he was honoured with a stall among the knights of the Bath) as also his counsellor for the management of Wales, and in 15 Henry VII. had the further honour of signing the marriage articles between that prince and princess Catharine of Spain. The tradition is, that the prince frequently lived with Sir Henry, at Haddon, in Derbyshire, where (at least in 1730) was an apartment, called the prince's chamber, with his arms cut in several places thereof.

He gave to the church of Tong the great bell, (six yards round, and 48 hundred weight) as also a rent charge, issuing out of his manor of Norton, on condition that the said bell should be tolled when any person of the name of Vernon came into the town, which ceremony is still observed.

He married Ann, daughter of John Talbot, the second earl of Shrewsbury, and by her, who died May 17, 1494, and was buried at Tong, in Shropshire, was father of six sons and five daughters; the latter were,

1. Elizabeth, married to Robert Corbet, of Morton-Corbet, in Shropshire.

2. Mary, married to Sir Edward Aston, of Foxall, knight; she died 1525, and was buried at Onelip, in Lancashire.

3. Ann, married to Sir Ralph Shirley, knight.

4. Beatrix, married to Sir Henry Foljamb, of Walton, in Derbyshire.

5. Margaret, married to John Saville.

The sons were,

1. Richard Vernon, of Haddon, who marrying Margaret, daughter of Sir Robert Dymock, knight, died in the year 1518, 8 Henry VIII. and was buried at Tong, leaving issue by her, Sir George Vernon, of Haddon, aforesaid, in the Peak in Derbyshire, knight of the Bath, who died 1565, seized of thirty manors, and was buried at Bakewell, leaving issue by his first wife, (his second lady, by whom he had no issue, was Matilda, daughter of Sir Ralph Longford, knight) Margaret, daughter of George, lord Talboys, two daughters; Dorothy, married to Sir John Manners, knight, second son of Thomas, earl of Rutland, and carried with her the lordship of Haddon. From this match in a direct line the present duke of Rutland is descended. This lady died June 24, 1584, and was buried at Tong. 2. Margaret, married to Sir Thomas Stanley, and had for her purparty Tong, &c. "This Sir George Vernon, of Haddon (says Cambden) was the last male of that branch, whose chief seat was at Haddon, by the river Wye, in Derbyshire, the seat for many years of the Vernons, who, as they were ancient, so they were no less renowned in these parts; inasmuch as this Sir George Vernon, who lived in our time, for his magnificent port and hospitality, was called by the multitude petty king of the Peak. He died seized of thirty manors, and left two daughters, one married to Manners, of the duke of Rutland's family, by which Haddon came to them; in honourable remembrance of which, there is wrote over the entrance into the house, God save the Vernons. And the Vernon's crest being a boar's head, used to be served up, with a song, every Christmas. The other daughter married to Stanley, second son of the earl of Derby, by which he had Tong, in Shropshire, where he lieth interred, and where there are many fine monuments of the Vernons and Stanleys, and a chapel founded by Sir Henry Vernon, who married Talbot, daughter of the earl of Shrewsbury, curiously painted, gilt, and adorned with the matches of the Vernons.

3. Humphry Vernon.

4. Sir John Vernon, of Sudbury, in the county of Derby, knight, was of the king's council for Wales, and custos rotulorum of Derbyshire, and sheriff of that county and Nottinghamshire, in 19 Hen. VIII. and by his wife Ellen, daughter and coheir of Sir Nicholas Montgomery, of Cobley, in the county of Derby, knight, had issue a daughter, Mary, married to Francis Rollaston; and a son, Henry Vernon, of Sudbury, esquire, and died in 3 Ed. VI.

The said Henry Vernon, his son, married March 3, 1547, Margaret, eldest daughter and coheir of Sir Humphry Swinnerton, of Swinnerton and Hilton, in the county of Stafford, knight, which last estate he had with her (who died in 1591) and by her (who was heir at law to the claims of her family, and was descended from Roger de Swinnerton, summoned to parliament as a baron, 11 Edw. III.) he had issue,

John Vernon, of Sudbury, esquire, who married Mary, relict of Walter Vernon, of Hounhill, esquire, before-mentioned; but died in 1600, aged sixty-one, without surviving issue: and Henry Vernon, of Hilton and Edington, in the county of Stafford, esquire (who died in 1592) having married Dorothy, daughter of Sir Arthur Heveningham, knight, by whom he had issue one daughter and heir, Margaret, married to Sir Edward Vernon, hereafter to be mentioned.

5. Christopher Vernon.

6. Arthur Vernon, rector of Whitchurch, in Shropshire.

Sir Henry and his lady, who deceased before him, May 17, 1494, were both buried at Tong, where a fine monument was erected to their memory, and that of their youngest son, Arthur, who died August 15, 1517. Over-against the monument, upon the east-side of the wall of the chapel is the following inscription:

"Pray for the soul of Sir Henry Vernon, knight, and Dame Anne, his wife, which said Henry, in the year of our Lord 1515, made and founded this chapel and chauntry, and the said Sir Henry departed this life the third day of April, in the year — of your charity, pray for the soul of Sir Arthur Vernon, priest, son of the said Sir Henry, on whose souls Jesus have mercy."

FOX-LANE, Baron BINGLEY.

ACCORDING to a pedigree upon paper, now in possession of the right honourable George, lord Bingley, his lordship claims a descent from

WILLIAM FOX, seated at Grete, in the county of Worcester, in the 14 Edw. IV. in right of his wife Sibilla, daughter and coheir of John de Grete, of Grete aforesaid. This lady was living in the 11th of Hen. VII. 1487. Their son,

JOHN FOX, of Grete, was living in 22 Henry VIII. 1523, and by his wife Alice, who departed this life July 10, 1539, had issue,

JOHN FOX, who married Agnes Partridge, and dying May 9, 1545, by her, who married secondly Richard More, of Borderly, and died 1562, left issue two sons,

1. John Fox, who died aged fifteen, on June 22, 1551.

2. Thomas Fox. Which

THOMAS FOX, seated at Grete aforesaid, was born September 16, 1539, and departing this life was buried at Yardley, April 8, 1605. He married Ann, daughter of Richard Smallbroke, of Birmingham, who died 1633, having bore to him issue two daughters, Joan, the wife of Henry Pretty; and Dorothy, married to Henry Sivenhall, of Tamworth; also five sons,

1. Richard Fox, of Mosely, some time of Brazen-nose college, Oxon, married Mary Birch, of Smithwick. He died 1634, aged fifty-four. She departed this life in the same year; their issue were Joseph Fox, who died an infant; and two daughters; Alice, married 1617, to William Booth, of Wilton, in Warwickshire, esquire, and Eleanor, married to Robert Middlemore, esquire.

2. Thomas Fox, of Yardley, is called in the above pedigree second son, and is said to have been aged seventy-three, in 1646, so that he must have been born 1573, which is several years before Richard Fox, said to be his elder brother, was born, according to the dates inserted just above, and copied from Mr. Edmondson, who professes to have taken his account entirely from the pedigree attested to above. This gentleman had two sons, Thomas and Richard, said to be, the former forty-two, the latter forty-six years old, in the year 1646.

3. John Fox, of King's-Norton, who married Alice Chambers.

4. Edmund Fox, ancestor to the present lord. The date of this gentleman's birth must be erroneous, for he is said to have been born June 18, 1640, so that his brother Thomas was then sixty-seven years old, a disparity of years that must render the dates of the pedigree more than suspected, and he must have been born thirty-five years after his father died. After these extraordinary inaccuracies, besides many more which may be found in the course of this pedigree, we cannot help wishing that we had any better authority to go by. As we have not, we must proceed and leave it to our readers to judge as they think proper.

5. Henry Fox, of Yardley, who married Mary Collier, and had two daughters, Dorothy, married to Richard Billingsley, esquire; and Mary.

The fourth son,

EDMUND FOX, was seated at Birmingham, and marrying Elizabeth, daughter and heir of Hugh Grosbroke, had issue five sons,

1. Richard Fox, who died without issue.

2. Edward Fox, of Wantage, born 19 (the month is not mentioned) 1613 (which the reader will find impossible, because the father is said to have been born 1640, which is twenty-seven years after) he married the daughter and coheir of George Windham, of Wantage, esquire, and had issue two sons, Edward Fox, of London, packer; and George Fox, of London, vintner.

3. Joseph Fox, born February 27, 1617, grandfather to the present lord.

4. Thomas Fox, of the Inner Temple, born March 4, 1622, who married Judith, only daughter of Sir William Boothby, knight and baronet, and died without issue.

5. Timothy Fox, born October 12, 1628, rector of Drayton. He married first, Lettice, daughter of John Buckburg, and by her, who died 1664, had issue three sons. 1. Thomas Fox, citizen and stationer of London, born March 28, 1656, who married Joanna, daughter of James Gregg, leather-seller, in London, and had issue, Joseph, James, Thomas, William, Martha, Elizabeth, Mary, and Lettice. 2. Timothy Fox died at Windsor, November 4, 1699, leaving issue by his wife Mary Stoner, a daughter, Mary, born January 1, 1689, and a son, John, born March 18, 1692. 3. Joseph Fox, citizen and stationer of London, born January 10, 1683, married first, Sarah Jackson; secondly, Elizabeth Roberts. Also two daughters, 1. Lettice, born August 30, 1651, married to Samuel Marriot, citizen and ironmonger of London, and died August 11, 1611 (which the reader will observe is forty years before she was born). 2. Martha, baptized February 13, 1652, married June 10, 1672, to Joseph Clarke, citizen and plaisterer of London. This Timothy Fox married, secondly, Frances, daughter of John Richardson, and widow of Francis Ward, and by her, who died November 30, 1711, had issue Samuel Fox, born April 25, 1676, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Wagstaff; and two daughters, Elizabeth, married September 9, 1700, to Thomas Bridges, apothecary at Burton; and Jane, born May 31, 1672, married William Buckstone, gent.

The third son,

JOSEPH FOX, was a major in Ireland; and by Thomasine, eldest daughter of Henry, lord Blaney, in that kingdom, had issue two sons,

1. Henry Fox.

2. James Fox*.

The eldest son,

HENRY FOX, married Frances, daughter of George Lane, viscount Lanesborough, and heir of James Lane, viscount Lanesborough, and by her had issue,

1. Henry Fox, who died young.

2. George Fox.

3. James Fox, died without issue.

4. Sackville Fox, who married Ann, daughter of — Holloway, of Birmingham, merchant, and dying left issue James Fox.

Also two daughters, Jane and Ann.

The third son,

(Present Lord) GEORGE FOX, took the name and arms of Lane, pursuant to the will of viscount Lanesborough, which was confirmed by act of parliament. He represented the borough of Hendon in the eighth, and the city of York, in the tenth, eleventh, and twelfth parliaments of Great Britain. On July 12, 1731, he married Harriot, only daughter and heir of Robert Benson, late lord Bingley, by his wife Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Heneage, lord Guernsey, afterwards earl of Aylesford, which lady died February 26, 1757, aged eighty.

The said Robert, lord Bingley, was son of Robert Benson, of Wrenthorn, in the county of York, esquire, by Dorothy, his wife, daughter of Tobias Jenkins, of the same county, esquire, and eminently distinguished himself in several parliaments, and particularly in that of 1710, when he sat as member for the city of York. Soon after he was appointed a commissioner of the treasury, and afterwards chancellor and under-treasurer of the exchequer, upon his resignation of which offices, he was by patent, dated July 21, 1713, created baron of Bingley, in the county of York. Not long after which he was appointed, by queen Anne, her ambassador to the court of Spain, and dying on April 9, 1730, when he was treasurer of the household to George II. without male issue, his title became extinct. He left his daughter one hundred thousand pounds, and an estate of seven thousand pounds per annum, and built the fine seat at Bramham-park, which has since been greatly improved by the present lord.

On May 4, 1762, his majesty was graciously pleased to revive the title, by creating George Fox-Lane, esquire, baron Bingley, in the county of York, with limitation to his heirs male, by the said Harriot Benson, his wife. His son and heir

F O X, Baron H O L L A N D.

WE have already observed in our account of the family of the earl of Ilchester, that this noble lord was the second and youngest son, of the second marriage of Sir Stephen Fox; and brother of Stephen, now earl of Ilchester, &c.

His lordship was chosen one of the members for Hendon, in Wiltshire, on a vacancy, in March 1735, to that parliament which first met January 23, 1734; and being constituted surveyor-general of his majesty's board of works, a writ was ordered, June 17, 1737, and he was re-elected. In the next parliament, summoned to meet June 25, 1741, and which sat on business December 4, following, he served for Windsor; and in 1743, being constituted one of the commissioners of the treasury, a writ was issued December 21, that year, for a new election, and he was re-chosen. Also, in 1746, being appointed secretary at war, a writ issued May 27, the same year, and he was again re-elected. On July 23, he was sworn of his majesty's most honourable privy-council. In the parliament which first sat on business, November 12, 1747, he was again elected one of the members for Windsor; also in the parliament of 1754, and the last, till he was advanced to the peerage. In December 1754, he was summoned to his majesty's cabinet-council, and on April 26, 1755, was by his majesty appointed one of the lords-justices, during his intended absence in his German dominions. On November 14, in the same year, he was declared one of his majesty's principal secretaries of state, which office he held until 1756, when he was succeeded by the right honourable William Pitt, now earl of Chatham. On July 5, 1757, he was appointed paymaster of the forces, in which office he was continued by his present majesty, on his accession, but soon after resigned. His lordship is now a lord of the privy-council, and clerk of the pells in Ireland, granted him for his own life and that of his two sons.

On April 16, 1763, his majesty was pleased to raise him to the peerage, by the stile and title of lord Holland, baron of Foxley, in the county of Wilts, to him and his heirs male.

He married on May 2, 1744, Georgina-Carolina, eldest daughter of his grace Charles, late duke of Richmond, Lennox, and Aubigny, (created baroness Holland, May 1762, 2 Geo. III.) by whom he had issue,

1. Stephen Fox, born February 20, 1744-5, and married April 20, 1766, to Mary Fitzpatrick, daughter of John, earl of Upper-Ossory, in the kingdom of Ireland, by whom he had issue a daughter, Caroline, born November 3, 1767.

2. Henry Fox, born October 8, 1746, who died in the January following.

3. Charles-James Fox, born Jan. 13, 1748-9, member in the present parliament (1768) for Midsbury, in Suffex.

THIS ancient and noble family claim descent from

ALMARUS, who held lands, and resided at Tilton, in Leicestershire, in the time of William the Conqueror, from which place his son,

Sir EVERARD Tilton, assumed that surname; and by Amicia Bretton, had issue a son,

WILLIAM TILTON, of Tilton aforesaid, who, by his wife, a lady surnamed Dalby, had issue two sons:

1. William Tilton, of Tilton, who became also possessed of estates at and near Digby, in Lincolnshire, and was a monk in the reign of Henry II.

2. Robert Tilton, which

ROBERT TILTON married a lady of Lincolnshire, surnamed Herle; and becoming by the favour of his brother owner of the estate at Digby, fixed his residence there, and assumed the surname of Digby (or Diggeby, as it was then written) which has continued with his posterity to the present time. He had two sons, Robert and Thomas. The eldest,

ROBERT DIGBY, succeeded his father at Digby, and was there resident in 40th of Henry III. He married Ida, daughter of John de Fitz-Herbert, and had issue four sons, John, Nicholas, Hugh, and William. Of the three last nothing further than their names is handed down. The eldest son,

Sir JOHN DIGBY, who departed this life in 53 Henry III. married Arabella, daughter of Sir William Harcourt, of Stanton Harcourt, and widow of Sir Fulke Pembrugge, knight, who bore to him a son,

JOHN DIGBY, who was a commissioner for the gaol delivery at Warwick in the 11th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 32d, and 33d, of Edward I. and served that prince in his wars with Scotland. He married a lady of the name of Wake, and had issue two sons:

1. Robert Digby, who died without issue in the life time of his father.

2 John Digby, which

JOHN DIGBY succeeded his father, and marrying Elizabeth, daughter of Walter de Oleville, had issue two sons, and a Daughter, Elizabeth.

SIMON DIGBY, of Tilton, in the county of Leicester, and Drystock, in the county of Rutland, died before the 19th of Henry V. By his wife Joan, daughter of Sir James Bellers, he had issue four sons. The eldest,

Sir EVERARD DIGBY, was sheriff and member of parliament for the county of Rutland in the reign of Henry VI. He, and his three brothers, taking part with the house of Lancaster, were slain

By J. J. Ballou, he has slain at the battle of Towton-Field, in 1440, 1 Edward IV. He married twice. The name of his first wife was Elizabeth —; that of the second was Anne Clarke, daughter of Francis Clarke, of Wyssenden, in the county of Rutland, and widow of Richard Seddale. By one of these ladies, but by which is not clear, he had issue seven sons:

1. Sir Everard Digby, of Tilton, who married Jacquetta, daughter of Sir John Ellis, of the county of Devon, knight; and by her, who died in 1496, had issue a son of his own name, Sir Everard Digby, knight, which son was seated at Drystock, in the county of Rutland, and had other large family possessions. He married Mary, daughter of Sir John Heydon, of Norfolk, knight; and dying 1540, was buried with his ancestors at Tilton, leaving issue Kenelm Digby, who died 1590, having had issue by Anne his wife, daughter of Sir Anthony Cope, of Hanwell, in Oxfordshire, knight, who was buried with him at Drystock, three sons: 1. Everard. 2. Anthony, seated at Aston, who died without issue. 3. John Digby, of Seaton, in the county of Rutland. The eldest son, Everard Digby, of Stoke, married Mary, daughter and coheir of Francis Neale, and widow of Sampson Erdfwick. Their issue was another Everard Digby, who was knighted, afterwards attainted, and executed 1606; and a second son, George Digby, whose only daughter and heir married first lord Gerrard, and secondly, Sir Edward Hungerford, knight. The last mentioned Sir Everard (elder brother of George) married Mary, daughter and coheir of William Multho, of Gothurst, in the county of Buckingham, and had issue two sons, Kenelm and Sir John Digby; the youngest was slain in the royal cause in the reign of Charles I. and the eldest, Sir Kenelm Digby, born 1603 at Gothurst, had his father's lands, and was restored in blood. He received the honour of knighthood October 8, 1623; was gentleman of the bed-chamber, and commissioner of the navy in the reign of Charles I. and dying June 11, 1665, was buried at Christchurch, in Newgate-street, London. This knight was a man of great learning, and one of the council of the royal society, at the first settlement thereof. He married Venetia, daughter and heir of Sir Edward Stanley, of Tong-castle, in Shropshire, knight of the Bath; and by her, who was buried with him, he had issue a daughter, Margery, who became the wife of Edward Dudley, of Clopton, in Northamptonshire, esquire, and four sons, Kenelm, John, Everard, and George. The eldest died before his father; the third and fourth deceased without issue; and the second, John Digby, married first Catharine, daughter of Henry Frederic Howard, son and heir of Thomas earl of Arundel; but this lady dying without issue, he married secondly Margaret, daughter of Sir Edward Longville, knight, and by her was father of two daughters coheiresses, Margaret Maria, the wife of Sir John Conway, of Brodrythan, in the county of Flint, baronet; and Charlotte Theophila, who became the wife of Richard Mostyn, of Penbeddw, younger son of Sir Roger Mostyn, baronet. This last mentioned lady departed this life March 17, 1663, and was interred at Mannerch, in the county of Flint.

2. Simon Digby, ancestor to the present lord.

3. Sir John Digby, of Eye-Kettleby, in the county of Leicester, who was knighted by Henry VII. for his bravery at Bosworth field, where he served with his six brothers on that prince's side. He was also his knight marshal, and steward of the priory of Lewes, in Sussex. In 1515, he was sheriff of the counties of Warwick and Leicester; and in 1491, 1517, and 1523, served that high office in the county of Rutland. He married Catharine, daughter of — Willoughby, of Wollaton, in the county of Nottingham, and departing this life in 1533, was buried at Malton, in the county of Leicester. From this match the Digbys of Kettleby, in the county of Leicester, and of Luffenham, in the county of Rutland, claim descent.

4. Rowland Digby, seated at Welby, in Leicestershire, who married Anne, daughter and heir of Robert Ashby, esquire. From this match is descended the Digbys of Welby.

5. Sir Thomas Digby, of Ouldney, in Hertfordshire, in the county of Bucks; which, together with the honour of knighthood, he obtained from Henry VII. as a reward for his service at Bosworth-field. He married Dorothy, daughter of Sir Thomas Oxenbridge, ancestor of the Digbys, of St. Julian, in Oulney.

6. Libæus Digby, seated at Coats, and also at Luffenham: he married a lady surnamed Hutt; of Luffenham, and his posterity continued some time seated at Coats.

7. Benjamin Digby, seated at Bathley, in the county of Norfolk, ancestor to the Digbys of that place.

We are now to treat of SIMON DIGBY, of Colehill, second son of Sir Everard, killed in the battle of Towton, before mentioned, as ancestor of the lord Digby.

This gentleman seeing the Yorkists prevail, wisely temporized, and was knighted by Edward IV. in 1477, who conferred upon him several other favours: yet upon the landing of the earl of Richmond, he, with his brothers, joined and fought for him in the decisive battle of Bosworth. In reward of his services that day, Henry VII. in the first year of his reign 1485, made him steward of the lordships of Uppingham, Preston, Barrowden, Esenden, and Gretham, in the county of Rutland, with all the other lands in that county, then late the estate of George duke of Clarence, to hold for life; and also steward and receiver of the manor of Bedale, in Yorkshire.

In 1486, he was a commander at the battle of Stoke, and in consideration of that service, the king, in 1487, gave to him and his heirs male, the manor of Ravysbury, in Surry, and in 1488, appointed him comptroller of the petty customs in the port of London, and confirmed to him the forestership of Thornewoods. In 1495 (11 Henry VII.) the king, by patent, dated at Westminster, December 23, granted to him and his heirs male, the lordship of Colehill, in the county of Warwick, upon the confiscation of Sir Simon Montfort, in 1495, which has been the principal residence of the family ever since. He held many considerable posts, and executed several offices in that reign, and died February 27, 1519. He was buried in the chancel of Colehill church, where his tomb still remains.

He

He married Alice, daughter and heir of John Walleys, of East-Raddon, in Devonshire, esquire, (who lies buried with him) by whom he had issue two sons, and three daughters, viz.

1. Reginald Digby, of whom presently.
2. Thomas Digby, of Mansfield-Woodhouse, in the county of Nottingham, whose posterity ended in daughters and coheirs, viz. Frances, wife of Sir Thomas Legard, of Gunton, in Yorkshire, baronet, and mother of Sir Digby Legard, and Philadelphia, married to Sir George Cayley, of Brompton, in the said county, baronet.

The daughters were,

1. Catharine, wife of Anthony Worth, of Worth, esquire.
2. Agnes, of William Tracy, of Toddington, esquire.
3. Alice, wife of Robert Clifton, esquire, and died in 1540.

REGINALD DIGBY, of Colehill, esquire, the elder son, was sheriff of the county of Leicester, in 26 and 36 Henry VIII. and married Anne, daughter and coheir of John D'Anvers, of Calthorpe, in Oxfordshire, esquire, and dying April 25, 1549, left issue one son, and four daughters; of whom Anne was the wife of Ralph Brome, of Wodlow, in Warwickshire, esquire. The son, JOHN DIGBY, of Colehill, esquire, married Anne, eldest daughter of Sir George Throgmorton, of Loughton, in the county of Warwick, knight (by his wife Catherine, daughter of Nicholas lord Vaux, of Harrowden) and dying November 15, 1558, left issue a daughter, Agnes, married to ——— Villiers, of Brokely, Leicestershire, and three sons, George, Simon, and Reginald.

Sir GEORGE DIGBY, was knighted in 28 Elizabeth, by Robert earl of Leicester, for his bravery at the siege of Zutphen, and married Abigail, daughter of Sir Arthur Heveningham (commonly Henningham) of Ketteringham, in Norfolk, knight-banneret, by whom he had issue,

1. George Digby.
2. Sir Robert Digby, ancestor to the present lord.
3. Philip Digby, who died without issue.
4. John Digby, created earl of Bristol by James I.
5. Elizabeth, wife of Sir Baldwin Wake, knight and baronet. He died February 4, 1586, and was succeeded by his eldest surviving son Sir Robert, of whom presently.

(First Earl) JOHN DIGBY, the youngest, was born in February 1580; and being sent by the lord Harrington to intimate to the king the designed insurrection of the gunpowder conspirators, was admitted a gentleman of the privy-chamber, and one of the king's carvers in 1605. On March 15, ensuing, he was knighted, and in April 1611, sent ambassador to the court of Spain, as he was again in 1614, and continued there till January 1615. On April 3, 1616, he was appointed vice-chamberlain of the household, and sworn of the privy-council. On April 16, 1617, he was commissioned to treat of a marriage between prince Charles, and the infanta Maria, of Spain, to which kingdom he repaired in July; and upon his return, the ensuing year, on November 25, was created baron Digby, of Sherborne, in the county of Dorset, the castle and manor of which the king had before granted him. In 1620, he was sent ambassador to the archduke Albert, and in the succeeding year to the emperor Ferdinand, and the duke of Bavaria, on the business of the Palatinate. In March 1622, he was again sent ambassador extraordinary to Spain, to treat of the marriage, and an alliance; and on September 15, 1622, was created earl of Bristol. His difference with the duke of Buckingham, and their mutual impeachment of each other, in 1624, may be seen in the history of those times. From thence he lived retired till the breaking out of the troubles in 1640, in which, at first, he sided with the parliament; but afterwards going over to the king, at the end of the war retired into France, lost his estate, and died at Paris, January 21, 1652. By his wife Beatrix, daughter of Charles Walcott, of Walcott, in Shropshire, esquire, and relict of Sir John Dive, of Bromham, in Bedfordshire, knight, he had two sons, and two daughters:

1. George lord Digby, his successor.
2. John Digby, who was a brave officer, and general of horse in the king's army. He afterwards retired to Pontoise in France, became a secular priest, and died after the restoration.
3. Mary, wife of Arthur Chichester earl of Donegal.
4. Abigail, wife of George Freke, esquire, without issue.

(Second Earl) GEORGE DIGBY, earl of Bristol, was elected to parliament for Dorsetshire, April 13, 1640, and was for some time the darling of the malecontents; but being appointed one of the committee to prepare a charge against Thomas earl of Strafford, he became his advocate, thinking him hardly dealt by, for which he was expelled the house; but took his place in the upper one, having been summoned by writ the preceding day; from that time he was pursued with virulence by the leading party; and after being made secretary of state, chosen high-steward of the university of Oxford, and constituted the king's lieutenant-general, north of Trent, he was excepted from pardon by the parliament, suffered much by the loss of his estate, and retired beyond sea. He was restored thereto after the restoration, and to his post of high-steward of the university of Oxford; but having changed his religion abroad, he was incapacitated from bearing any other office. In 1661, he was chosen a knight of the Garter; but died March 20, 1676, aged sixty-four. He married Anne, second daughter of Francis earl of Bedford, by whom he had two sons, and two daughters:

1. John Digby, his successor.
2. Francis Digby, slain in the great sea-fight with the Dutch, May 28, 1672, leaving no issue.
3. Diana, wife of baron Moll, a Flemish nobleman.
4. Anne, of Robert earl of Sunderland, and grandmother of Charles duke of Marlborough.

(Third and last Earl) JOHN DIGBY, earl of Bristol, was lord lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Dorset, in the reigns of James II. and William III. but leaving no issue, his title became extinct by his death, September 18, 1698.

P I T T, Earl of C H A T H A M.

THIS noble lord claims descent from NICHOLAS PITT, who is ancestor also to George Pitt, Esq; of Stratfield, Sea, who claims the barony of Morley and Mount-eagle, and is the representative of the elder branch. This Nicholas lived in the time of Henry VI. and was father of

WILLIAM PITT, who lived in the time of Henry VIII. and had issue,

JOHN PITT, who was clerk of the Exchequer in the reign of queen Elizabeth. By Joane, daughter of John Swayne, this gentleman had issue two daughters.

1. Agnes, married to Anthony Dennet.
2. Elizabeth married to Jonadab Shirley.

Also three sons.

1. Sir William Pitt, seated at Stapleton in Dorsetshire, who died May 27, 1636. By Elizabeth, daughter and coheir of Nicholas Cadbury, who died December 3, 1633, he became progenitor of the elder branch of this honourable family, and ancestor to George Pitt, Esq; already mentioned.

2. John Pitt, seated in Ireland.

3. Thomas Pitt. Which

THOMAS PITT was seated at Blandford in Dorsetshire in 1662, and marrying Priscilla, daughter of — Searle, of Hayle in Devonshire, had issue two daughters.

1. Temperance, the wife of — Cockram.
2. Margaret, the wife of Augustine Drake.

And five sons.

1. Robert Pitt, of Blandford, who married Margaret the daughter of John Guy.

2. John Pitt, of whom hereafter.

3. William Pitt.

4. Edward Pitt.

5. Christopher Pitt.

The second son,

JOHN PITT, was in holy orders, and resided at Blandford St. Mary's, where he was rector: he married a lady of the name of Gay, and had issue

THOMAS PITT, born at Blandford St. Mary, who was afterwards seated at Swallowfield in the county of Berks, and Bocconock in Cornwall.

This gentleman was, by queen Ann, appointed governor of Fort St. George in the East-Indies, where he resided many years, and where he purchased for 48,000 pagodas (20,400l. sterling) that extraordinary fine diamond weighing a hundred and twenty-seven carats, which he sold to the king of France for 135,000l. sterling, and which is to this day stiled Pitt's diamond.

In order to obviate any aspersions which might be cast upon his memory in regard to this purchase, as many attempts had already been made to depreciate his honour and integrity therein, the following solemn account of the whole transaction penned by himself is extant.

“ Since my coming to this melancholy place of Bergen, I have been often thinking of the most unparalleled villainy of William Frazer, Thomas Frederick, and Smapa, a black merchant, who brought a paper before governor Addison in council, insinuating, that I had unfairly got possession of a large diamond; which tended so much to the prejudice of my reputation and the ruin of my estate, that I thought necessary to keep by me the true relation how I purchased it in all respects, that so in case of sudden mortality, my children and friends may be apprised of the whole matter, and so be enabled thereby to put to silence and confound those, and all other villains, in their base attempts against either. I having not my books by me at present, I cannot be positive as to the time; but for the manner of purchasing it, I do here declare and assert, under my hand, in the presence of God Almighty, as I hope for salvation, through the merits and intercession of our Saviour Jesus Christ, that this is the truth, and, if it be not, let God deny it to me and my children for ever; which I would be so far from saying, much less leave it under my hand, that I would not be guilty of the least untruth in the relation of it for the riches and honour of the whole world.

“ About two or three years after my arrival at Madras, which was in July 1698, I heard there were large diamonds in the country to be sold, which I encouraged to be brought down, promising to be their chapman, if they would be reasonable therein;

therein; upon which Jamchund, one of the most eminent diamond merchants in those parts, came down about December, 1701, and brought with him a large rough stone, about three hundred and five Mangelms, and some small ones, which myself and others bought; but he asking a very extravagant price for the great one, I did not think of meddling with it; when he left it with me for some days, and then came and took it away again, and did so several times, not insisting upon less than 200,000 pagodas; and, as I best remember, I did not bid him above 30,000, and had little thoughts of buying it for that; I considered there were many and great risks to be run, not only in cutting it, but also whether it would prove foul or clean, or the water good; besides, I thought it too great an amount to be adventured home on one bottom: but Jamchund resolved to return speedily to his own country; so that, I best remember, it was in February following he came again to me (with Vincatty Chittee, who was always with him when I discoursed him about it) and pressed me to know whether I resolved to buy it, when he came down to 100,000 pagodas, and something under, before we parted, when we agreed upon a day to meet, and to make a final end thereof one way or other, which I believe was the latter end of the aforesaid month, or the beginning of March; when we accordingly met in the consultation-room, where, after a great deal of talk, I brought him down to 55,000 pagodas, and advanced to 45,000, resolving to give no more, and he likewise resolving not to abate, so delivered him up the stone, and we took a friendly leave of one another: Mr. Benyon was then writing in my closet, with whom I discoursed what had passed, and told him now I was clear of it; when about an hour after my servant brought me word that Jamchund and Vincatty Chittee were at the door, who being called in, they used a great many expressions in praise of the stone, and told me he had rather that I should buy it than anybody, and, to give an instance thereof, offered it for 50,000; so believing it must be a pennyworth, if it proved good, I offered to part the 5000 pagodas that were between us, which he would not hearken to, and was going out of the room again; when he turned back and told me that I should have it for 49,000; but I still adhered to what I had before offered him, when presently he came to 48,000, and made a solemn vow he would not part with it a pagoda under; when I went again into the closet to Mr. Benyon, and told him what had passed, saying, that if it was worth 47,500, it was worth 48,000*; so I closed with him for that sum, when he delivered me the stone, for which I paid him very honourably, as by my books appear. And I here farther call God to witness, that I never used any threatening word at any of our meetings to induce him to sell it me; and God himself knows it was never so much as in my thoughts so to do: since which I have had frequent and considerable dealings with this man, and trusted him with several sums of money, and ballanced several accounts with him, and left upwards of 2000 pagodas in his hands at my coming away: so, had I used the least indirect means to have got it from him, would not he have made himself satisfaction, when he had my money so often in his hands? Or would I have trusted him afterwards, as I did, preferable to all other diamond-merchants? As this is the truth, so I hope for God's blessing upon this and all my other affairs in this world, and eternal happiness hereafter. Written and signed by me, in Bergen, July 29, 1710.

THO. PITT."

Mr. Salmon, author of the Universal Traveller, says, p. 165, vol. i. That he was upon the spot at the time of this transaction, and is able to refute the scandalous stories raised on the governor about it.

In 1715 he was appointed a commissioner for building fifty new churches, and on July 6, 1716, constituted governor of Jamaica, whereupon his seat in parliament for Old Sarum (in com. Wilts, of which he was lord) being vacated, Sir William Strickland, Bart. was chosen in his room, and he was elected for Thirsk in Yorkshire. He married Jane, daughter of James Innis, son of Adam Innis, of Reid-hall, in the shire of Murray in Scotland (grandson of Sir Robert Innis, of Innis, in the said county, Bart.) by the lady Grisel Steuart, daughter of James lord Down, and earl of Murray, (who married Margaret, countess of Murray, daughter and heir of James Steuart, earl of Murray, natural son of James V. king of Scotland, and base-brother of queen Mary) and had issue by her (who died Jan. 10, 1727) three sons and two daughters, viz.

1. Robert Pitt, of Bocconock, in Cornwall, Esq; of whom hereafter.

2. Thomas, who in the years 1713, 1714, and 1722, was elected to parliament for the borough of Wilton, in the county of Wilts, and was a colonel of horse, and having married lady Frances, daughter and coheir of Robert Ridgeway, earl of Londonderry, (whose ancestor, Sir Thomas Ridgeway, in the reign of queen Elizabeth, was sent into Ireland, and there planted the first Protestant colony) was, by privy-seal, dated at St. James's, May 4, and by patent, at Dublin, June 3, 1719, created baron of Londonderry, in the kingdom of Ireland, and, in the year 1726, was further advanced to the titles of viscount of Galen-Ridgeway, and earl of Londonderry, in the said kingdom, by privy-seal dated at Kensington, September 7, and by patent at Dublin, October 8. In 1727, he was chosen member of parliament for Old Sarum; but his seat was vacated on his being constituted captain-general and commander in chief of his majesty's Leeward islands in America. He died at St. Christopher's on September 12, 1729, having issue by his said wife two sons and one daughter, Thomas and Ridgeway, successively earls of Londonderry, and lady Lucy, wife of Pierce Meyrick, of Bodorgan, in the county of Anglesea, Esq; by whom she had issue.

3. John Pitt, Esq; who served in the British parliament for the boroughs of Hindon, Old Sarum, and Camelford, and was a colonel in the first regiment of foot-guards. He married Mary, eldest daughter of Thomas, and sister of Thomas, viscounts Falconberg, and died on Feb. 9, 1744.

4. Lucy, married February 24, 1712, to James Stanhope, Esq; created earl Stanhope (mother by him of Philip earl Stanhope) after whose death she had a grant of an annuity of 2600l. on the Irish establishment, for 31 years, dated Aug. 16, 1722; but deceasing on February 24, 1723, was interred by her husband, at Chevening in Kent.

5. Essex, married to Charles Cholmondeley, of Vale-royal, in the county of Chester, Esq; member in parliament for that county.

Their father departed this life April 28, 1726. We now return to ROBERT PITT, of Bocconnock, Esq; the eldest son, who served in parliament in the year 1713, for the borough of Old Sarum, and in 1722 for Oakhampton, in which year he was appointed one of the clerks of the green-cloth to his late majesty, when prince of Wales. He married Harriot, sister of John Villiers, earl of Grandison (which lady died at Paris, October 21, N. S. 1736) and by her had issue two sons and five daughters, viz.

1. Thomas Pitt, of Bocconnock, in Cornwall, Esq; who was lord-warden of the Stanneries, and steward of the Duchy, in Cornwall and Devon, to Frederick, late prince of Wales. He was member in four parliaments for Oakhampton, and in three of them was elected also for Old Sarum. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Lyttleton, of Hagley, in Worcestershire, bart. and sister of the present George lord Lyttleton (by his wife Christian, sister of Richard Temple, late lord viscount Cobham) by which lady, who died on June 5, 1750, he had issue, two daughters, Amelia, married to William Spry, L. L. D. and Christian, married to Thomas Saunders, of Brill, in Bucks, esquire, governor of Fort St. George in the East Indies; and one son, Thomas Pitt, born March 3, 1737, member in the last and present parliaments for Oakhampton, appointed one of the lords of the admiralty, in 1764. His father died in July 1760.

2. William Pitt, of whom hereafter.

Of the daughters,

1. Harriot, married Sir William Corbet, of Stoke, in Shropshire, bart.

2. Catherine, married Robert Needham, of Ireland, Esq;

3. Ann, was maid of honour to queen Caroline, and is now privy purse to the princess dowager of Wales.

4. Elizabeth, married — Hannam.

5. Mary.

Their father deceased May 21, 1727.

(First and present earl.) WILLIAM PITT, the younger son, served in parliament for the borough of Old Sarum, in the 9th parliament of Great Britain, the port of Seaford in the 10th, the borough of Aldborough in the 11th, and the city of Bath, in the 12th, till he was advanced to the peerage.

In February 1737, he was appointed a groom of the bedchamber to his royal highness Frederick, prince of Wales, which resigning in April, 1745, he was constituted on the 22d of February, 1746, joint vice-treasurer of Ireland; and on May 6, 1746, treasurer and paymaster general of the army; and on the 28th of the same month was sworn member of his majesty's most honourable privy council. For his opposing the measures of the ministry, in parliament, with an eloquence and force of reasoning seldom equalled, her grace Sarah, late duchess dowager of Marlborough, left him a legacy of ten thousand pounds, upon account, as her will expresses it, of his merit in the noble defence he has made for the support of the laws of England, and to prevent the ruin of his country. Having resigned his post of paymaster-general of the forces, he was, on December 4, 1756, appointed secretary of state for the southern department in the room of the right honourable Henry Fox; which post he held until October 5, 1761, (except the small interval from April 9, 1757, to June 29, the same year) with such honour to himself, such glory to the nation, and so greatly to the satisfaction of his sovereign and the people in general, as scarcely any minister in this kingdom before experienced.

On October 5, 1761, he resigned the seals of his office of secretary of state, and they were given to Charles, late earl of Egremont; but his majesty, in consideration of his great and important services, was graciously pleased to direct a warrant to be prepared for granting to the lady Hester Pitt, his wife, a barony of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title, of baroness of Chatham to herself, and baron of Chatham to her heirs male; and to confer on him, the said right honourable William Pitt, an annuity of three thousand pounds, during his own life, and that of lady Hester Pitt, and their son the honourable John Pitt, Esq.

On July 30, 1766, his majesty was pleased to grant unto him, and his heirs male, the dignities of a viscount and earl of Great Britain, by the name, stile, and title of viscount Pitt, of Burton-Pynsent, in the county of Somerset, and earl of Chatham, in the county of Kent, and to deliver to his lordship the custody of the privy-seal.

Some time before, a large estate had been bequeathed to his lordship by Sir William Pynsent, of Burton-Pynsent aforesaid, bart. in consideration of his great and patriotic behaviour, without the least solicitation or knowledge whatever of the deceased.

On October 16, 1754, his lordship married Hester, daughter of Richard Grenville, and sister of Richard, the present earl Temple, and by her ladyship, (now baroness Chatham,) has had issue.

1. John, viscount Pitt, born on September 10, 1756;

2. William, born on May 28, 1759;

3. James, born on May 24, 1761; and two daughters, the eldest Hester, born on October 19, 1755; and the other

Harriot, on April 15, 1758.

LIGONIER, Earl LIGONIER.

THE family of Ligonier, illustrious from their nobility, but more so from their virtue and bravery, have been, for many centuries, seated in the province of Languedoc, in the kingdom of France: but, professing the reformed religion, they were excluded from the call to, or exercise of those public offices, which otherwise their rank intitled them to in the state.

Of this renowned family was the present earl Ligonier's father, the noble

JOHN LEWIS DE LIGONIER, lord of Monseuquet, Viarou, Allôt, &c. who departed this life in 1696, leaving issue,

1. Abel de Ligonier, who is now living, 1769, and enjoys the same lordships;

2. John, now earl Ligonier, &c.

3. Anthony Ligonier, who was major in Harison's regiment, and, after bravely serving in several campaigns, under the great duke of Marlborough, died unmarried.

4. Francis Ligonier, having passed through the several gradations of preferment in the army, in all which he behaved with that honour, courage, and magnanimity, which are so distinguishingly the characteristics of his family, was appointed colonel of the regiment of dragoons, the former commander of which, the brave colonel James Gardiner, fell at the battle of Preston-pans, Sept. 21, 1745. His promotion, says the editor of Collins's Peerage, was accompanied with this remarkable declaration of his late most gracious majesty, 'I will give them a colonel that will make them fight.' Colonel Ligonier, though he had been long in an ill state of health, could not be persuaded to desert the service of his sovereign at such a critical juncture, and was indefatigable in inspiring new spirits into his regiment: and although he was become so extremely bad, as to be scarce able to sit his horse, no intreaties of his friends could prevent his performing further his duty, at the unfortunate battle at Falkirk, on January 17, 1746; but this was the last effort of his generous soul, for he died the next day at Edinburgh, regretted by the whole army. He married Ann, daughter of — Murray, and widow of colonel Freeman, of Ireland. By this lady, who died in 1747, he had issue a daughter, Frances, and a son, Edward Ligonier, who is captain and colonel of a company in the first regiment of foot-guards, aid de camp to his majesty, and groom of the bedchamber to his royal highness the duke of Gloucester. On August 9, 1763, he was appointed secretary to the extraordinary embassy to the catholic king. He served five campaigns, in the late war, under prince Ferdinand of Brunswick; and, being aid de camp to his serene highness, was dispatched by him to his majesty, with the important advice of the defeat of the French army, at the memorable battle of Minden, August 1, 1759. He married, in January, 1766, Mary, daughter of the honourable George Pitt, of Stratfieldsea, in Hants, esquire, ambassador at the court of Turin, and member for Dorsetshire.

(First and present Earl.) JOHN LIGONIER, of whom we are now to treat, being sent to England, with his brothers, for education, and emulous of the glory of his noble ancestors, went early into the service of the English crown; and, at the age of fifteen, displayed such innate bravery, as perhaps has seldom been heard of: for, at that time of life, being a volunteer, under the great duke of Marlborough, at the attack of the citadel of Liege, which was carried by storm, on October 23, 1702, he, with another volunteer, the honourable Allen Wentworth (youngest brother of Thomas then lord Raby, afterwards earl of Strafford) were the two first who mounted the breach, and Mr. Wentworth was killed by his side.

Notwithstanding his lordship's youth, he was, in February, 1703, permitted to purchase the command of a company in lord North's regiment, with which he was present at the glorious battles of Schellenberg and Blenheim (or Hockstet) fought on July 13, and August 13, N. S. 1704; in the latter of which engagement every captain in the regiment was slain except himself, and lord North lost his arm.

At the siege of Menin, in August 1706, his lordship, being one of the captains of the English grenadiers, who bravely made themselves masters of the counterscarp, after a gallant defence by the besieged, was raised to the rank of major, and appointed major of brigade.

During the course of that glorious war, his lordship was, moreover, present, and behaved with with his wonted intrepidity, in the battles of Ramillies, Oudenarde, Wynendale, and Tenieres, or Malplaquet; at the last of which, twenty-two shot went through his lordship's clothes, without wounding his person. He also assisted, either in Flanders or Spain, at 22 great sieges, viz. those of Tournay, Douay, Menin, Ghent, Aire, Lisle, St. Venant, &c. &c. &c. At the attack of Vigo, under lord Cobham, in the year 1719, his lordship was a colonel and adjutant-general. He took the city of Ponto Vedro, a large place; and, at the head of one hundred grenadiers, reduced Fort Marin, in which was a garrison of 200 men, with 20 pieces of cannon.

In the war which was declared against Spain, October 19, 1739, and against the French king, on March 31, 1744, and which was terminated by the treaty of peace signed at Aix-la-Chapelle, October 7, 18, 1748, his lordship bore a very distinguishing share. At the glorious battle of Dettingen, fought in June 1743, being then lieutenant-general, he was, with general Honeywood, lieutenant-general Campbell, &c. placed at the head of the first line of the cavalry; and, after the retreat of the French, his lordship was ordered, with lieutenant-general Campbell, to pass the morass, and march with the horse to Dettingen, which they effected, but found that village abandoned: after which they marched to Wilsheim, which was also evacuated, though barricaded all round, and loop-holes made through all the walls and tops of the houses.

In this action, his lordship's regiment, (the 8th) of horse, suffered much, and gained great reputation: and his lordship's brother, their lieutenant-colonel, was wounded in the thigh.

After the victory, his lordship (with other generals) had the honour of knighthood conferred upon them, by his majesty, under the royal standard.

At the battle of Fontenoy, May 11, N. S. 1745, his lordship commanded the whole infantry, and the honour they acquired that day, was principally owing to his lordship's conduct and bravery.

The famous attack of the French intrenchments was commanded by his lordship in person, and every thing gave way to British intrepidity; the troops remaining masters of the field of battle for upwards of two hours: and, could the brave and royal commander, the duke of Cumberland, have persuaded the Dutch to imitate the example and bravery of British troops, the victory might have proved as great as that at Blenheim. Nor did his lordship, though in so much imminent danger, think of a retreat, until he received a written order for that purpose from the duke; when, having prepared every thing in obedience thereto, his lordship, before he left the field, sent a card to marshal Saxe, laconically desiring him to take a humane care of his dead and wounded, and promising to repay the obligation, with the same care of the French, in such a situation, the first opportunity that offered. His lordship soon received a card from the marshal in return, acquainting him that he laid his message before the king his master, who had ordered him to comply with it in its utmost extent. After the retreat, his royal highness received his lordship with such tender marks of affection and approbation, as his lordship, no doubt, considered as a full compensation for the difficulties and dangers he had undergone. In this dreadful attack, major-general Sinclair, the earl of Albemarle, Sir Charles Howard, general Ponsonby (who was unfortunately killed) brigadier Cholmondeley, and other general officers, behaved with most extraordinary gallantry. His lordship received three shots through his clothes; but, from that providential protection he had so often experienced, he escaped without a wound.

In the year 1746, his lordship commanded in chief the British forces, and all the troops in British pay, in Flanders, where he arrived on July 8, N. S. A council of war was immediately held in the camp of the allied army, at Terhyde, wherein it was resolved to march towards the bishopric of Liege, to facilitate the junction with a great reinforcement, from Germany, under count Palfi. Accordingly they began their march on the 17th, and on the 23d were joined, at Peer, by that reinforcement. From Peer, the army marched to Hasseldt, where it incamped on the 26th.

After various marches and countermarches, an action happened between the right wing of the French and the left of the allied army, at Roucoux, near Liege; in which, as on every other occasion during the campaign, his lordship displayed his judgment and intrepidity. He himself led the whole left wing; and, when some battalions gave way, after great loss, and the most vigorous defence, his lordship rallied and brought them again to the charge: and, at the close of the action, made a retreat, that will ever do honour to his lordship's military skill; a retreat much admired and greatly praised by marshal Saxe, the enemy's general. His lordship himself gives the best idea of this action, in a letter dated at his camp at Lesser, October 12, to the earl of Sandwich at Breda, which is as follows:

' My Lord,

' For fear the relation which the French may publish of what passed yesterday, should make too great an impression, I would not, though on a march, miss the post, in communicating to your excellency, that marshal Saxe, yesterday, attacked our army on the side of the left wing, where the Dutch, after long resistance, and after behaving extremely well, were obliged to yield to superior numbers. Three villages occupied by eight battalions, English, Hanoverians, and Hessians, being attacked by 54 battalions of French, after repulsing them twice, were, in their turn, forced to give way; but the English cavalry had, all along the advantage. I think, that, properly speaking, this affair cannot be called a battle, for I doubt if the third part of our army was engaged. The cannonading was terrible for about two hours: I look upon our loss to be between 4 and 5000, and that of the French double the number. The army retired in the best order that could be. As we suspected the town of Liege to be betrayed to the enemy, it was impossible for us to remain in our camp. My letter is written in great haste.

I have the honour to be, &c.'

In the battle of Val, or Kistelt, fought on July 2, N. S. 1747, between the left wing of the allied army, army, and the French, his lordship had a very remarkable share; and commanded the left wing of the cavalry, which, under his orders, behaved with the utmost bravery and fortitude. He sent, by lieutenant-colonel Forbes, the first advice to his royal highness the duke of Cumberland, of the enemy's seeming, by their motions, to have formed with a design of attacking our left wing, and that thereupon he had ordered all to arms: and, indeed, a more obstinate engagement can scarce be paralleled. His lordship gave most convincing proofs of that great skill and judgment he possessed in military science; and his spirit was as well seconded by all the troops under his command. The first charge with the whole wing of cavalry was very successful, having the enemy in flank, in spite of their superiority: but his lordship was, by an order, which was never cleared up, stopped in this successful attempt. The second charge was with only 10 or 12 squadrons, with which his lordship attacked the whole right wing of the enemy's cavalry, then in motion to fall upon our retiring infantry. This sudden and unexpected attack, in which 20 or 25 of the French squadrons were immediately overthrown, so disconcerted the French, that they left off the pursuit of the foot, and thought only of their own safety. As it is impossible in so brisk a charge, that troops should keep their order, they were at last overcome with numbers: and his lordship, endeavouring to join a squadron of the Inniskilling dragoons, which were then in order, fell into a squadron of French carabineers, and was made prisoner. The chevalier de Lagé, who commanded the squadron, accepted his parole, and neither took his pistols or sword: and gave two of his men to conduct him to the prince Clermont, who carried him to marshal Saxe; and that illustrious general introduced his lordship to the king, saying, 'Sir, I present to your majesty a man, who, by a glorious action, has disconcerted all my project.' The French monarch received his lordship with great marks of distinction; and bestowed many commendations on his behaviour that day; his majesty having seen the whole affair from the hill of Herderen, about 300 paces from the place of action. Proposals of peace were made through his lordship, but they were not accepted.

In this engagement, which was by his royal highness's approbation, and which some people were pleased to call rash, was wounded and taken count Isenbourg, general, commanding the Hessians. General Hardenbourg of the Hanoverians was killed; captain Henry Campbell, second son to John duke of Argyle, and aid de camp to his lordship, was killed, and captain Keppel, another of his lordship's aid de camps, was much wounded, and taken. General Bland was wounded, and lord Robert Sutton and colonel Conway were taken. The ten or twelve squadrons, concerned in this affair, behaved with the greatest intrepidity: the greys, the duke's, and Rothes's dragoons, suffered much, and acquired immortal honour.

His lordship was soon after set at liberty upon his parole; and, when exchanged, returned to his duty with the allied army.

It is not proper here to enter into the various debates that arose relative to this battle; but we shall transcribe the following passage from a masterly writer*:—"General Ligonier, Curtius like, sacrificed himself to save the army, by leaping into the gulph with what was most valuable in it—yet this attack was openly condemned in our army, before the general's return from captivity in that of the enemy. The honour of saving the army was envied him by those who had reaped none themselves. But the service was too glaring not to establish its own merit: nor was the testimony of the enemy wanting to acknowledge and admire what had checked their pursuit."

In October the allied and French armies went into winter-quarters; and, on November 13, his lordship arrived in London from Flanders.

In the late war, his lordship did not serve in person, the nature of his high employment not permitting it: but the glorious successes which attended our arms in all parts of the world may justly, in great measure, be attributed to his lordship's wise plans; his co-operation with the great men then at the head of affairs; and his just regard to real merit in all his recommendations and appointments.

It is but justice to such superior virtue, to observe, at the close of this brief recapitulation of his lordship's great and interesting transactions, during a long life of usefulness and benevolence to mankind in general, and to this country in particular; that as his lordship's uncommon talents and bravery have equally entitled him to the favour of his sovereigns, and the love of the public; so by a most rare felicity, amidst all the rage of successive contending parties, through every change of measures and administration, his character was never once mentioned with disrespect, nor one of his actions arraigned. As indisputable abilities, and great skill in his profession, have raised his lordship to the highest honours, those honours never were envied him: and at the time these lines are written, it would be difficult to find a heart so bad to conceive, or a hand or tongue so malignant to write or speak any thing derogatory of his lordship's reputation, either in affairs of the state or army.

In consideration of his lordship's great and eminent services, his late most gracious majesty was pleased, on December 10, 1757, to order letters patent to be passed under the great seal of Ireland, containing a grant to him and his heirs male, of the dignity of a viscount of the kingdom of Ireland, by the stile and title of viscount Ligonier, of Inniskilling, in the said kingdom.

From the same considerations, his present majesty was graciously pleased to order, on May 1, 1762, like letters patent to be passed, as aforesaid, containing a grant unto his lordship and his heirs male, and, in default of such issue, to lieutenant-colonel Edward Ligonier and his heirs male, of the dignity of a viscount, of the said kingdom, by the name, stile, and title of viscount Ligonier, of Clonmel, in the said kingdom.

Moreover, still further to reward his lordship's great services, his majesty was pleased on April

* A brief Narrative of the late Campaigns in Germany and Flanders, in a Letter to a Member of Parliament.

19, 1763, to grant unto his lordship, and his heirs male, the dignity of a baron of the kingdom of Great-Britain, by the name, stile, and title of lord Ligonier, baron of Ripley, in the county of Surry.

Upon his lordship's resignation of the post of commander in chief of his majesty's forces, his majesty was pleased most graciously, and of his own pure regard to his lordship's great abilities, and extraordinary services to the nation, by letters patent, dated September 6, 1766, further to advance his lordship to the dignity of an earl of the kingdom of Great-Britain (to him and the heirs male of his body, lawfully begotten) by the name, stile and title of earl Ligonier.

His lordship was, in the year 1743, elected a knight of the most honourable order of the Bath, and installed on October 20, 1744, in Henry VIIIth's chapel, in Westminster-abbey.

In November, 1747, his lordship was constituted general of horse, over the heads of eight or nine senior generals, who did not then serve. On the death of field-marshal Wade, his lordship, in March 1748, was, without any application from himself, being then in Flanders, elected in his room one of the representatives for the city of Bath, to the tenth parliament of Great-Britain; and his lordship sat in the two succeeding parliaments for the same city, until he was called up to the house of Peers.

In April, 1748, his lordship was constituted and appointed lieutenant-general of the ordnance, upon the decease of the said field-marshal.

His lordship, in August, 1749, was appointed colonel of the second regiment of dragoon-guards, in the room of John, duke of Montagu, deceased; and in April, 1750, was constituted governor of the island of Guernsey, &c.

In February, 1751, his lordship was appointed colonel of the royal regiment of horse-guards, commonly called the blues, in the room of his grace the duke of Marlborough, deceased; and, in 1752, was constituted governor of Plymouth.

On October 29, 1747, his lordship was constituted and appointed commander in chief of his majesty's land forces in Great-Britain: and on December 3, the same year, his lordship was likewise constituted and appointed field-marshal of all and singular his majesty's forces, and also colonel of the first regiment of foot-guards.

His majesty was further pleased, on July 3, 1759, to grant to his lordship the office of master-general of the ordnance, arms, armories, and habilements of war, in the room of his grace Charles, duke of Marlborough, deceased.

In this office, his present majesty was most graciously pleased to continue his lordship, on March 7, 1761, and also in those of commander in chief of the forces, and colonel of the first regiment of foot-guards. His present majesty was most graciously pleased to continue his lordship one of the members of his most honourable privy-council, which his lordship had been several years during the late reign.

His lordship (it is remarkable) at the conclusion of the late war, was general of horse, master of the ordnance, colonel of the royal regiment of horse-guards, and field-marshal and commander in chief of the forces, &c. but now only enjoys the military offices of field-marshal of his majesty's forces, and colonel of the first regiment of foot-guards. His lordship is the only peer now in the house of lords, raised by his military services, and the only general officer that purchased the regiment he commands.

CAMPBELL, Lord SUNDRIDGE.

THIS noble family, derived from a series of illustrious ancestors, was possessed of Lochow, in Argyleshire, according to the traditional accounts of the bards and sanachies, as early as the time of king Fergus II. who restored the monarchy of Scotland, A. D. 404. The first appellation they used was O-Dwbin, assumed from Diarmed O-Dwbin, one of their ancestors, a brave and warlike man, and in the Irish language his descendants are called to this time, Scol Diarmed, that is, the posterity and offspring of Diarmed. From this Diarmed O-Dwbin the bards have recorded a long series of the barons of Lochow, whose actions they tell us were very renowned both for conduct and valour.

PAUL O-DWBIN, Lord of Lochow, called Paul in Spuran, so denominated from his being the king's treasurer, having no male issue, his estate went to his daughter Eva, who married

GILESPICK O-DWBIN, a relation of her own, who changed the name first from O-Dwbin to Cambel, to preserve and perpetuate the memory of a noble and heroic piece of service performed by him to the crown of France, in the reign of king Malcolm Canmore. By this lady he left a son,

DUNCAN, who was lord of Lochow, and was the father of

COLIN, and he again of

ARCHIBALD, called Gilespick, who was living in 1215, and by Finetta, daughter of John Frazer, lord of Tweedale, was father of

DUNCAN, baron of Lochow.

This last mentioned

DUNCAN, was, by his wife of the name of Cummy, father of another

GILESPICK CAMPBELL, knight, lord of Lochow, who married a daughter of William de Somerville, baron of Carnwarth, whose son and heir,

SIR COLLIN MOOR, called Dominus Colinus Campbell, Miles, filius quandam Domini Gileaspick Campbell, did acquire from Sir William Lindsay, knight, the lands of Symontoun, in Airshire; the reddendo of which he made over to the monks of Newbottle, Die Martis in crastino beati Clementis Martyris & Pontificus, Anno 1293. He was also one of the great men who were summoned to Berwick on the part of Robert de Bruce, in the competition with John de Baliol for the crown, on the demise of queen Margaret.

The particular history of the family of Argyle represents this Sir Colin Moor to have been a very renowned and warlike chieftain, and that he was slain in a conflict with a great neighbour of his own, the lord of Lorn, 1294: his death occasioned great bloodshed in those parts, and kindled such a flame betwixt the two families of Lochow and Lorn, as was not extinguished for many years after, even so long as the Argadii, lords of Lorn existed.

From this Colin it is that the head of the family of Argyle is called by the Irish, Mac-Callan More. By his wife, a lady of the family of the Sinclairs, he had three sons,

1. Sir Neil, his successor.

2. Sir Donald Campbell, of Redhouse, of whom the family of Loudon, and the other cadets of this illustrious branch of the Campbells, derive themselves.

3. John Campbell.

SIR NEIL CAMPBELL, his eldest son, was honoured with knighthood by king Alexander III. at the end of his reign; but his achievements are not particularized till the year 1292. On the demise of queen Margaret, he was one of the great men of Scotland, summoned to Berwick on the part of Robert de Bruce, when he and all the other competitors for the crown had referred the decision of their respective claims to Edward I. of England; and when that prince declared in favour of John de Baliol, Sir Neil Campbell did so far acquiesce in the decision, as to continue faithful to king John, till that unhappy prince unkinged himself by an inglorious surrender of the independency of the crown to the king of England, whom he acknowledged superior and direct lord of Scotland.

But no sooner did king Robert Bruce assert his title to the crown, and form a rational project of recovering his own right, and of redeeming his country from its subjection to a foreign power, then Sir Neil Campbell was among the earliest patriots who first resorted to him, owned his title, and gave so many proofs of his zeal and merit, for the liberty and honour of his country, and of his loyalty to that heroic prince, that he was thought most worthy, and pitched on to command a party of loyalists sent to Argyleshire, to curb and over-awe the lord of Lorn, who was a declared enemy to his country, and of consequence to the Brucian title: and he performed that service committed to him with honour and success, insomuch that in a short time he recovered the countries of Argyle and Lorn, and brought them to submit to king Robert, notwithstanding the joint efforts of the lord Lorn, and his numerous accomplices on the contrary.

Sir Neil stuck close to king Robert, and was among the few Scots patriots that accompanied him to Scoon, and assisted at the solemnity of his coronation, 1306. After which he gave many signal signal instances of his steadfastness and loyalty to that monarch, even in his worst circumstances: for when he was very far from being firmly established on the throne, Sir Neil Campbell entered into an association with Sir Gilbert Hay, and Sir Alexander Seaton; wherein, in a most solemn manner, they bound themselves to defend, till the last period of their lives, the liberties of their country, and right of Robert Bruce their king, against all mortals, French, English, and Scots; to which they appended their seals, at the abbey of Cambuskenneth, September 9, 1308.

In 1314, he was one of the commissioners on the part of Scotland, authorized to treat with the English for a peace, which at that time took not its desired effect: and the next ensuing year he was one of the barons at the parliament held at Aire, where they made an entail of the crown to king Robert, and his heirs. About which time, in consideration of his good services, and signal loyalty, he obtained a grant of several lands, then in the crown, by the forfeiture of those who adhered to the interest of Baliol; and to oblige him the more, the king bestowed on him the lady Mary Bruce, his sister, in marriage. He departed this life in the year 1315, leaving issue two sons,

1. Colin, his successor.

2. John Campbell, who was by king David Bruce dignified with the title of earl of Athol; but dying without issue, the honour went no further in the family.

Which

SIR COLIN CAMPBELL of Lochow, began early to distinguish himself for military achievements. He was in the expedition made into Ireland, in 1316, in behalf of Edward Bruce, then king of that realm, where he behaved with exceeding gallantry, and performed many signal services: in consideration whereof he obtained a grant of diverse lands in Argyleshire, by a charter yet extant; and having faithfully demeaned himself during the whole course of king Robert's reign, he continued no less steadfast to king David his son; for whose service, even when his affairs were looked on to be lost, he raised four thousand men, and took the castle of Dunoon, then in the hands of the English: for which notable service, when that prince came to be established on the throne, he made him hereditary governor thereof, which his descendants still enjoy.

He married a daughter of the family of Lennox, by whom he had three sons and a daughter, viz.

1. Archibald, his successor.

2. John Campbell, ancestor of the branch of Barbreck, of whom descended Campbell of Succouch.

3. Sir Dougal Campbell, who lost his estate for adhering to Edward Baliol.

Alicea, his daughter, was married to Alan Lauder, of Hatton*.

And departing this life about the year 1340, was succeeded by

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, his son, who constantly adhered to king David, during his captivity in England, after the battle of Durham; and that prince, on his return, to reward his loyalty, bestowed on him several lands then in the crown, by the forfeiture of Sir Dougal Campbell, his own brother, 1357. He married first Mary a daughter of the house of Monteith, by whom he had no issue; and secondly Mary, daughter of Sir John Laumont, by whom he had Colin, his successor.

Which

SIR COLIN CAMPBELL obtained from king David II. a charter, ratifying the alienation made by Christian, daughter and heir of Sir Dougal Campbell, of the lands of Craignish, to be holden of him and his heirs in as ample manner as Duncan Mackdwyn, his ancestor, held the barony of Lochow, which bears date March 25, 1370. He was employed by king Robert II. in restraining the incursions of the Highlanders, who then infested the western parts of the realm, whom he reduced to the king's obedience: in consideration whereof, he obtained from the said king diverse lands yet in the family.

He married † Margaret, daughter of Sir John Drummond, of Stobhall, and sister to queen Annabel Drummond, by whom he had two sons,

1. Duncan his successor.

2. Colin, founder of the family of Ardkinglass, of whom Sir James Campbell, baronet, is lineal heir; and of Ardkinglass, the families of Arneten, Dunoon, Carrick, Skipnish, Blytyswood, Shawfield, Rachane, Auchvillen, and Dergachie are branches ‡.

SIR DUNCAN CAMPBELL, eldest son of Sir Colin, being a person of great parts, arrived to very high advancements as well in honour as estate: he married first the lady Margery Stuart, daughter of Robert, duke of Albany, governor of Scotland, and improved the opportunity of his near alliance with Murdoch, duke of Albany, governor, while king James I. was detained prisoner in England, so far, that he prevailed with him to ransom and restore the king to his father's throne. This prudent prince, discerning so much his abilities, constituted him one of his privy-council, and his justiciar, and lieutenant within the shire of Argyle: and he was continued in the same office by king James II. who advanced him to the dignity of a lord of parliament, by the title of lord Campbell, 1445. His works of piety were great and many: he gave in pure alms to the monks of the abbey of Sandale, in Kintyre, the lands of Blainnatiber, for the safety of his soul, and founded the collegiate church of Kilmun, by his charter, August 4, 1442.

This noble lord left issue by Margery his first wife, aforesaid, daughter of Robert, duke of Albany, three sons,

1. Cælestine, who died without issue.

2. Archibald, who married in his father's time Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Somervell, of

* He had a natural son, Neil, of whom the Campbells of Melfort derive their descent.

† The continuator of Collins says he married Mary Campbell, a lady of his own family; if so he must have had two wives, for his descendants issued from the lady mentioned above.

‡ He had likewise two natural sons, Dougal, progenitor of the family of Dunstaffnage, of whom the Campbells of Erdlin, and the Campbells of Balvie are descended.

Carnwath,

Carnwath, ancestor of the lord Somervell, by whom he had a son, Colin, who succeeded his grandfather.

3. Sir Colin, who was first of that branch of the family of Glenurchie, now dignified with the title of earl of Breadalbin.

By his second wife Margaret, daughter of Sir John Stuart, of Blackhall, natural son of king Robert III. he had three sons,

1. Duncan, first of the branch of Auchinbreak, and hath produced the Campbels of Glencardel, Glensadale, Kilduskland, Kilmore, wester Keams, Kilberry, and Dana.

2. Neil, who was ancestor of the Campbels of Ellengreg.

3. Arthur, from whom issued the old Campbels of Ottar, extinct.

The lord Duncan departing this life in 1453, was buried in the church of Kilmun, where there is a noble monument erected over him, with the statue of himself as big as the life, and an inscription.

To the said Duncan, lord Campbel, succeeded his grandson and heir, COLIN CAMPBEL, who was created earl of Argyle by James II. in 1457, and was in the reign of James III. employed in the highest offices of state, being successively privy-seal, master of the household, and lord chancellor.

In 1465, 5 Edw. IV. he and others had the king of England's protection and safe-conduct, for one year coming, on an embassy, with 200 persons in their retinue. His commission from James, king of Scotland (wherein he had the title of master of his household) bears date at Down in Menteith, November 28, 1465; which impowers him to treat with the ambassadors of the king of England at Newcastle, on December next, about an alliance, as also about a truce or cessation of arms. In the year 1482, the realm of Scotland being invaded by the duke of Gloucester, at the intercession of the duke of Albany, who was banished the kingdom, he was one of the lords, who, in order to prevent the desolation of the realm, signed a pardon to the said duke, whereby he and his followers regained the possession of their estates. And to satisfy the king of England, who had been deceived in a promise of marriage between his daughter and their king's eldest son, it was agreed on by an obligatory instrument, made by the provost and burgeses of Edinburgh, that either the said marriage should be compleated, or a sum of money be paid to him; at the signing of which, he was one of the lords present.

He was in no less favour with king James IV. after his accession to the throne (though without having any particular hand in the contrivances and barbarous actions which were exercised in order thereto) who constituted him again chancellor, in 1488. And he enjoyed that office 'till his death, in 1492.

He married Isabel, one of the daughters and coheirs of John Stuart, lord Lorn, by whom he had two sons,

1. Archibald, his successor.

2. Thomas, of whom descended the family of Lundie, in Angus;

Likewise seven daughters,

1. Margaret, married to George, lord Seton, and had issue.

2. Isabel, to William, master of Drummond, son and heir of John, lord Drummond, and had issue.

3. Helen, to Hugh, first earl of Eglintoun, and had issue.

4. Elizabeth, to John, second lord Oliphant, and had issue.

5. Mary, to Æneas Macdonald, of Tailzie, natural son and heir to John, earl of Ross.

6. N. N. married to Alexander M'Kensie, of Kentail.

7. Catharine, married to Tarquil M'Leod.

ARCHIBALD, second earl of Argyle, his son, succeeded him, being a nobleman of great accomplishments: he was by king James IV. promoted to be chancellor of Scotland, in 1494; lord chamberlain, in 1495; and master of the household, in 1498. At the battle of Flodden, he commanded the van-guard of the army, and behaving himself with great valour, was there killed, with his royal master king James IV. and the flower of his nobility, September 9, 1513, leaving issue by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of John, first earl of Lenox, four sons,

1. Colin, his successor.

2. Archibald Campbel, of Skipnish, whose line failed in an heir female, in the reign of queen Mary.

3. Sir John Campbel, who came to the possession of a fair estate by the marriage of Morella, daughter and sole heir of John Cadler of that ilk, by whom he was ancestor of the Campbels of Calder: of this branch of the family of Argyle, are the Campbels of Archattan, Airds, and Cluniers descended.

4. Donald, who was abbot of Couper, of whom the Campbels of Kythack in Angus derive their descent.

Besides these sons he had likewise four daughters;

1. Margaret, married to John, lord Ereskin, and had issue.

2. Isabel, to Gilbert, second earl of Cassils, and had issue.

3. Mary, to John Stewart, earl of Athol, and had issue.

4. Jane, to Sir John Laumont, of Inneryne, and had issue.

5. Ann, to Simon, master of Lovat.

COLIN, third earl of Argyle, his son, was named one of the four counsellors to king James V. in 1525: in 1528, he was constituted lieutenant of the borders, and warden of the marches; which office he discharged so much to the king's satisfaction, that he obtained, first a grant of the lordship of Abernethy, then in the crown by Angus's forfeiture, and after, an ample confirmation of the hereditary sheriffship of Argyleshire, justiciary of Scotland, and hereditary master of the household.

He married Janet, daughter of Alexander Gordon, earl of Huntley, by whom he had three sons, and one daughter, viz.

1. Archibald, who succeeded him.

2. John Campbel, from whom is descended the branch of Lochnel, which produced the Campbels of Balerne and Stonfield.

3. Alexander Campbel, who was dean of Murray.

4. Margaret, married first to James Stuart, earl of Murray, natural son of king James IV. and then to John, earl of Sutherland; and departing parting this life in 1542, was succeeded by Archibald, his son and heir.

Which,

ARCHIBALD, fourth earl, was one of the peers who, on the death of king James V. entered into an association to oppose the then intended match betwixt queen Mary and king Edward VI. of England, and consequential union of the crowns, as tending 'to the high dishonour, perpetual skaith, damage, and ruin of the liberty and nobleness of this realm,' as it runs in the original, bearing date the 14th of July, 1543.

On the breaking out of the war with England, he remarkably distinguished himself by his valour and conduct, both at the battle of Pinkie, A. D. 1547, and at the siege of Haddingtoun, 1548, in defence of his queen and country, related at large by our historians. This noble lord was the first of his quality who embraced the protestant religion in the beginning of the reformation, of which he was a hearty promoter, and continued steadfast in the profession thereof: when dying, he recommended to his son, to propagate the preaching of the gospel according to the reformed principles, and the suppressing Romish superstition and idolatry. He died A. D. 1558, leaving issue, by Helen Hamilton, his first wife, daughter of James, earl of Arran,

Archibald, his son and heir;

And by his second wife, Mary Graham, daughter of William, earl of Menteith.

Sir Colin Campbel, of Buchan;

And two daughters,

1. Margaret, married to James Stuart, lord Down, ancestor of the present earl of Murray, and had issue.

2. Janet, to Hector Macklane of Dowart, and had issue.

ARCHIBALD, fifth earl of Argyle, his son, being a person of singular accomplishments, was, by the estates of Scotland, sent ambassador to the queen, then in France, A. D. 1558, to supplicate her majesty in favour of the reformation: but that taking no effect, and the French having got footing in Scotland, he, with the duke of Chattel-Herauld, and the earl of Arran, his son, sued to queen Elizabeth for aid to expel them, by which he was instrumental in obliging them to quit the kingdom; and, together with the earls of Glencairn, Morton, and others, entered into an association, wherein they bound themselves to assist one another in advancing the cause of religion, which at last they got happily established by act of parliament, A. D. 1560. The same year he was one of the seven peers authorized by queen Mary, on her resignation of the crown, to be regent of the kingdom, if the earl of Murray should refuse to be regent alone.

On the breaking out of the civil war, in the reign of queen Mary, he espoused her interest, and was general of her forces at the battle of Langside, against the earl of Murray, then regent: after which he submitted to the authority of her son, king James, and came to be so considerable, that on the death of the regent, Matthew, earl of Lenox, in 1571, he stood a candidate to succeed him; but the earl of Marr being preferred to the regency, he was constituted lord high chancellor; which office he enjoyed with universal reputation for the space of three years, even to his death, which happened in September, 1575.

This lord married two wives; 1st, lady Jane Steuart, natural daughter of king James V. 2dly, Jane, daughter of Alexander, earl of Glencairn, but neither of them left any issue; whereupon his estate and honour came to Sir Colin Campbel of Buchan, his brother and heir.

Which,

COLIN, sixth earl, was constituted one of the lords of the privy-council to king James VI. A. D. 1577, and lord high chancellor of Scotland, on the decease of John, earl of Athol, in 1579; which together with several other great employments in the state, he enjoyed 'till his death, in the year 1584.

He was married, first, to Janet Stuart, daughter of Henry, lord Methven, by whom he had no issue; but by Agnes, his second wife, daughter of William Keith, earl Marischal, and widow of James, earl of Murray, he had two sons.

1. Archibald, who succeeded him.

2. Sir Colin Campbel of Lundy, bart.

ARCHIBALD, seventh earl of Argyle, was constituted general of the forces raised against the earls of Huntley and Errol, at the battle of Glenlivet, A. D. 1594; suppressed the insurrection of the Mac Gregors, in the year 1603, and another more formidable by the Mac Donalds, in the western isles A. D. 1614; and in respect thereof, and his other great merits, he obtained a grant of the country of Kintyre, A. D. 1617, which was ratified by a special act of parliament.

In 1618, he went to Spain; and signalized himself in that service against the states of Holland, and assisted at taking several places of strength, 'till by his majesty's permission he returned to England, and died at London, A. D. 1638: having married, first, Ann, daughter of William Douglas, earl of Morton, by whom he had,

Archibald, his successor.

And four daughters:

1. Anne, married to George, second marquis of Huntley, and had issue.

2. Annabel, to Robert, second earl of Lothian, and had issue.

3. Jane, to John, first viscount of Kenmure, and had issue.

4. Mary, to Sir Robert Montgomery of Skelmurle, and had issue.

And having married secondly, Anne, daughter of Sir William Cornwallis of Brome (ancestor of the lord Cornwallis) by Mary his wife, third daughter, and one of the coheirs of John, lord Latimer, he had a son,

James, created first lord Kintyre, by king James VI. A. D. 1622, and by king Charles I. dignified with the title of earl of Irvine, by letters patent, bearing date March 28, 1642;

And a daughter, Mary, married to James, lord Rollo, and had issue.

ARCHIBALD, eighth earl of Argyle, his son and heir by his first wife, was a man of great learning, singular judgment, and other endowments, which recommended him so much to the favour of king Charles I. that he constituted him one of the lords of his privy-council. In 1628, he resigned into his majesty's hands the justiciarship of all Scotland (which had been in his family for diverse ages) reserving to himself and his heirs the justiciarship of Argyle and the western isles, and wherever else he had lands in Scotland; which was ratified by act of parliament in 1633, when his majesty was present in person. Not long after which, in respect of his own merit, as well as the remarkable fidelity and loyalty of his family in former times to the crown, his majesty was graciously pleased to create him marquis of Argyle, by letters patent, bearing date November 15, 1641.

During the civil wars in that reign, he joined with the parliament of Scotland, and shewed himself a zealous asserter of the presbyterian church-government, which was then established: and after the death of the king, he contributed much to the dutiful reception of king Charles II. into Scotland, A. D. 1650, and at the solemnity of his coronation, January 1, 1651, put the crown on his head: but on the Restoration in 1660, he was accused of high-treason, for corresponding and complying with Oliver Cromwel (the too common fault of the times) and being found guilty by the parliament, was beheaded at Edinburgh, May 27, 1661. Immediately before his execution, he solemnly declared, "That from his birth to that moment, he was free of any accession to the death of king Charles;" and like a good christian, "prayed God to bless his majesty in his person and government."

This great peer was married to Margaret, daughter of William Douglas, earl of Morton, by whom he had two sons,

1. Archibald, earl of Argyle.
2. Niel Campbel, of Ardmaddie, sometime governor of Dunbarton castle, was married first to Vere, daughter of William, earl of Lothian, by whom he had Archibald Campbel, his son and heir, a gentleman of eminent learning and other accomplishments: also by his second wife Susanna, daughter of Sir Alexander Menzies, of Weim, he had two sons, Niel Campbel, advocate, and Alexander Campbel.

The marquis had likewise three daughters.

1. Anne, a lady of excellent endowments, never married.
2. Jane, married to Robert, first marquis of Lothian, and had issue.
3. Mary, to George, earl of Caithness, and after his death, to John, earl of Breadalbin, and had issue.

The title of marquis of Argyle failing by the forfeiture of this Archibald, his majesty was graciously pleased to restore Archibald, lord Lorn, his son, to the estate, title, and precedency formerly enjoyed by his ancestors, earls of Argyle.

Which

ARCHIBALD, ninth earl of Argyle, was constituted captain of the foot-guards in 1650, with this speciality, that tho' all commissions were then given by the parliament, yet he would not serve without a commission from the king. After the defeat of the royal army at Worcester, in 1651, he took arms for his majesty's service; which incensed Oliver Cromwel so much against him, that though he granted a pardon and general indemnity to the people of Scotland, by his proclamation, April 12, 1654, yet was he, with several other loyalists, particularly excepted. And with singular constancy preserving his duty and fidelity to his majesty inviolate, would never capitulate till he had general Middleton's order from the king so to do, bearing date December 31, 1655: then he made his composition without any other engagement than laying down his arms; whereupon he retired to his own house, that he might live quietly, and retained still his affection and fidelity to the king; of which his majesty was so perfectly sensible, that he was pleased to make his eminent loyalty and zeal towards the Restoration, the chief cause of restoring him to his father's fortune, in 1663. Not long after which, he was named a privy-counsellor, and one of the commissioners of the treasury, which for many years he discharged with great fidelity, and through all changes appeared an earnest espouser of the protestant interest: but seeing to what pass things were like to come, he proposed in a committee of council, that to the test might be added some acts against popery; which was so ill taken, that all methods were devised to ruin him; and at last it was effected, under a pretence of putting his own sense and explanation on the test, when he took it in these words:

"I have considered the test, and am desirous to give obedience, as far as I can: I am confident the parliament never intended to impose contradictory oaths; and therefore I think no man can explain it, but for himself, and reconcile it, as it is genuine, and agrees in its own sense; and I take it so far as it is consistent with itself, and the protestant religion: and I do declare, I mean not to bind up myself, in my station, but in a lawful way, to endeavour any thing I think for the advantage of the church or state, not repugnant to the protestant religion, and my loyalty: and this I understand as part of my oath."

For which, by the insinuating persuasions of some who bore him no good-will, the king was so far incensed against him, that he was sent prisoner to the castle of Edinburgh, and on his trial, December 19, 1681, was found guilty of high-treason. But he made his escape out of the castle very dexterously, in the dress of a lady's page, and got over to Holland, whence with a few men he invaded Scotland, in 1685, a little before the duke of Monmouth landed in England. But never having got together above 2000 men, was soon after totally routed near Kilpatrick, and taken prisoner. And thereupon (on his former sentence) was beheaded at the Cross of Edinburgh, June 30, 1685.

This Archibald, earl of Argyle, married Mary Stuart, daughter of James, third earl of Murray, by Margaret, his wife, daughter of Alexander, earl of Hume, by whom he had four sons, viz.

1. Archibald, duke of Argyle.
2. John Campbel, of Mammore, ancestor to the present peer.
3. Colonel Charles Campbel.
4. Colonel James Campbel, who married Margaret, daughter of David Lesly, lord Newark.

Also two daughters, Anne, married first to Richard, earl of Lauderdale, and secondly, to Charles, earl of Murray; and Jane, to William, marquis of Lothian.

ARCHIBALD, LORD LORN, his son, tenth earl, was one of the few Scots peers that came over from Holland with the late king William, in 1688. He was owned by the convention of the estates as earl of Argyle, before the attainder of his father was repealed, which, by the eleventh article of The Claim of Right, was declared to be to the scandal of the justice of the nation. He was particularly active to have the crown established on the prince and princess of Orange; which being being carried by a great majority in the house, his lordship was sent from the nobility, with Sir James Montgomery, and Sir John Dalrymple, from the barons and boroughs, to offer the crown in the name of the said convention to their majesties, and tendered them the coronation-oath; for which, and many other eminent services, on their advancement to the throne, he was admitted one of the privy-council, May 1, 1689, and 1690, made one of the lords of the treasury, and after a colonel of the Scots guards of horse, and one of the extraordinary lords of the session, on the decease of William, duke of Hamilton, in the year 1694: and further, in consideration of his great services, was by his said majesty created duke of Argyle, marquis of Kintyre and Lorn, earl of Campbell and Cowel, viscount of Lochow and Glengla, lord Inverary, Mull, Morvern, and Terrey, by letters-patent, bearing date at Kensington the 23d of June, 1701. He sent over a regiment to Flanders for king William's service, consisting almost of officers of his own name and family, who bravely distinguished themselves through the whole course of the war.

He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Lionel Talmash, of Helmingham, in com. Suff. by Elizabeth, dutchess of Lauderdale, his wife, daughter and heir of William Murray, earl of Dysart, and sister of Lionel, late earl of Dysart, by whom he left issue two sons and a daughter.

1. John, late duke of Argyle.

2. Archibald, successor to his brother.

Their daughter Anne, married to James Stuart, second earl of Bute, by whom she had issue the present earl.

His grace departed this life, September 28, 1703, and his dutchess surviving him, died May 9, 1735.

His eldest son,

JOHN, the second duke of Argyle, from his youth, according to the rule of his great ancestors, betook himself to the military life, was colonel of a regiment of foot at the end of the war in the reign of king William, when not full seventeen years of age, and even then gave signal proofs of his valour.

On the accession of queen Anne, bearing the title of lord Lorn, he had the command of a regiment of foot; and when the war was proclaimed with France, made the first campaign with the duke of Marlborough, in the year 1702, distinguishing himself in the attack of Fort. St. Michael, when it was taken by storm, which facilitated the surrender of the town of Venlo in Guelderland. The year after, on his father's decease, succeeding him in his honours, he was constituted one of the lords of her majesty's privy-council, captain of the Scots guards of horse, as also one of the extraordinary lords of Session in Scotland. And the queen having signed a patent for reviving and restoring the most ancient and noble order of the Thistle, his grace was received into that order on February 4, by her majesty, the sovereign thereof; as were three days after, John, duke of Athol, William, marquis of Annandale, James, earl of Dalkeith, George, earl of Orkney, and James, earl of Seafield.

In the year 1705, her majesty was pleased to add to his other employments, that of lord high-commissioner to represent her royal person in the parliament, though his grace was then but twenty-three years of age.

On September 2, his grace having given the royal assent to the acts that were ready, the parliament adjourned to the 20th of December, and on his arrival at court, her majesty was so well satisfied with his conduct and services, that she created him a peer of England, by the title of baron of Chatham, and earl of Greenwich. And on December 3, his grace was introduced into the house of peers between the earl of Rivers and the earl of Kingston.

In 1706, his grace made the campaign under the duke of Marlborough, and distinguished himself in the battle of Ramellies, at the siege of Ostend, and on the attack of Menin, a town that was a key to the French conquests in the Netherlands, whereof he took possession. After which he set out for Scotland, to be present in parliament, the treaty for the union of the two kingdoms being then in agitation, which his grace industriously promoted, and was very instrumental in bringing that great work to a conclusion. And when on that occasion, a riotous multitude had the insolence to come in great numbers to the parliament-house, demanding with loud outcries, That the treaty of union be rejected, his grace went out of the house, and spoke with such calmness and strength of reason as appeased them.

In 1707, the necessity of securing the conquests made in the preceding year, hindered the extending them. But in 1708, at the battle of Oudenard, his grace with twenty battalions under his command, were the first of the infantry that engaged the enemy, and maintained their post against inequality of numbers. And the same campaign having assisted at the siege of Lisle, also distinguished himself on several occasions, and took possession thereof. Likewise before the close of that long campaign, with six battalions, took possession of the town and citadel of Ghent, viz. on December 3.

On his return to England, he was sworn of the privy-council, after the union of the two kingdoms; and in the campaign of 1709, having been declared lieutenant general of her majesty's forces, he commanded in chief under general Schuylenberg, at his attack of the city and citadel of Tournay; and had a great share in the victory at Blaregnies, where he was much exposed, but came off unhurt, with great honour.

On December 22, 1710, his grace was installed a knight of the most noble order of the garter, with his late majesty by his proxy, and the late duke of Devonshire. And in January following, was declared ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to king Charles III. also captain-general and commander in chief of all her majesty's forces in Spain, and governor of the island of Minorca. Our affairs in that kingdom were then at so low an ebb, that his grace's friends were concerned at his accepting those employments, being sensible how difficult it would be for him to gain ground there: but he acquiesced in the queen's pleasure, and some time after set out for Holland, in his way to Barcelona. His want of forces on his arrival there, would not permit him to undertake any great enterprize; but in September, 1711, he defeated a body of the Spanish

Spanish horse, killed eighty men, and took several prisoners. After which he was taken with so violent a fever, as obliged him to quit the camp, and retire to Barcelona, where towards the latter end of November, being pretty well recovered, and the affairs of Europe taking a new turn by the death of the emperor Joseph, &c. he embarked for Leghorn, and left Florence in February 1711-12, coming by the Hague; and waited on the queen at St. James's, March 21.

Soon after his arrival, her majesty was so well satisfied with his grace's services, that she constituted him general and commander in chief of all the land-forces in Scotland, and captain of the company of foot in Edinburgh castle, viz. in June, 1712. And his grace continued in his government of Minorca till May 1, 1714, when the earl of Peterborough succeeded him.

On the demise of the queen he was one of the lords justices appointed by the late king to be added to the seven great officers of the kingdom, according to an act of parliament for the government of the nation, till his majesty's arrival from Hanover. After which he was again constituted general and commander in chief of his majesty's forces in Scotland; and the privy-council being dissolved, and a new one appointed to meet on October 1, 1714, he was sworn thereof. Also on October 5, he was appointed governor of Minorca; and on June 15, 1715, made colonel of the royal regiment of horse guards in England.

On June 20, 1715, being groom of the stole to his royal highness the prince of Wales, our late sovereign, he was with others of his principal officers, appointed commissioner for establishing the household of his royal highness, as also that of the princess of Wales, his consort.

In September, 1715, on the insurrection of the earl of Marr, and others in Scotland, in favour of the pretender, being general of the king's forces in that part of Great-Britain, he by his interest and conduct hindered the rebels from gaining any place of strength, though their forces very much exceeded those under his command; and on November 13, defeated them in a pitched battle at Dunblain, and prevented their passing the river Forth, though he had only one thousand dragoons, and two thousand five hundred foot, and the rebels were computed at nine thousand men. After which being joined by six thousand Dutch forces under general Cadogan, he forced the rebels to abandon Perth, and the pretender, who landed at Peterhead, December 22, to retire to France with the utmost precipitation, without being crowned as he had appointed. Whereupon his grace having also forced his adherents to fly the kingdom, and having settled affairs in the north of Scotland, returned to Edinburgh, where he was joyfully received by the magistrates, who gave him a noble entertainment. His grace came to court, and waited on his majesty on March 6 following; and in June, 1716, resigned all his places.

In February 1718-19, his grace was declared lord steward of his majesty's household; and on April 30, following, in consideration of his great services to the nation, was advanced to the dignity of a duke of this kingdom, by the title of duke of Greenwich.

On resigning his place of lord steward of his majesty's household, he was constituted master general of the ordnance; and by George II. was constituted colonel of her majesty's own regiment of horse, governor and captain of the town and isle of Portsmouth, and of the castle there, called South-Sea-Castle, &c. Also on August 7, 1733, was declared colonel of his majesty's own royal regiment of horse-guards, on resigning his other regiment of horse. And January 14, 1735-6, was constituted field-marshal of all his majesty's forces. His grace held many other high posts, from time to time, and was as conspicuous for his patriotism and eloquence in parliament, as he had been for bravery and conduct in the field.

His grace married first Mary, daughter of John Brown, Esq; and niece of Sir Charles Duncomb, Knt. who in 1708, was lord-mayor of London; which lady died without issue, on January 15, 1716. His grace married secondly, on June 6, 1717, Jane, daughter of Thomas Warburton, of Winnington in Cheshire, Esq. Her grace was one of the maids of honour to queen Anne, as also to her late majesty queen Caroline, when princess of Wales, and by her his grace had issue five daughters:

1. Caroline, married first to Francis, earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, duke of Buccleugh; and secondly, to the right honourable Charles Townshend; of whom in her proper place as baroness of Greenwich.

2. Anne, born January 11, 1719-20, and married April 15, 1741, to William, earl of Strafford.

3. Jane, who died young.

4. Betty, born August, 1721, married April 1749, to the right honourable James Sewart Mackenzie, brother of John, earl of Bute, lord-privy-seal for Scotland, and member in the eleventh parliament of Great-Britain for the shire of Ross.

5. Mary, born February 6, 1726-7, married to Edward, late viscount Coke, heir-apparent of of the late Thomas, earl of Leicester, but without issue, and her ladyship is since deceased.

His grace departing this life in October 1743, the titles of duke and earl of Greenwich, and baron of Chatham expired with him; but in his other titles he was succeeded by his brother, ARCHIBALD, third duke of Argyle, who in 1705, though only twenty-three years of age, was constituted lord treasurer of Scotland, and the next year appointed one of the commissioners for treating of the union; during the continuance of which he was created lord Ornsay, Dunoon, and Aros, viscount and earl of Ila, viz. on October 29, 1706. He was, at the happy conclusion of the said treaty, elected one of the sixteen peers to the first parliament of Great-Britain, and was constantly elected to every future parliament till his death, except the fourth. He was very active against the rebels in 1715, being then lord register of Scotland. In 1721, he was appointed keeper of the privy-seal, which post he held till 1733. After which he was in the several high offices of justice general, an extraordinary lord of session, and keeper of the great seal, and was chancellor of the university of Aberdeen.

He married Mary, daughter of Mr. Whitfield, paymaster of the marines, but by her (who died in 1723) had no issue, and deceasing April 15, 1761, 1761, was succeeded in his titles and the estates of the family, by John Campbel, now duke of Argyle, son of JOHN CAMPBEL, of Manmore, second son of Archibald, ninth earl of Argyle, before mentioned, who married Elizabeth, daughter of John, lord Elphinston, and had issue seven sons, four of which died young. The remaining three were,

1. John Campbel, the present duke.
2. Neil Campbel, who died unmarried.
3. William Campbel, who married Susannah, daughter of Thomas Bernard, of Jamaica.

His grace, in 1720, married Mary, daughter of John, second lord Bellenden, by whom his grace had issue four sons and one daughter, viz.

1. John, marquis of Lorn, of whom presently.
2. Henry, killed at the battle of La Feldt.
3. Frederick, member in the last and present parliaments, for the burghs of Renfrew, &c. a privy-counsellor, and a counsellor at law.

born April 17, 1764, and Ann, born October 7, 1766.

5. Caroline, married first to Charles Bruce, earl of Aylesbury, who deceasing in 1746, she married, secondly, the right honourable Henry Seymour Conway, brother of Francis, earl of Hertford, &c. &c.

This noble lady was by letters patent, bearing

He married, a daughter and coheir of Paul, viscount Banning, as set forth in the above mentioned table. The descendants of this marriage were not recorded in the body of the work, because they were so far removed from the eldest branch; nevertheless as the line has terminated in three infants, and in case of their decease without issue, a considerable fortune in Grenada may devolve upon the present earl of Pembroke, it may not be amiss to insert that part of the Herbert pedigree in this place.

The children of this match were

1. Henry Herbert, of whom no account can be given.

2. James Herbert, succeeded his father.

3. N. N. went into Spain.
